"The affairs of the county stand in a favourable condition from a financial standpoint and, considering the floating debt that existed at the beginning of the year, I am of the opinion that you have so provided as to come out with a fairly good standing at the close of the year.

"I am not speaking boastfully when I say that all work has been carried to completion this year in a satisfactory manner, and in a most economical way, consistent with good work.

"The members of the 1914 Council will always be held by me with the utmost respect from the fact that my duties have been a source of pleasure the whole way, due to the assistance and courtesy from my colleagues.

"Again referring to the great war now being carried on, we trust in our Maker for the culmination of the efforts for right as against might."

CONGREGATIONAL ASSOCIATION IS ORGANIZED

At a largely attended meeting in All Saints' Parish Hall last night, it was decided to organize a congregational association, the name decided upon being All Saints' Church Association. Rev. R. B. Grobb acted as chairman, and the following officers were elected for the year:

Hon. President—Rev. R. B. Grobb.

1st Vice-Pres.—Mr. Weller.
2nd Vice-Pres.—Mr. Clarke.
Secretary—Mrs. Greenwood.
Treasurer—Mr. Jones.
Committee — Mrs. Rush, Mr. Thompson, Mrs. Thompson, Mr. Connolly.

It was decided to hold meetings every two weeks, on Monday evenings, the first to be held next Monday evening, November 9th.

Are Driven Back To Posen

German Advance on Warsaw Ends in Huge Disaster

PETROGRAD, Nov. 4.—The Army Messenger states that the left wing of the German army that attempted to capture Warsaw has been driven back across the Russian frontier into Posen. It presents a pitiable comparison with what was months ago styled 'the left wing of the northern army for the occupation of Warsaw.'

"The column that passed through Kielce is now heading for Cracow. It has abandoned all rearguard action, so hurried is its retreat. The other column on the Czestochowa road is rather steadier, seeking to delay pursuit on the banks of the Warta, near Novoradomsk.

"On the Suwalki front the Russians have securely established themselves inside the east Prussian frontier. They have taken possession of the Kaiser's game preserves at Romintet."

An official communication from the Russian General Staff, made public last night, says:

"On the East Prussian front the Germans everywhere have adopted the offensive. Our troops have advanced in some districts, and in one place have taken two guns, a searchlight and a number of prisoners.

"Beyond the Vistula to the northwest of Pollitza our troops have advanced without any considerable fighting and have occupied Schadek, Lask and Rzeprza. On the front from Radomsko and Kielce the enemy is retiring in the direction of Ylowzow."

MANAGEMENT NOT RESPONSIBLE

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Lest any wrong inference should be drawn from the gambling case now pending in the Police Court which took place at the Dominion Cafe, I beg to state that whatever was done was unknown to the management, as it went on within one of the stalls, but when it came to our notice we tried to stop it at once, but could not do so until the police came.

We do not allow anything of that kind on the premises, and whenever we cannot stop any wrongdoing we invariably call in the police.—Yours truly,

Nov. 3, 1914. JIM HUM.

THE LONG TEST OF ENDURANCE.

(Springfield Republican)

The Germans will be as helpless as Napoleon in the long test of endurance against "the nation of shopkeepers" unless they can somehow destroy the British fleet. British sea power and British gold are terrible foes, and Germany has scarcely scratched either of them. From this point of view the British people have hardly begun to fight.

PERSISTENT EFFORTS BEING MADE TO PREVENT DIPTHERIA EPIDEMIC

Teachers and School Nurse Are Co-operating to That End—Reports of Committees to Board of Education Last Night.

There were present at the regular mothly meeting of the Board of Education, last night, Dr Morrison, (chairman); Messrs. John Crane, T. McGrath, Dr. Burnham, Col. Miller, B. F. Ackerman, J. Smith, J. J. Turner, Jr., and W. H. Hill.

Inspector Mowat was present and reported concerning the epidemic of diphtheria which had broken out in the schools of the City. He said that owing to the strict and effective supervision of Miss Kennedy, the school nurse, no serious cases of the disease had yet been reported. It was true that a large number of children had to be sent home and their homes placarded for a time, but most of them were soon released from quarantine. In the case of those where examination confirmed the suspicion that they were suffering from the disease or were carrying disease germs, the most effective treatment was applied, and the result had been that a serious outbreak of diphtheria was avoided. The Public School teachers were working hand in hand with Miss Kennedy to eliminate the disease and all danger of infection from the school, and the parents need have no anxiety in allowing their children to come to school In fact, considering the stringent supervision, they were safer at school than any place else

Teachers Resign.

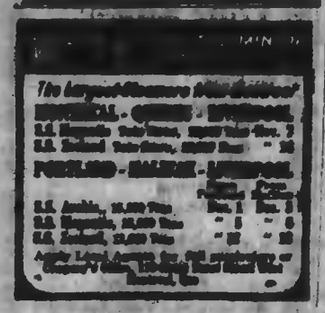
Communications from Miss Hallet and Miss Fessenden, both of the Public School staff, were to hand, in which both teachers tendered their resignation.

$30 Grant.

The Secretary of the P. C. I. Athletic Association wrote asking for the annual grant of $40 for the P. C. I. sports on field days, according to the time-honoured custom the grant was made

A Splendid Corps.

A very encouraging report from the Department of Education in connection with the inspection of the P. C. I. Cadets, was to hand. The report said that the Inspector had found the Corps to be a spendid one. It contained praise for the officers and men alke and, according to the report, our Cadet Corps must compare favourably with any in the Province. The report reflects credit upon Cadet Instructor Capt. C. E. Jamieson of the P. C. I. staff.



WERE PRESENTED WITH WATCH FOBS

The Y. M. C. A. membership campaign which was started on the 19th of October, will be continued until the 16th of November. The effort, so far, has not been as successful as was at first anticipated, although a good number of young men have been added to the Y.M.C.A. roll of members, and $260 in fees collected.

Watch fobs have been awarded to Stanley Taylor for having secured the largest amount in membership fees and to Allen Sharpe for having enrolled the largest number of members.

The teams will meet for supper on Thursday evening of this week and prepare plans by which the campaign may be pushed to successful finish before the 16th of the month.

Mr. J. A. T. Harper, who acted as Captain of one of the teams, has left with the soldiers of the second contingent, so another captain will be appointed to fill his place. Mr. Harper will carry with him to the front a watch fob from the local Association in recognition of his efforts and the high esteem in which he is held by the Y.M.C.A. members.

Y.M.C.A. intermediate and senior members are requested to meet at the Association building this evening at 7.15, for the purpose of attending Dr. Gordon's men's meeting in a body.

HONOURED FLAG WAS PUNISHED SAYS PARENT

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I wish to call your attention to a case that happened in Peterborough on November 3, where a little girl, 11 years old, was punished for being loyal to the British flag. Now here is the case. My daughter, Edyth Stevens, I told to come home and see "Our Boys" off at 11 o'clock. The child said she would have to have a note to get out, so I wrote her teacher in the East City school a note requesting her to let Edyth come home at 11 to go and give the soldiers a send-off. Now the child came home at 11 and went over town with her sister and went to the C.P.R. Station. As everybody knows it was a little late in getting away, and the child did not get to school till the class was called. She might have been two or five minutes late.

For this loyalty she was sent home for the afternoon. Now I would rather have my child sent home and remain loyal to the British flag, which is the grandest flag that ever was unfurled. I think our men who will volunteer to go and fight 3,000 miles from their homes for liberty and right are the grandest men the world ever produced. Others can do as they like, but for me and my house we will honor such men and the grand old flag. Thanking you, I am, yours truly.

George Stevens.

Will Form An Organization

For Purpose of Canvassing the County—This Morning's Session of County Council

An extended discussion respecting the County Council's attitude in the present crisis, featured the proceedings of this morning's session of the Peterborough County Council. The meeting adjourned at noon without any definite action being taken. Some of the Councillors were in favour of granting the sum of one thousand dollars to the Canadian Patriotic Fund. It was also suggested that a committee be appointed to act in conjunction with local municipality committees for the purpose of making a canvass of the County. The reports of these committees to be presented at the January session of the County Council, and to form the basis upon which a substantial grant will be made.

Reeve Campbell of Chandos suggested that each municipality dispense with the January municipal elections and that the proceeds be donated to some fund. The question of supplying relief to the unemployed of the County was also discussed.

WATCHMAN GUARDS CANAL ENTRANCE

Since the recent plot to blow up a section of the Welland Canal was discovered, measures have been taken by the Dominion Government to see that no alien enemy carries out any evil design against the Trent Valley Canal. At No. 6 Lock, which is just at the entrance to the canal at Little Lake, a watchman is stationed every night and a bright lantern on the end of a scow there is kept burning, illuminating the entire entrance to the canal. The sentinal is armed, and has orders to adopt drastic measures if he deems it necessary to prevent damage to the canal.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

Wanderers and Sunderland Are Both Well Matched

In the Last Seven Games Between the Clubs Each Has Scored Thirteen Goals---Old Country Football Comment

Progressives still continue their victorious march, but they have to thank Hipkeck for the points last week. It was very hard luck on the Sawyers' back, and the team as well.

Croft, of Sawyers, is without doubt the most scientific half back in the League: Some of his passes on Saturday was worthy of a Roberts or Jimmy Galt.

Jimmy Caig, the Guardians' centre, can show some of the young ones how to play, yet his control of the ball was great.

Compton used bad judgment two or three times by taking a wild kick at the ball instead of gathering it with his hands, which is a great mistake for any goalie to do.

The game of the season will be seen at the mountain next Saturday, when the Asylum meet the Westminsters.

The Rangers did well to play the Asylum to a goal, and on their own ground at that.

The Westminsters are confident of winning next week. Time will tell.

Barnes made a wonderful improvement when he went up forward in the last twenty minutes. He had the satisfaction of securing the equalising goal, too.

It was a brilliant goal that Richmond, of the Guardians, scored when Crompton ran out, but arrived too late.

BRITISH SOCCER NEWS.

A WELL MATCHED PAIR

How remarkably well the Bolton Wanderers and Sunderland are matched can be gleaned on dipping into their past meetings. In the last seven games between the clubs each has scored 13 goals. Taking the whole series of games, which number 45, Sunderland have won 20 and Bolton 19, having six drawn battles. So far as scoring goes, Bolton lead, with 82 goals to 78, and it is interesting to note how this lead was established. The clubs first met on Dec. 15 1900 at Bolton, and the Wanderers won by 10-1. Bolton possess the unique record of having taken 11 points out of Sunderland in six consecutive league matches. They are also one of three—the others being Notts Forest and Sheffield Wednesday—who have beaten Sunderland in four successive games.

THREATENED MEETING OF PLAYERS.

On Friday morning Hunter, the captain of Manchester United, informed the club manager, Mr. J. J. Bentley, that unless the directors' suspension of a fortnight on A. Turnbull was removed some players of the team would refuse to travel to Sheffield for the purpose of playing the Wednesday. Turnbull was suspended for two weeks owing to his conduct at Burnley. The United team travelled to Sheffield on Saturday morning. The whole team made the journey and gave a fair exhibition at Hillsborough.

Had they not travelled the reserve eleven would have left Manchester an hour later for Sheffield. The reserves had been assembled in the city for that purpose. As it happened it was thought advisable to send four reserves to the cutlery centre by the later train. These players were kept apart from the team, who were at a neighbouring hotel, and never knew of their presence.

Had the first team refused to travel, and the reserve eleven been called upon, the Central League match at Old Trafford would still have been played, for arrangements had been concluded with the Northern Nomads and a number of players who were only too willing to volunteer their services if required. The situation was so serious on Friday that the facts were reported to the president of the League, who was at the important Manchester meeting on that day. More is sure to be heard of this matter.

Proceedings such as these are so serious as to amount to a threatened mutiny or strike. Turnbull has had a benefit of, we believe, about £850, and at a time like the present his salary is £5 per week. Being suspended for two weeks means a fine of £10. Had he been a clerk or a workman in receipt of thirty shillings a week, and said to his superior what he did to Mr. J. J. Bentley in the Burnley dressing-room, he would most probably have been dismissed on the spot.

Then the captain, Hunter, suggested that the United might refuse to play at Sheffield unless the suspension was removed. At the station on Saturday morning Hunter at first refused to accept his ticket. Some of the players talked, and finally all got into the train.

Perhaps the directorate of Manchester United regret that their few mutinous players did not adhere to their resolution. Those footballers who play the game in every sense are respected—but there are others. The powers of the Football Association in the matter of registration, the laws of the League and the legal resources of clubs are far reaching. The days when discontented and recalcitrant players could rule have passed. Clubs have realized that success, and even service can be purchased at too great a price. The directors think all the more of their loyalists, and the opposite is also true.

SATURDAY NIGHT'S BOUT WILL BE THE BEST YET

Good as have been the wrestling bouts staged here in the past few weeks, teh battle between Andy Gibson, the ex-amateur welterweight, and Alf. Hardy, England's undefeated featherweight, on Saturday night, promises to be the clash of the season. They will wrestle to a finish this time, the best two out of three falls to settle the match. Opinion is divided as to the result. Gibson was unable to throw Hardy in an hour's wrestling last week, but his friends claim that he will wear Hardy down in a struggle to a finish. However, the Yorkshire man's admirers say that he will be there at the finish. No matter how the match goes, it will be a real battle, and the fans are quite certain to get their money's worth. The bout will take place in the Brock Street Rink on Saturday night.

SUCCESSES IN ARGONNE

Official Paris Bulletin is Optimistic

PARIS, Nov. 4. — The following official communication was issued last night:

"The only advices received this evening concerning the region at the northeast of Vailly, where we have counter attacked and retaken the farm at Metz, in the region of the de-Paris-Saint-Hubert and the Argonne, where a German attack has been repulsed and we have gained some ground."

Yesterday afternoon's official statement reads:

"On our left wing the enemy seems to have completely abandoned the left bank of the Yser down stream from Dixmude, and reconnaissances by troops of the allies undertaken on the highways in the inundated regions were successful in re-occupying points of passage across the rivers without great difficulty.

"To the south of Dixmude, and in the direction of Gheluvit, our advance was particularly perceptible.

"In the region to the north of Lys, in spite of determined attacks by the Germans in considerable force, our front was everywhere maintained or re-established by the end of the day.

"Fresh attacks by the Germans on the environs of Arras and against Lihons and Lequesnoy-en-Santerre resulted in failures.

"On the centre, in the region of the Aisne, to the east of the forest of Aigle, we have made some progress. To the east of Vailly, according to the latest news, those of our troops who held the positions on the slopes of the plateau to the north of the Villages of Chevreux and Soupir, has been compelled to draw back into the valley to the east of this location. We have maintained our positions at Amont, on the right bank of the river.

"There was violent cannonading during the day between [illegible] the Meuse, as well as on the heights of the Meuse.

"Further efforts on the part of the Germans in the Forest of Argonne have been checked.

"We have continued to make progress to the northwest of Pont-a-Mousson.

"On our right wing there have been some engagements favorable to our arms along the River Seille."

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

The Australian Government has placed an embargo upon wool, wheat, and flour, and on meat and coal, except to the Mother Country.

The Niew Vandendag of Amsterdam states that 10,000 German infantry, all boys between 17 and 18, left Liege Monday for Brussels.

Gen. Carranza declares that he would not abide by the action of the Aguascalientes convention in naming a Provisional President of Mexico.

The Imperial Government has consented to assist Australia with a loan of $100,000,000. This sum will be advanced in two instalments of $50,000,000 each, repayable in five years.

It is surmised in New York that Charles M. Schwab's mission to England is in connection with negotiations for the sale of war material, including armor plate and heavy guns.

Col. O'Grady, who died yesterday in Winnipeg, went to Valcartier with his regiment, but his physical condition excluded him from active service. On Saturday last he took a sudden turn for the worse.

The American steamship Massapequa, chartered and loaded by the Rockefeller foundation to convey food supplies to starving Belgians sailed for Rotterdam yesterday afternoon with supplies worth $300,000.

BOMBARD THE FORTS

British and French Fleets Damage the Turkish Defences of the Dardanelles

AN EXPLOSION

LONDON, Nov. 4.—The Secretary of the Admiralty announces that a combined British and French squadron bombarded the Dardanelles forts at long range at daybreak yesterday morning. The forts replied, but no ships were hit, only one shot falling alongside them.

The statement adds that the damage to the forts cannot be estimated, but that a great explosion, accompanied by dense volumes of black smoke, occurred at the Helles fort.

Reports that Turkish troops had crossed the border into Egypt lack confirmation.

One newspaper says: "The public in Egypt are calm and not even aware of a Turco-Russian rupture. A press censorship will be established. Meanwhile it is announced that Germany has been pouring officers and men into Turkey. Many of them speak Turkish, and will command Turkish detachments equipped with modern weapons, which the Germans are said to have supplied."

An official communication was given out in Constantinople yesterday as follows:

"According to official reports from the Caucasian frontier, Russian troops have attacked our frontier forces at several points, but were compelled to retire.

"The Russians suffered losses through the energetic resistance of the Turkish troops."

Ambassador Morganthau's latest despatches to Washington, dated Sunday, said he had been informed by a member of the Ottoman Cabinet of the sinking of two Turkish vessels by the British fleet off the port of Smyrna, and of the crossing of Russian troops on the frontier of Bruera. The cablegram of the American Ambassador revealed that the British, French and Russian Ambassadors finally got away from Constantinople on a special train at 13 o'clock midnight Sunday.

A telegram dated Nov. 3 was received yesterday by the official Press Bureau from the British Consul at Mohammerah, Persia, stating that the Consul at Basra, Asiatic Turkey, and a number of British merchants were being detained by the Turks.

There are about twenty-five British subjects ashore at Basra, in addition to those who may have taken refuge aboard the river steamers.

A despatch from Petrograd says the Turkish Ambassador to Russia, before he left here for Constantinople, made the following statement:

"I am firmly convinced that the war will be of extremely short duration, and that Turkey will assume the position maintained before German influence became paramount at Constantinople."

Germans Harassed In Persia.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4.—The German Consul at Tabris, Persia, was assaulted, and took refuge in the American Consulate, with other panic-stricken German subjects, according to a message late yesterday from the United States Minister at Teheran.

United States Consul Paddock at Tabris is extending temporary refuge to the German subjects, but the Russians in Persia are threatening to arrest and expel all Germans.

The Persian authorities have gathered up the archives of the Turkish Consulate at Tabris and sent them to Petrograd.

Ambassador Morganthau cabled the U. S. Government that before the British Ambassador left he had given Mr. Morganthau assurances that all Turkish subjects in the British Empire would be permitted to leave.

Greek Submarine Sunk?

ROME, Nov. 4.—(Via London.)—An official Turkish message says that the British fleet sank a Greek torpedo boat in the Mediterranean that was taken for a Turkish craft.

A Constantinople despatch states that Servia yesterday severed diplomatic relations with Turkey and the Servian Ambassador asked for his passports says the Rome correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Co.

Essad Pasha and 20,000 Albanian Mussulmans are reported to be advancing on Scutari from the south, while 15,000 Catholic Mussisori are advancing from the north.

Berlin despatches report that very large Turkish forces mobilized on the Asiatic shore of the Suez Canal are provided with 3,000,000 bags of sand wherewith they propose to form a dam whenever the Turkish army advances.

14,000 Men Called For

Supplementary Call to Be Issued This Week

OTTAWA, Nov. 4.—Since the Government's plan is to mobilize 20,000 infantry, and to keep that number constantly in training in Canada, and since orders have gone out for only 10,000, the supplementary orders for the other 14,000 will be sent out to the commanders of the various divisional areas within a day or two. Orders will also be sent out for artillery, engineers, army service corps, medical corps, etc., to go with the second contingent as soon as the quota to be taken from each division has been settled.

A considerable force of artillery will be mobilized, part of it to go overseas and part to remain in Canada for defence purposes.

Three or four thousand horses will be purchased for the artillery lines of communication, etc., of the second contingent.

TELEPHONE CALL GAVE BRIGADE A GOOSE CHASE

Yesterday afternoon a fire alarm was telephoned into the Fire Hall on the machine telephone. Owing to the fact that one of the two telephones was out of order the fireman on duty understood that the fire was at 162 Aylmer Street. The brigade accordingly made for the south of the City at full speed. It developed, however, that the fire was really at 163 Antrim Street, in the north end of the town, so the brigade lost no time in searching out the right house and extinguishing the blaze. Very fortunately the fire was not a serious one and was soon put out. It was due to a collection of inflamable rubbish in the cellar of the house and little damage resulted from the blaze. Had the fire been of more dangerous proportions the mistake might have been very serious. The house is the property of Mr. John Rothwell, of Toronto, and is occupied by Mr. Wm. Herron.

TWO FIRES TO-DAY.

The fire yesterday was the first one for the brigade since the 14th of last month, but they were not allowed to wait so long for the next fire. At 9.52 o'clock this morning a telephone message was to the effect that there was a chimney fire at the home of Mr. Wm. Keller, 128 Sophia Street. The brigade responded and extinguished the fire. On their return to the Fire Hall, and before they reached it, an alarm was sent in from Box 54. This proved to be another chimney fire at 171 Mark Street, which was extinguished without damage.

Interferes With Car Service

The regular street railway timetable is thrown out considerably today and possibly will also be similarly deranged for the next two or three days owing to the commencement of work on the City's trunk sewer.

It has been found necessary to pull up a section of the street railway tracks on Lock Street South, where the sewer crosses the road. As a result the George Street cars are cut off from the loop at the south end and cannot turn there as usual. The single ended pay-as-your-enter cars, therefore, have to be withdrawn from George Street and used on the Jackson Park and Edison lines, where there are facilities for turning them at each end. This entails a considerable loss of time on each trip.

It is therefore found impossible to maintain more than a twelve-minute schedule.

It is hoped that the work on this section of the trunk sewer will be pushed rapidly in order that the regular street railway service may be promptly resumed.

Some of the newer automatic pistols are powerful enough to kill a man 1,000 yards distant.

City Fathers Lost A Chance

Should Have Recognized Values of Volunteers If They Wished to Stimulate Recruiting Says "Wake Up"

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—It would strike the impartial observer that last night's meeting in the Armouries was rather inopportunely timed, coming on the evening of the day upon which the 57th Regiment had sent away to the camp, at Kingston, more men than had been asked for by the militia authorities. Calling such a meeting just now will give the outside world an opinion of Peterborough, in this matter, that is certainly not justified by the facts. The 57th Regiment was asked to send 95 men to Kingston. What there was no lack of volunteers is shown in the statement that 226 men offered their services and were examined by the doctors. The medical examination was of the strictest nature—only 95 out of the 226 being pronounced up to the very high standard set. Of the 95 accepted six were struck off the lists at the request of parents, leaving 89, or four more than was asked for to leave for Kingston. In the face of such a showing, why the flag-waving last night?

If Mayor Butler and the City Council wish to do anything to stimulate recruiting, they have lost several opportunities in the past. When you pick up a Toronto paper these days you read of Collingwood Council giving each of the Collingwood volunteers $10.00, or Lindsay Council presenting the 45th men with wrist watches, etc. This is going on all over the Province; everywhere there has been civic recognition of the valour of the soldiers. Here two contingents, numbering in all over 200 men, have been allowed to leave Peterborough with nothing more from the City than a chance to shake hands with the Mayor.

We will soon not be able to hold our heads up at all. Our patriotic fund is a disgrace; fortunate, indeed, is it that we are not affiliated with the Canadian Patriotic Fund, a list of the amounts subscribed in the different cities belonging to which are published each week, or else we would have the humiliating experience of seeing Peterborough practically at the bottom of the list, with smaller towns far ahead of us. From the Villages in Eastern Ontario carloads of supplies for the suffering Belgians have been sent. What has the City Council here done in this regard? Exactly what they have done for the City's volunteers.

Let us have a public meeting to stimulate and arouse the City Fathers. Cannot something be done to make them realize that they must be the leaders in any public movement, and that at the present time there are things more important than cement crossings and raising janitors' salaries. Give us a chance to feel once more that we belong to the best town in Canada.

Yours, etc.,

NEGLECTED TO REMOVE HIS HAT

At the close of last night's public meeting in the Armouries, some excitement was created when a man who neglected to remove his hat when the National Anthem was being played, was attacked by an over zealous patriot. A crowd quickly gathered, but timely intervention forestalled further hostilities. The non-combatant was characterized as a Germans, despite the fact that he was one of the first to offer himself for examination when the call came for recruits for the first contingent. He is an American, but for some time has been domiciled in Canada.

Afternoon Session

The Council convened at two o'clock this afternoon and again renewed the discussion concerning the question of making a grant to the patriotic fund. The councillors were of the opinion that a county committee should be formed which would be in touch with the local municipal committees. This organization is to be delegated with the duty of canvassing the county for the purpose of ascertaining the need, also for obtaining suggestions regarding the extent which the county should go in the matter of granting relief.

Mr. C. E. Weauld of Asphodel, winner of the trophy donated by Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., for the ploughing championship of Peterborough county would like to have custody of the cup for one year. The care of the cup has been vested to the County Council. A committee was appointed to wait upon Mr. Burnham and ascertain what his wishes are in the matter.

PEDDLARS' LICENSES

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—According to the report in The Examiner last evening, there were two applicants for license to peddle fish, and some of the aldermen suggested that it would be possible to get a refund at the end of six months, which I would say was evading the law. The license is a yearly one, and is to protect the city as well as the merchant, who has to pay his year's taxes. Nobody wants to interfere with a man earning an honest living, but the merchant deserves protection as he is on the job in dull times as well as in good. There are many merchants who sell fish, and they should be protected. At the same time the peddlar's license should be displayed by a card or number, the same as automobile, motor cycle or express license. At the present time, should a merchant see someone peddling, he is not in a position to know whether the man has a license or not.

Yours truly,
CITIZEN.

CLOTHES ARE GETTING TOO SMALL FOR THIS CANUCK

Mrs. Geo. Powell, Boundary Road, has received the following letter from her son, Charles, who is in England with the Canadian contingent:

Dear Mother,—Well, we are in England at last. We left Quebec on September 25th, and got here Thursday, Oct. 14th, and we are on the ships yet, but expect to unload today. It just took us nineteen days to cross the big waters. I do not know when we are going yet. I was not a bit sea-sick. I guess it was because we crossed so slowly. The Kaiser did not keep his word about us not landing, for we got there just the same. One of the battleships that was with us went out into the North Sea and sank three German ships after it left us. What do you think of that? We saw her close by and you should have seen the big guns; her sides were 12 inches of solid steel. When we got into dock I saw two submarines and three torpedo boats. The submarines are so small you could not see them very far away, but they are the boys to put the Germans in the bottom all right. Will write again as soon as I get a chance, when we get into camp, so I guess I will close for now, with love to all. I am enjoying the best of health. My clothes are getting too small for me. Good bye.

From your loving son,
Charles.

INDIA WILL REMAIN LOYAL.

Britain Gives Assurance That No Religious Question is Involved.

LONDON, Nov. 3.—A despatch from Delhi, India, to Reuter's Telegram Company says that in view of the outbreak of Turkey it was authoritatively announced throughout India that no religious question was involved, and that the Mohammedan holy palaces in Arabia are immune from attack by the British naval and military forces, provided the pilgrims from India to these places are not interfered with.

At the request of Great Britain, the despatch adds, France and Russia have given similar assurances.

India Will Be Loyal.

A number of influential Mohammedans have held a meeting at Quetta, at which there was adopted a resolution setting forth that Turkey had been decoyed by Germany into a breach of neutrality and that the British Government could rely upon the fidelity of the Baluchistan Mohammedans.

Promising results with the cure of cancer have been obtained in Germany by using dead cultures of a species of fungus, grown in malignant tumors of certain animals.

Declaration of War Removes Hope For Peace With Turkey

Great Britain's Lead Will Likely Be Immediately Followed by the Allied Powers—Doubt as to What Bulgaria Will Do.

GREECE WITH ALLIES?

LONDON, Nov. 5.—9:45 a.m.—All uncertainty regarding Turkey's position was ended to-day. The Foreign Office officially announced that Great Britain has declared war on Turkey, and it is said that this action will immediately be followed by France, Russia, Servia, Montenegro, and possibly by Belgium and Japan.

The Turkish government yesterday withdrew all of her diplomatic representatives from Servia, England, Russia and France, and Russian troops have already invaded Turkey, while the Anglo-French fleet is bombarding the Dardanelles.

LONDON, Nov. 4.—Turkey has now definitely broken off diplomatic relations with Great Britain, France, Russia and Sergia. Her diplomatic representatives in the capitals of these countries, acting on orders from the Porte, to-day demanded and received their passports. Some of them have already left their posts, while the others will depart to-morrow.

Although no statement to this effect has been given out, it is understood that Turkey's apology for the action [illegible] during Russian Black Sea ports and Russian ships proved unacceptable to the powers of the Triple Entente, in that Turkey was not prepared to accede to the demand that the German officers in her service be dismissed and the ships purchased from Germany dismantled.

Warlike Action Begins.

The powers which the Ottoman Government thus defied are already taking warlike action against Turkey. The British have destroyed Fort Akabah in Arabia, the Russians have invaded Asia Minor, and an Anglo-French fleet is bombarding the forts of the Dardanelles.

Now that Turkey has aligned herself among the nations at war, speculation is rife as to what the other Balkan powers will do. Greece is said to be preparing to take sides with the allies, while Bulgaria has given assurances of her neutrality. Bulgaria, however, is mobilizing for, as a Bulgarian diplomat said, "With Turkey in the area of the war, Bulgaria must be prepared for any eventuality."

Red Cross Nurse Writes of Lack of Hospital Supplies in Brittany.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 31—"We have 42,000 wounded in this little corner of Brittany alone," wrote a nurse at Va Fleuri, in a letter received to-day by Miss Mabel T. Boardman, Chairman of the relief committee of the American Red Cross Saying that the supplies are exhausted, she adds:

"One morning last week 380 wounded men were brought in without warning There were so few doctors that some of the men did not get their wounds dressed until the following day, and they had been travelling for four days Some died.

"All the old linen and many new sheets have been given and now we have no gauze for compresses, no anti-tetanus serum, a very small quantity of iodine and almost no alcohol."

ALLIES CLOSE TO OSTEND NOW

Belgian Also Says Germans Appear to be Gathering Near Ypres

LONDON, Nov. 4.— A Belgian Socialist Senator, who returned to-day from an official visit to King Albert, said that the allies were now within ten miles of Ostend, but he did not believe that the Germans are preparing for a general retreat through Belgium, but rather for a final supreme assault which would be made at a point southeast of Ypres. The Senator estimates that the Germans have 500,000 men in the vicinity mentioned, but he said that it was the general impression of the allied staffs that the German effort would be a failure because their troops not only were very weary, but to a great extent were made up of youthful and aged recruits.

When the German march down the coast began, the Senator declared, scarcely anyone on the ground expected that they would be kept out of Calais. Now opinion was unanimous that the Germans would never reach their objective.

A SUGGESTION TO THE FARMERS' INSTITUTE OF WEST PETERBOROUGH

Are the farmers of Peterborough County awake to the opportunities that will come to them during the next few years?

In the western provinces and in many sections of Eastern Canada there is a heavy increase in the acreage of grain in anticipation of greater demands next year as the result of the war in big grain producing countries.

What benefit will accrue to the farmers of Peterborough County? Has any attempt been made to consider this question? If not, it should be immediately taken up by the Farmers' Institute as the only representative association of farmers.

Potatoes are cheap now, but what are the prospects for next spring and summer? What action should the farmers take in regard to their cattle? These are questions that must be of deep concern to the agricultural community just now. But the individual farmer lacks guidance and knowledge of the influences which affect his interests.

Anything that can be done should be undertaken during the present month. Further delay will prevent the operation of action possible during the present month. Hence, if the Farmers' Institute has any sway in the surrounding townships, by all means let its officers consider the advisability of taking the leadership in this regard.

The opportunity presented to farmers by the present diversion of European agricultural labour to the demands of war, has also the more serious aspect of duty. The extent to which Canada can contribute supplies of foodstuffs depends upon the activities of the entire country, and not upon sections, manifested, for example, in some of the Western Provinces. The farmer of broad outlook can see through the developing opportunities a call to duty, almost as imperative and, in many respects, as effective, as that rendered by the various contingents which will depart from the Dominion.

The suggestion is therefore made to the thoughtful, serious farmers of this section that they at least investigate the urgings from Government sources If anything can be done by this County, the farmers of Peterborough should share in the work involved and the financial return will surely follow.

ENEMY'S ATTACKS BLOCKED

Alternate Advances and Withdrawals Mark the Recent Fighting Along the Aisne.

ENEMY IN FORCE

PARIS, Nov. 5.—Alternate gains and losses by each side marked the great struggle between the allies and the Germans along the extended battle front in France and Belgium Wednesday, according to officers who have returned here from the fighting zone. The French and English troops, these officers say, made considerable progress in the neighbourhood of Dixmunde and Lys. On the other hand, the Germans are reported to have gained a small amount of territory in the region of Vailly and Chavonne, in the Aisne district.

The heaviest fighting of th day was in this region, where the Germans, heartened by Tuesday's appreciable advance, endeavoured to continue their success. The allies, aided by reinforcements, blocked to a large extent the furious attacks of the Germans, and a small detachment of Frenchmen, although they met with heavy resistance at a bridge on the Aisne, succeeded in pushing on and gaining ground commanding the enemy's position.

From this point the French opened a raking fire on the Germans, but they were not sufficient in number to withstand the furious German onslaught that followed and were compelled to retire to avoid being cut to pieces. The few cannon taken by the Germans were put out of commission before the retreat.

SIX MEN BURNED TO DEATH IN NEW YORK HOTEL FIRE

NEW YORK, N.Y., Nov. 5.— Six men were burned almost to a crisp and many were saved through the thrilling rescue by firemen and police early this morning, when fire gutted the Waverly hotel, a lodging house at 382 Eighth Avenue. The six dead were burned to death in their beds or caught in the hallways as they rushed through the flames in a futile effort to reach safety.

RUSSIA TO FIGHT THROUGH WINTER.

No Respite for Weather, No Matter How Cold, for it Cannot Equal Siberia.

LONDON, Nov. 4.—The Standard's correspondent telegraphs from Petrograd that he has good authority for stating that the Russian Army will not go into winter quarters but will pursue the campaign without a break, no matter what the weather may be.

Poland and East Prussia may be cold in the winter, the correspondent says, but their climate is mild compared with some parts of Russia and the Russian Army, after its experiences in the winter campaign against Japan, has no fear of being unduly hampered by weather in its present operations

FRESH FORCES FOR GERMANS IN BELGIUM

Extravagant Report From Dutch Source Tells of Train Loads of Soldiers and Ammunition.

EVEN TORPEDO BOATS

THE HAGUE, Nov. 5.—Enormous numbers of German reinforcements are en route to France and West Flanders. Reports from Liege state that for the last three days long trains loaded with singing soldiers have ben passing through that city from Aix-la-Chappelle.

Two hundred cars passed through in one day and were followed by eight trains loaded with ammunition and several carrying submarines and torpedo boats in sections, together with their crews and war materials.

It is believed certain here that the Germans are determined not only to hack their way through the coast cities, but also to push their operations against the English coast. The torpedo boats and submarines have been sent direct to Bruges, where already large quantities of naval reserves and active seamen have been massed. Bruges is an ideal naval base.

German Reports Ignore the Capture and Two of Their Own Ships —Complete Facts May Be More Favourable.

ONLY ENEMY'S ACCOUNT

LONDON, Nov. 5.—The Admiralty has issued a statement in which it says it has received from German sources details of a naval engagement off the Chilean coast, in which the British cruiser Monmouth was sunk and the cruiser Good Hope severely damaged. The statement says the Admiralty has no confirmation of the report.

The statement was issued through the Official Press Bureau, in the name of the Secretary of the Admiralty, and says:

"Rumours and reports have been received at the Admiralty from various sources of a naval battle having occurred off the Chilean coast. The Admiralty has no official confirmation of this, and such accounts as they have received rest admittedly on German evidence.

"It is reported that the Scharnhorst, Gneisenau, Leipzig, Dresden and Nurnberg concentrated near Valparaiso, and that an engagement was fought with a portion of Rear-Admiral Sir Christopher Cradock's squadron on Sunday last. The German report asserts that the Monmouth was sunk and the Good Hope very severely damaged. The Glasgow and the auxiliary cruiser Otranto broke off the action and escaped:

"The Admiralty cannot accept these facts as accurate at present, for the battleship Canopus specially was sent to strengthen Rear-Admiral Cradock's squadron, and would have given him a decided superiority not mentioned in them. Further, although five German ships concentrated in Chilean waters, only three entered Valparaiso harbour. It is possible, therefore, that when the full account of the action is received it may considerably modify the German version. Effective measures have been taken to deal with the situation in any event."

ENEMY IS NOT DEFEATED YET

LONDON, Nov. 4.—Though the battle of the sand dunes may be over it is not correct to say that the German forces have been driven from the Belgian coast. They still hold Ostend and they are concentrating huge forces in the vicinity of Ypres, and it is there, in the opinion of military observers, that a renewed German struggle to break through the allied line will centre.

From the coast to Lille, a comparatively short battle line, the Germans have eleven army corps, roughly half a million men. The English papers point out to-day that this situation still is undecided and that it should not be assumed that the Germans yet have been decisively beaten in Belgium.

More Recruits Needed.

The agitation for more recruits in England has been renewed. The press is taking advantage of the success in west Flanders to emphasize that this progress was gained only after great sacrifices in men, and that the young manhood of Great Britain must respond to fill up the depleted ranks, if not voluntarily then by means of conscription.

ANTWERP THREATENED WITH AN EPIDEMIC

London, Nov. 4.—A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company from Rotterdam says:—

"Antwerp doctors predict an early epidemic owing to the fact that the only available water supply comes from the River Nethe, which is contaminated by the bodies of many slain soldiers. The rebuilding of the reservoirs, which were destroyed by the bombardment, has not been permitted.

Western Farmers Prepare To Increase Wheat Acreage

WINNIPEG, Nov. 4.—The farmers are surely coming into their own. Not only has the Canadian Manufacturers' Association joined with the Allied Farmers organizations of the Dominion to place millions of acres of new land under cultivation, but they are now discussing the physical comfort of the agriculturists, and methods of securing greater production from the soil.

At the important convention of these Dominion-wide organizations now being held in Winnipeg, addresses were delivered on "The Closer Community Settlement," by a deputation of Regina men, who received word over the long distance telephone to be present. These men included S. C. Burton, president of the Regina Board of Trade; J. H. Haslam and A. T. Hunter. A big convention to further this project is to be held at Regina, Nov. 16.

Demonstration Farms.

An address was also delivered during the evening by C. C. James, the Government Agricultural specialist on demonstration farms in Ontario.

Although the convention opened only this morning, it was adjourned until Thursday afternoon. There were three long conferences to-day, the night session lasting almost 11o 'clock. The adjournment was made in order to allow time for a special committee to prepare suitable resolutions covering the line of action suggested during the day. This committee is composed of the presidents of the three western farmers' organizations and three members of the Canadian Manufacturers' Associations. On Thursday afternoon, when they bring in their resolutions, a further discussion will ensue and a final discussion will be arrived at as to what course should be taken.

As to what propositions have been advanced by the manufacturers, nothing definite could be learned, for all who were in attendance at the convention were pledged to secrecy. It was stated, however, by one of those present, that the first scheme submitted, as outlined in a telegram from the secretary of the Manufacturers to the secretary of the United Farmers of Alberta, had been dropped.

Want Big Grant.

As already announced, the conference was called with a view to asking the Dominion Government for a grant of millions of dollars to be used in increasing the wheat acreage of the west. It is said that the plan proposed is to loan this money out to farmers who are at present on the land, full security to be taken for it, and the return payments on the loan extended over a term of years. The farmers, in their turn, will be expected to take the unemployed out of the cities and put them to work preparing the new areas for seeding.

The Regina deputation refused to make any statement whatever as to the views they presented to the convention, but a circular outlining their community scheme had already been issued. The circular dealt with the establishment of communities in the west, each head of a family to receive 160 acres on long term payments, and helped to get a start.

SOUTH AMERICAN TRADE DEVELOPEMENT

The present trade conditions of Europe are such that the American and Canadian manufacturer is looking for new outlets, and he naturally turns to the Continent of South America as a verdant field for his activities. Appreciating that the situation is one that needs extraordinary advertising and demonstrating the Fidelity Trust Company of Baltimore, Maryland, have chartered the S. S. "Finland" for a South American cruise, leaving New York on January 27th, 1915, which will include the east and west coast and go one way through the Panama Canal, the time to be 105 days with frequent stop-overs and side trips inland.

This should be welcome news to the many manufacturers that are looking to South America in lieu of the European markets.

BAD EPIDEMIC OF FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE

Worst Outbreak in the History of United States—Chicago Yards Closed—Has Spread to Buffalo

CHICAGO, Nov. 4 — The Chicago Union Stock Yards, the largest cattle market in the world which has been in continuous business since 1865, tonight was ordered closed for several days because of the prevalence of the hoof and mouth disease among cattle.

The stock yards, it was officially stated, probably will remain closed ten days. The closing order will go into effect at the close of business Friday, November 6th, and continue until the opening of business on the second Monday thereafter, or Nov. 16th. This makes the cessation of business at the yards cover nine days including Sundays.

The decision to close was reached after a prolonged conference of the members of the State Board of Live Stock Commissioners, with all the leading stock dealers and packers, and after consultation with Governor Dunne.

In ten days, it is planned, the stock yards will be thoroughly rid of contagion. The process of elimination will include the destruction of infected animals, the disinfection of cattle pens, and the killing of all rats.

After that business is to be resumed as usual.

The immediate effect of the suspension order will be to stop the shipment of cattle, sheep and hogs to the Chicago market, which amounts to almost 100,000 head daily. This alone out-side of the meat packing industry amounts to a daily business of $1,250,000, and affects 35,000 employees.

The finding in the stock yards to-day that six hundred cattle brought here from various points had been affected, and the belief that the contagion had spread to various parts of the yards, made the immediate action necessary.

Three cows were killed to-day. They were part of a herd of 600 which were found to be diseased. Two herds of the Dairy Show blue-blooded animals will meet a like fate, but hope is expressed for the rest of the cattle on exhibition.

TAKE AMMUNITION OF INTERNED SOLDIERS

Holland Said to Have Seized 4,000,000 Rounds from Belgians and French.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 31.—According to a local newspaper, a steamer of the Batavia Line has just brought to the Dutch military depot at Delft 4,000,000 rounds of ammunition seized from the Belgian and French soldiers interned in Holland.

This vessel, it is said, also carried sea mines and shells taken from a Belgian monitor. A second cargo of 20,000 rifles, 100 bicycles and some automobiles is expected to be made soon.

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Geo. Allan England

Now the scene changed; and she saw it, crushed and broken, lying on some far rock-ledge, amid impenetrable forests, while from beneath a formless tangle of wreckage protruded a hand—his hand—and a thin, dripping stream of red.

Gasping, she sought to struggle up and stare about her; but the drugged draft was too potent, and she could not move. Yet still the visions came again—and now it seemed that Allan lay there, in the woods, somewhere afar, transfixed with an envenomed spear, while in a crowding, hideous, jabbering swarm the distorted, brute-like anthropoids jostled triumphantly all about him, hacked at him with flints and knives, flayed and dismembered him, inflicted unimaginable mutilations—

She knew no more. Thanks to the wondrous beneficence of the ronyilu, she slept a deep and dreamless slumber. Even the child being laid on her breast by the old woman—who smiled, though in her eyes stood tears—even this did not arouse her.

She slept. And for a few blessed hours she had respite from woe and pain unspeakable.

At last her dreams grew troubled. She seemed caught in a thunderstorm, an earthquake. She heard the smashing of the lightning bolts, the roaring shock of the reverberation, then the crash of shattered buildings.

A sudden shock awoke her. She thought a falling block of stone had struck her arm. But it was only old Gesafam shaking her in terror.

"Oh, Yukcia, nos!" the nurse was crying in terror. "Up! Waken! The cliff falls! Awake, awake!"

Beatrice sat up in bed, conscious through all the daze of dreams quick broken, that some calamity—some vast and unknown peril—had smitten the colony at Settlement Cliffs.

CHAPTER XXII.
THE TREASON OF H'YEMBA.

Not yet even fully awake, Beatrice was conscious of a sudden, vast responsibility laid on her shoulders. She felt the thrill of leadership and command, for in her hands alone now rested the fate of the community.

Out of bed she sprang, her grief for the moment crushed aside, equiver now with the spirit of defence against all ills that might menace the colony and her child.

"The cliff falls!" she cried, starting for the doorway.

"Yes, mistress! Hark!"

Both women heard a grating, crushing sound. The whole fabric of the cavern trembled again, as though shuddering; then, far below, a grinding crash re-echoed — and now rose shouts, cries, wails of pain.

Already Beatrice was out of the door and running down the terrace.

"Yukcia! Yukcia!" the old woman stood screaming after her. "You must not go!"

She answered nothing, but ran the faster. Already she could see dust rising from the river-brink; and louder now the cries blended in an anguished chorus as she sped down the terrace.

What could have happened? How great was the catastrophe? What might the death-roll be?

Her terrors about Allan had at last been thrown into the background of her mind. She forgot the boy, herself, everything save the crushing fact of some stupendous calamity.

All at once she stopped with a gasp of terror.

She had reached the turn in the path whence now all the further reach of the cliff was visible. But, where the crag had towered, now appeared only a great and jagged rent in the limestone, through which the sky peered down.

An indescribable chaos of fragments, blocks, debris, detritus of all kinds half choked the river below; and the swift current, suddenly blocked, now foamed and chafed with lathering fury through the newly fallen obstacle.

Broken short off, the path stopped not a hundred yards in front of her.

As she stood there, dazed and dumb, harkening the terrible cries that rose from those still not dead in the ruins, she perceived some of the Folk gathered along the brink of the new chasm. More and more kept coming from the scant half of the caves still left. And all, dazed and numbed like herself, stood there peering down with vacant looks.

Beatrice first recovered wit. Dimly she understood the truth. The cavern digging of the Folk, the burrowing and honeycombing through the cliff, must have sprung some keystone, started some "fault," or broken down some vital rib of the structure.

With irresistible might it had torn loose, slid, crashed, leaped into the canon, carrying with it how many lives she knew not.

All she knew now was that rescues must be made of such as still lived, and that the bodies of the dead must be recovered.

So with fresh strength, utterly forgetful of self, she ran once more down the steep terrace, calling to her folk:

"Men! My people! Down to the river, quickly! Take hammers, bars, tools—go swiftly! Save the wounded! Go!"

There was no sleep for any in the colony that day, that night, or the next day. The vast pile of debris rang with the sledge blows, louder than ever anvil rang; and the torches flared and sparkled over the jumble of broken rock, beneath which now lay buried many dead — none knew how many — nevermore to be seen of man. Great iron bars bent double with the prying of strong arms.

Beatrice herself, flambeau in hand, directed the labour. And as, one by one, the wounded and the broken were released, she ordered them borne to the great cave of Bremilu, the Strong.

Bremilu had been in the house of one Jukkos at the time of the catastrophe. His body was one of the first to be found. Beta transformed his cave into a hospital.

And there, working with the help of three or four women, hampered in every way for lack of proper materials, she laboured hour after hour dressing wounds, setting broken bones, watching no few die, even despite the best that she could do.

Old Gesafam came to seek her there with news that the child cried of hunger. Dazed, Beta went to nurse it; and then returned, in spite of the old woman's pleadings; and so a long time passed—how long she never knew.

Disaster! This was her one clear realisation through all those hours of dark and labour, anguish and despair. For the first time the girl felt beaten.

Till now, through every peril, exposure and hardship, she had kept hope and courage. Allan had always been beside her—wise, and very strong to counsel and to act.

But now, alone there—all alone in face of this sudden devastation — she felt at the end of her resources. She had to struggle to hold her reason, to use her native judgment, common sense and skill.

The work of rescue came to an end at last. All were saved who could be. All the bodies that could be reached had been carried into still another cave, not far from the path of the disaster. All the wounds and injuries had been dressed, and now Beatrice knew her force was at an end. She could do no more.

Drained of energy, spent, broken, she dragged herself up the path again. In front of the cave of H'yemba, the smith, a group of survivors had gathered.

Dimly she sensed that the ugly fellow was haranguing them with loud and bitter words. As she came past, the speech died; but many lowering and evil looks were cast on her, and a low murmur—sullen and ominous—followed her on up the terrace.

Too exhausted even to note it or to care, she staggered back to Cliff Villa, flung herself on the bed, and slept.

How long She could not tell when she awoke again. Only she knew that a dim light, as of evening, was glimmering in at the doorway, and that her child was in the bed beside her.

"Gesafam!" she called, for she heard some one moving in the cave. "Bring me water!"

There came no answer. Beta repeated the command. A curious, sneering mockery startled her. Still clad in her loose brown cloak, belted at the waist—for she had thrown herself upon the bed fully clad—she sat up, peering by the light of the fireplace into the half dark of the room.

A third time she called the old woman.

"It is useless!" cried a voice. "She will not come to help you. See, I have bound her—and now she lies in that further chamber of the cave, helpless. For it is not with her I would speak, but with you. And you shall hear me."

"H'yemba!" cried Beatrice, startled, suddenly recognising the squat and brutal figure that now, a threat in every gesture, approached the bed. "Out! Out of here, I say! How dare you enter my house? You shall pay heavily for this great insult when the master comes. Out and away!"

The ugly fellow only laughed menacingly.

"No, I shall not go, and there will be no payment," he retorted in his own speech. "And you must hear me, for now I, and not he, shall be the master here."

Beta sprang from the bed and faced him.

"Go, or I shoot you down like a dog!" she threatened.

He sneered.

"There will be no shooting," he answered coolly. "But there will be speech for you to hear. Now listen! This is what ye brought us here to? The man and you? This? To death and woe? To accidents and perishings?

"Ye brought us to hardship and to battle, not to peace! With lies, deceptions and false promises ye enticed us! We were safe and happy in our homes in the Abyss beside the sunless sea, till ye fell thither in your airboat from those cursed regions. We—"

"For this speech ye shall surely die when the master comes!" cried she. "This is treason, and the penalty of it is death!"

He continued, paying no heed:

"We had no need of you, your ways, or your place. But the man Allan would rule or he would ruin. He overthrew and killed our chief, the great Kamrou himself—Kamrou the terrible! To us he brought dissension. From us he bore the patriarch away and slew him, and then made us a great falsehood in that matter.

"So he enticed us all. And ye behold the great disaster and the death! The man Allan has deserted us all to perish here. Coward in his heart, he has abandoned you as well! Gone once more to safety and ease, below in the Abyss, there to rule the rest of the folk there to take wives according to our law, while we die here!"

Menacingly he advanced toward the dumb-stricken woman, his face ablaze with evil passion.

"Greenaya!" (coward) he shouted. "Weakling at heart. Great boaster, doer of little deeds! Even you, who would be our mistress, he has abandoned—even his own son he has forsaken. A rotten breed, truly! And we die!

"But listen now. This shall not be! I H'yemba, the smith, the strongest of all, will not permit it. I will be ruler here, if any live to be ruled! And you shall be my serving-maid—your son my slave!"

Aghast, struck dumb by this wild tempest of rebellion, Beatrice recoiled. His face showed like a white blur in the gloom.

"Allan!" she gasped. "My Allan—"

The huge smith laughed a venomous laugh that echoed through the cave.

"Ha! Ye call on the coward!" he mocked, advancing on her. "On the coward who cannot hear, and would not save you if he could? Behold now ye shall kneel to me and call me master! And my words from now ye shall obey!"

She snatched for her pistol. It was not there. In the excitement of the past hours she had forgotten to buckle it on. She was unarmed.

H'yemba already grasped for her, to force her down upon the floor, kneeling to him—to make her call him master.

Already his strong and hair fingers had all but seized her robe.

But she, lithe and agile, evaded the grip. To the fire she sprang. She caught up a flaming stick that lay upon the hearth. With a cry she dashed it full into his glaring eyes.

So sudden was the attack that H'yemba had no time even to ward it off with his hands. Fair in the face the scorching flame struck home.

Howling, blinded, stricken, he staggered back; beat the air with vain blows and retreated toward the door.

As he went he poured upon her a torrent of the most hideous imprecations known to their speech—and they were many.

But she, undaunted now, feeling her power and her strength again, followed close. And like blows of a flail, the sputtering, flaring flame beat down upon his head, neck, shoulders.

His hair was blazing now; a smell of scorched flesh diffused itself through the cavern.

"Go! Go, dog!" she shouted, maddened and furious, in consuming rage and hate. "Coward! Slanderer and liar! Go, ere I kill you now!"

In panic-stricken fright, unable, to [illegible] trying in vain to ward off the devastating, torturing whip of flame and to extinguish the fire ravaging his hair, the brute half ran, half fell out of the cave.

Down the steep path he staggered, yelling curses; down, away, anywhere—away from this pursuing fury.

But the woman, outraged in all her inmost sacred tenderness, her love for child and husband, still drove him with the blazing scourge—drove, till the torch was beaten to extinction—drove, till the smith took refuge in his own cave.

There, being spent and weary, she let him lie and howl. Exhausted, terribly shaken in body and soul, yet her own triumphant, she once more climbed the precipitous path to her own dwelling. The torch she flung away, down the canon into the river.

She ran to the far recess of the cave, found Gesafam indeed bound and helpless, and quickly freed her.

The old woman was shaking like a leaf, and could give no coherent account of what had happened. Beta made her lie down on the couch, and herself prepared a bowl of hot broth for the faithful nurse.

BRONCHITIS

If Neglected Will Surely Turn Into PNEUMONIA.

Bronchitis comes from a neglected cold. It starts with a short, painful, dry cough, accompanied with rapid wheezing, and a feeling of oppression or tightness through the chest. At first the expectoration is of a light color, but soon becomes copious and of purulent character.

You have, no doubt, wakened up in the morning and have had to cough half a dozen times before you could raise the phlegm from your bronchial tubes, and when you do succeed in doing so you find that it is of yellowish or greenish color, and you get some relief right away. When this happens to you, you may rest assured that you have a touch of bronchitis, and if not cured immediately it will sooner or later develop into pneumonia or some other more serious trouble.

Cure the cold, and thereby prevent bronchitis and pneumonia taking a hold on your system.

This can be quickly done by the use of

DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP.

Mrs. Rebecca Have, Mahone Bay, N.S., writes: "My little boy, aged six, was always troubled with bronchitis, and when he had whooping cough he was worse. Doctors advised me to use Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. It gave him instant relief, and positively cured him."

WOMAN COULD HARDLY STAND

Because of Terrible Backache. Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I suffered from displacement and inflammation, and had such pains in my sides, and terrible backache so that I could hardly stand. I took six bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and now I can do any amount of work, sleep good, eat good, and don't have a bit of trouble. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to every suffering woman."—Mrs. HARRY FISHER, 1642 Juniata Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Another Woman's Case.

Providence, R. I.—"I cannot speak too highly of your Vegetable Compound as it has done wonders for me and I would not be without it. I had a displacement, bearing down, and backache, until I could hardly stand and was thoroughly run down when I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helped me and I am in the best of health at present. I work in a factory all day long besides doing my housework so you can see what it has done for me. I give you permission to publish my name and I speak of your Vegetable Compound to many of my friends."—Mrs. ANNIE LAWSON, 126 Lippitt St., Providence, R. I.

Danger Signals to Women

are what one physician called backache, headache, nervousness, and the blues. In many cases they are symptoms of some female derangement or an inflammatory, ulcerative condition, which may be overcome by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Thousands of American women willingly testify to its virtue.

Makes Stubborn Coughs Vanish in a Hurry

Surprisingly Good Cough Syrup Easily and Cheaply Made at Home

If some one in your family has an obstinate cough or a bad throat or chest cold that has been hanging on and refuses to yield to treatment, get from any drug store 2½ ounces of Pinex and make it into 16 ounces of cough syrup, and watch that cough vanish.

Pour the 2½ ounces Pinex (50 cents worth) into a 16-ounce bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. The total cost is about 54 cents, and gives you 16 ounces—a family supply—of a most effective remedy, at a saving of 2/3. A day's use will usually overcome a severe cough. Easily prepared in 5 minutes—full directions with Pinex. Keeps perfectly and has a pleasant taste. Children like it.

It's really remarkable how promptly and easily it loosens the dry, hoarse or tight cough and heals the inflamed membranes in a painful cough. It also stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough. A splendid remedy for bronchitis, winter coughs, bronchial asthma and whooping cough.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, which is so healing to the membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and do not accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction goes with this preparation or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

Baby Eczema Becomes Chronic

Coming Great Suffering and Anxiety —Prompt Relief and Cure by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

This is one reason why every mother should know about Dr. Chase's Ointment, since it is an unfailing cure for all itching skin diseases.

Mrs. F. Clarke, Belmont, Man., writes:—"My baby had eczema on her ear. The sore was very bad, and nothing seemed to do her much good. Hearing of the remarkable cures Dr. Chase's Ointment was making, we sent for some, and after the third application the sore began to heal. I am glad to say that it is quite well now, and we give the credit to Dr. Chase's Ointment. We cannot recommend this preparation too highly."

Here is another letter, which tells of the cure of a five-weeks-old baby: Mrs. Wallace Mingon, River John Road, Colchester County, N.S., writes: "My little girl took eczema when she was five weeks old. Though we doctored her until she was nearly a year old, she got no better. I was advised to use Dr. Chase's Ointment and this treatment completely cured her."

Finds Belgian Women Cheerful, Industrious and Excel in Dress

Mr. Boulger Writes of Busy Lives of Fair Sex in Little Country Devastated by War and Commends Their Skill in Making Their Own Clothes

In sharp and dramatic contrast to their present condition of woe and suffering is the ordinary life of the Belgian woman, declared to be the hardest working, the most cheerful and comely of all the women of the world. In his "Belgian life in Town and Country," Mr. Demetrius C. Boulger relates the busy, thrifty existence of these women, who bear half the burdens of life in the devastated little country.

"It is impossible," he writes, "for the observer not to be struck with the bright and contented appearance of the women of Belgium. The cares of life weigh lightly on them, and they find a real pleasure in their occupations. As all the women on ordinary days go about bareheaded, the neatness with which they arrange their hair in the most simple manner at once attracts attention. This practice is universal, and in Belgium a woman's hair is her chief glory. In cold or rainy weather they draw a shawl over their heads, and this is the only protection they employ against the weather. Umbrellas are regarded as a luxury that does not come within the purview of the masses.

"Apart from the care they bestow on their hair, the most striking points about the appearance of these young women are the trimness of their dresses, which are always short, not coming below the ankle, and the activity with which they hurry through the streets, not looking to the right or left. In this respect they furnish a marked contrast to the men, who saunter along to their work and generally include a gossip or a drink as part of their task.

"In short, the women of Belgium, apart from their domestic tasks, which fall to the lot of all, perform their half of the work of the country, and for some reason or other are more in evidence than the men. They take it quite naturally and are remarkably cheerful in aspect. In fact, a disappointed or morose face is hardly to be seen. A cause of this is no doubt the bright, invigorating climate, which enables them to get through their work without fatigue. Another is the early hour at which all begin their occupations—an hour before the usual British breakfast time.

All the women are fond of simple gaieties, the author declares, and are ingenious in blending gay combinations of colours in their gowns.

"As between Flemish and Walloon women it is difficult to draw a just comparison," Mr. Boulger says. "In appearances the Flemings are shorter than their half-sisters, the Walloons. They are also a fair-haired race, with bright complexions and pink cheeks. The Walloon is far taller, and big in proportion, generally dark, with pale face and very marked features, although tradition declares that she should be fair and assigns for a dark-haired woman a Spanish or even a Roman origin.

"Both have a marked partiality for fine clothes and bright colours, and those who have observed the people in their workaday clothes do not recognise them as they go to mass on Sundays. The art of dressmaking has been carried to a high point of perfection among the Walloons, and most of the girls cut their own clothes and make them in the latest fashion. It is quite remarkable to notice the degree to which the art of dressing well is carried among the Walloon women of all classes, especially as there is no corresponding movement among the men. While the men in their Sunday clothes look like ordinary provincials, their wives and daughters might easily be taken for Parisiennes.

"The Belgian women are very fond of pleasure, but it is certain that they get little amusement. They are supposed to find it in their work and their household duties, for it is only on fete days that regular toil is superseded by what may be called the idea of pleasure-seeking. The Belgians are essentially a domestic people and find their pleasure at home in their family work and duties."

STOPS STOMACH PAINS IN TWO MINUTES

The recent discovery by a leading specialist that pure bisurated magnesia will almost instantly relieve pains in the stomach regardless from indigestion, dyspepsia or acidity is of the greatest importance to thousands of people suffering from various forms of stomach trouble. As is well known nine-tenths of all stomach disorders are directly traceable to excessive acidity. A teaspoonful taken in a little water after meals not only neutralizes the acid and stops the pain, but quickly overcomes the cause of the trouble, soothes the inflamed lining of the stomach, and in a short time effects permanent relief.

LAKEFIELD ITEMS

Special to The Examiner:

LAKEFIELD, Oct. 30.—Mrs. (Dr.) S. J. Gibson and children are spending a few weeks visiting in Peterborough.

Rev. L. H. Simon, pastor of the Baptist church at Grenville, Que., has been extended a call by the congregation of the Lakefield Baptist church. He has accepted the call and will commence his new duties about November 2nd.

The concert and social held in the Presbyterian church on Friday evening by the Sunbeam Mission Band, was a huge success in every way. An excellent programme was run off, after which tea was served by the young ladies.

The return of team standing for 1914 in the Canadian Rifle League shows the team from the Lakefield Rifle Association won third prize in the third series "B". Warsaw came first with a total score of 3617, Amabel second with a score of 3606, and Lakefield third with a score of 3585. Fifteen teams were entered in the series. This is the first year Lakefield has had a team in the league, and the members are to be congratulated on the splendid showing made by them.

Mrs. Jas Long has returned home from visiting friends in Peterborough.

Mrs. Thos. Junkin, Miss Madeline and Master Kenneth have returned home after spending a few days in Fenelon Falls.

Mr. John Knox of Toronto is spending a few weeks in the village.

A regular meeting of Clementi Lodge, A. F. & A. M. will be held in the lodge room on Tuesday evening at 7.30 o'clock.

Miss Stella Lennox spent Friday with friends in Peterborough.

Mr. C. Young of Peterborough and Dr. S. J. Gibson left on Wednesday for the Parry Sound district, where they will spend two weeks deer hunting.

THIN FOLKS WHO WOULD BE FAT

Increase in Weight Ten Pounds or More

A PHYSICIAN'S ADVICE.

"I'd certainly give most anything to be able to fat up a few pounds and stay that way," declares every skinny man or woman. Such result is not impossible, despite past failures. This people are victims of mal-nutrition. A condition which prevents the fatty elements of food from being taken up by the blood as they are when the powers of nutrition are normal. Instead of getting into the blood, all the fat and flesh producing elements stay in the intestines until they pass from the body as waste.

To correct this condition and to produce a healthy, normal amount of fat the nutritive processes must be artificially supplied with the power which nature has denied them. This can best be accomplished by eating a Sargol tablet with every meal. Sargol is a scientific combination of six of the best strength-giving, fat-producing elements known to the medical profession. Taken with meals, it mixes with the food and turns the sugars and starches into rich, ripe nourishment for the tissues and blood and its rapid effect is remarkable. Reported gains of from ten to twenty-five pounds in a single month are by no means infrequent. Yet its action is perfectly natural and absolutely harmless. Sargol is sold by good druggists everywhere and every package contains a guarantee of weight increase or money back.

Caution:—While Sargol has produced remarkable results in the treatment of nervous indigestion and general stomach disorders, it should not, owing to its remarkable flesh-producing effect, be used by those who are not willing to increase their weight ten pounds or more.

THE NAME OF JESUS AND WHAT IT MEANS

Woman Contributes Article with Reference to One of Dr. Gordon's Books

All hail the power of Jesus' name!
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem
And crown Him Lord of all.

While speaking last Friday evening Dr. Gordon quoted some beautiful lines, and which are to be found in that excellent little book of his, "The Crystal Christ." They run something like this:

I know of a world that is sunk in shame,
Of hearts which faint and fire;
I know of a name, a name, a name,
Can set this world on fire.
It's sound is a brand, its letters flame,
I know of a name, a name, a name,
Can set this world on fire.

That name is the name of Jesus. At the mention of that name we are told that eventually every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess Him to the glory of God the Father. He is going to be known and loved and worshipped because all men will come to see He is worthy. (And I, He said, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me.) As I heard those lines my own heart thrilled, as well it might, with gratitude for personal salvation, the conscious pardon overwhelming and abundant, not given grudgingly, but love coming with it melting my eyes to tears and my heart to flow at such a manifestation of love to one who felt herself unworthy for deliverance from the guilt and power of sin, for the gift of eternal life, for a more perfect power to enjoy all good and lawful things, for fellowship with kindred minds for all these things and many, many others that name calls for my praise. oes not this name set our hearts on fire, and is there not hope in it for whosoever will. There must be, and it is up to us who know and have proved He is all He claimed to be; it is for us I say to declare it. We sin sometimes. (There is power, power, wonder-working power in the cleansing blood of the Lamb.) This is, of course, a figurative way of speaking. Now what do we mean? Where does the power come in. Right here, (John 3: 16), God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life. Dear, sin-bound, miserable, fettered soul, do you want eternal life? Do you want to be free from the guilt and power of sin? It may be someone will answer yes, sister, I do, "what must I do to be saved?" I will reply in the words of Jesus to some who came to Him asking what they should do to work the works of God. He said, 'This is the work of God that ye believe in Him whom He hath sent.' Now right here, I believe, is another stumbling block. This question I used often to raise in my own heart years ago, "What does it mean to believe in a person and how can it save?" First of all believe He can do what He came to do, to save you from your sin. Thousands of people when convicted of sin start trying to save themselves, and it ends always in miserable failure, for if we could save ourselves there would have been no need for Jesus to die. Secondly, to believe in a person means to accept their teaching, to believe in their way and follow it, and so find the blessedness promised. He hath given eternal life to them that obey Him. There are multitudes of people, yes, and devils, who believe in Jesus. (The devils, we are told, believe and tremble), but will never be saved, unless willing to build upon His teaching, and those who are wise and build on the teaching of Jesus are building on a rock, and the floods may descend and the winds blow and beat upon that house but it will fall not, said the Saviour, for it is founded on a rock. On Christ, the solid rock, I'll stand. And other ground is sinking sand.

In every high and stormy gale my anchor holds within the vale; in other words our faith is in Jesus, now passed into the Heavens, and is there as a merciful High Priest, understanding our every temptation, because in all points like as we are, yet without sin, therefore He is able to save them to the uttermost who come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them. So right here we have a beautiful thought that Jesus lived on this earth and took our nature that He might thoroughly understand what we had to contend with, that He might be a merciful High Priest and plead our cause well, and right here I believe we have what the Apostle Paul meant to convey to us when he said words to this effect, that we were reconciled to God by His death and saved by His life. Rom: 5:10. Lastly I would dwell a few moments on this thought (Reconciled to God by His death). That hymn is altogether wrong, which begins—

My God is reconciled,
His pardoning voice I hear.

The Scripture says God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself, bringing them night to Him by the blood of Jesus. He felt that if He gave the best He had, the choicest of Heaven, His only begotten Son, that man would believe He loved them and not shrink from Him as it is perfectly natural to do from an earthly father when we have broken his law and disgraced him, but love is strong as death, one penitent tear from you dear sinner will draw Him to your side, and if you but smite upon your breast and cry God be merciful, how merciful you will find Him believe in that love as revealed by the fact that He gave His dear Son feeling that this would prove His Love beyond a doubt, seek and get forgiveness for God is more ready to pardon than we are to seek it.

Where is a pardoning God like Thee
Or who has grace so rich and free.

One of the greatest joys in heaven is to see sinners repenting. Luke 15:7. Further on in this same chapter we read of the prodigal saying, I will arise and go to my Father, and while he was yet a great way off his Father (God) saw him and ran and fell on his neck and kissed him, and from His suffering overjoyed heart He called for the best of everything, nothing was too good for this poor prodigal who had wasted his powers in wrong living, and now sees what a fool he has been. Do we want anything better than this. De we need anything more to prove that God loves us no matter how sinful we may have been.

When sorrow swells the laden breast,
And tears of anguish flow,
One only heart, a broken heart,
Can feel the sinner's woe.

Lift up thy bleeding hand oh Lord,
Unseal that crimson tide,
We have no shelter from our sin,
But in Thy wounded side.

Thank God for a crucified Saviour for the fountain of love which that shed blood reveals, (there is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved). Acts 4:12. (How can we escape then if we neglect so great salvation). Heb. 2:3. Why this salvation is so great I have tried to show in my poor way, and why we cannot escape the natural consequences of sin very sinner must know who have experienced that terrible power which in spite of the better desires is dragging them downward with more terrible force as the years speed on. There is no escape unless arrested by that sight on Calvary. This is our only hope of salvation. Oh that our ministers in every pulpit in the land would preach Jesus and him crucified the world's only hope, the only thing which can save men from destruction.

Oh let this love my heart constrain,
This love for every sinner flee,
That every fallen soul of man,
May taste the love that found out me.
That all mankind with me may prove,
Thy sovereign everlasting love.

We must lift up Jesus and thus arrest the terrible evils now raging the world over. Jesus said He that believeth on Me out of his inmost being shall flow rivers (not streams) of living water. Where are the believers from whose overflowing hearts are coming the living words of love, of hope, of cheer, of life? This is yet coming to pass, and I believe soon. Ezekiel, the prophet, saw this in a vision long before Christ came under the figure of an earthly temple. He saw the vision of the holy waters issuing out from under the threshold of the temple. In verse 12 of the same chapter it says out of the sanctuary. Now brethren we are the temple of the living God, the sanctuary is the heart, the living water are the words He gives us to speak, and everywhere the waters flowed and they flowed toward the desert, and from there to the sea. In other words the sea represents multitudes, of people and everything lived withersoever the waters went excepting the marshy miry places which means the hearts in which there is actually nothing to appeal to. Ezekiel 47.

EAT LESS MEAT IF BACK HURTS

Take a Glass of Salts to Flush Kidneys if Bladder Bothers You

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

Farm and Dairy Market Report

Toronto, Monday, Nov. 2.—Every sensational war development has its effect on the market, but sensational developments in the last few months have become so common that the entrance of Turkey into the arena has not affected values as much as might have been expected: this market was affected less than either Winnipeg or Chicago. It is wonderful how steady trade is, considering the disorganizing influences at work. At the same time the situation is anything but satisfactory.

WHEAT

The closing of the Dardanelles and consequently the shutting off of a portion of Russia's wheat crop from a market in Western Europe, has tended to strengthen the wheat market, and No. 1 Northern is now quoted $1.24. No. 2, $1.21½; new crop, 1c less. Ontario wheat, too, has been affected and is now quoted $1.08 to $1.10.

COARSE GRAINS

With large government orders Western oats are the strongest feature of the market. Otherwise there is not much change. Oats, C.W. No. 2, 43c; No. 3, 42c; Ontario oats, 40c to 42c; corn, 79½c; peas, $1.15 to $1.20; rye, 84c to 86c; barley, malting, 66c to 68c; feed, 61c to 63c; buckwheat, 64c to 65c. Montreal quotations are: Oats, C.W. No. 2, 46½c; extra No. 1 feed, 47½c to 48c; Ontario and Quebec oats, 42c to 43c; corn, 82½c; peas, $1 to $1.20; buckwheat, 64c to 65c; rye, 85c to 87c; barley, malting, 77½c; feed, 67c to 69c.

HAY AND STRAW

Quotations are firm: No. 1 baled hay, $16 to $16.50; No. 2, $15.50 to $16; No. 3, $11 to $13; baled straw, $7.50 to $8. At Montreal government purchases have advanced quotations, and at country points is bringing $19 to $19.50, with No. 2, $18 to $18.50; inferior grades, as low as $14.50.

MISCELLANEOUS

The only change in the car market here has been an advance of 2c in new-laids in cartons. From Montreal comes the report that Canada is exporting eggs to Great Britain for the first time in 13 years, and prices have advanced 2c. No. 1 being quoted 27c and selected 29c to 30c.

Potatoes are 5c a bag weaker at Toronto than quotations noted last week, but more active at Montreal. Green Mountains bringing 65c and local varieties, 55c to 56c. Hides and wool are steady.

DAIRY PRODUCE

Butter has improved during the week, the Montreal report placing the advance at ½c to ¾c. There has been little outside demand, but in view of the shrinkage of 40,000 packages in the season's production and with several months of consumption ahead, holders are not inclined to make concessions. Quotations on creamery rolls from 27c to 27½c, with seconds, 25½c to 26½c. The Toronto market quotes dairy prints, 28c to 29c.

A new feature in the cheese situation is the large shipments of the United States cheese to the English market, as prices to the south of the line have suffered a collapse. On this side there has been little business during the past week, and quotations at Montreal still remain at 16½c to 16¾c for finest Western colored and 15½c to 15¾c for finest Western white. The exports of cheese to date show a decrease of about 100,000 boxes for the season.

LIVE STOCK

There has been some slight improvement on the live stock market this past week, particularly for well finished steers. Under-finished stuff, however, was slow, particularly towards the close of the week, as it is expected that there will be heavy shipments of this class of stock this present week. Generally quotations closed at about last week's level, any attempt at an advance stopping trade. Choice heavy steers, $7.75 to $8.25; handy steers, $7.75 to $8.15; butcher steers, good, $7.30; com. to med., $6.50 to $7.25; heifers, $7 to $8; cows, $5 to $7; butcher bulls, $6 to $7.25; feeders, $6 to $7.40; stockers, $4.25 to $7; canners, $3 to $3.25.

Milch cows have been in great demand; choice, $80 to $100; com. and med., $40 to $60; springers, $60 to $100. Calves bring $4 to $10.50.

Lambs, $6 to $7.75; light ewes, $5.25 to $5; heavy sheep and bucks, $4 to $5; culls, $3.50 to $4.

Hogs continue steady at last week's quotation, $7.15 f.o.b.

BUTTER AND CHEESE

Brockville, Oct. 29.—1,350 colored and 600 white. Sales were 300 colored and 600 white at 14½c.

Vankleek Hill, Oct. 30.—975 white and 125 colored cheese sold at 14½c.

Picton, Oct. 30.—920 boarded, all colored; 410 sold at 14½c; balance at 14 9-16c.

Napanee, Oct. 30.—400 cheese sold at 14½c.

Cornwall, Oct. 29.—1,181 colored offered; 600 sold at 14½c, 160 at 14 1-16c and 225 at 14¾c. Contributions to the Patriotic Fund now total $2,094.65.

Listowel, Oct. 30.—A portion of the 1,800 cheese boarded to-day went on the street at 14c. It is expected that the contribution to the Patriotic Fund will amount to $1,300.

Watertown, N.Y., Oct. 31.—Cheese sales, 3,900 boxes at 14c.

London, Ont., Oct. 31.—1,250 boxes offered; no sales. Bidding from 14c to 14½c.

St. Hyacinthe, Que., Oct. 31.—400 packages of butter sold at 30½c; 300 boxes of cheese at 13¾c.

THE AYRSHIRE ANNUAL

The annual report of the Canadian Ayrshire Breeders' Association is this year a little more attractive than any that heretofore have been sent out by the association. Inside the cover is an excellent likeness of the President, P. D. MacArthur, and full page engravings of the late Jas. McCormack, of Rockton, Ont., and the late John Morrin, Petite Brule, Que. In addition are 24 full page illustrations of leading representatives of the breed in Canada and the United States.

The minutes of the annual and directors' meetings, constitution, by-laws, rules of entry, scale of points, rules and regulations for R. O. P. and so forth will make interesting reading for Ayrshire enthusiasts. Another neat booklet just to hand gives a list of all the qual-official tests of Ayrshire cattle up to June 1st, 1914.

GIRLS! GIRLS! TRY IT BEAUTIFY YOUR HAIR

Make It Thick, Glossy, Wavy, Luxuriant and Remove All Dandruff

Your hair becomes light, wavy, fluffy, abundant and appears as soft, lustrous and beautiful as a young girl's after a "Danderine hair cleanse." Just try this — moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. This will cleanse the hair of dust, dirt and excessive oil and in just a few moments you have doubled the beauty of your hair.

Besides beautifying the hair at once Danderine dissolves every particle of dandruff; cleanses, purifies and invigorates the scalp, forever stopping itching and falling hair.

But what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use when you will actually see new hair—fine and downy at first—yes,—but really new hair growing all over the scalp. If you care for pretty, soft hair and lots of it surely get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any druggist or toilet counter, and just try it.

TRAVELLER FINDS PARIS CHEERFUL, CLEAN, CONFIDENT

William Agnew Paton, of New York, Contrasts Capital with Days of 1870.

CITY WELL ORDERED; PEOPLE DETERMINED

Proprietor of Hotel Tells British Officers Their Bill Will Reach Them in Berlin.

(Special Dispatch.)

LONDON, Oct. 31.

"To be in Paris now, when France is fighting for life is an experience that stirs one's emotions so deeply that words are too poor to translate one's thoughts," writes Mr. William Agnew Paton, of New York, who has just arrived in London from Paris.

"I was here in the latter part of August, 1870. It is a different Paris now from what it was in those terrible days, just before the debacle at Sedan. I do not like to remember the Paris of 1870. The hideous disorder, the tumult; the frenzied, hysterical, panic stricken mobs; the terror, the despair of a desperate people who had been deceived, betrayed by the brummagem imitation of the Great Napoleon. My memories of Paris in 1870 are hideous dreams. To-day I can hardly persuade myself that it is the same city, that the Parisians of 1914 are the descendants of the Parisians of 1870. What a change, what a difference! It is marvellous!

"Since 1870 I have travelled to Paris a score of more of times. I have never, even in the days of peace and prosperity seen that city so well ordered as now, its streets so clean, all its purlieus and purposes so soignés. The peace of the great metropolis, the quietude, the solemnity that holds the very air; the brave, resolute, determined outward cheerfulness of the people, all the people, everywhere, is pathetic. It is magnificent! And as is Paris, so is all France!

"On the way to Paris from Geneva at the first halt of the train after it had entered France young girls with flower decked [illegible] the [illegible] of the train. [illegible] Paris [illegible] Lyons. [illegible] Alsace passed [illegible] At Dijon [illegible] train was detailed for two [illegible] of the [illegible] of train [illegible] supporting cavalry, infantry, [illegible] artillery which [illegible] ammunition to reinforce the [illegible] of the Eyres line of defence. All the soldiers, looking from the windows of the trains as they passed us—all the men on guard to form the firing line—were cheerful, quietly, bravely cheerful, as they exchanged friendly greetings with the calm and thoughtful onlookers—their civilian countryfolk—who answered them with words of cheer and affection.

"There was no excitement, a little cheering, no hint of the agony that held all French hearts. As the trains moved off the soldiers waved their hands, calling 'Au revoir!' and the people answered, 'Bonne chance!' and many men and women, as they watched the disappearing trains smiled through their tears. At all the stations were large crowds or smaller groups of onlookers, silently watching the passing trains and waving goodby to the brave fellows who were being hurried to the front to take the place of the dead and wounded. All through the night, all the way to Paris, our train passed countless other trains all driven at the greatest possible speed, carrying [illegible] munitions and supplies to the armies fighting for the life of France—for civilization!

USE BOY SCOUTS TO GUARD PRISONERS

(Special Dispatch.)

LONDON, Oct. 31.

The English Boy Scouts, armed only with their staves, are doing excellent work in guarding alien prisoners in the concentration camps. When these Germans and Austrians first saw there were no soldiers, with fixed bayonets to hinder their movements, only bright little boys in knickerbockers, several of them took a fancy to go gathering nuts and blackberries, particularly those at a distance from the camps.

But the Boy Scouts have an awkward way of turning a corner suddenly and asking awkward questions. If a boy holds up his hand or waves a flag, others appear to rise out of the ground, and the military are usually not far away.

The Altos troop of boy scouts have shown themselves particularly alert in guarding prisoners, and it is some time now since a concentrated alien broke bounds, and several who have been provided with separate accommodations in the abbey crypt, with table d'hôte of bread and water, have announced their intention of obeying all the rules, and boy scouts—in future.

The boys do wonders with their fleet-legs and whistles, holding "conversations" with fellow scouts a long way off all night they tie black threads knee high across paths in copses, or place pieces of dry wood so that they must be broken or moved by any one passing.

They have an ingenious device of laying a network of threads all around, which connect up with tin cans in the abbey precincts. If a thread is moved it "rings" a tin can and they know exactly where the intruder is, just as the hotel indicator shows that "No. 18" is ringing.

Berlin Reads Three Times a Day Rosy Reports of "Victories" Over Kaiser's Foes

(Special Dispatch.)

BERLIN, Oct. 31.

I am sitting in the Café Kerkau, on the Friedrichstrasse, with the expectant cosmopolitan crowd waiting for the evening instalment of German victories. Fly sheets of the newspapers gave gratis accounts of victories over the French at breakfast time, victories over the Russians for luncheon and good news from Austria is expected for dinner. The faces of those about me are beaming with delight and my neighbor remarks:—

"To-night's patriotic concert should be a great success. I hear we are to have another procession of captured trophies to-morrow."

On the streets there are first signs of spreading doubt and uncertainty, noticeable and dire effects of the war are beginning to be felt severely in the German capital. It is not the effect that is seen on the surface or in the marked change of appearance of the life here, but the deeper effect that has penetrated into nearly every household and is heaping financial and commercial ruin on German gambling at the rate of several score every hour.

I am told on excellent authority that there is scarcely a home from the proudest to the most humble that has not already lost in the struggle some one dear to it. In society circles the women are bearing up bravely, joining in the various charitable works for the wounded and accepting the worst news that falls to their lot. Somehow it seems easier to bear in these times than in the hitherto homely, where in some cases all the male members of the family have been wiped out, perhaps by a single shell. Bismarck once said that men in battle were "food for the cannon," and this motto, only spell heroism on the battlefield, but it is not seen in that light by the persons left to mourn.

Favorable News Prepared.

The imperial government is taking measures to prevent undue distress among the people as much by sanctioning the circulation of specially prepared favorable news as by other methods, such as arranging for wounded to be brought in at night where their transport through the streets will remain unobserved. Of course thousands of the poorer people have no news of their favorites fighting at the front and still remain without news from them until the war is over. The government has turned capturing popular attention on casualty lists. The only losses spoken of are those of the enemy.

The food problem, which at the outbreak of the war, appeared to offer no menace, is beginning to make itself felt. The government fixed a maximum price for the necessities of life, and woe to the shop keeper who dares to disobey this imperial edict! As a result shop keepers unable to stand the strain simply close up, giving as a reason the necessity for their employes to report to the front for duty.

The absence of able bodied men is becoming more and more noticeable, but in frankness it must be said there are many more available here who look as if they could carry a rifle. The explanation given is that these men are not needed and that the German army has more than it can equip and make use of at present. The stories that gray haired men and young boys are herring with the flower of the [illegible] are [illegible] The [illegible] on the Moscow move had the war fever full blast for weeks now, and their favorite game is playing "Germans against Russians." The "Russians" run away pell mell with the "Germans" in hot pursuit. Perhaps it is these manoeuvres which the German newspapers refer to when they give out their daily quota of German victories with the Russians in flight.

Editors' Private Opinions.

This class of news can be printed with full official sanction. It is curious to note the difference between the views of the newspaper editors on the outlook as they discuss it among themselves and the opinions when they appear in print. For example, the fall of Lemberg is regarded by practically every newspaper editor in Berlin as extremely serious. Before Lemberg fell there was every hope that it could be saved, at whatever cost. Yet in the Local Anzeiger and other papers this is referred to as of no importance whatever and merely a strategic evacuation on the part of the Austrians.

Likewise, writers and political writers in conversation among themselves describe the Russian menace as extremely serious, but go to great pains to tell their readers that it practically does not exist at all. It is the same with the forced German retreat in France. There is a certain percentage of people in Berlin outside of official circles who fully realize that the Kaiser's legions have not met with their expected successes, but no one would dream of putting this in print, not even the social-ist paper Vorwärts, which has had so much trouble with the authorities.

Theodore Wolff, the well known editor of the Berliner Tageblatt, came about as near offending Wilhelmstrasse as any one when he wrote that Germans as well as others regretted the destruction of Louvain. This did almost like majesty, and the offence will not be repeated.

A DRAMATIC STORY FROM SOISSONS

(Special Dispatch.)

LONDON, Oct. 31.

The story of a mere boy in the Twenty-fourth South Wales Borderers, in a hospital with a fractured thigh, how he was hit and carried out of the fire is worth a Victoria Cross.

"It was at Soissons. My company officer was standing up with an orderly near a tree and twelve of us were lying resting in a field under a roaring cannonade. Suddenly I saw a shell coming and shouted to look out just as it burst over and a little behind the tree. None of the two standing was touched, but eight of us got it. I felt as if something had come up through the ground and jolted my leg, and when I tried to get up I could use only one foot. Up to then the shells had been bursting one a minute over a piece of open ground between where we were hidden and a wood.

"I asked if I could be moved and my lance corporal took me on his back and walked straight across about 200 yards of ground that, besides the shells, was enfiladed by a storm of rifle fire. How we got across I don't know. When we were safe on the other side, he cut off my trouser leg, gave me a first dressing and put a waterproof sheet under me, and there I lay for about fifteen hours, under the rain most of the time. If ever I find that man again I shall know how to thank him."

A British soldier who has seen seventeen years' service, including that in the Indian Afghan war, describing the effects of British shrapnel fire on the Germans, said that the manner of the former was due to the extra pay for marksmanship which the rank and file receive. He belongs to a regiment which has had a reputation for shooting ever since the time of the Peninsular War.

SIDEWALK DINING STILL EXISTS IN GAY MARSEILLES

Day and Night the Cannebière Is Filled with Thirsty Throng.

HUMOR CHANGES WITH THE WIND

Smiles for the Algerian Troops and Scowls for Prisoners from Dram Drinkers.

(Special Dispatch.)

MARSEILLES, Oct. 31.

Marseilles has not yet followed the example of Paris and suppressed the little tables and chairs on the pavements outside her cafés.

All day long and all night up to "twenty-two o'clock," otherwise ten o'clock, it is almost impossible to fight your way up or down the Cannebière.

There seems always a crowd at Marseilles, a trickling, thirsty, desultory, amiable crowd. Like most crowds, it possesses all sorts of dangerous faculties.

I had two experiences of it yesterday. After thunder and lightning and a wind that blew the most stubborn off their legs the sun began to shine, and fat, friendly faces caught shining perfections from the puddles.

Then all of a sudden the fat, friendly faces got like curdled milk, and crowds ran hither and thither, brandishing hats and sticks, shouting.

Presently there came an Algerian cavalcade. Four abreast came Algerian warriors on lovely barbs, bowing and prancing to right and left in acknowledgment of the hosanas of the crowd, and just before closing time the bistros were adorning the pavements of coffee houses and sipping beverages forbidden by the Prophet.

Then came a movement like wind among the trees. Dram drinkers suddenly became ruthless. There was a scurry on the curb and a fierce yell. No one perhaps was really angry, but no one reflected how hideous it was for a wounded Prussian prisoner to be thus received after days in a cattle truck.

I remonstrated right and left, regardless of the risk of being taken for a Prussian, and everybody agreed that prisoners should be respected. But we have been inflamed by stories of Prussian atrocities.

However, we agree that we are bound to win, and can afford to be generous. My great argument is Wilkinson's telegram to Turpin about the George admiral's [illegible] safe, and everybody says, "Ah, a great chief!"

The Interference of Kitty

She Was Forgiven

By JOSIAH T. NEWCOMB

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

I.

The galleries were packed to suffocation. The lobby and even the senate floor were crowded. A sharp fight was expected over the merger bill, notwithstanding the confidence of the head of the promoting syndicate, who arrived the night before and established head quarters in a nearby hotel, and of Colonel Moulton, the chairman of the senate committee, who kept the run of things from his office on the second floor of the capitol. Both believed they had the situation well in hand until they heard about Kittinger. Then they talked with each other over well guarded telephones, and Moulton sent for the senator.

Neither the first nor a second message brought him. The chairman put on his hat and walked to the governor's room.

"We are beaten. I suppose you know," Moulton said without preface, as he sat down.

"Kittinger has been here," answered the governor.

"What excuse did he give?"

"I did not hear him give any."

"Didn't you discuss the bill with him? Didn't you ask him what is the matter with him?"

"No."

"Then I'd like to know what did you talk about?"

"He did most of the talking. I told him that he was foolish not to say yes."

"He won't vacate, then?"

"No. He said he wouldn't."

"George, do you know what this means to us?" the colonel demanded.

"I know what you think it means."

"Yes, and I'm right. It means that you lose the United States senatorship and that you go out of business. That's what it means."

The governor swung around in his chair wearily.

"I suppose you didn't come here just to tell me that again," he said.

"No, I didn't. I did not know that you had seen Kittinger. Anyway, it does not matter. Send for him now, and ask him to vote for the merger."

The governor walked to the window and looked out across the long stretch of dull brown lawn.

"I guess I'll keep out of it, Fred," he answered pensively without turning around.

Just then the door opened, and a girl of twenty stood on the threshold. She held her long riding skirt in her hand.

"Jap said it was important and that I mustn't interrupt, but father promised to go riding with me this morning as soon as he finished his mail. You will forgive me, won't you?"

II.

A little later, when the merger bill was reached on the senate calendar, the majority leader blandly asked that the measure be laid aside for the present. Nobody objected, and the disappointed crowd filed grumblingly out of the galleries. Though they did not understand the delay, few believed that the merger was really beaten. This was the outside view. On the inside Colonel Moulton, Sanderson, head of the promoting syndicate; the governor and two or three others knew that without Kittinger's vote there was a tie. If he voted no the bill was lost.

"Well, find out what he wants," growled Sanderson when the situation was explained to him.

But nobody cared to undertake the task. Kittinger did not understand the game, they felt; and, besides, he might be against the bill on principle. They had heard of such things.

"Can't you call it up when Kittinger is absent?" suggested Sanderson.

They considered this, but not hopefully. The lieutenant governor could be depended upon for the casting vote, but Kittinger was senior officer.

III.

Within half an hour after her return from the ride with her father Kitty Millard knew that in respect to the merger bill she had unwittingly put her dainty little foot into it. Such details of the situation as she failed to get from her father she skillfully extracted from Colonel Moulton. She took at face value all that she gleaned said about the passing of the merger bill on her father's political fortunes. This is the reason why she marched into Moulton's office the next morning and offered her services to help pass the bill.

"I'm afraid, though," she admitted, "that I can't do much with father. He has made up his mind not to interfere. He told me that."

"I don't just see, then"— began Moulton.

"No, I know you don't," answered Miss Millard, "though you are an old dear. I'm going to capture your senator for you. I've made up my mind."

Is 83 Years Old

And Her Heart Does Not Bother Her.

Thanks to MILBURN'S Heart and Nerve Pills.

Mrs. J. McLaren, Cannington, Ont., writes us under date of February 9th, 1914. "Sixteen years ago I took bad with my heart and nerves, and was not able to do anything. I tried a good many doctors, but they did me no good; in fact one doctor gave me up to die. I heard about Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and I thought I would give them a trial, and after using a couple of boxes I saw that I was improving. I kept on using them for quite a long time. I am eighty-three years old and my heart does not bother me at all.

"I am raising a little girl who was never very strong, and the doctor said that she had palpitation of the heart, so I started to give them to her. She is now twelve years old, and they are doing her more good than I can possibly tell you. I would advise anyone who has a weak heart to try Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, as they have done wonders for us."

Price, 50 cents per box, 3 boxes for $1.25; for sale at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

"Do you know him?

"Just. I've met him at dinner once or twice. How much time do you give me?"

Moulton was ready to catch at straws, which accounts for his answering seriously.

"If we cannot pass the bill by this time next month we never can," he said.

"Very well," said Miss Millard.

"I wish you luck," said the colonel.

Kittinger was young, and at ten things went swimmingly. He was engaged to take her into dinner on evening or two after the temporary defeat of the merger bill.

Among the privileges enjoyed by those who were favored with Kitty's royal favor was a housewife ride with her in the mornings.

She was unconventional as to grooms. On the morning Kittinger rode with her, for the fourth or fifth time since their more intimate acquaintance began, they went alone.

"It was mad riding from the beginning. Kitty intended that it should be. It is useless to attempt to attempt to her conduct. Any defense would fall below the demonstrative evidence of her guilt in the form of a scribbled note to Colonel Moulton dispatched the night before. It said:

Call up your bill early tomorrow. He will be absent part of the session.

KITTY.

The start was early, and they were a good distance from town when Kitty saw the young senator look at his watch. As he shot it with a determined snap the horse that Kitty rode gave an unexpected jump, and the bridle broke. The spirited black went into the air, then sped wildly down the road, headed from town. Kitty cast a wild, appealing glance behind her, with a pitiful little cry, and clung to the saddle.

For perhaps a mile Kittinger was unable to overtake them. Then came an accident which could not have been planned, however dark a view is taken of Kitty's conduct. A team, dragging a long timber wagon, emerged nearly all of the narrow highway. The black swerved suddenly, and Kitty landed in a heap at the side of the road.

Kittinger had forgotten the senate, the merger bill, his public duties, everything except Kitty's danger. He ran to her and lifted her in his arms, and he was conscious of a great thrill of joy and relief, for she opened her eyes and spoke.

"I'm not hurt in the least," she said. But when she tried to stand up her foot she promptly sank back into Kittinger's arms and resisted vigorously.

IV.

Kittinger reached the senate chamber an hour after the merger bill had been called up and passed. Either were already in the midst discussing it.

Kittinger was furious. He rose to a question of personal privilege and denounced the proceedings as a dastardly trick. The leader of the majority, in reply, declared that he was surprised and grieved at the unwarranted charge. He disliked, however, to impute malice to any one, and therefore he would put it down to the youth and inexperience of the senator. Kittinger, unconvinced, marched out of the chamber and down to the office of Colonel Moulton. That genial gentleman, however, was not present to listen to his denunciation. The room was empty, but Kittinger's eye took in at a single glance a scrap of paper carelessly left lying on the chairman's desk. It was Kitty's note to Moulton, and the single glance told Kittinger its contents.

He knew the handwriting. He knew the signature. He rushed out of the room with feelings hard to describe.

V.

For three days an impatient young woman with a plaster cast on her ankle sat up in bed at frequent intervals to look at cards which came with dozens of flowers and fruits and dainty trifles, only to fling them aside and sink back again to her pillows, wholly unsatisfied.

When the doctor announced her recovery from the shock and permitted her to be dressed it was a penitent and remorseful Kitty who wrote a pitiful little note to Senator Kittinger. She said that she had a confession to make and would be pleased come to her and listen to it; after which he alone should decide what was to be done.

Senator Kittinger came. His indignation lasted until he reached the room where she awaited him, propped up with pillows. She was quite pale, and she extended a wan little hand to him timidly, for she was not sure that he would take it.

He did take it, and on the instant all his anger died out, for he saw again the great black horse with bridle dangling, thundering down the highway and after a huddled little figure lying by the roadway and not stirring for what seemed an eternity, until he lifted it in his arms.

And so he held the small hand tightly and went down on one knee beside her, and the only words of reproach which he spoke were:

"Kitty, Kitty, how could you? It was terrible! You might have killed yourself!"

"Well!" she said. "You do not know how bad I am—how wicked!"

"Yes, I do!" he mumbled through the small fingers. But she did not hear!

"You think that I was reckless. That was nothing—nothing. I did not mean to fall off and be hurt, but I broke the bridle on purpose. I planned the runaway. I intended to keep you from working back in time. I did it deliberately."

"I know all about it," said Kittinger.

Kitty looked puzzled.

"You—hissed me—after you knew?" she inquired wonderingly.

He kissed her again to convince her. A few minutes later Governor Mitchell himself came in. Kittinger was still half kneeling beside the low chair, and there were explanations.

Presently, when Kittinger was taking his departure, the governor called him back.

"By the way, senator," he said, "I have a piece of news which may interest you."

"Yes?" said Kittinger.

"I have just vetoed the merger bill," said the governor.

EQUIPMENT IS NOVEL.

Canadians Are Carrying Their Combined Spade and Shield.

BASINGSTOKE, Eng., Nov. 4.—Canadian troops arriving at Salisbury Plains carry an entrenching tool that is novel to the Englishman. It is capable of being used as a shield and is slung across the shoulder in a leather case. The tool is a spade weighing about four pounds and consequently can be carried at all times. The spade has an oval hole in the centre of it, through which a gun barrel can be thrust. This tool thus serves both as a rifle rest and shield to the soldier in the trenches.

The new treatment for tender skins

Many people with tender skins have been misled by the superstition that washing the face with soap and water is bad for the complexion.

"Dr. Pusey in his book on the care of the skin says: "The layer of dirt and fat that such persons accumulate on the skin is a poor substitute for a tissue, clear skin and is a constant invitation to various disorders."

The following treatment with Woodbury's Facial Soap is just what a tender skin needs. Keep it attractive and restful.

See what a difference it will make in your skin

Just before retiring, dip a soft washcloth in warm water and hold it to the face. Do this several times. Then make a light warm water lather of Woodbury's and dip your cloth up and down in it till your cloth is "fluffy" with soft, white lather. With this lathered cloth gently over your skin until the pores are opened and thoroughly cleansed. Rinse the face lightly with clear, cool water and dry carefully.

Use this treatment persistently for ten days and your skin will show a marked improvement—a promise of that loveliness which the steady use of Woodbury's brings to a tender, sensitive skin.

Woodbury's Facial Soap costs 25c a cake. No one hesitates at the price after their first cake.

Do this today—now! Tear out the illustration of the cake below and put it in your purse as a reminder to get Woodbury's and try this treatment. Tear out the cake soon. Take it to your druggist today. Begin tonight to get the benefit of this facial soap. For sale by Canadian druggists from coast to coast, including Newfoundland.

Belgians Declare Brussels Episode Marked Crown Prince's Death.

PARIS, Nov. 4.—Belgian officers arriving here state that they are certain that the German Crown Prince Frederick William of Germany is dead. They assert that in Brussels all the flags were at half-mast last Sunday, pointing to this as proof of their statement.

It has been rumored for a number of days that the Crown Prince was wounded rather severely in the fighting in France. Reports to this effect came from Basle, Switzerland, saying that he was ill in a Swiss hospital. Another story said that the prince had been taken to the palace at Strassburg for treatment.

A further story says it was he who led the German troops to disaster before Warsaw in Russian Poland

Found a Friend in Dr. Chase

His Medicines Proven Effective, and Always Kept at Hand in This Home.

Mrs. Chas. Lovell, Agassiz, B. C., writes:—"I feel it my duty to tell you what a great friend Dr. Chase's medicines have been to myself and family. I cannot praise his medicines too highly, and Dr. Chase's name is a household word in our home. Well, quite a number of years ago I sent to you for a sample box of Dr. Chase's Ointment for protruding piles, and, having used the sample and found relief, I sent to a neighbouring town for four boxes, and I am completely cured.

"I have also used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills for constipation, and, after using them, I am completely cured of this dreadful disease. I am the mother of ten children, of whom nine are living, and when seven of my children were all very bad with whooping cough, caught in the middle of a severe winter, I used Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, and they were all cured before the winter was over, and now we are never without Dr. Chase's medicines in our home, and I recommend them to all."

WHY BRITAIN IS AT WAR
By Gilbert K. Chesterton

Unless we are all mad, there is at the back of the most bewildering business a story; and if we are all mad, there is no such thing as madness. If I set a house on fire, it is quite true that I may illuminate many other people's weaknesses as well as my own. It may be that the master of the house was burned because he was drunk; it may be that the mistress of the house was burned because she was stingy, and perished arguing about the expense of the fire-escape. It is, nevertheless, broadly true that they both were burned because I set fire to their house. That is the story of the thing. The mere facts of the story about the present European conflagration are quite as easy to tell.

Before we go on to the deeper things which make this war the most sincere war of human history, it is easy to answer the question of why Britain came to be in it at all; as one asks how a man fell down a coal hole, or failed to keep an appointment. Facts are not the whole truth. But facts are facts, and in this case the facts are few and simple.

Prussia, France, and Britain had all promised not to invade Belgium, because it was the safest way of invading France. But Prussia promised that if she might break in through her own broken promise and ours she would break in and not steal. In other words, we were offered at the same instant a promise of faith in the future and a proposal of perjury in the present.

* * *

Upon the immediate logical and legal interest of the British interest there can be no rational debate. There are some things so simple that one can almost prove them with plans and diagrams, as in Euclid. One could make a kind of comic calendar of what would have happened to the British diplomatist if he had been silenced every time by Prussian diplomacy. Suppose we arrange it in the form of a kind of diary:

July 24 — Germany invades Belgium.

July 25—Britain declares war.

July 26—Germany promises not to annex Belgium.

July 27—Britain withdraws from the war.

July 28—Germany annexes Belgium. Britain declares war.

July 29—Germany promises not to annex France. Britain withdraws from the war.

July 30—Germany annexes France. Britain declares war.

July 31—Germany promises not to annex Britain.

August 1—Britain withdraws from the war. Germany invades Britain.

How long is anybody expected to go on with that sort of a game, or keep peace at that illimitable price? How long must we pursue a road in which promises are all fetiches in front of us and all fragments behind us? No; upon the cold facts of the final negotiations, as told by any of the diplomatists in any of the documents, there is no doubt about the story. And no doubt about the villain of the story.

These are the last facts, the facts which involved Britain. It is equally easy to state the first facts—the facts which involved Europe. The prince who practically ruled Austria was shot by certain persons whom the Austrian government believed to be conspirators from Servia. The Austrian government piled up arms and armies, but said not a word either to Servia, their suspect, or Italy, their ally. From the documents it would seem that Austria kept everybody in the dark, except Prussia. It is probably nearer the truth to say that Prussia kept everybody in the dark, including Austria.

* * *

But all that is what is called opinion, Belief, conviction, or commonsense, and we are not dealing with it here. The obective fact is that Austria told Servia to permit Servian officers to be suspended by the authority of Austrian officers, and told Servia to submit to this within forty-eight hours. In other words, the sovereign of Servia was practically told to take off not only the laurels of two great campaigns, but his own lawful and national crown, and to do it in a time in which no respectable citizen is expected to discharge a hostel bill. Servia asked for time for arbitration—in short, for peace. But Russia had already begun to mobilize, and Prussia, presuming that Servia might thus be rescued, declared war.

Between these two ends of fact, the ultimatum to Servia, the ultimatum to Belgium, any one so inclined can, of course, talk as if everything were relative. If any one asks why the Tsar should rush to the support of Servia, it is easy to ask why the Kaiser should rush to the support of Austria. If any one says that the French would attack the Germans, it is sufficient to answer that the Germans did attack the French.

There remain, however, two attitudes to consider, even perhaps two arguments to counter, which can best be considered and countered under this general head of facts. First of all, there is a curious cloudy sort of argument, much affected by the professional rhetoricians of Prussia, who are sent out to instruct and correct the minds of Americans or Scandinavians. It consists of going into convulsions of incredulity and scorn at the mention of Russia's responsibility for Belgium; and suggesting that, treaty or no treaty, frontier or no frontier, Russia would be out to slay Teutons or Britain to steal colonies.

* * *

Here, as anywhere, I think the professors dotted all over the Baltic plain fail in lucidity and in the power of distinguishing ideas. Of course, it is quite true that Britain has material interests to defend, and will probably use the opportunity to defend them; or, in other words, of course Britain, like everybody else, would be more comfortable if Prussia were less predominant. The fact remains that we did not do what the Germans did. We did not invade Holland to seize a naval and commercial advantage; and whether they say that we wished to do it in our greed or feared to do it in our cowardice, the fact remains that we did not do it. Unless this commonsense principle be kept in view, I cannot conceive how any quarrel can possibly be judged. A contract may be made between two persons solely for material advantages on each side; but the moral advantage is still generally supposed to lie with the person who keeps the contract. Surely, it cannot be dishonest to be honest—even if honesty is the best policy. Imagine the most complex maze of indirect motives, and still the man who keeps faith for money cannot possibly be worse than the man who breaks faith for money.

It will be noted that this ultimate test applies in the same way to Servia as to Belgium and Britain. The Servians may not be a very peaceful people; but on the occasion under discussion it was certainly they who wanted peace. You may choose to think the Serb a sort of born robber; but on this occasion it was certainly the Austrian who was trying to rob. Similarly, you may call Britain perfidious, as a sort of historical summary, and declare your private belief that Mr. Asquith was vowed from infancy to the ruin of the German Empire—a Hannibal and hater of the eagles. But when all is said, it is nonsense to call a man perfidious because he keeps his promise. It is absurd to complain of the sudden treachery of a business man in turning up punctually to his appointment, or the unfair shock given to a creditor by the debtor paying his debts.

* * *

Lastly, there is an attitude not unknown in the crisis against which I should particularly like to protest. I should address my protest especially to those lovers and pursuers of peace who, very shortsightedly, have occasionally adopted it. I mean the attitude which is impatient of these preliminary details about who did this or that and whether it was right or wrong. They are satisfied with saying that an enormous calamity called war has been begun by some or all of us. I wish to tell these people that they are wrong; that they are wrong upon all principles of human justice and historic continuity; but they are especially and supremely wrong upon their own principles of arbitration and international peace.

With Least Exertion

To do one's best work with comfort, body and brain must be in good condition. That requires proper food—food that contains all the elements that build brain and brawn.

Grape-Nuts

Is that kind of food!

Made of wheat and barley, it contains all the nutriment of these nourishing grains, including those vital mineral salts—phosphate of potash, etc.—that are discarded in making white flour.

Long baking breaks down the starch cells of the grain and makes this food easily digestible by the most delicate stomach.

Economical, appetizing—

Aeroplane Bomb Droppers at Work.—The picture shows the method employed for bomb dropping from aeroplanes. The officer is just about to drop a pear-shaped bomb into the City of Huy, Belgium. The little wind-mill apparatus seen at the top of the bomb must revolve a certain number of times before the bomb will operate.

NOBILITY OF BRUSSELS ARE REDUCED TO BREAD LINE

BRUSSELS, Nov. 3.—Brussels, the deserted capital, has been spared destruction, but its industries are shut down. Lace workers are being fed at soup kitchens. The stores have no food to sell, and anyway the public has no money to buy. Members of noble families have discharged their servants and joined the bread line. The fear is commonly expressed that the city with its famous buildings will be destroyed either by attack or by the Germans themselves should they be compelled to retire.

German Money.

German money is in general use. Military proclamations in all the store windows announce that the mark, approximately 25 cents, must be accepted. Brussels has no postal communication except with Germany. Everything is censored. No railways are being operated in central Belgium. Most of the lines are without bridges. The canals are the only avenues for the shipment of freight.

It is estimated by Belgians here that one-fifth of the Belgians remaining in the city have employment of some sort. These include farm owners and lessees. The beet crop has been ruined by the armies, and the sugar and beet factories have been closed. There are no horses or other equipment for harvesting or trains to move the small amount of beets that have survived the devastation of war, and few able-bodied men to assist the brave women who are endeavouring to war off starvtion by gathering what little remains of the crops in the field.

Antwerp's diamond cutters are all in the army. Malines tapestry factories are in ruins. All universities and schools have been abandoned. Nearly all the physicians are at the front or serving in the hospitals. Few churches are fit for occupancy as hospitals or otherwise. The convent homes have been deserted by the sisters. Many are so badly wrecked that they could afford no shelter.

Ruin and Starvation.

The canals leading from Belgium to Holland and the one railway line between Antwerp and Rosendaal constitute Belgium's only communication with their relatives, whether they are refugees in Holland or soldiers on the battlefield. This isolation is almost complete. To the grief over their dead and the exile of their government is now added threatened starvation.

HARD BLOW FOR WILSON.

U. S. State Elections Show a Republican Landslide.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4. — Sweeping Republican gains throughout the country, which reached a climax in this state by the overwhelming victory of Chas. S. Whitman for Governor and James W. Wadsworth to succeed Elihu Root, in the United States Senate, were indicated last night in early returns of the general elections.

Heavy falling-off of the Progressive vote in many states, the return to Congress of former Speaker Joseph G. Cannon, decisive Republican gains in New York and Illinois in the House membership, and the overwhelming defeat of Representative A. Mitchell Palmer by Senator Boies Penrose in Pennsylvania were features of the early returns. Democratic leaders, however, were pleased by a triumph in Massachusetts, where former Representative Samuel W. McCall was defeated for the governorship by Governor Walsh.

MADE MAJOR-GENERALS.

Eight British Colonels Get Promotion For Their Gallant Work.

LONDON, Nov. 4.—It is announced that the following eight colonels have been promoted to be major-generals as a reward for gallant conduct in the field:

Sir David Henderson, Henry F. M. Wilson, James A. L. Haldane, Henry S. Horne, Frederick D. S. Wing, Hubert De La P. Gough, Edward S. Bulfin, and Aylmer Hunter Weston.

The President of France has bestowed the cross of an officer of the Legion of Honor on nineteen British officers and the Cross of the Chevalier on one hundred others for gallantry during five operations during October.

In a casualty list issued late night, Capt. Sir E. A. Stewart-Richardson of the Black Watch Regiment, and husband of Lady Constance Mackenzie, the dancer, is mentioned among the wounded.

Contracts for Harness.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Nov. 4—Contracts for an aggregate of $1,000,000 worth of harness for the British army—part of a $6,160,000 order placed with a firm in South Bend, Ind.—were sublet to five saddlery companies of St. Louis yesterday.

The entire order is for 20,000 sets of six-horse harness. A saddle is required for every other horse. The equipment therefore will be comprised of 60,000 saddles and 120,000 harnesses. The hardware for the harness is to be furnished by firms in Canada and England.

BEST LAXATIVE FOR BOWELS—"CASCARETS"

When Constipated, headachy, bilious, breath bad, stomach sour

Get a 10-cent box.

Are you keeping your bowels, liver, and stomach clean, pure and fresh with Cascarets, or merely forcing a passageway every few days with Salts, Cathartic Pills, Castor Oil or Purgative Waters?

Stop having a bowel wash-day. Let Cascarets thoroughly cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour and fermenting food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out of the system all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will make you feel 'great by morning. They work while you sleep—never gripe, sicken or cause any inconvenience, and cost only 10 cents a box from your druggist. Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never have Headache, Biliousness, Coated Tongue, Indigestion, Sour Stomach or Constipated Bowels. Cascarets belong in every household. Children just love to take them.

Meeting Held In Keene

To Discuss Ways and Means of Assisting the Belgians

At a largely attended meeting at the village of Keene on Friday evening organization was made for active work in raising funds for patriotic purposes and for the relief of distress in Belgium.

The Reeve, W. A. Anderson, occupied the chair, and after addresses from Rev. Mr. Edmison, Rev. Mr. Goodwill, both of Keene, Mrs. Arthur Stevenson, Mrs. Travers, Miss Peck, Dr. Cameron and Mr. F. J. Kerr, from Peterborough, and Mr. Samuel Armstrong and Major Thomas Johnston of Otonabee township, it was decided to form an organization for the township of Otonabee, when the following officers were elected:

Chairman—John Lang, ex-M.P., of Keene.

Vice-Chairman—W. J. Porter, R.R. No. 7, Peterborough.

Treasurer—J. J. Moore, Keene.

Secretary—W. A. Anderson, R. R. No. 8, Peterborough.

Committee—T. E. Graystock, Zion, G. Howson, Mather's Corners, F. E. Eason, Keene, Geo. Robertson, Villiers, John Grady, Indian River, S. Armstrong, Lang, Major Thomas Johnston, Salem, Thos. Sargent, Salem, Melville Stewart, Stewart's Hall, and T. E. Deyell, Coldsprings.

It is expected that in all local contrest, the ladies of the township will also organize local branches, and that in this way th otownship of Otonabee will give a splendid account of itself. A meeting is called for this purpose at Stewart's Hall, Otonabee, for Friday evening, November 6th, at half past seven.

Already arrangements have been made for the delivery of potatoes at Keene Station for the purpose of Belgium relief, delivery to be made on Tuesday and Wednesday, November 10th and 11th, and it is expected that all who can do so will make special efforts in this direction. Residents near Peterborough can deliver to G. T.R. station, Peterborough, on Monday and Tuesday, November 9th and 10th, and arrangements for delivery at Indian River will be date to be announced on being made.

To Free Your Skin of Hair or Fuzz

(Boudoir Secrets)

No toilet table is complete without a small package of delatone, for with it hair or fuzz can be quickly banished from the skin. To remove hairs you merely mix into a paste enough of the powder and water to cover the objectionable hairs. This should be left on the skin about 2 minutes then rubbed off and the skin washed, when it will be found free from hair or blemish. Be sure you get genuine delatone.

UNPREJUDICED.

"How many people are there here, Pat?" queried the Englishman of an Irishman in Montreal.

"Oh, about a hundred t'ousand."

"Why, I thought there were over half a million?"

"Well," said Pat, "there is—if you count the French."

WIDE POWER FOR GEN. OTTER

Can Call Upon the Militia if He Needs Assistance.

OTTAWA, Nov. 4. — The further plans of the Government in regard to the internment of German and Austrian reservists are to be the subject of a memorandum this evening, based on the order in council.

This order, which has been passed, appointing General Sir William Otter to the supervision of this work, is only a preliminary step. He, after conferring with officials, will make a report as to where and in what manner internment should be carried out.

General Otter is given full power to acquire premises for this purpose, but these will not be announced until they are finally secured. He is likewise vested with authority to call upon the militia for any assistance which may be required.

SITUATION IS EXCELLENT FOR ALLIES

BRITISH FLEET IS BOMBARDING JAFFA

ALLIES ADVANCE TO THE EAST OF NIEUPORT SITUATION IS EXCELLENT

Official Communication Says Allies Are Either Holding the Germans in Check or Are Advancing---Enemy is Using His Artillery at Every Point.

PARIS, November 5.—That the allies are either advancing or are holding the Germans in check, despite assaults of the most desperate nature, was officially announced this afternoon. The three o'clock official communique in summing up the developments at the front, declares that the allies are advancing east of Nieuport between Dixmunde and the Lys. The Germans, it is stated, have renewed their attacks between Labassee and the Somme. and are using their artillery at every point. In general the situation is described as excellent from the standpoint of the allies.

PARIS, November 5.—Increasingly optimistic reports from the battle front are reaching the military headquarters. The Germans have been decisively defeated in Belgium between Ostend and the French border. They are also being pressed back along the eastern frontier.

It is reported here that the Germans are rushing additional troops into France in the north, but the military authorities declare that this will not avail, inasmuch as the French and the British have themselves heavily reinforced their northern line. Most of the British territorial troops who have volunteered for foreign service are now on the firing or the reserve line in the north.

The report that General Von Kluck has been killed in action is revived again.

PARIS, November 5.—The correspondent of the Excelsior at Havre, says he has authoritative news of the death of General Von Kluck ten days ago in an hospital at Namur, where he was treated for a wound in the head.

LONDON. November 5.—Major General Robert George Kekewich, who defended Kimberley against the assaults of the Boers in the last Boer War, and who had just been recalled to the colours for a high position in Earl Kitchener's new army, died suddenly to-day at his home in Devonshire.

SOUTHWOLD, Eng., November 5.—Heavy cannonading was reported from the North Sea to-day. It is not known whether or not the British warships were engaged with the German squadron which was reported to have left the Wilhelmshaven base. The Admiralty had no information this afternoon on the subject.

ROME, Italy, November 5.—It is reported here that British cruisers are to-day bombarding the fortifications of the town of Jaffa. This is Joppa of Biblical times, and it is only 31 miles from Jerusalem, now in possession of the Turks. It is considered quite probable that Britain intends to send an expedition quickly to occupy the whole of Palestine.

PEDDLARS' LICENSES

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I have much pleasure in adding a few lines to your valuable paper in answer to last night.

Would think it is right if a man holds a license for six months, that has he to get about with a number on his horse and the same as the automobiles have, to suit some of the fruit merchants in this city? I think it is absolutely abrupt of any business man to interfere with a man who is willing to work for his daily bread. My motto is live and let live. I am,

Yours faithfully,
HOUSEHOLDER.

Colorado is the leading state in the production of tungsten ores and vanadium minerals, and ranks second for gold, third in zinc and fluorspar, and fourth in lead.

BOYS ARE IN GOOD QUARTERS

57th Men Are Comfortably Housed in Cereal Mill at Kingston—Faced a Stiff Medical Examination Yesterday.

ORDERS ARE ISSUED

The 57th Regiment's contingent at Kingston, fresh fro mthe ordeal of a stiff medical examination, here, faced a battery of doctors again yesterday, at Divisional Headquarters From several members of the contingent the Examiner has received word that the test was a very severe one, but there was no mention of any one being rejected and the local officers have received no information in regard to any of the men failing to come up to the standard. The 57th form "E" Company of the 21st Battalion, in command of Captain S. M. Gray of Kingston. They are quartered in the old cereal mill and one of the coptingent, in writing to the Examiner says: "Comfortable quarters; good grub."

Orders have been issued by Lt.-Col. Hughes, the Commanding Officer.

The officers of the battalion have been detailed for duty as follows:

"A" Coy.—Capt. E. Jones, Lt. H. Pense, Lt. W. Macnee.
"B" Coy.—Capt. J. H. Sills, Lt. W. G. C. Spriggs, Lt. W. J. S. Sharpe.
"C" Coy.—Capt. J. F. Wolfrain, Lt. W. A. S. Morrison, Lt. H. O. Dennis.
"D" Coy.—Capt. T. H. Cauldwell, Lt. H. W. Cooper, Lt. J. Inderwick.
"E" Coy.—Capt. S. M. Gray, Lt. M. L. Shepherd, Lt. S. Cunningham.
"F" Coy. — Capt. F. W. Kennedy, Lt. W. Frind, Lt. S. A. Flavelle.
"G" Coy.—Capt. T. M. Scott, Lt. W. A. Black, Lt. W. Kennedy.
"H" Coy.—Capt. T. Emitt. Lt. D. Stewart, and one to be appointed.

An officer of each company quartered in the West-end barracks, will be detailed to sleep in the building, nightly, and a Fire Picket of one Sergeant and fifteen men will be detailed for duty in the building daily between "Lights Out" and 'Reveille.'

Smoking is forbidden in the "Cereal Building," owing to the extra danger of fire there with the exception of the dining room on ground floor, which may be used as a smoking room except at meal hours.

For purposes of Interior Economy the Right Half Battalion will be in charge of the Senior Major, Major C. C. Bennett, and the Left Half Battalion in charge of the Second Major, Major D H. MacLean, G.G.F.G.

Each half battalion will furnish a quarter guard daily. This guard will mount at 9 a.m. and will be relieved at 9 a.m. the following morning.

Mail will be collected by Battalion Orderly from Post Offic and he will hand it to the Orderly Sergeant who will be responsible for its distribution

The following will be the daily routine until further orders: Reveille, 6 a.m.; breakfast, 7 a.m.; first parade, 8.0 a.m.; orderly room, 9 a.m.; sick parade, 10 a.m. to military hospital dinner, 12.30 p.m.; afternoon parade, 2 p.m.; retreat, 5.30 p.m.; supper, 5.30 p.m.; first post 9.30 p.m.; last post, 10 p.m.; lights out, 10.15 p.m.

MOTION PICTURES OF SCENES FROM THE WAR ZONE

One of the best motion picture features shown in Peterborough will be presented in the Red Mill Theatre on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week. ALARM IN THE CANUCKS' CAMP

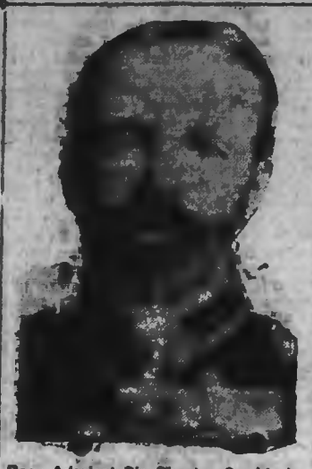
Airman is Killed When Machine Collapsed and Report Spread That Twenty Canadians Had Been Killed by Falling Aeroplane.



Rear Admiral Sir Charles Craddock—Commanding the three ill-fated British warships which gave battle to the German squadron off the Chilean coast and were worsted because their guns were outranged. From all accounts to hand at present, Sir Charles was lost with the rest. He became quite famous a few months ago in connection with the landing of United States' troops at Vera Cruz.

A FATAL ACCIDENT

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Nov. 5.— A naval aeroplane collapsed over the Canadian camp at Salisbury plain to-day, and the pilot, Flight Lieutenant David Murray fell with the wreck of his machine several hundred feet, landing within a few feet of an Ontario infantry regiment manoeuvring. The Canadian army medical corps men rushed him to their field hospital, where he died almost immediately. There was some alarm throughout the Canadian camp, as it was rumoured that twenty Canadians had been killed by the debris of the falling machine.

A JAPANESE FLEET READY FOR GERMANS

Headed by Battle Cruiser Konigo Squadron Will Defend the Pacific Coast

FOE COMING NORTH?

Special Cable:

VANCOUVER, B.C., Nov. 5.—The Canadians on the Pacific coast, including the cities of Victoria and Vancouver, were reassured to-day by the good news that a powerful Japanese fleet is guarding the Pacific coast from attacks of the German flying squadron, which is said to be heading north after its reported destruction of Sir Christopher Cradock's fleet off the Chilean coast.

This Japanese fleet is headed by the battle cruiser Konigo, the most formidable warship in the Pacific ocean, carrying eight fourteen-inch guns and plenty of smaller battery, with a complement of eleven hundred men. She is accompanied by several smaller cruisers, each more powerful than the German ships.

In addition H.M.S. Newcastle and H.M.C.S. Rainbow, each of which is capable of dealing with the smaller German vessels, with two submarines and a number of scouting gunboats, are somewhere in touch with the coast.

MR. BURNHAM TAKES EXCEPTION TO

Item Which Appeared in a Local Evening Contemporary

Mr. J. H. Burnham has addressed a communication to Mr. Robt. Shaw, Warden of the County, in reference to an item that appeared last evening in a local contemporary, and in which it is alleged that Mr. Burnham and Mr. G. A. Gillespie, local parliamentary representatives, waited upon the Council for the purpose of urging them to do their duty in connection with the patriotic fund. Mr. Burnham states that the visit of Mr. Gillespie and himself to the County Council was on the invitation of that body, and not for any specific purpose. He suggests that the reporter responsible for the item referred to, be admonished to be careful in future.

THE STORY OF LUCILLE LOVE

Will Start in the Examiner To-morrow—Pictures on Monday

The wonderful story of "Lucille Love, the Girl of Mystery," will commence in the Examiner to-morrow, with another instalment on Saturday. Following the publication of the first two chapters of this fascinating yarn, the Royal Theatre will, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, show the film reproduction of the same part of the story. People of Peterborough will thus have a chance to read of the adventures of Lucille Love and to see them depicted on the screen. Don't fail to read the first instalment in to-morrow's Examiner.

SHOE FACTORY DESTROYED BY FLAMES

Special Wire to The Examiner:

QUEBEC CITY, Nov. 5—Two girls slightly hurt and scores badly scared was the extent of casualties in a fire which destroyed Gale Brothers' Shoe Factory this morning. There was great excitement throughout the city, and the rumour was wired from one end of Canada to the other that many lives were lost.

BANK CLEARINGS FOR OCTOBER

The bank clearings for the week ending November 5th amounted to $431,523, an increase of $69,436 over the previous week. The corresponding week last month, the clearings totalled $4631,123 The total clearings for October were $1,787,688, which was $16,291 less than September

GERMAN CRUISER IS SUNK BY A MINE WITH LOSS OF 175 MEN

The Yorck, Armoured Cruiser of 9800 Tons Goes Down Off the German Coast—The German Warship Koenigsberg Reported Disabled in Indian Ocean.

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Thursday, Nov. 5.—The German cruiser Yorck has struck a mine in Jade Bay and sunk.

The information regarding the loss of the Yorck reached London in an Amsterdam despatch to the Reuter's Telegram Company. It stated that an official despatch from Berlin said that the Yorck, on the forenoon of November 4, struck a mine chain blocking the entrance to Jade Bay and sank.

Late reports declare that 382 men, more than half of her crew, had already been saved, but that the rescue work was hampered by a thick fog.

The Yorck was an armoured cruiser of 9,800 tons, built in 1905, and equipped with four 8-inch, ten 6-inch and 17 smaller guns. She had a speed of 21 knots and a complement of 857 men. She was 459 feet long.

Jade Bay, where the vessel was sunk, is an inlet of the North Sea on the German coast west of the mouth of the River Weser.

KOENIGSBERG ALSO DISABLED.

London, Thursday, Nov. 5.—The Times prints a report to-day that the German cruiser Koenigsberg has been put out of action in the Indian Ocean.

The Koenigsberg is a protected cruiser and was laid down in 1905. She is of 3,350 tons, is 384 feet long and has a speed of 23½ knots. Her main battery consists of ten 4.1 inch guns.

So far as is known the sole success of the Koenigsberg during the war was the sinking of the Ellerman liner City of Winchester, off Socotra, near the entrance to the Gulf of Aden, on August 6, and the disablement of the British cruiser Pegasus in Zanzibar harbour on September 20.

The Pegasus at the time, according to the official Admiralty report, was caught at a disadvantage, as she was undergoing repairs. Twenty-five members of her crew were killed and eighty wounded.

GERMAN CRUISERS KEPT PATROL OFF SAN FRANCISCO [illegible]

San Francisco, Nov. 4.—To-day's action between British and German cruisers in the South Pacific has been expected since the first days of the war, when for days the German cruisers Leipsig and Nurnberg maintained a patrol off this port. For a time they showed themselves only singly, hoping to convey the impression that only one cruiser was in the vicinity, but an inbound vessel came upon the two together and thereafter surveillance was abandoned.

The Canadian cruiser Rainbow, after a hasty trip down the coast to San Francisco, fled north again, and about that time the Japanese cruiser Idzume put in an appearance. The Idzume also went north, but the Germans surdenly started the other way.

The Leipzig was coaled here before she started; the Nurnberg took on coal at Guaymas, which was sent there from San Francisco on the steamship Mazatlan, whose owner, Captain F. Johnson, is a German naval reservist. An attempt to coal directly from the Mazatlan in open sea was frustrated by port authorities, who made Captain Johnson put up a $20,000 bond for delivery of the coal as per manifests.

For several weeks nothing has been known as to the exact whereabouts of these vessels. The Scharnhorst and Dresden never made this port, and the former is believed to have come from the Far East, while the Dresden was in the Atlantic. Nobody here knows how the fleet kept itself coaled and provisioned.

Some weeks ago it was announced an English fleet had entered Pacific waters hunting for the Germans, and the news of the battle has been awaited since then as likely to come any day.

SUMMARY OF NAVAL LOSSES UP TO DATE

ENLISTMENT AND EQUIPMENT

It may be patriotic and all that to stimulate enlistment of Canadians for service abroad, but without carping what is the immediate emergency to justify enlistment so much ahead of equipment? There is no doubt of the willingness of Canadians to enlist, but there is doubt of the capacity of the government to equip them with guns and to clothe them. A soldier without a gun is as useless as a furnace without fuel. If a recruit does not know how to shoot he is of no use till he learns, and how can he learn without a gun to practice with?

The war will not be a short one, and Canada will have to continue sending contingents for some time. Some suggest sending out Sir Robert Borden and Sir Wilfrid Laurier to fire the heather, to stimulate recruiting. With all due respect to the head of the government, he can be better employed in acting rather than talking. Sir George Foster, though he is a good talker, should be at sterner work than affording academic oratorical amusement at a university debate. Our valiant Minister of Militia might be better employed than in skylarking in Europe. He did his share, and to give him credit, he did it rather well, in getting the first Canadian contingent armed and equipped and sent across the seas. There his business with it ends. The British military authorities have the responsibility now, and they can be trusted to fulfill it without the personally conducted advice of our Minister of War. There is plenty of work for him at home. The Dominion Cabinet should be as busy as bees at Ottawa, confining their talking to discussion of ways and means to stimulate the production of rifles and ammunition, and the production of clothing for Canadian soldiers. But the gun's the thing. As for clothing, any sort of clothing will do while the recruits are in training in Canada. A man can learn to shoot no matter what his clothing. Kitchener does not want a show army, but an army that can shoot? Speed the rifles and ammunition. The uniforms can wait or come into being while the men are learning to shoot. The Toronto Star, speaking of the production of rifles, says:

> Can we not get rifles fast enough to warrant a more rapid enlistment of men? Then why do we read in an Ottawa despatch that the Ross factory is working night and day filling an order from the British Government for 100,000 rifles? We cannot plead a shortage of arms if we are making them for regiments other than our own.

That puts a different face upon the matter. If we are making rifles and ammunition for the British Government we are perhaps doing as much to promote the success of the British forces now in, or ready to take, the field, as if we equipped a few thousand Canadians that can not for some time be made ready for active service?

We must not be impatient. Kitchener is "on the job," and if we are guided by what he wants and thinks best, we shall make no mistake. It is pointed out that our first contingent was impatient to get away for fear the fight would be over before they got into it. There is no fear or rather hope, that the fighting will be ended soon; and it is possible that any Canadian soldier leaving Canada within six months or a year will have a chance to get his full of fighting.

We are in this war to see it to a finish, and we have no reason to get impatient or unduly solicitous over the apparently slow progress of getting our soldiers to the front.

At the same time it would be well to remember that there are two sides to this question. There are good reasons why it would perhaps be well to promote enlistment. Men are anxious to enlist, and till they are actually called for at the front, they could be undergoing drill and have that pretty well perfected, and ready to devote all their time to learning how to shoot when rifles and ammunition are ready. Besides, every accepted recruit goes under pay and thus to that extent solves the problem of unemployment directly; and indirectly by yielding his place in the ranks of labour to an unemployed left behind.

In this war the whole Empire and our whole country are concerned. It is costing Canada a good deal, but Canada is fighting for itself; for its best interests, and the country should be prepared to stand the immense cost. The country at large would justify a still larger national expenditure, and incidently relieve the stress of the labour market.

Enlistment of the unemployed and putting them under pay would mean a large measure of relief of labour conditions and, though the services of such recruits might not be immediately needed, they would be in an advanced state of efficiency if the call should come. The cost would be considerable, but this is no time to count the cost. There is a many sided duty to be done, and if we mortgage our heritage in the discharge of it we shall be doing right, especially when we remember the wealth of Canada, as yet only in the initial stages of its potential development.

CONSERVING 14,00 MILLION A YEAR.

It is difficult to get an adequate conception of what we shall gain by being faithful to ourselves in our buying and selling, in keeping the dollar at home. Let us get a notion of what this industrial fabric is that Canadian citizens are asked to maintain by taking part in the "Made-in-Canada" movement. In a matter of cold cash, it is an investment of 1,500 million dollars in factories and equipment. It is an annual output of 1,400 million dollars. It is a yearly wages and salary list of 288 million dollars.

These are figures that entitle Canada to be considered as a great industrial nation in the making. They are figures that if used a few decades ago by England, the United States or Germany might have been made the subject of great orations. The sum total of Canada's share in the world's work represented by smoke-stacks and box cars and payrolls is a great fabric of business that has become a source of pride to a young nation. We boast of our railway systems, our empire of farm lands, our free institutions, our worthy pioneers and our determined, clean-handed people. Let us also boast of the 23,000 factories that have become one of the bulwarks of the nation.

To help maintain this national asset is the privilege as well as to the advantage of every man and woman in Canada. This industrial fabric must not be endangered by war. It must be conserved, and in conserving it, we serve our own interests in obtaining better values, in many cases in saving money, and making ourselves more prosperous. We must make all we can in Canada, and find a market for it, and if Canadians are true to themselves and the interests of the country, a large proportion of that market can be created at home by the people buying for their service only made-in-Canada goods.

THE LADY GREY AT ARCHANGEL

Canadians will feel some pride at the fact that the Dominion has been able to render a signal service to Russia by permitting that country to purchase the powerful ice-breaker the "Lady Grey," which has done such good work upon the St. Lawrence. The vessel is to be stationed off Archangel, in the White Sea, and will be used to help keep that port open during the winter months.

A glance at the map will show the importance of this port to Russia during the war. The White Sea, which is a gulf of the Arctic Ocean, is the only safe outlet to the ocean which Russia has at the present time. The Baltic is sown with German mines, while Turkey's command of the Dardanelles bottles up the Black Sea. The outlet via Archangel is therefore of immense importance, both for commercial and military purposes. It cannot but be a satisfaction to Canadians to know that they are helping so signally in this connection.—Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

GERMAN-CANADIANS ARE LOYAL.

The German scare is subsiding rapidly. Canadians begin to understand that there are tens of thousands of Germans in the Dominion to whom the autocracy of the military caste of the Fatherland is even more repulsive than it is to men of British descent, because it involved for their fathers expatriation from the land they loved. The letter of Mr. H. H. Miller, ex-M.P., on "Our Own German Scare," which The Globe is glad to publish, sets forth very fairly the position of the large German population of Grey county. It cannot be expected that men and women whose fathers, mothers, brothers, and other relatives are still at home in Germany, will be able to look upon this war as Britons do. To the Germans of Canada the strife is almost civil war, in which, while mind and intellect are engaged upon the side of Britain, the cords and bonds of affection draw them into sympathy with the sorrow and suffering through which their relative in Germany are passing.

It is worth while learning from an shrewd an observer as Mr. Miller that "the great majority of the German-Canadians of this locality are thoroughly loyal, and, though full of sympathy for the German people who are the victims of the cruel ambition of the Kaiser and his war-lords, sincerely desire the Kaiser's defeat and the maintenance of Britain's power."

His further remark that "we have a very few townsmen who talk disloyalty and who should be arrested and confined until the war is over" indicates that Mr. Miller is not glossing things over, but is telling the truth as he sees it. Canada will not penalize or make life difficult for thousands of the most industrious and desirable of her citizens because of the disloyal talk of a few fire-brands. A German scare in Canada would be one of the follies which are worse than crimes.—The Globe.

RUSSIANS GOING WELL.

The hurried retreat of the Germans from Warsaw shows that the Russians are at last going at their real gait. Also, it indicates that the Czar's armies are being skilfully handled. With few exceptions every move of the Russian armies, whether against Austria or Germany has shown great skill on the part of the general staff. As for the soldiers, "Ivan" has been brave and enduring.

This condition of the Muscovite army makes vivid contrast with the armies which travelled to Manchuria ten years ago to crush the Jap. Stupidity marked the conduct of that campaign, and while the man in the ranks fought with courage, the war was not a popular one. To-day it is different. The Russian divisions and corps have been drilled and trained along French lines and are commanded by comparatively young men, ambitious and capable. Most important of all, "Ivan" has a personal interest in the campaign that was lacking when he was sent to fight the Jap. Already the Czar has shown the world that his army is a smooth running military machine as different from the army of 1905 as night is from day.—London Advertiser.

CONTRAST.

The King of the Belgians takes all the risks that his men takes and tells them his skin is not more precious to the country than theirs. The Kaiser travels in armoured carriages, and takes no chances. He considers his skin to be too precious to permit of any risk being run of a puncture —Brantford Expositor.

What of a National Tour by Canada's National Leaders?

The announcement by Sir Wilfrid Laurier that his party have decided to offer no opposition to the election of the two new Ministers, Messrs. Casgrain and Blondin, should be received with satisfaction by all patriotic citizens. At present more than at any previous time in the history of the country, it is very important that there shall be a revival of those brave days of old, of which Macaulay sang:

> "Then none were for a Party,
> Then all were for the State"

Our system of party government, take it all in all, seems to be the best that has been devised for the management of the affairs of a free people. But unquestionably it has some disadvantages, the most serious of which is that it provokes strife, which often prevents the cooperation of men who should be able to work together for the common good. Unless in times of stress there could be a truce of parties, and cordial co-operation in the interest of the country, the party system woud have to be wholly condemned. Fortunately the present crisis in the affairs of the Empire, in the burdens of which Canada desires to fully share, has proved that such truce and cooperation are quite possible. When the war broke out arrangements were being made for a series of political meetings throughout the Dominion, to be addressed by the Opposition leader and some of his friends. Promptly the meetings were cancelled, and Sir Wilfrid discarded his desire to avoid everything like party controversy, and to cooperate with the Government in the taking of whatever steps were necessary to enable Canada to assume her share of the Empire's burdens. At the short session of Parliament, called for the purpose of enacting war measures, this happy union of two great political parties was maintained with the best results. The recent appointment of two new Ministers of the Crown, necessitating the holding of Ministerial by-elections, seemed for the moment to put a strain on the entente. Whatever may be thought of the political situation in other parts of Canada, it will hardly be denied that these seats in the Province of Quebec could be regarded by the Opposition as good fighting ground, and there may have been a strong temptation to the more militant section of the party to engage in battle. That this temptation has been resisted, and that the two Ministers are to take their seats without any contest is gratifying evidence of a desire to continue joint action. That this good spirit may continue to prevail, and that there may be the most cordial cooperation between Government and Opposition in all measures necessary for the full discharge of the duty of Canada as a part of the Empire, must be the earnest prayer of all good citizens.

A quotation recently published from a speech made by Sir Wilfrid several years ago, represents him as saying that in event of the British Empire becoming involved in a war with any of the great powers he would feel it to be his duty to take the platform in his own particular Province and call upon the French-Canadian people to rally round the flag and share with their brethren of English blood the duties of the occasion. Already he has redeemed that pledge. The meeting held in Montreal a few nights ago, at which Mr Casgrain and others of the Government party and Sir Wilfrid and others of the Opposition, joined their voices in the call for a French-Canadian recriment, was a fine example of the cordiality with which all parties are uniting in the Empire's cause. But why should a movement of this kind be confined to one city or one Province? There is need of more such work, not only among French-Canadians, but among English Canadians, as well. Our first contingent is already in England for its final training. No one doubts that a second Canadian contingent will be needed, and probably a third. A speaker at a gathering in Ottawa a few days ago sharply called attention to the fact that the percentage of native-born Canadians in the first contingent was smaller than it should be. There is need of special effort to arouse the young Canadians to a sense of their responsibility and their duty. In the Mother Country the calls for recruits have been made by leading public men of both parties from the same platform. Why should there not be more of such appeals in Canada? Why should not Sir Robert Borden, the Premier, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Opposition Leader, unite in a series of recruiting meetings in the various Provinces beginning, say at Toronto? We cannot imagine anything that would be more likely to stir the hearts of the people and move them to still greater effort than such gatherings as we here suggest.

PROOF THAT THE KAISER PRECIPITATED THE WAR

The Kaiser's chief Court preacher, Dr. Dryander, and two other theologians on whom the Imperial smile has been bestowed, have issued a joint letter which is highly illuminating as showing the utter chagrin with which Germany finds itself faced by a united British Empire. They write:

> We will utter no criticism upon the Russian Mongol-Asiatic policy of brigands, nor on the passion for revenge fostered among the French notwithstanding all our efforts to make friends with them. But we must say plainly that towards the English policy and those who are responsible for it we can have no other feelings than those of deepest wrath and moral contempt. It was in their power to prevent war. Without the very show of an ideal reason and solely for money's sake they fell murderously from behind upon a friendly nation to which they were united by ties of race, faith, and culture. They stamped upon their own moral worth by spurring on heathen Japanese to a campaign of robbery, and by leading African niggers against us.

It is profitable to recall the negotiations preceding war, and to examine them to see how it was "in the power of England to prevent war," and how, in spite of that, the English "fell murderously from behind" on the Germans. The English "White Paper" covering the negotiations records that on July 29, Sir Edward Grey in a telegram to the German Government, which is on file for all the world to read, urged (we quote from the "White Paper"):

> that the German Government should suggest any method by which the influence of the four Powers could be used together to prevent war between Austria and Russia. France agreed. Italy agreed. The whole idea of mediation or mediating influence was ready to be put into operation by any method that Germany could suggest if mine were not acceptable. In fact, mediation was ready to come into operation by any method that Germany thought possible, if only Germany would "press the button" in the interests of peace.

The difficulty was, however, that Germany never pressed the button. At any rate, no evidence has ever been given to the world that Germany exercised any pressure on Austria in the interests of peace, and it is most significant that in the German "White Paper" not a single communication is given of the many which passed from Berlin to Vienna, and only one that passed from Vienna to Berlin. But that is not so remarkable as the response which Germany made to Sir Edward Grey's telegram. The telegram was despatched at one o'clock in the afternoon. At midnight a reply came from Germany asking "if Great Britain would promise to remain neutral in a war, provided that Germany did not touch Holland and took nothing from France but her colonies?"

Even then Britain did not give up her efforts for peace, for Sir Edward Grey went so far as to tell the German Government that if Germany made any reasonable proposals to preserve peace and Russia and France rejected them, "His Majesty's Government would have nothing to do with the consequences."

The response to this offer, by which Great Britain actually undertook to withdraw from the Triple Alliance if France and Russia rejected any reasonable proposals for peace that Germany might make, was the declaration of war upon Russia, not by Austria, be it noted, but by Germany itself, and the occupation of Belgian territory by German troops. Was it not Germany, and not Britain, which "fell murderously from behind upon a friendly nation?"

THE WORLD OF SPORT

BRADFORD HAVE SECURED A FINE GOAL-KEEPER

Financial Reasons Forces Derby to Part With Their Star Net Guardian--Price Was About $3,250

William Meredith and George Hunter of Manchester United, have both been suspended sine die by the club directors.

The transference of Scattergood to Bradford did not come as a tremendous surprise to me, for since the commencement of the season, it has been apparent that some source of revenue outside from the gate receipts would have to be tapped if the County wished to pay its way.

The gates at Derby up to date could hardly provide enough money to support the reserve team adequately, let alone the county first time.

Frankly the support to date does not warrant that a Second League club play at the baseball ground. James Mcgriven and his directors did not want to part with Scattergood. The goalkeeper has been a valuable servant to the clubs and has gained a couple of points off his own bat more than once. He looked like being particularly useful this season, and he would have remained at Derby a long while yet in the ordinary course of events.

But the eternal problem of ways and means is pressing hard upon the County this season, and when Mr. Maley came along and offered a cheque somewhere about £650 Derby could not refuse it. In happier times they had spurned almost double the sum, but needs must when the devil drives.

Bradford have secured a fine goalkeeper, and Derby have lost one. Scattergood has been sold purely for financial reasons, and if the County supporters do not want a repetition of this sale they will have to roll up on Saturday afternoons more than they have been doing.

It was touch and go whether a Derby forward went along with Scattergood. If the Rams want to keep him—and they'll miss him if he goes—they must take my tip. A Second League club cannot be run on nothing.

It's up to Derby folk to provide them. Improved gates or the transfer of players is the situation in a nutshell.

It will surprise not a few to know that Jack Parkinson of Bury has definitely decided to give up football. The old Liverpool centre-forward has asked the Bury officials to cancel his agreement binding him as a Bury player to the end of the season.

Parkinson has offered to pay back in full what he has received in wages since he became a "Shaker". I understand that the Bury management have acceded to the player's wishes.

It hasn't taken Parkinson long to realise the great difference there is between first and second football, and it is because of the strenuous nature of the football he has been taking part in of late and his inability to do himself justice that has forced Parkinson to act as he has.

Parkinson is nothing if not a sport. He detests anything which is underhand, and I feel sure that his request to be released will make him all the more popular.

Footballers are not all rogues, as many people would make us believe, and Parkinson's action should do much to stamp out the prevalent feeling that players cannot act "on the square."

The Tottenham Hotspur players have objected to accept the scheme proposed by the League for the reduction of wage, and point out that the wages paid to London players are not nearly so good as those paid in the provinces, by reason of the extra cost of living in the Metropolis.

House rent is more than double what is paid in the Midlands and the north, and in consequence of that the wage limit, they contend, should be extended to players resident in the London postal district.

They point out in proof of their claim that the War Office pay an extra sum of 3s 6d per week to soldiers' wives if they are resident in the Metropolitan postal district.

That statement is perfectly correct, but in the present circumstances the point should be waived, although at the first favourable opportunity Metropolitan players should agitate for the wage limit to be increased in their district, for in the action of the War Office they will have a powerful argument in their favour.

At the conclusion of the 'Spurs and Chelsea benefit match players of the former club approached the Chelsea and Fulham players as to the attitude they were adopting and were informed that they had decided to fall in with the recommendation of the League, so that the likelihood is the 'Spurs will follow suit.

When Sunderland induced Dundee to part with their centre-forward, who had staggered Scotland by his goal-scoring feats, they were credited with having made the catch of the season.

I have heard it said that Philip has not been a success. In a sense those critics are right, but let me ask a question, "Has he had a fair trial?"

Since the season opened Sunderland have not had their sorrows to seek. The injury to George Holley has been serious, and changes in the composition of the left wing have had to be made almost every week.

It is evident to anybody who knows, anything about football that a centre-forward, to be a success, must 'know' his forwards. This is what Philip has not been able to do.

He has not allowed himself to settle down in consequence of the efforts he has made to satisfy his club, but nobody will make me think otherwise but that Sunderland have the right man in the right place. Just watch him when Holley and Martin get together, he'll startle England as he did Scotland.

JOHNSON LEADS ALL PITCHERS IN MANY RESPECTS

Washington Star Fans 221 Players in Season and Still Critics Say He Has Gone Back

(By Hal Sheridan.)

NEW YORK, Oct. 30.—Ole' Walter Johnson, the big twirler who has ben about three-fourths of Washington's pitching staff ever since he joined that club, has gone back, the critics told us last summer when several defeats were being chalked up against the Kansan's name. Well, if he has gone back we believe we'll hit the same trail after a slat at the league records for the season.

"One is inclined to say "what d'ya mean, gone back?" after taking a look at the figures showing what the twirlers did in Ban Johnson's loop. Johnson worked in just 51 games during the summer. It takes some time for the meaning of that to soak in. Fifty-one games. And the average pitcher thinks he has done a great season's work if he has breezed through as many as 30 contests. Naturally Johnson led all the twirlers in his league in that respect, the nearest to him being George Dauss of Detroit and Lefty Baumgardner of St. Louis, who each participated in 45 battles.

Struck Out 221.

Next we'll take a slant at the strike-out column, picking it because Johnson's figures stand out in it like a white dove in a flock of crows. During those aforesaid 51 contests Johnson sent just 221 ball players back to the bench mumbling that the umpire was blind or a robber or giving some other such excuse to his manager for his failure to clout one.

In strike-outs, too, Johnson naturally led all his rivals. "Dutch" Leonard, the big port-sider who heaved for Bill Carrigan's Red Sox was the closest to him, and he couldn't see Johnson with a spyglass. Leonard whiffed 170 men during the summer.

In pitching few-hit affairs, Johnson also looms strong among his rivals. Three times he gave up but three hits, four times he allowed four, and three times five were gleaned off his delivery.

Lost Many by One Run.

Another thing that the early records don't show and that is the number of games which were chalked up against Johnson as defeats in which his opponents nosed him out by one run.

Towards the close of last season when his critics got to panning him rather severely, Johnson finally burst forth one day.

"I don't see where they get that stuff I'm going back," he said. "True I've lost more games this year than I usually lose, but if anyone has been following my work anywhere near closely he will know that I'm not altogether at fault. I've lost a lot of games by one run this summer. I'm not complaining against my team mates. They're doing the best they can. I'm not done by a lot and I'll show it before they count me out."

KING EDWARDS WON GAME 1-0

Queen Alexandra Eleven Gave Southerners a Hard Battle at Oval Yesterday

At the Oval yesterday afternoon a close game of football was played between the Queen Alexandra and King Edward School teams. The game, which was hotly contested, resulted in a win for the King Edward School eleven by the score 1-0. Thus the King Edward School added another game to their list of victories.

In the first half neither squad managed to score, and it looked as though the same thing was going to happen in the second half, when one of the King Edward eleven lined one straight at the centre of their opponents' goal. The ball was kicked straight at the goalkeeper, but one of the Queen Alexandra men tried to stop it before it reached the goal. The result was that he kicked it out of reach of the goal tender, and the winning goal was scored, just a few minutes before full time. For the Queen Alexandra aggregation this was the first game and they made a good showing.

The teams were as follows:

King Edwards — Goal, Parkins; backs, Blender and Killingbeck; half backs, Hunt, Jackson and Plunkett; centre, Puffer; left wing, Jubb and Cranfield; right wing, Farbrass and Winn.

Queen Alexandra—Goal, Jordan; backs, Kearns and Mason; half backs, Wall, Armstrong and Dixon; centre, Donsford; left wing, Dourkty and Cameron; right wing, Yelland and Graham.

INDOOR BASEBALL.

All the ball players of H Company are requested to be at the Armouries to-night, at 7.30, sharp, for their game with D Company.

MACK WILL RELY ON HIS YOUNGSTERS IN 1915

Connie Mack has evidently decided to throw sentiment to the winds in his future managerial dealings with his old stars, although they have won pennants and world's championships for him year after year.

The report from Philadelphia that he had asked for waivers on that trio of veteran pitchers—Bender, Plank and Coombs—was a shock to fandom the country over, let alone the fans of the Quaker City, with whom the veteran boxmen were more than popular. They were heroes, whose names are as famed and whose reputations were thought to be as lasting as Billy Penn's.

Connie, though, has cast them aside as so much worthless junk and will look for younger players to help build up his tottering pitching staff to the strength that he deems necessary to keep his Athletics up to top-notch class.

Th shrewd manager of the three-time world's champions may have been forced to drop his old pitching cracks on account of the poor financial showing made by the Athletics last season, and feels that he must retrench on his salary list. But he also must be convinced that the veterans have outlived their usefulness to the Philadelphia club.

The recent world's series was doubtless the last straw. Four straight defeats at the hands of the "upstart" Boston Braves, and with George Stalling as their manager cut Connie to the quick. It made him look into the future and could see no nourishment in carrying three pitchers on sentiment alone.

With club owners and most managers it is what a player can do, not what he has done. Past reputations of players do not produce coin at the box office. It is the young, ambitious players, who have not forgotten their love for baseball for the money that is in it, or it, and who win games, who draw the patrons and keep the sport going who appeal to the people, who have money invested in the promotion of our great national game.

This is nothing new, and has not been since professional players entered into it, but the money end has been made unduly prominent of recent date by the Federal League promoters, who have foolishly imagined that they can secure the best and biggest advertising by exploiting publicity, the immense salaries they are paying and say they are still willing to pay to jumping players.

The sport itself has been belittled by making the enormous salaries of more importance than the playing end. This is illustrated convincingly by Mr. Weeghman, the Chicago backer of the Federal League and president of the Chifeds, when he said at the recent meeting of the league, at th Hotel Biltmore: "We are paying big salaries only to three or four players of each club; the other men we hire as cheaply as we possibly can."

Now, that plan will never enable any club to engage a team that can be a consistent winner, simply because the small salaried players are very liable to outplay the bigger paid old stars, and there is then sure to be jealousy, and resultant disorganization of team work. Players who are not paid according to their abilities and who are kept from advancement by reason of their fellow players getting the cream by reason of their past reputation, are not going to play their heads off to win.

Possibly this influenced Connie Mack in asking waivers on his old stars. It will be found that now Mack has made the start that other managers will follow and there will be "cleaning house" by the wholesale.

And it is not improbable that the players themselves have been largely responsible for club owners and managers failing to keep on their pay rolls old stars who have by reason of past great work are entitled to more consideration than to be dumped by the wayside with sudden and cold indifference.

Pitcher Eddie Plank has acknowledged that he was dickering with the Federals, and even told Connie Mack that he had, but also said to Mack: "I have been offered big money by the Feds and do not suppose you want to meet the offer."

But still, Plank is reported to have said he was surprised to learn that Mack had asked for waivers on him.

Now, what right had Plank to be surprised, or any other player who has been known to have been flirting or negotiating with the Federals?

Do the players imagine they have all the privileges and their employers have none? It looks so. There were many players in both the National and American leagues who, during the playing season recently finished, were dickering with Federal League owners and scouts, and who would have jumped had they been sure the Feds would last. Can those players find fault if they get unexpectedly released? They surely were not on the level with the people who were paying them their big salaries. So neither can Eddie Plank rightly blame Connie Mack.

I see that the manager of the Athletics takes a dig at Hughey Jennings for giving away he news that waivers had been asked on Bender, Plank and Coombs., I am fearful Connie has become peevish over the experience of last season. Philadelphia fans failed to support a winning team, world's champions, too, and other happenings that were for from pleasant, must have ben disheartening for him as well as aggravating.

WRESTLERS ARE TRAINING HARD FOR BIG BOUT

Both Hardy and Gibson are in great shape for their match at Brock Street Rink on Saturday night, and it promises to be an even more spectacular battle than the first clash between the two. Hardy, who is training here, is very anxious to decisively dispose of Gibson, as he intends to go to Montreal after the scalp of Eugene Tremblay, the lightweight champion. Gibson is in Toronto and will go here on Saturday morning. A victory means considerable to the Y. M. C. A. man, now that he has embarked on a professional career, and he may be depended upon to go the limit.

GERMANS BEYOND YSER.

They Hold Only One Point Now, Say French Communique.

PARIS, Nov. 5.—The French War Office yesterday evening made public the following official communication:

"There is no important modification in the situation to report.

"In the north we have made slight progress toward Menines.

"To the east artillery duels at several points of the front have taken place without any great results, notably at the west of Loos, between the Lorette and the Ancre, in Argonne and in the Forest of Apremont."

The French War Office yesterday afternoon issued one of the most cheering statements that had been received in some time, saying:

"On our left wing, to the north, the situation shows no change as compared to yesterday. The enemy has given back on the right bank of the Yser. We have recaptured Lombaertzyde. The Germans occupy the left bank of the Yser, nothing more than the head of a bridge built only between Dixmude and Nieuport. They have abandoned, in addition to prisoners and wounded men, a considerable quantity of war material, including artillery, which was held immovable by the mud.

"Between Dixmude and the Lys the fighting has continued with alternate advances and withdrawals, but with the general result that the allied forces have made perceptible progress.

"Between the Lys and the region of Arras there has been commanding and minor engagements.

"Between the region of Arras and the Oise we have made an advance to the east of La Quenoy-en-Gohelle on the on the Heights of Parvillers.

"On the centre, the German attack, which developed on the right bank of the Aisne in the region of Vailley, and which resulted in our losing the first slopes to the north of Vailley and to the north of Crapaume, was not continued yesterday. A counter attack by our forces brought again into our possession a portion of the lost ground.

"A violent cannonading and spirited German attacks were repulsed on the heights of the Highway des Dames and in the vicinity of Rheims. There has been no happenings of importance between Rheims and the Meuse, nor in the Woevre district."

INSPECTED BY ROYALTY.

Canadians Receive Visit From Their Majesties at Salisbury.

BUSTARD CAMP, Salisbury Plain, Nov. 5.—Accompanied by a number of staff officers and attendants, King George and Queen Mary yesterday inspected the Canadian expeditionary force at Bustard Camp, and delighted the Canadians with their expressions of admiration and the informal manner in which they conversed with various members of the contingent. Accompanying their Majesties was Field Marshal Lord Kitchener, who frequently remarked that the showing of the Canadians was "Splendid! Magnificent!"

Others who motored with the royal party from London were Field Marshal Lord Roberts, Hon. G. H. Perley, Acting High Commissioner for Canada, and several members of the War Office staff. The visitors first stopped at divisional headquarters at Bustard Camp, where their Majesties shook hands with all the staff officials.

Following his inspection of the Ontario section of the contingent, King George told Col. Mercer, of Toronto, that the men under his command were "as fine as any in the British army." Both King George and the Queen chatted for a long time with several members of the 48th Highlanders of Toronto. Their Majesties commented upon the splendid physique of the "Kilties," and King George expressed his pleasure at the sight of the sporrans worn by the men.

TO MAKE FINAL EFFORT?

Kaiser Will Make a Supreme Attack In Belgium, Says Senator.

LONDON, Nov. 5.—A Belgian Socialist Senator, who returned yesterday from an official visit to King Albert, said that the allies were now within ten miles of Ostend, but he did not believe that the Germans are preparing for a general retreat through Belgium, but rather for a final supreme assault, which would be made at a point southeast of Ypres.

The Senator estimates that the Germans have 500,000 men in the vicinity mentioned, but he said that it was the general impression of the allied staffs that the German effort would be a failure, because their troops not only were very weary, but to a great extent were made up of youthful and aged recruits.

When the German march down the coast began, the Senator declares, scarcely anyone on the ground expected that they would be kept out of Calais. Now opinion was completely changed and freely expressed that the Germans would never reach their objective.

British Bombed Bruges.

LONDON, Nov. 5.—A despatch to The Daily Mail, dated Tuesday night, says:

"This morning British aeroplanes dropped bombs on the state railway works at Bruges, in Belgium, doing great damage. At four o'clock this afternoon another British war plane dropped bombs on Bruges."

CLEARING OUT POLAND.

Russians Are Making Great Strides Against Germans.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 5.—The following official communication from the Russian General Staff headquarters was given out here last night:

"A sudden change has been noted since Nov. 3 on the east Prussian front, where the enemy, which recently had been on the defensive almost everywhere, has begun to fall back at certain points. This retreat is precipitate on the left wing of the enemy, which was vigorously thrown back toward Biala and Lyck. Our troops took Bakalarjevo, capturing a large quantity of arms and ammunition and making prisoners of a German company.

"On the left bank of the Vistula the Germans continue their precipitate retreat towards the frontier. Their rear guards have been dislodged from Kolo and Przedborz. On the morning of Nov. 3 we drove back the Austrians beyond Kielce, which place our troops occupied, making 600 prisoners and taking machine guns. On the same day we won a decisive victory over the Austrians along the whole front from Kielce to Sandomir. The enemy fell back with all speed. Our troops took Sandomir, which is an important strategical point.

"In the region south of Kielce during the past week we have made prisoners of 100 officers and 10,000 soldiers and have taken a large number of cannon, as well as machine guns. During the night of Nov. 3 the Austrians made a series of attacks, which were fierce but futile, and they retreated. Our troops took a firm footing in the region of Nisko and Radaih.

"There is nothing to report from the rest of the front.

"The Turkish fleet is concentrated in the Black Sea, with a base in the Bosphorus. Apparently they are trying to avoid a fight with our forces."

Czar On Way To Front.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 5.—(Via London.)—Emperor Nicholas stopped at Minsk, capital of the Government of Minsk, yesterday on his way to the battle front. He attended a service in the cathedral and visited the hospital, where he conferred medals of the order of St. George on many wounded soldiers.

Early yesterday afternoon the Emperor resumed his journey amid enthusiastic cheers from large crowds in the streets.

PLEASED WITH INDIANS.

Gen. French Praises Work of Orientals In the Field.

LONDON, Nov. 5. — The British official press bureau, in a statement issued yesterday, pays tribute to the bravery and adaptability of the Indian troops now serving in France and Belgium, saying that they are performing a great work notwithstanding the fact that the nature of the country in which they are fighting is entirely different from that to which they are accustomed.

Gen. French, commander-in-chief of the British forces in the field, has expressed himself as greatly pleased with the bearing of these troops, and has sent the following message to the Indian corps commander:

"Please congratulate your Indian troops on their gallant conduct, and express my gratitude to them."

LAST CALL TO ARMS.

Belgians Finds That Many Have Not Yet Enlisted.

LONDON, Nov. 5.—The Belgian Government has issued the following official proclamation: "Among many Belgian families there are still men capable of bearing arms. A large number have voluntarily come forward to join the army, but it is necessary that all do so without delay.

"We solemnly call upon all Belgians physically fit between the ages of 19 and 30 to enlist for the duration of the war. Every facility will be given these men by the Belgian consuls to enable them to join the centres of enlistment in England and France.

"Belgians between the ages of 18 and 30 who do not respond by Nov. 15 may be requisitioned for military service in accordance with the law."

Captain of Karluk In Ottawa.

OTTAWA, Nov. 5.—Capt. Robert Barthett, skipper of the Karluk, the ill-fated ship on which the main party of the Stefansson Arctic expedition left Victoria, B.C., in June, 1913, arrived in Ottawa yesterday to submit his report to the Naval Department, on the circumstances that led up to the sinking of the vessel and the subsequent death of eight of the party. With Capt. Bartlett is William L. McKinley of Glasgow, Scotland, meteorologist and magnetician, the only survivor of the six scientists who were aboard the Karluk.

"No more Arctic expeditions for me," said Capt. Bartlett to the Canadian Press, when asked if he was prepared to go on another trip north. "I am on my way to Florida, where it is warm."

Gave Child With Hands Off.

LONDON, Ont., Nov. 5. — Further evidence of German atrocities is furnished in a letter received yesterday by Rev. G. F. Antrer of this city from a sister living at Borough Green, Kent, England, who had come in contact with a little Belgian girl whose both hands had been cut off by German soldiers after her father and mother had been shot dead before her eyes.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Nov. 4.—Record-breaking slides in export houses brought about a strong market in wheat after a temporary break at the start. The close was buoyant at 1¼@¼c net advance. Corn finished 1c to 1¼c up and oats with a gain of 1-8c to 3-8c. In provisions the extremes varied from to decline to a rise of 22½c.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Nov. 4.—Liverpool cables were not as strong as was expected this morning, which caused a somewhat erratic opening, prices of futures by export houses being marked a reduction, and an advance of ½c to ¾c on the local market took place. November leading. The close was from ¾c to ⅞c up for wheat. And ½c to 1¼c for oats. Flax showed 2c to 2½c rise.

Cash: Wheat—No. 1 northern, $1.12¾; No. 2 do., $1.10¾; No. 3 do., $1.07¾; No. 4, $1.06; No. 5, $1.01½; No. 6, 94¼c; feed, 93½c.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Nov. 4.—Manitoba wheat is in fair demand over the cable and sales of 75,000 bushels No. 2 northern were made at $1.14½, per bushel c.i.f. Bay ports. A sale of 200 bushels choice Ontario malting barley was made at 76½c and 10,000 Bushels of a lower grade at 75c per bushel ex-track and 10,000 bushels of extra No. 1 feed oats at 60c per bushel c.i.f.

In sympathy with the continued strong upward tendency of prices for oats in the Winnipeg market prices on spot have scored a further advance of ½c to 1c per bushel. There is no change in flour, but the tone of the market is strong, with only a small volume of business doing. Demand for mill feed is better and the feeling is firmer. The tone of the market for butter is steady, but the demand is still somewhat limited.

Cheese continues quiet. Demand for eggs good and market is active and strong. Dressed hogs 25c to 25c per 100 pounds lower.

MINNEAPOLIS GRAIN MARKET.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 4.—Wheat—No. 1 hard, $1.17¼; No. 1 northern, $1.12¾ to $1.16¾; No. 2 do., $1.10¾ to $1.14¾; December, $1.13¾.

Veal Calves.

Choice calves sold at $10 to $10.50; good calves, $9.50 to $9.90; medium, $7 to $8; common, $6 to $7; inferior eastern calves, $5.50 to $6.

Milkers and Springers.

A moderate supply of milkers and springers sold at $65 to $100, the bulk going at $70 to $90.

Sheep and Lambs.

Lamb prices were 10c to 15c higher on the average. Choice lambs sold at $7.00 to $7.90; medium lambs at $7.50 to $7.65; culls at $4 to $6.50; sheep, ewes, at $5 to $5.75; culls and rams at $3.50 to $4.

Hogs.

Selects fed and watered at $7.85 and $7 f.o.b. cars, and $7.40 weighed off cars.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Nov. 4.—At the C.P.R. live stock market there was no further change for cattle today, but owing to the continued liberal offerings the feeling is easy, and the prospects are that prices may be still lower in the near future owing to the mild weather. Demand was limited and trade on the whole was rather quiet, sales of choice steers at $7.50 to $7.75, good at $6.50 to $7.25, and the lowest grades at $4.75 to $7, while butchers' cows brought from $5 to $6.50 and bulls from $4.50 to $6.50 per cwt. The trade in canning stock was fairly active at $4.50 to $4.75 for bulls, and at $2.50 to $4.25 for cows per cwt.

The tone of the market for lambs was firm under a good demand, and small supplies and sales of Ontario stock were made at $7.50 to $7.75, and Quebec at $7 to $7.25 per cwt., while ewes sold at $4.75 to $5 and bucks and culls at $4.25 to $4.50 per 100 pounds. There was a good demand for calves of which the supply was fair and sales were made at from $5 to $10 each as to size and quality.

There was no change in the market for hogs, for which the demand was fair, and sales of selected hogs were made at $8 per cwt. weighed off cars.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

COUNTY COUNCIL

Will be Asked to Authorize a Grant to Patriotic Fund

"We have no intention of saddling a financial burden on the 1915 County Council," said Warden Shaw in discussing the County Council's attitude toward the patriotic fund. For two days the matter of contributing to the fund has been in the hands of the Council, and up till noon to-day nothing definite had been arrived at. A committee headed by Dr. Kindred has been dealing with the matter and there is every likelihood that the committee will ask the Council to pass a by-law authorizing a grant of at least one thousand dollars to the patriotic fund.

It is also the intention of the Council to nominate a county committee who will have supervision over the local municipal committees. Their duties will be to make a canvass with a view of ascertaining the need and report back to the County Council at the January session. It is altogether probable that whatever grant is authorized will be paid over in monthly instalments of three or four hundred dollars per month until January, when the incoming Council will decide upon further action.

DARKNESS WORSE THAN ZEPPELINS.

Several Fatalities in London Already, From Precautions Against Air Raids.

LONDON, Oct. 28.—London continues its preparations for aegial raids. The streets grow darker and darker and accidents more frequent in consequence. Some say more persons will be killed by the darkened streets than by bombs and aircraft. There have already been several fatalities directly due to dimly lit thoroughfars.

Additional searchlights and new guns on roofs and arches appear each week. Two aerial guns have recently been mounted on Grasham College, covering the Bank, and on a granite arch on the Embankment. Advertisements of insurance against damage from aircraft appear in the daily papers, an d the circulars of the underwriters announce that the rates will be advanced if any Taubes or Zeppelins appear above the city.

An order of the Press Bureau that papers must not publish weather predictions is considered a most humorous feature of the situation.

WHEAT PRICES LOWER.

CHICAGO, Nov. 4.—Wheat developed weakness to-day, influenced by domestic receipts and by a decided increase of the European visible supply. The fact that the trans-Atlantic crop summary was generally favourable, counted also against the bulls.

Reports of good buying on the part of cash houses tended, however, to rally the market. The opening which was 5-8 lower to 1-8 up, was followed by a decline all around and then an upturn to Monday night's level.

Four More Cases Reported

Police Will Be Invited to Take a Hand

Three houses were placed on the quarantine list yesterday and one to-day by Sanitary Inspector Spence. This makes four more cases of diphtheria to be added to the long list that have passed through the Sanitary Inspector's department. Mr. Spence claims that he finds it difficult to enforce prohibitory measures against houses that have been placarded. Parents persist in allowing infected children to mingle with those who are not infected with the disease. Cases have been reported where adults, who have contracted the disease are associating with other people regardless of the instructions of the Medical Officer of Health, who has ordered them to be quarantined. A case in point was reported on Saturday where a patient who was infected, visited the public market in company with another woman. This and other cases has led to a number of complaints being laid at the door of Sanitary Inspector Spence. Mr. Spence proposes to make a police court case of the next offender whom he finds has violated the rules of quarantine.

TO ROUND UP ALIENS.

Gen. Otter Will First Make a Tour of Registry Offices.

MONTREAL, Nov. 5. — Maj.-Gen. Sir William Otter, former inspector-general of Canadian militia, who has been appointed by the Federal Government to direct the work of carrying out the order-in-council respecting "alien enemies," with headquarters in Toronto, was in Montreal yesterday, and with Silas H. Carpenter, the registrar of alien enemies, in Montreal, visited militia headquarters in Union avenue.

Asked as to his plans, Gen. Otter said he was going to make a trip of inspection throughout the Dominion, and was commencing at Montreal. Until he had looked into matters he could give no outline of the plans to be adopted to carry into full effect the intention of the Government to safeguard the country and the Empire from the possible danger due to the presence of thousands of Germans and Austrians in the Dominion.

Epidemic In Antwerp.

LONDON, Nov. 5.—A despatch to The Exchange Telegraph Co. from Rotterdam says:

"Antwerp doctors predict an early epidemic owing to the fact that the only available water supply comes from the River Netha, which is contaminated by the bodies of many slain soldiers. The rebuilding of the reservoirs which were destroyed by the bombardment has not been permitted.

Battle Is At An End

Entire Line Holds—Battle of Dunes at An End

PARIS, Nov. 5. — Alternate gains and losses by each side marked the great struggle between the allies and the Germans along the extended battlefront in France and Belgium Wednesday, according to officers who have returned here from the fighting zone. The French and English troops, these officers say, made considerable progress in the neighborhood of Dixmude and Lys. On the other hand the Germans are reported to have gained a small amount of territory in the region of Vailly and Chavonne.

The heaviest fighting of the day was in this region, where the Germans, heartened by Tuesday's appreciable advance, endeavored to continue their success. The allies, aided by reinforcements, are said to have blocked to a large extent the furious attacks of the Germans, and a small detachment of Frenchmen, although they met with heavy resistance at a bridge on the Aisne, succeeded in pushing on and gaining ground commanding the enemy's position.

From this point the French opened a raking fire on the Germans, but they were not sufficient in number to withstand the furious German onslaught that followed, and were compelled to retire to avoid being cut to pieces. The few cannon taken by the Germans, it is said, were put out of commission before the retreat.

That the battle of the sand dunes, as the contest along the channel coast is being generally named, has come to a definite end is proved by all reports from the front. As the French communique says, the Germans hold but one unimportant point on the allied side of the river, and have given up all efforts to resume the offensive. Their losses have run into many thousands. When the invader fell back along the Dixmude-Nieuport front, the Belgian-British-French forces were too exhausted to pursue their advantage and deliver a counter-attack. Instead, they have been content to hold their hardly-won ground and give the men a chance to recuperate. Some regiments of the British force, particularly the Black Watch and the Coldstream Guards, have suffered severely.

But beyond Dixmude the pictures in the changing war film are more cheerful. Here French and British brigades have begun off the new German drive at the French coast with considerably less trouble than was the case further east. Not only have they held their own, but an advance movement is progressing satisfactorily, and the Germans are losing advantageous positions in the vicinity of Roulers. This town has been taken and retaken several times by the contending armies and lies a mass of ruins. Important roads converge on its four sides.

The French are holding tenaciously to their own positions along the centre and in the east, and have scored heavily around the Argonne forest.

Two unsubstantiated but highly important reports were received last night, one saying that the British forces in Belgium have succeeded in penetrating the German lines between the armies of Gen. Von Beulow and Duke Albrect. The other declares that 3,500 French and British troops were cut off in the vicinity of Roye and taken prisoners by the foe. Advices say that the boys fought valiantly until their ammunition was exhausted, and that they were completely surrounded by overwhelming forces. Neither report is given much credence until further information becomes available.

A despatch to Reuter's Telegram Co. from Amsterdam says: "According to the correspondent of The Telegraaf at Sluis, the fighting on the Yser was very severe yesterday. It is reported that the allies forced the Germans back to the Village of Jabbeke, between Ostend, passed through Bruges without stopping.

"The Germans at Bruges are expecting an attack from the allies. All the drawbridges are raised at nightfall."

A despatch to The Amsterdam Telegraaf from Sluis says: "Heavy gun firing is heard in the triangle of Dixmude, Roulers and Ypres, indicating that a severe battle is raging in that neighborhood.

"It is believed that the Germans now will attempt to break through the allies' lines there and force their way, by way of Ypres, to Dunkirk, but that they will find it very difficult to cross the morasses in the vicinity of the Upper Yser, caused by inundations."

The handle of a new wire carpet beater is raised several inches from the main shaft to save its user's hand from contact with the carpet.

SUNK BY A MINE

German Cruiser is Now Expected Lost in Jade Bay

LONDON, Nov. 5.—It is reported that the German cruiser Yorcke has struck a mine in Jade Bay and sunk.

Jade Bay is on the northeast coast of Germany a few miles west of the estuary of the Weser.

The mine in question may be one which the Germans have strewn so lavishly along the coast or it may be that the Yorcke is the first victim of the British policy of retaliation.

The supreme test of power on the sea seems imminent. Four battleships and a quantity of cruisers, supported by torpedo boats and destroyers, are known to have issued from the Kiel Canal and are at this moment in the North Sea. Another very considerable fleet is reported to be off the Aland Islands, at the entrance of the Gulf of Finland, in the Baltic Sea. This flotilla appears to be awaiting orders. Copenhagen despatches say that it is believed the first move of the latter fleet will be directed against the Russian coast.

Fishermen returning to Dover say that they sighted several German warships at various points in the channel. These are believed to be part of the flotilla of which the four cruisers and the four battleships are the main units.

The encounter in which the submarine D-5 was sunk and the Halcyon slightly damaged is taken to be the initial attempt in a raid on the English coast. That it was defeated by the narrowest of margins is indicated by the fact that the German craft were but ten miles from Yarmouth, when the Halcyon barred their path. Out of hundreds of British fighting craft in the North Sea, she was the only vessel to face the emergency. A hurried call for help brought several torpedo boats, but the wireless of the Halcyon was shot away in a few minutes, and there was only the one cruiser and the little craft to drive off the Germans.

Another factor in the probable German decision to risk a battle on the high seas is the fact that British ships have been busy strewing the entrance to the Kiel Canal and all of the waters around Heligoland with mines. The work is not yet complete, but even now constitutes a serious menace to the movement of vessels. If the mine field had been completed it would have become practically impossible for boats to leave the canal.

There is another report to the effect that the Germans do not contemplate a general action, but will endeavor to send through the British patrol some of their fastest cruisers to join the Karlsruhe and other single commands in other waters.

The Admiralty has issued a statement in which it says it has received from German sources details of a naval engagement off the Chilean coast in which the British cruiser Monmouth was sunk and the cruiser Good Hope severely damaged. The statement says that the Admiralty has no confirmation of the report.

The statement was issued through the official press bureau in the name of the Secretary of the Admiralty, and says:

"Rumors and reports have been received at the Admiralty from various sources of a naval battle having occurred off the Chilean coast. The Admiralty has no confirmation of this, and such accounts as they have received rest admittedly on German evidence.

"The Admiralty cannot accept these facts as accurate at present, for the battleship Canopus specially was sent to strengthen Rear-Admiral Cradock's squadron, and would have given him a decided superiority. Further, although five German ships concentrated in Chilean waters, only three entered Valparaiso harbor. It is possible, therefore, that when the full account of the action is received it may considerably modify the German versions. Effective measures have been taken to deal with the situation in any event."

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES

Toronto's unemployed were estimated at 50,000 by Mr. James Watt, president of the Trades and Labor Council, in an interview yesterday.

Divisional Supt. Boyd of the Grand Trunk Railway was in St. Catharines yesterday afternoon looking over the several sites for a new station on the western hill.

Over 2,000 Swiss families have announced their readiness to adopt Belgian orphans. Some 500 Belgian widows and orphans already have arrived in Switzerland.

Rifaat Pasha, the Turkish Ambassador to France, according to the Havas News Agency, asked for his passports which were handed to him at Bordeaux yesterday.

The Village of Ardon was visited by a bad fire yesterday afternoon, which destroyed the Royal Hotel, the post-office, a hardware store and an implement and carriage store.

An estate of $24,459.31 was left by the late Dr. William Saunders, C.M.G., for 25 years director of the Dominion Experimental Farms, who died in London, Ont., on Sept. 13.

A despatch from Tsinan, in Shantung Province, China, says the Japanese forces before Tsingtau, the fortified position of the German territory of Kiaochow, have destroyed 36 German guns and captured 800 prisoners.

SCALE INSPECTION

St Catharines Judge Says Merchants Needn't Pay.

According to the finding of Judge Carman, St. Catharines, merchants do not have to pay for the inspection of their scales although this has been the custom for years. George Crane, Beamsville, refused to pay $3 for having his scales inspected by the Dominion Inspector of Weights and Measures. Action was brought against him to recover the amount, but the case was dismissed. T. R. Sons represented the Crown, and W. M. McClement the defendant.

Two Drunks In Police Court

Both Fined $2 or an Option of Ten Days in the County Gaol

John Irvine of Tweed appeared in this morning's Police Court, charged with being drunk in a public place. While maintaining that he wasn't drunk, John said that he lay down in the Grand Trunk Station to sober up, which statement would seem to indicate that he was at the time in a state of intoxication. It was at the station he affirmed that he was garnered in by the Police. He was fined $2 or ten days in gaol.

James Kennedy appeared on a like charge. Mr. Kennedy, when confronted with the charge seemed to realise that there was more truth than fiction in what the Magistrate had said about him being found drunk on George street. He rubbed his "sandy" head in a manner which indicated that he was a little hazy about the happenings of the night before and answered:

"I guess I was drunk all right."

"That's a pretty close guess" retorted the Magistrate, as he registered the plea of "guilty". Mr. Kennedy was also fined $2, which he paid from the money he had when arrested.

Cannon Ball Of 16th Century

Which Projects Knife During its Flight—It and Other Weapons of War in Oak Hall Window

Again the Oak Hall comes to the front with its window display, which is attracting very much attention. The German weapon so prominently displayed in the exhibit was used in the French religious wars at the time of Henry the VIII. Another weapon which occasioned much comment was the very large one which was used by mercenary foot soldiers at that time. The soldiers were clad from head to foot in armour, and were posted between two bodies of cavalry. It was their duty to tear the men off their horses with these huge weapons, and hamper the opposing force of cavalry all that it was possible to do. The weapon is so large that it required great strength and skill to wield it and at the same time defend oneself from attack.

A pike and halberd of the period of King Edward II. are also shown and form a great contrast between the offensive weapons of that day and this. Perhaps the most interesting exhibit in the window is a diabolical invention known as the knife cannon ball. The great majority of local people will never have heard of this terrible machine of war, which was discarded soon after its invention for humane reasons. The cannon ball was invented and first used in the 16th century. It was fired from a gun, and during its flight towards the enemy it opened and a knife was projected from it. The projection of the knife during the course of the ball gave the name of it. It was capable of great devastation, and even in the 16th century, when international laws were not observed as at present, it was not used on account of its terrible destructive properties.

THE MARKET WAS DULL

Trade in Unsettled Condition at Union Stock Yards.

UNION STOCK YARDS, Toronto, Nov 4—Receipts were large for Wednesday: 84 cars, 1292 cattle, 871 hogs, 570 sheep and lambs, 110 calves and 427 horses.

Cattle: Trade was in an unsettled condition on account of the quarantining of the Chicago Market; also of several states on account of the foot and mouth disease having broken out. The Market was very dull and slow and prices easy.

Choice butchers' steers: None on sale.

Good butchers' steers: $6.75 to $7.15.

Medium butchers' steers, $6.50 to $6.75.

Common butchers' steers, $6 to $6.25.

Choice butchers' heifers: None on sale.

Common butchers' heifers, $6.25 to $6.50.

Choice cows, $6.50 to $6.75.

Good cows, $5 to $6.50.

Bulls, $5 to $6.75.

Feeders and Stockers: There were many farmers looking for good feeders which were scarce, nearly all being inferior, common and medium. Prices were easy.

Choice steers, $6.25 to $6.75.

Medium steers, $5.75 to $6.25.

Stockers, $4.25 to $5.

Inferior stockers, $3.50 to $4.

Milkers and Springers: Only a limited number were offered at $65 to $90 each, bulk sold at $75 to $85 each; one choice cow at $110.

Calves: Receipts of calves were light, good to choice veals found a ready sale, but the common grass-fed calves were cheaper and slow sale.

Choice veals, $10 to $10.50; inferior and common, $3.50 to $5.

Shep and lambs: Receipts were moderate. Sheep sold at steady prices, but lambs were a little firmer.

Sheep, $5.25 to $5.75.

Culls and rams: $2.50 to $4.50.

Lambs: choice ewes and wethers, $7.75 to $7.85; culls, $6 to $6.50.

Hogs: Receipts were light and prices 10c. higher. Selected, fed and watered, $7.25 and $7 f.o.b. cars, and $7.65 weighed off cars.

Some forms of Pacific Ocean seaweeds yield 800 pounds of pure potash, three pounds of iodine and other valuable by-products from each ton of dried vegetable matter.

THE INCIDENT AT THE ARMOURIES

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Sir.—I read with much interest the account of the hat raising incident which occurred at the Armouries on Tuesday evening, and as a spectator of the whole business I must state that your account of same falls far short of the mark. In the first place the gentleman was requested in a perfectly courteous manner to remove his hat but refused. Then again you go out of your way to infer an insult to his associates' loyalty, which only goes to show how little your informant knew of the real facts. As a matter of fact the man has a son at present with the Canadian contingent, and he has, I believe, also done his share personally of military service. I agree fully with your remark about people putting on hats and wraps at concrts, etc., while the National Anthem is being played, which proves only too well, I think that they are not to the manner born nor to the manner taught either of showing respect and honour to the King. Personally if I was attending any such gathering (as that held in the Armouries on Tuesday night) in a city belonging to any friendly nation I should consider it my duty as an act of common courtesy to uncover when any similar selection to "God Save the King" was played or sung. If any gentleman better informed than myself on such matters will show me that I should be guilty of a breach of courtesy or good taste in so doing I stand corrected.—Yours faithfully,

"FAIRPLAY."

DONATION NOT YET ACKNOWLEDGED

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Would you kindly permit me, through the columns of your paper, to state on behalf of the employees of the Campbell Flour Mills Co., that on or about October 3rd we subscribed and paid to one of the collectors for the Patriotic War Fund the sum of $10, and which has not, to our notice, been published among the contributions given to the above fund.

Signed on behalf of the employes,

J. H. BURNS, Brownton.

INQUIRER'S INQUIRY

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Sir,—Is it true that the managers of Dr. Gordon advertised a grand "patriotic night" in the George Street Methodist Church for the City Council to take hold of it, enthused the people and then took up the "offering," not for the widows and orphans, but for Dr. Gordon? Can it be possible that this is true?—Yours, etc.,

INQUIRER.

COURT OF REVISION

The Court of Revision met again on Wednesday evening, when a number of appeals against the 1915 assessment were heard. With one or two exceptions, the Assessor's finding was confirmed. This year one hundred and twenty-two appeals were entered and to date, not more than one or two out of every twenty-five, have been granted. This speaks well for the work of the Assessor. Some strange reasons are advanced by appelants seeking reductions in their taxes One woman admitted that the property which she owned was originally purchased for $1,200, yet she wanted a reduction on an assessment of $550. In many cases appelaants decline to put a valuation on their property, while others freely admit that they don't know what their property is worth.

The first case that was dealt with last evening concerned various properties owned by J. J. Turner, Sr. In each case the assessments were confirmed with the exception of part of the Opera House which was reduced by $200.

The assessment of J. A. Sharpe was confirmed; also that of Grace Allen. No one appeared for the Bank of Ottawa so the appeal was laid over. Walter Burns, representing the International Harvester Co, claimed to be wrongly assessed for business. The assessment was reduced from $4,750 to $3,720. No one appeared for the Campbell Flour Mills Co., so the assessment was confirmed.

The assessments of the following appelants were confirmed: S. M. Fair, R. W. Knox, T. F. Matthews, Jos. Maynard, W. R. Morris, G. S. McKee, John O'Keefe, W. S. Payton, Mrs C. E. Powers, the Catherine Rudkin, Estates and M. Weller.

The Board adjourned until Tuesday, 3 p.m. On that date they will be waited upon by representatives of the Retail Merchants' Association, who have signified their intention of appealing against some of the assessments in the business section of the City.

ABOUT CONSUMPTION

Every day, we are receiving letters from users of this medicine telling us of the benefit they have had by its use.

Mrs. Martyn, of 46 Garden Avenue, Toronto, who before taking "Copeland's Cure for Consumption" had been treated by different doctors for several years without benefit, writes to say:

Mr. Copeland:

Dear Sir.—After taking several bottles of your Consumption Cure, I would like to make known to others the benefit I derived from its use. I was very much run down when I commenced taking your medicine, but now I have fully recovered, and in four months have gained 17 pounds. I cannot speak too highly of it, and will be pleased to recommend it to any who enquire as to its merits. You may publish this letter if you wish, and if so, I trust that it will reach the eyes of some poor sufferer and save them from the dreadful disease of consumption.

Yours respectfully,
(Sgd.) MRS. MARTYN,
46, Garden Ave, Toronto.
Nov. 27, 1912.

That was written two years ago, since when Mrs. Martyn has enjoyed excellent health and has taken every opportunity to tell others what this medicine did for her.

Records are on file of some extreme cases of consumption, one of which, now a well-known case of a man given up as hopeless by his doctor and a specialist, who said that he could not live more than 8 or 10 days. To-day he is alive and well and it was "Copeland's Cure for Consumption" that pulled him through.

Letters have been received and are on file from individuals who have suffered from chronic bronchitis for over 20 years and never obtained any permanent benefit until they took this medicine. These letters were written by well-known people and copies will gladly be sent to any person desiring to know what "Copeland's Cure for Consumption" can do for cases of chronic bronchitis.

Those suffering only from weakened lungs and throats to the "down and out" consumptive all testify to the benefit obtained by taking this medicine.

If you are one of these, don't allow another day to pass without getting a bottle to-day. It cannot possibly do you harm, but will do you, as it has others, much good.

Sold at drug stores, $1.00 a bottle. Ask your druggist or send direct in a plain wrapper by Copeland Medicine Company, Limited, 511 Pape Avenue, Toronto. 3-14

DOCTOR'S SWORN STATEMENT OF SOME GERMAN ATROCITIES

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—Among those who arrived here on the Lusitania were John T. McCutcheon, the cartoonist, and Irvin S. Cobb, author and war correspondent, fresh from Belgium. Mr. Cobb denounced the general run of atrocity stories.

Perry Belmont brought with him a sworn statement of Dr. Clement Philippe, who was in charge of the Belgian Red Cross service and accompanied the last party of Belgian refugees to England, relative to atrocities against the Belgians by the German troops.

Dr. Philippe's story was concerned with three towns—Aerschot, Westplaer and Haulhem. In Aerschot, he said, one hour after the town was surrendered, six citizens, accused of [illegible] the German troops, were shot in spite of an absolute alibi proved by other citizens of the town. During the same afternoon the [illegible] was bombarded by artillery, and the following day the Burgomaster, his brother and son, together with one in every three of the citizens arrested, were shot by firing squads.

Volley Mowed Down Citizens.

Part of the town was then burned and the fugitives were herded along the road to Louvain, where the Germans dismissed them with a volley into the crowd, killing many. Aerschot was then burnt to the ground and abandoned.

The inhabitants of Westplaer, Dr. Philippe said, were driven out of the town along th road toward Malines, insulted and maltreated by the soldiers on the way. A young man of seventeen, who had been wounded, was buried alive. The daughters of a farmer named Dardenne, at Chaumont Gistoux, the doctor also swore, were assaulted by the soldiers after their mother and brother were shot, and when they defended themselves they were bound, placed on piles of straw and burned alive.

A MAN WHO FIGHTS FOR GREAT BRITAIN FIGHTS FOR PRINCIPLE

Splendid Patriotic Address by Rev. Dr. Gordon Last Evening

CLOSES TO-NIGHT

Dr. Gordon closes his Peterborough Citizenship campaign this evening, in the George Street Methodist church. The exercises will begin promptly at seven forty-five o'clock, and the special programme for the evening will be, the conducting of a question drawer. Many questions will be answered. Dr. Gordon has been in receipt of hundreds of epistles asking him various questions. This evening, he will deal with the following:

1. What do you think of Christian Science?
2. Should we talk about labour questions in the pulpit?
3. Is it right for young women to drink wine in their own homes?
4. If Christ ascended in the body, is He now in the body?
5. Is a man morally weaker than a woman?
6. Should preachers receive such large salaries as they do?
7. Why does God permit people to be tempted?
8. Is it right to rent pews in the church?
9. Do you believe that the size of a man's head has anything to do with the strength of his mind?
10. Do you place any fear in astrologers or fortune tellers?
11. Do you slander a person when you simply tell the truth about them?
12. What does Christ mean when He says, "I will give unto thee, the keys of the kingdom of Heaven?
13. Should a Protestant marry a Catholic?
14. Why is it that we cannot heal the sick as the apostles did?
15. Is the world growing better or worse?
16. Should a Mason stand by a Mason when he is in the wrong?
17. Does a minister always tell the whole truth when he is preaching?
18. Were you the pastor of a church and the Board of Management attempted to intimidate you in the matter of your public utterances, what would you do?
19. In a political campaign, should a preacher deliver a political sermon in his pulpit?
20. Is a soldier of a standing army a greater asset in the time of war than the volunteer?
21. Why is it that so many professed religious people, lack a sense of honour?
22. Is it right for cousins to marry?
23. How is a young lady who is a stranger in the city, to become acquainted with the people in the average church?
24. What do you think of the use of slang words, such as "blooming" in ordinary conversation?
25. Can a man really make a million dollars honestly?
26. What do you do with church members that always try to turn other members of the church against their pastor?

Last evening, Dr. Gordon delivered an address on "The War, the Man of the Hour," before a splendid audience, composed exclusively of men. No meeting of the campaign which has been held so far, manifested more interest and enthusiasm than the meeting which he addressed last night.

With reference to the war, he said:

First.—A man who fights for Great Britain fights for great principle. The principle of national honour. Christianity has not broken down so long as a strong nation protects a weak nation.

Second.— The man who fights for Great Britain, fights for a noble kingdom. Our vast Empire, composed of fifty-five colonies and more, is held together by a great sentiment of patriotism, and a Britisher three thousand miles away from home, is more of a Britisher than when he lives in London.

Third.—The man who fights for Great Britain, fights for a noble king. We are not ashamed of George the Fifth. He has in his veins the blood of Victoria the Good, and that popular monarch, Edward the Seventh, and he has done nothing inconsistent with those splendid members of a great dynasty. Our monarch is more than the Empire with the "mailed fist."

Fourth.—The man who fights for Great Britain, fights for a great flag. The flag of the British Empire is the finest piece of dry goods which ever enriched the atmosphere of the world, and it has been consecrated in history by the conflicts and victories of a thousand battle fields.

Fifth.—The man who fights for Great Britain, fights under a great leader. Kitchener is the man of the hour, a man without blow and without bluster, and a leader who appeals to the highest sentiments in the minds of the men over whom he is presiding.

Sixth.— The man who fights for Great Britain, fights for a great cause. Even the enthronement of democracy, Divine rights are going and human rights are coming.

Seventh.— The man who fights for Great Britain, fights for a great race. The Anglo-Saxon race will one day rule and dominate the world. Great Britain is leading the Anglo-Saxon race, and before Great Britain is through with her work of leadership, she will have organized the parliament of man and the federation of the world. Under her leadership we shall yet have the United States of the British Empire, the United States of Europe, the United States of America, and finally the United States of the world, with one world anthem and world flag.

Dr. Gordon offered seven distinct warnings:

I warn you not to hold God responsible for this war. Man is a free moral agent on this planet. War will cease when man is sick and tired of war.

I warn you against the national hate of the gallant foe. The Germans who are fighting in Europe, are the same Germans which are residing in our own country. No man could wish for a better neighbur, or a better friend. In war, there is a great opportunity for misrepresentation.

I warn you against national conceit and international ambition. The Anglo-Saxon race is the most complacent race beneath the sun, and proud, too. He looks down on men of every other race and nationality, and he is apt to speak in words of contempt concerning the foreigner, the immigrant and the stranger, when the future of his own land and country depends upon these very people.

I warn you against pernicious doctrine. The great armament is a guarantee of peace. The Kaiser is not responsible for this war. We have delivered great armaments and laid the wires for great conflicts. The Kaiser is a figure head. He simply touched the button.

I warn you against the danger and curse of he standing army. A standing army is a standing invitation to fight. It does not take ten years to train a man for war. The untrained man fighting for liberty, is stronger than a trained man fighting for military glory. What we need is not a standing army, but a walking, fighting, breathing army composed of men, who when necessary, will fight for God and home and native land.

I warn you that victory tends to enthrone the war spirit. If war is hell, then in the name of God, to hell with the war.

Dr. Gordon closed his address by making an appeal for better manhood, inspired by the spirit of genuine loyalty and sincere patriotism.

British Cruiser Bombards Town

Turkey Has Now Broken Relations With the Allies

LONDON, Nov. 5. — The British cruiser Minerva has bombarded the Arabian town of Jeddah on the Red Sea.

Jeddah, a town of some 30,000 inhabitants, is the chief seaport of Arabia in the Province of Hejaz, 65 miles northwest of Mecca. In the northern part of the town is a tomb said to be that of Eve. Nearly half the population is Arab.

A Central News despatch from Berlin says that large Turkish forces, assembled on the Asiatic side of the Suez Canal, intend to blow up that waterway and form a dam with bags of sand as soon as the Turkish army advances on Egypt.

Diplomatic relations between Turkey and Great Britain, France, Russia and Servia have been definitely severed. Turkey's diplomatic representatives in the capitals of these countries, acting on orders from the Porte, yesterday demanded and received their passports. Some of them already have left their posts, while the others will depart to-day. Tewfik Pasha left London yesterday.

The powers which the Ottoman Government thus defied are already taking warlike action against Turkey. The British have destroyed Fort Akabah, in Arabia; the Russians have invaded Asia Minor, and an Anglo-French fleet is bombarding the forts of the Dardanelles.

An official communication from the staff of the Russian army in the Caucasus, given out in Petrograd yesterday, says that Russian troops have crossed the Turkish frontier, driving back the enemy's advance guards and taking several Armenian towns. The Turks in their retreat abandoned their wounded and dead.

The Relief Committee

Held a Meeting Last Evening

A meeting of the Relief Committee of the Patriotic Relief Fund was held on Wednesday afternoon There was present Messrs H. Rush (chairman), J. J. Howden and James Lynch.

On motion of Messrs. Lynch and Howden it was decided to issue a cheque for $200 to Relief Officer Miller for relief purposes.

The Relief Officer reported that during the past week he had distributed $58 in relief.

A letter was read from J. H. Burnham, M.P., addressed to Mrs. Webb for a certificate that Corporal Charles Webb was her sole support.

The secretary was instructed to write to Mr. Burnham, stating that the certificate asked for could not be granted with accompanying reasons.

BRITISH AEROPLANES BUSY.

London, Nov. 4.—A despatch from Rotterdam to the London Daily Mail says that on Tuesday morning British aeroplanes dropped bombs on the State Railway works at Bruges, in Belgium, doing great damage. At four o'cock in the afternoon another British war plane dropped bombs on Bruges.

Sailing Schedule is Re-arranged

White Star-Dominion Line Makes an Important Announcement.

The S. S. "Laurentic" and "Canada" have been taken over by the Imperial Government at Liverpool, necessitating an entire re-arrangement of schedule. The "Megantic" still retains her date from Montreal of November 7th; the "Zealand" sailing on November 14. From Portland to Halifax:

The S. S. "Arabic" sails December 1st from Portland and from Halifax December 3rd.

The S. S. "Megantic" from Portland December 5th, Halifax December 6th.

The S. S. "Zealand" from Portland December 12th, Halifax December 13th, thus maintaining practically a weekly passenger service from the beginning of November. The S. S. "Zealand" and "Vadesland" are not so well known in the Canadian trade as the "Laurentic" and "Megantic," but have enviable reputations in the New York departures. It will be remembered that this "Zeeland" participated in the movement of the first Canadian contingent.

On account of the many cancellations, this liberal schedule will be welcome news to intending passengers and shippers.

OAKWOOD BOY INJURED IN CAMP

OAKWOOD, Nov. 4 — Mrs. Wm. Munn received a letter from Salisbury Plains, England, stating that her son Harry, who left with the first contingent, had been thrown from his horse and narrowly escaped from a serious accident. He had his hand badly crushed and blood poisoning set in. We hope nothing more serious will overtake him, as he is now doing nicely. Mrs. Munn's second son Frank left on Tuesday morning with the 2nd contingent.

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY

An eminent scientist, the other day, gave his opinion that the most wonderful discovery of recent years was the discovery of Zam-Buk. Just think! As soon as a single thin layer of Zam-Buk is applied to a wound or a sore, such injury is insured against blood poison! Not one species of microbe has been found that Zam-Buk does not kill!

Then again. As soon as Zam-Buk is applied to a sore, or a cut, or to skin disease, it stops the smarting. That is why children are such friends of Zam-Buk. They care nothing for the science of the thing. All they know is that Zam-Buk stops their pain. Mothers should never forget this.

Again. As soon as Zam-Buk is applied to a wound or to a diseased part, the cells beneath the skin's surface are so stimulated that new healthy tissue is quickly formed. This forming of fresh healthy tissue "from below" is Zam-Buk's secret of healing. The tissue thus formed is worked up to the surface and literally casts off the diseased tissue above it. This is why Zam-Buk cures are permanent.

Only the other day Mr. Marsh, of 101 Delorimier Avenue, Montreal, called upon the Zam-Buk Co. and told them that for over twenty-five years he had been a martyr to eczema. His hands were at one time so covered with sores that he had to sleep in gloves. Four years ago Zam-Buk was introduced to him, and in a few months it cured him. To-day—over three years after his cure of a disease he had for twenty-five years—he is still cured and has had no traces of any return of the eczema!

All druggists sell Zam-Buk at 50c. box or we will send free trial box if you send this advertisement and a 1c stamp (to pay return postage). Address Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

Local Nurse For The Front

Miss Gertrude Reid Enters Military School at Quebec in Training For Overseas Service.

At a meeting of the Graduate Nurses' Association, held on Tuesday afternoon in the Public Library, the work that had been undertaken for the Red Cross Society was completed. The material for the work just finished was supplied by the City Red Cross Association. It was made into 32c cotton bandages. The nurses had already supplied. 220 yards of gauze bandages and 225 gauze handkerchiefs. At yesterday's meeting a subscription was taken for the Red Cross Society.

Reference was made to the departure of Miss Gertrude Reid, graduate of Nichols Hospital, who has entered the Military School at Quebec in training for duty at the front. Prior to her departure Miss Reid was the guest of honour at an enjoyable social function given by the Nicholls Hospital Alumnae.

PRESS ON CANADA AND MONROE DOCTRINE

Assertion by Germany of Right to Attack Dominion the Subject of Comment.

"SOURCE OF IRRITATION."

Philadelphia Public Ledger: "Every one who has followed the course of events in South America, who understands the strength of the German desire for colonial expansion, knows perfectly well that the Monroe doctrine has been for years a source of irritation to the German government."

"QUESTION ACADEMIC"

Pittsburg Despatch: "In our view the entire absence of any sign of naval triumph for the Germans sufficient to enable them to undertake overseas invasions makes this question an entirely academic one".

"THIS COUNTRY".

Baltimore News: Aside from Germany's wish and ability to threaten Canada, there is not the slightest reason in the world to believe that she is going to take any action that would offend this country".

MUST ACCEPT CONSEQUENCES.

Philadelphia Press: "When Canada as a dependency of Great Britain, makes war on Germany she must accept all the consequences of war except that this country could not submit to see a German government extended to Canada".

"FAIR PREY."

Syracuse Post Standard: "If Canada had sent no troops to Europe she would still be fair prey for the Germans if they could get at her, of which there seems at present remote prospect".

"THE BRITISH FLEET."

Philadelphia Inquirer: "Before Germany can transport any troops across the water it must manage in some way to eliminate the British fleet, and just how that is to be done is not at this writing apparent."

"A GERMAN DISAPPOINTMENT".

Philadelphia Record: "The Dominion has been one of the German disappointments. German expounders of 'Maifest Destiny' counted confidently on Canada rising in revolt against England."

THE MILLBROOK CONTINGENT

Was Given a Hearty Send-off

Lt.-Col. H. A. Turner and Capt. C. R. Spencer were at Port Hope on Monday and Tuesday to see the boys off for their training camp at Kingston. On Monday evening, Mrs. (Major) Boston, whose husband is with the 1st Contingent, gave a "smoker" concert in the drill hall, Port Hope, which was thoroughly enjoyed by all present. A choice programme was rendered. The sweaters and other necessaries furnished by the Millbrook Women's Institute, were presented to "our volunteers" by Col. Turner and Capt Spencer. Mr. Nelson of the 91st Hamilton Regiment, and Mr. Hussey of Dummer, were in attendance at the "smoker". Mr. Nelson gave the "sword dance" in his inimitable style. There are 75 in all who left Port Hope for Kingston on Tuesday. They are a fine lot of men and will give a good account of themselves.

Three Cavan boys who were not included in our first list are: H. Millican, A. Curtis and Mr. Muspratt. The boys were in fine form and spirits when leaving Port Hope, and are desirous of getting to the front at the earliest possible moment.

AN INJUSTICE TO MR. BLASTORAH

Mr. Blastorah, proprietor of the Palace Hotel, draws attention to the fact that the reports in the evening papers regarding the sale of liquor to a minor do him an injustice. The young man in his evidence swore that he found the liquor in the stable of the Palace Hotel. This was proved to be untrue, and the source from which it was got was ascertained and the guilty party convicted.

While these particulars were given in Tuesday's Examiner, it is desired by Mr. Blastorah that the facts be again given to the public with prominence.

COMPELLING PRISONERS TO DIG TRENCHES

English Officials Furnish Conclusive Proof of This Act on Part of Germans.

LONDON, Nov. 4—Charging the Germans with the abrogation of all the rules of civilized warfare in France and Belgium, where French, British and Belgian prisoners of war and non-combatants who have been seized by the invaders have been forced to dig German trenches under the withering fire of their own countrymen, in direct violation of the articles of the Geneva Convention, the British Government served notice last night in a statement issued by the Foreign Office that hereafter all of the enemy's reservists found on neutral vessels will be made prisoners of war.

As proof of the truth of the charge that the Germans are forcing captured troops to dig trenches, thus committing an act of war against their own armies, an officia of the British government last night showed to a correspondent a photograph in a war edition of the Zeit Zum Bill in which Belgian prisoners of war, manacled and driven by armed guards are seen at this work The caption under the photograph reads, "Making Belgians Dig Trenches for Our Brave Soldiers".

"That photograph," said this officia, "corroborates the pile of documentary evidence that is one reason why England is determined to capture the enemy's reservists on board neutral vessels. But in holding up these ships our naval officers are instructed to use the utmost despatch and consideration. In seizing the enemy's reservists England is merely protecting herself; and the United States has acknowledged that the British Government is well within its rights.

"Any attempt to make Americans believe that the capture of the enemy's reservists compares in any way with the seizure of American sailors on American ships, an act which brought on the unfortunate War of 1812, is simply to insult American intelligence.

"What about the detention of the Kroonland ad the seizure of copper and other contraband?" I asked.

"The case of the Kroonland is being investigated," he replied. "I have no doubt it will be settled to the satisfaction of both countries. You can accept it as a broad principle that there will be no interference with neutral shipping except when the government has reliable information that the enemy's country is the ultimate destination of the contraband. Germany wats copper. Germany wants oil. And she is doing everything possible to obtain these supplies. Our government naturally is doing eevrything it can to break the enemy. Even in cases where the contraband is seized because the British Government has proof that it is designed to reach the enemy. Amrrican shippers, many of whom are consigning contraband in good faith to merchants of other neutral countries who are merely agents of Germany, will not lose anything.

"The British Government will not let copper, petroleum and other contraband reach the foe, but it will buy it, so the shippers have no chance to suffer This government will not do anything in any way to impair the unbroken friendship of a hundred years with the United States, and I am confident the great Republic understands that Great Britain will not go one step beyond what the United States acknowledges as its right.

"Thus," he concludes, "the plot of pro-German propagandists is bound to fail".

ACCIDENT TO G. T. R. TRAIN

FENELON FALLS, Nov. 4.—An accident to the train from the north on Tuesday afternoon resulted in one passenger coach and three box cars leaving the rails. Fortunately none of the passengers were injured, though a delay of a couple of hours may have possibly caused them some inconvenience. An engine and coaches from Lindsay took them south at about 7 p.m., an auxiliary from the same town somewhat later arriving on the scene and setting the overturned cars to rights.

Another report says that a drawbar broke and the passenger coach and baggage car nearly went into the lake. A lady passenger had her head hurt and a gentleman had his side injured. Another lady passenger with a baby fainted away through fright.

Batch of Letters From the Trenches

ONE AGAINST TWO HUNDRED.

In camp one night a German prisoner told us about a Lancashire Fusilier who had been cut off and refused to surrender to two hundred Germans. He lay on the ground and kept firing away until he hadn't a cartridge left, and as his bayonet was gone, he stood up with folded arms while they shot him down.

There was a sackful of bullets in him at least, but he killed twelve and wounded over thirty of his foes before the end came.—Private S. Hanna, Coldstream Guards at Birmingham.

CARPENTIER WOUNDED.

Georges Carpentier, the French heavyweight champion, who won a decision on a foul from Gunboat Smith in London a few months ago, is reported to be in a critical condition at a hospital in France as a result of a bullet wound in the right lung, received in battle.

This news was received by Mrs. Norman Selby, wife of Kid McCoy, the former heavy weight pugilist, in a letter from a friend in Paris. Mrs. Selby, who is at present in San Francisco also reports that Charley Ledoux, the French bantamweight champion, Charley Struber, Adrian Hogan, and Max Stringer, other French pugilists, were killed.

OBITUARY

MRS. BRIDGET O'BRIEN.

The death occurred early this morning of Mrs. Bridget O'Brien, the oldest resident of the township of Douro, where she was born and resided during the whole of her life.

The late Mrs. O'Brien was 86 years of age and was very widely known and highly respected in Douro and the surrounding community. Her death will be sincerely mourned by a very large number of friends and acquaintances.

Deceased is survived by two sons, Dennis of Douro and James of East City, as well as one daughter, Mrs. Carlow, Dummer.

The funeral announcement will be made later.

MACFARLANE WILSON.

The Toronto morning papers announce the death at St. Paul, Minn., on Wednesday, November 4th, of a former resident of Peterborough, Macfarlane Wilson. Mr. Wilson came to Peterborough in July, 1882 and went into business, which he conducted for about thirty years. He established the well known business, "China Hall," at the corner of George and Simcoe streets, in the premises now occupied by the Dominion Bank. He carried on the business there till the occurrence of a serious fire, subsequently carrying on a similar business in the premises now occupied by the Boston Cafe. About two years ago he removed to St. Paul, Minn., where he resided till the time of his death, which followed a surgical operation. This was pronounced successful, but as Mr. Wilson was known to have a weak heart, his death was probably due to heart failure. Mr. Wilson was a Liberal in politics and a member of St. John's congregation during his residence in Peterborough. He leaves a widow—Maud Miller—daughter of the late Judge Miller, Beamsville, who is well known to the public for her literary work, she being for a time a graceful contributor to the Globe Saturday Magazine. Two daughters also survive— Douglass (the elder— (Mrs. (Dr.) Hammes of St. Paul — and Madeline, all of St. Paul.

For experimental purposes there has been built an agricultural traction engine that has wheels 12 feet in diameter and with 16 inch threads.

Getting Hard Training In Old Country

Private Fred Long Writes to His Mother in Peterborough

Mrs. Long, of Peterborough, has received the following letter from her son, Fred, formerly of the C.P.R. Telegraph Office here, and now a signaller with B Company of the 16th Battalion, 3rd Brigade of the Canadian Overseas Forces at Salisbury plains:

Salisbury Plain, England, Oct. 22.

Dear Mother,—Received your letter here to-day and very glad to hear from you. Hope you are all well at home. We had a fine trip across the Atlantic ocean. The weather wasn't very rough. We arrived at Plymouth in the south of England on a Thursday afternoon and didn't leave the boat till Sunday night. We travelled till 4 o'clock in the morning on the train and then marched 10 miles into camp, and got there in time for breakfast. We were in heavy marching order too, including rifle and bayonet. There were about 25 boats in the bunch coming across, and we sailed with lights out most of the time. We're getting some good hard training here these days. It sure is a fine country over here. So this is the summer we were to go over to the Old Country. Well, I beat you at it, didn't I. Well, I am glad you're all well and happy.

War news is just as scarce here practically, as it is in Canada. I may take a trip to Ireland sometime soon. It is not far from here. It is rather rainy here, and we're still in tents. Well, there' nothing strange to tell you. Don't know when we leave here, but will let you know. Love to all.

FRED.

MAKING OF BIG GUNS IS WORK REQUIRING CARE

In the manufacture of big guns the engineer has certainly achieved some of his most daring conquests, for it is doubtful if there is anything more wonderfully fashioned or scientifically constructed than the monster weapons found on the latest battleships and in the large forts.

From their muzzles they are capable of launching into space shells weighing as much as half a ton at a speed of thirty-five miles a minute, or 2,100 miles an hour. These death dealing missles may be so designed as to burst after they have forced their way through a ship's side or immediately they strike an object or at some point during their flight.

The big gun itself consists of several tubes or cylinders, slipped over one another and named after the letters of the alphabet. "A" is inside, and scorched by the powder gases; "B" goes over "A," and so on, the outside tube of all being known as the jacket.

Making of Tubes.

Each separate tube or cylinder is fashioned in much the same way. In the case of the "A" tube for a twelve inch gun a huge solid steel ingot is cast, weighing upwards of thirty tons. The ends have been cut off, the ingot is mounted in a lathe, and a tube-like "trepanning" borer removes the long core from the centre. The ingot is then dismounted from the lathe and heated. A long, hollow bar somewhat smaller than the destined bore of the gun is then passed through the centre hole, and the ingot is then placed under a 2,500 ton forging press which gradually thins and draws it out along the bar, which is kept cool by water circulating through it. After being turned outside and bored inside, the tube has to be retempered, and this is done by dipping it into a tank filled with thousands of gallons of cotton seed oil.

As it would be impossible to slip the "B" and "C" tubes over the "A" tube when cold, this difficulty is got over by heating them. The work, however, requires great care and constant attention. The heated cylinder, of course, decreases in length as well as in diameter as it cools, and unless great precautions are taken, it would naturally cool at the ends first, and cause the central part of the tube to cool in a state of dangerous tension. To avoid such a thing happening, one part is cooled artificially by means of water jets, while the other portions are heated by gas flames.

We now come to the wiring process. Layers of ribbon-like steel cylinders are wound outside the innermost cylinder but one, as metal arranged in this manner withstands bursting strains better than anything yet devised. A twelve inch gun consumes no fewer than 120 miles of wire one-quarter of an inch wide and one-sixteenth of an inch thick.

Rifling of Bore

That the shell may travel "business end" foremost throughout its journey, it must be given a twisting motion around its axis—in other words, be made to spin. This rotation prevents its turning head over heels, as it undoubtedly would do if not spinning, and make it travel farther and more accurately. The spinning motion is brought about by rifling—the cutting of spiral grooves in the bore, or the inside of the gun. This is done by a long hollow steel rod, which carries three tools at the end and cuts three grooves at once.

As the rifling comes to near the end of the manufacture of a big gun it must be done with the greatest care, for a single badly cut groove would spoil the gun, now representing perhaps $50,000 in work and material. Indeed, extreme care and accuracy characterize every process in the making of heavy ordnance. The steel for the tubes is made carefully; the ingots are cast carefully and forged very carefully. Every tube is bored and turned to the five-hundredth of an inch. Though a twelve inch gun is nearly twenty inches thick over the powder chamber, each of its various jackets must have its proper tension in order to receive its fair share of the shock of explosion.

The Breech-block

Finally there is the breech-block—the door through which the shell is inserted. It moves on a hinge and is a very massive affair, weighing about half a ton. Thanks to the presence of certain levers and the perfection of the workmanship, any one who has the knack can move it quite easily. It can be slammed and locked in about five seconds. The door gives entrance to the twelve feet chamber where the shell is placed.

The active life of a gun is made up of the total of the very short periods occupied by the various shells passing through its bore. The bore of a twelve inch gun is about forty-five feet long and the average rate at which the shell travels through it is half-way between no motion at all, and the muzzle motion of, say, 3,000 feet per second, or about 1,500 feet per second. The rifling of a big gun is worked out after 10 rounds have been fired, so that the total life is the time taken for a shell moving at 1,500 feet per second to travel 4,500 feet—that is just three seconds!

FLAGS WORN ON TRIM ANKLES OF WOMEN TERMED DESECRATION

CHICAGO, Nov. 3.—Threats of arrest of American women who wear the American flag on their stockings were made to-day by the executive committee of the American Flag Day Association, following an indignation meeting that lasted until a late hour last night.

Mrs. A. McAllister, who recently returned from Europe, brought a pair of the flag stockings to the meeting. The stars and stripes were woven into the silk several inches above the foot. According to Mrs. McAllister, many American women in London are seeking to attract attention to their trim ankles by wearing the star spangled stockings and the fad threatens to spread to this country.

"This is a desecration of the flag," said Mrs. McAllister. "I am going to call the attention of the federal authorities to it."

Russian Progress In Eastern Prussia Now Alarms Berlin

Germans Must Abandon the Province or Leave Way to Capital Open--Have Sustained Very Heavy Losses in Guns and Men---Russian Poland Devasted by Germans.

THE KAISER'S ACHIEVEMENTS

LONDON, Nov. 6.— The Petrograd correspondent of The London Morning Post, referring to the retreat of the Germans from Russian Poland, says the obstinate resistance of the enemy has been finally broken.

A Bitter Choice.

"It seems to me," he added, "the Germans have now the bitter choice between abandoning East Prussia to insure a strong defance of the direct route to Berlin or of endeavouring to hold everything at the risk of losing all. Their losses are appalling, both in men and guns and stores, while their strategy has hitherto lacked on this side both science and imagination more than reaches the outside world, but their men have fought with frenzied fury, alternating often with causeless panic.

German Armies Cut.

'The German line of three hundred miles, which a couple of days ago was compelled to assume the defensive everywhere, has now begun to retreat. At most of the points the retreat was most marked exactly at the point where the highest vital interests of the Germans required continued defence — namely, their right flank — where alone was there any chance of assisting their armies beaten in Poland. The Russians here have carried their success farthest now and hold Bialla and Lyk once more in German territory, thereby cutting off all connection between the East Prussian front and the retreating armies now nearing the frontiers of Poland. The Russians have taken Bakalarshevo, the point selected for tactical reasons by the Germans for their concentrated and stubborn attacks. A large quantity of arms and ammunition was captured here, many of the captured rifles being left by the enemy stacked in their racks. On the great Vistula front the retreat is progressing at an increasing rate, and the Germans now are approaching the political frontiers.

Poland Devastated.

"The whole country covered by the German advance and the German retreat is laid waste. Villages have been burned and the roads, except a few causeway roads which have been carefully preserved, are ruined. All the bridges are down, and in whole forests nothing is left but the smoking stumps. The area of this iniquitous devastation is half the total of the territory of Poland.

Firmly Established on San.

"The Russians are now firmly established on a six-mile front on the left bank of the San River between Nisko and Rudnik. The Austrian opposition here was long and determined, but was finally broken during the night of Monday and Tuesday. The Russian advance from here will bring them across the line of retreat of the Austrian armies coming down from Poland.

"I have before noted the shortage in cavalry of the Germans on the Vistula front. It is now semi-officially announced that the Seventh Austrian and the Eighth Saxon cavalry divisions have been joined in one corps under the command of the General commanding the Seventh Austrian division.

Colossal Losses.

"Austrian deserters who are coming in [illegible] numbers report serious differences between the Germanic allies, and especially emphasize the colossal losses of the Germans.

"During the next couple of days we shall anxiously await news whether the victorious Russians have succeeded in rushing the Germans, whose flight accelerates as they approach the frontiers, past the entrenched positions along the River Warthe."

GERMANS BEGUILED THE TURKS

Officers of Cruiser Goeben Sent Wireless That They Were Being Attacked.

TRUTH CAME TOO LATE

LONDON, Nov. 5.—The contention of the British and Foreign Offices that Turkey was forced into the war by German intrigue and against the wishes of the responsible government is born out by information received in Odessa from Constantinople, which describes a fraud practiced on the Government at Constantinople by the German officers of the battle cruiser Goeben.

The Goeben had been sent into the Black Sea with other Turkish warships as a precautionary measure. After the Goeben attacked Russian sea coast towns and ships her officers sent a wireless message to Constantinople which asserted that the Russians had made a treacherous attack on Turkish ships, and that the Turkish fleet had been forced to take defensive action.

The Ministers fell into the trap. After a Cabinet council, the defensive measures were approved. It was not until the Turkish ships returned to Constantinople that the fraud was exposed. Meanwhile, the news had reached Constantinople that Bedouins had entered Egypt. The Porte fell into confusion. The Grand Vizier, Prince Said Halim, fell ill. On Friday morning the Russian Ambassador, unable to see the Grand Vizier on account of the latter's illness, asked for his passports.

On Friday evening the Grand Vizier, alarmed over the turn affairs were taking, summoned another council, and placed before it the request of the Triple Entente powers that Turkey remove German officers and seamen from Turkish ships and repatriate these persons. He suggested also that compensation be offered. The last minute proposal was rejected, and the Grand Vizier resigned. A despatch to the Times says that some members of the Turkish Government were ignorant of the fleet's attack on the Black Sea ports two hours after foreigners in Constantinople were aware of it.

ONLY A REMNANT OF GERMANS ON YSER

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK CITY, NOV. 6, 11 A. M.— THE FOLLOWING IN THE LONDON DAILY MAIL FROM ITS CORRESPONDENT IN NORTH FRANCE, HAS BEEN CABLED HERE:

"THE BELGIANS NOW OCCUPY BOTH BANKS OF THE YSER RIVER." THE GERMAN RIGHT IS SMASHED LIKE FALLEN WINE GLASS. GUNS, STORES, RIFLES, AND EVEN WOUNDED WERE ABANDONED IN THE RUSH FROM THIS FATAL BATTLEFIELD. THE CHANCE OF THE GERMANS WAS WELL ON THE WANE WHEN THE FLOODING OF THEIR POSITIONS CAME AS A CLIMAX OF DISASTER.

THERE IS NOW LEFT NO MORE THAN A REMNANT OF THE GERMAN FORCE WHICH MET ITS FATE AT YSER. THIRTY THOUSAND GERMANS, SAY THE BELGIANS, HAVE BEEN PUT OUT OF THE FIGHTING ON THIS LINE.

"NOT A SINGLE GUN REMAINS ON THIS SIDE OF THE RIVER, AND UNBURIED DEAD, THE DROWNED AND WOUNDED WITH THE MEMORY OF ALL THE TRAINS OF THE WOUNDED THAT LEFT THE FIRING LINE IN RECENT DAYS LEAD ONE TO THINK THAT THERE IS NO OVERTELLING OF THE ENEMY'S LOSS. THERE MUST BE MANY THOUSANDS OF PRISONERS ALSO IN THE ALLIES' HANDS READY FOR TRANSPORTATION TO ENGLAND.

Allies Gain New Ground in Belgium Holding in France

Brunt of Enemy's Attack Seems to Be Diverted From Belgium to Part of French Front---Two Distinguished Airmen Met Accidental Death.

LONDON, Friday, Nov. 6—According to the Daily Mail's Rotterdam correspondent the inhabitants of Ostend have been ordered to take to their cellars with five day's provisions.

The following note was appended to the French official comunique tonight:

"An accident from some unknown cause resulted to-day in the death of two aviators, Captains Faure and Remy, when their aeroplane fell on the roof of a house at Ixy-les-Moulines. They were two of the army's most distinguished pilots."

The report that General von Kluk, who commanded the German right wing in the advance on Paris, has been killed is not true, as, according to the latest news General von Kluk is still commanding the army of the Aisne.

Lieut.-Gen. Berthold von Deimling, the German commander, has been slightly wounded in the thigh by shrapnel, on the firing line. He continues in command of his troops, however.

Maintain Positions

The official reports of the fighting yesterday and to-day indicate that the allies are firmly maintaining the positions in France, where the German attack is now strongest, and regaining ground in Belgium, where the German attack has weakened.

Between the North Sea and Ypres, the line of fighting in Belgium, the power of the Germans seems to have decreased remarkably The allies are now on the right bank of the Yser, and have advanced eastward from Nieuport. Only between Dixmude and the Lys have the Germans displayed any strength, but their infantry charges have been broken, and they have been pushed back. The situation in Belgium seems vastly improved.

In the last two days the Germans, as was expected, increased the violence of their attacks on the allied line in France. They struck north of Arras, near Roye, and near Le Quesnoy-en-Sanberre, but the French and British from La Bassee to Soissons and eastward maintained their positions, and even made some advances. The Germans brought heavy guns into action all along the centre from the Oise to the Meselle, and kept up a severe artillery action.

There are fewer details than usual as to the fighting at the east of the line, the only announcement by the Government being that in the region of St. Hubert, in the Argonne all attacks by the Germans have been repulsed. There are unofficial reports that the French line circled about Verdun is slowly pressing the Germans backward, and that the invaders are unable to break the line and advance siege guns toward Verdun or Toul.

Unofficial reports are conflicting. There are rumours that the Germans are about to give up the fight in Belgium and Northern France, and are sending trained troops to defend East Prussia and Silesia; that Brussels is practically evacuated, and that they have withdrawn farther into Belgium than is mentioned in the official communiques. On the other hand, there is a report that the Kaiser is rushing 200,000 troops to reinforce his armies in Belgium and France, and that traffic on German railways has been halted to put through troop trains.

Germany Is In Need of More Surgeons as Many Have Been Slain

BERLIN, Oct. 20 (by courier via Rotterdam to New York) —There is a growing dearth of surgeons and physicians in the German army. This statement has been made to me by several red cross doctors.

"There never has been a war in which so many doctors and red cross men have fallen as on the German side during the fighting up to date," said an active member of the red cross who had just come from the front with wounded. "The mortality among red cross workers has been appalling and if it keeps up it will be necessary to leave the wounded lying on the battlefield until after dark and keep our doctors back. This already has been done in the fighting of the last few days with the result that hundreds who might have been saved have bled to death, or were so near gone when we got to them that nothing could be done to save them." The doctor could not give me definite figures of the numbers of doctors and red cross men killed or wounded.

Wounds from the high power rifle or machine gun bullets heal quickly when not in vital spots and providing the wounded don't lie on the battle field too long, the doctor said. Wounds in the abdomen usually prove fatal, but bullets through the lungs are no longer considered dangerous. Many soldiers have been shot through the stomach. If the stomach has been empty, or nearly so, the recovery has been rapid. For that reason, said the doctor, troops designated for the front are not given much to eat for the proceeding 24 hours or are advised to eat but little and then only easily digested food.

Among the wounded there is a large percentage of "hits" in arms, shoulders and legs. The latter wounds are largely from machine guns, while the shoulder and arm wounds are often received in the trenches. There are also many "head hits" in the trench fighting but those one does not see. Usually they are fatal. Shell and shrapnel fire is the terror of the hospital doctors. Such shots rip, tear and mutilate frightfully.

A steady stream of red cross trains comes from the front. The lightly wounded, those who can move or hobble about, travel in ordinary day coaches. The others suffering from more serious wounds, are transported and distributed throughout Germany in special red cross trains with 16 cots in each car.

GREECE TO BE NEUTRAL.

And Servia Will "Morally Support" Bulgaria, if Latter is Attacked.

LONDON, Nov. 5. — A despatch from Sofia to the Times says:

"The Bulgarian government has received formal assurance that the Greek Government is determined to maintain neutrality and has refrained from ordering a mobilization.

"The Servian minister here announces that Servia will offer Bulgaria her moral support should Turkey attack Bulgaria.

"No friendly advance has been received from Roumania.

HORSES GIVING BLOOD NEAR DETROIT THAT LIVES OF SOLDIERS ON EUROPEAN BATTLE-FIELDS MAY BE SAVED

DETROIT, Mich, Nov. 5—Quartered on some of the finest pasture land in Michigan, at Rochester, near Detroit, and maintained in a life of luxury and ease a drove of magnificent horses are daily giving their blood to save the lives of soldiers fighting on the battlefields of Europe. These animals have no other purpose in life—they merely give their blood that the soldiers may live.

The horses are the property of Parke, Davis and Company of Detroit ,the largest drug manufacturing concern in the world They are used to produce anti-tesetanic serum, which is administered to prevent and cure the dread disease tetanus. The entire output of the anti-tesianic serum manufactured by the Parke, Davis Company from the blood of their horses, is now shipped to Europe for injection into the soldiers suffering or threatened with tetanus.

During the month of October, the Parke Davis Company shipped to the battlefields of Europe more than ten times as much of the serum as is normally exported.

The method of manufacturing the serum is complicated and the process takes more than nine months from start to finish Briefly the method is this:

Tetanus germs, which are merely vegetable plants, are propogated on a large scale in the Parke Davis laboratories. These germs are then placed in a large receptacle about 40 feet square, which is filled with beef soup, or bouillon, manufactured from beef and glucose This mixture then is covered with sterile oil to prevent air from getting at the germs, and permitted to stand for three weeks, during which period the tetanus germ multiply into the millions. These germs excrete poison.

The next step in the process is the filtration of the mixture through paper and unglazed porcelain. This operation eliminates the germs and leaves a poisonous soup.

This mixture of poisonous soup is then injected into the horse at Rochester. At the same time, anti-toxin is injected to neutralize the effects of the poison These double injections are repeated, at periods of about one week, for three months, when the horse is immunized. The bleeding process then begins Each animal is bled from the jugular vein about once every month, an average of two gallons of blood being taken each time. About 25 per cent .of this blood consists of a straw-coloured fluid or serum, which is separated from the rest and placed in ice chests, where it must remain for from six to eight months. With the addition of a preservative, and a second filtration through unglazed porcelain, the process is complete, and the output is called anti-tesetanic serum.

Whenever possible, this serum is injected into the wounded soldier, to eliminate all possibility of lockjaw. Any shortage of serum in the medical departments of the European armies, medical authorities assert, would result in a rapid increase in the death rate and would increase the suffering of the wounded soldiers a hundred fold.

EXTRAORDINARY SPEED SHOWN BY RUSSIANS

ROUTED THE TURKS

PETROGRAD, Nov. 5.—The following official communication has been received from the Russian General Staff:

'In Caucasia one of our columns suddenly attacked the enemy near Ardost 15 miles south of Kars, near the boundary of Turkish Armenia). The Turks fled, abandoning their wounded.

"Having dislodged the Turks from the village of Id (about 40 miles west of Ardost, over the line into Turkish Armenia), we took a great quantity of food. After a violent combat our troops seized Khorasan (in Turkish Armenia, 30 miles southeast of Id), and Col. Karaderbent and one hundred Cossacks attacked the trenches of the enemy and sabred the Turkish infantry.

"One of our columns, having passed through difficult roads for a distance of 53 miles in 30 hours, encountered the Turks at Mysoune and Diyadin (about 30 miles west of Bayazid, which is the capital of the Sanjak of Bayazid) We dispersed a large body of Kurds and occupied Diyadin, where we took munitions of war and many prisoners.

"On November 3 we occupied Bayazid, where we routed the Turkish troops who resisted strongly."

AUSTRIA SEEKS SEPARATE PEACE

Petrograd Report Says The Kaiser's Ally Would Gladly Quit.

LONDON, Nov. 5.—The Standard's Petrograd correspondent says:

"In spite of Germany's threats, promises, and furious disgust, Austria, the Russian Government is informed would only too gladly retire from the war if she could make terms with Russia direct, with the approval of Great Britain and France.

"The Russian Government is in communication on this subject with London and Paris, and important developments may shortly be expected. Berlin is exerting the strongest influences at Vienna, but as a fighting force the Austro-Hungarian army has practically ceased to exist." Ravages of disease have contributed to bring about a desperate state of affairs in Austria-Hungary.

"Any arrangement Vienna makes with Petrograd would, of course, include Servia. It is a question whether Austria-Hungary will not be compelled to capitualte ignominiously, if terms of peace cannot promptly be arranged to save her face. Her only alternative would appear to be abject submission to Berlin. In that event it is doubtful whether German aid could long deter the occupation of Vienna by the Russian army."

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Cov. Allan England

Then she bethought herself of the pistol Allan had given her.

"I must never take that off again, whatever happens," said she. "But—where is it now?"

In vain she hunted for it on the table, the floor, the shelves, and in the closets, Allan had built. In vain she ransacked the whole cave.

The pistol, belt, and cartridges—all were gone.

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE RETURN OF THE MASTER.

Suddenly finding herself very much alarmed and shaken, Beatrice sat down in the low chair beside her bed, and covering her face with both hands tried to think.

The old woman, somewhat recovered, moved about with words of pity and indignation, and sought to make speech with her, but she paid no heed. Now, if ever, she had need of self-searching—of courage and enterprise. And all at once she found that, despite everything, she was only a woman.

Her passion spent, she felt a desperate need of a man's strength, advice, support. In disarray she sat there, striving to collect her reason.

Her robe was torn, and her loosened hair, escaping from its golden pins, cascaded all about her shoulders. Loudly her heart throbbed; a certain shivering had taken possession of her, and all at once she noticed that her brow was burning.

Resolutely she tried to put her weakness from her, and marshalled her thoughts. In the bed her son still slept quietly, his fat fist protruding from the clothes, his ruddy, healthy little face half buried in the pillow.

A great, overpowering wave of mother-love swept her heart. She leaned forward, and through lids now tear-dimmed, with eyes no longer angry, peered at the child—her child and Allan's.

"For your sake—for yours if not for mine," she whispered, "I must be strong!"

She thought.

"Evidently some great conspiracy is going on here. Beyond and apart from the calamity of the landslide, some other and even greater peril menaces the colony!"

She reflected on the incident of her pistol and ammunition being stolen.

"There can be n doubt that H'yemba did that," she decided. "In the confusion of the catastrophe he has disarmed me. That means well-planned rebellion—and at this time it will be fatal! Now, above all else, we must work in harmony, stand fast, close up the ranks! This must not be!"

Yet she could see no way clear to crush the danger. What could she do against so many — nearly all provided with firearms? Why had H'yemba even taken the trouble to steal her weapon?

"Coward!" she exclaimed. "Afraid for his own life—afraid even to face me, so long as I had a pistol! As I live, and heaven is above me, in case of civil war he shall be the first to die!"

She summoned Gesafam.

"Go, now!" she commanded; "go among the remaining Folk and secretly find me a pistol, with ammunition. Steal them if you must. Say nothing, and return as quickly as you can. There be many guns among the Folk. I must have one. Go!"

"O, Yulcia, will there be fighting again?"

"I know not. Ask no questions, but obey!"

Trembling — shaking her head and muttering strange things, the old woman departed.

She returned in a quarter-hour with not only one, but two pistols and several ammunition-belts cleverly concealed beneath her robe. Beta seized them gladly with a sudden return of confidence.

But the old woman, though she said no word, eyed her mistress in a strange, disquieting manner. What had she heard, or seen, down in the caves? Beatrice had now neither time nor inclination to ask.

"Listen, old mother," she commanded. "I am now going to leave you and my son here together. After I am gone lock the door. Let no one in. I alone shall enter. My signal shall be two knocks on the door, then a pause, then three. Do not open till you hear that signal. You understand me?"

"I understand and I obey, O Yulcia mia!"

"It is well. Guard my son as your life. Now I go to see the wounded and the sick again!"

The old woman let her out and carefully barred the door behind her. Beatrice, unafraid, with both her weapons lying loose in their holsters, belted under her robe, advanced along down the terrace path.

Her hair had once more been bound up. She had recovered something of her poise and strength. The realization of her mission inspired her to any sacrifice.

"It's all for your sake, Allan," she whispered as she went. "All for yours—and our boy's!"

Far beneath her New Hope River purled and sparkled in the morning sun. Beyond, the far and vivid tropic forest stretched in wild beauty to the hills that marked the world's end—those hills beyond which—

She put away the thought, refusing to admit even the possibility of Allan's failure, or accident, or death.

"He will come back to me!" she said bravely and proudly, for a moment stopping to face the sun. "He will come back from beyond those hills and trackless woods! He will come back—to us!"

Again she turned, and descending some dozen steps in the terrace path, once more reached the doorway of the hospital cave.

Pausing not, hesitating not, she lifted the rude latch and pushed.

The door refused to give.

Again she tried more forcibly.

It still resisted.

Throwing all her strength against the barrier, she fought to thrust it inward. It would not bulge.

"Barred!" she exclaimed, aghast.

Only too true. During her absence, though how or by whom she could not know, the door had been impassably closed to keep her out!

Who, now, was working against her will? Could it be that H'yemba, all burned and blinded as he was, could hate returned so soon and once more set himself to thwart her? And if not the smith, then who?

"Rebellion!" she exclaimed. "It's spreading—growing—now, at the very minute when I should have help, faith and co-operation!

"Open! Open, in the name of the law that has been given you — our law!" she cried loudly in the Merucan tongue.

No answer.

She snatched out a pistol, and with the butt loudly smote the planks of palm-wood. Within, the echoes rumbled dully, but no human voice replied.

"Traitors! Cowards!" she defied the opposing power. "I, a woman, your mistress, am come to save you, and you bar me out! Wo on you! Wo!

Waiting not, but now with greater haste, she ran down along the pathway toward the next door.

That, too, was sealed. And the next, and the fourth, and all, every one, both on the upper and the lower terrace, all—all were barricaded, even to the great gap made by the landslide.

From within no sound, no reply, no slightest sign that any heard or noticed her. Dumb, mute, passive, invincible rebellion!

In vain she called, commanded, pleaded, explained, entreated. No answer. The white barbarians, all banded against her now, had shut themselves up with their wounded and their dying, to wait their destiny alone.

How many were already dead? How many might yet be saved, who would die without her help? She could not tell. The uncertainty maddened her.

"If they den up, that way," she said, "pestilence may break out among them and all may die! And then what? If I'm left all alone in the wilderness with Gesafam and the boy—what then?"

The thought was too horrible for contemplation. So many blows had crashed home to her soul the past week—even the past few hours—that the girl felt numbed and dazed as in a nightmare.

It was, in must be, all some frightful unreality—Allan's absence, the avalanche, H'yemba's attack, and this widespread, silent defiance of her power.

Only a few days before Allan had been there with her—strong, vigorous, confident.

Authority had been supreme. Labour, content, prosperity had reigned. Health and life and vigor had been everywhere. On the horizon of existence no cloud; none over the sun of progress.

And now, suddenly—annihilation!

With a groan that was a sob, her face drawn and pale, eyes fixed and unseeing, Beatrice turned back up the terrace path, back up the steep, toward the only door still at her command—Hope Villa.

Back toward the only one of those strange Folk still loyal; back toward her child.

Her head felt strangely giddy. The depths at her left hand, below the parapet of stone, seemed to be calling—calling insistently. Before her sight something like a veil was drawn; and yet it was not a veil, but a peculiar haze, now and then intershot with sparkles of pale light.

Through her mind flittered for the first time something like an adequate realization of the vast, abysmal gulf in culture-status still yawning between these barbarians and Allan and her.

"Civilization," she stammered in an odd voice; "why that means—generations!"

All at once she wondered if she were going to faint. A sudden pain had stabbed her temples; a humming had attacked her ears.

She put out her hand against the rock wall of the cliff at the right to steady herself. Her mouth felt hot and very dry.

"I—I must get back home," she said weakly. "I'm not at all well—this morning. Over exertion—"

PEOPLE OFTEN SAY

"How Are We To Know When The Kidneys Are Out Of Order?"

EASIEST THING IN THE WORLD!

The location of the kidneys, close to the small of the back, renders the detection of kidney trouble a simple matter. The note of warning comes from the back. The kidneys become overtaxed and fail to do their work at nature's call.

Backache is the signal sent out by the kidneys the minute they become overtaxed. Those who heed the warning when it first comes, usually have but little trouble.

The danger lies in delay. Doan's Kidney Pills stimulate the action of the kidneys, and enable them to perform their duty perfectly.

Mrs. Greig Murphy, Lower Ship Harbor East, N.S., writes: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills in my family with great success, and don't think there is a better pill for the kidneys. I was very miserable with my back, and could hardly get about. I got a box, and tried them, and found that they were really good, so I took in all about six boxes, and soon found my back cured, and my kidneys as well as ever."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25; for sale at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

TRIBUTE TO GHURKAS BY CROWN PRINCE

Now that some of the Ghurka regiments are on the firing line it is interesting to have a genuine German estimate of those particular fighting men.

Here, at last, is a word of truth from Berlin, written by the Crown Prince himself in the sporting volume he published two years ago under the title, "From My Hunting Day-Book." Describing his tiger hunt in the Ganges Delta, and the necessity of having enthusiastic drivers, he wrote:

"We thought it wise to bring several Ghurka policemen with us for this very purpose. The Ghurkas hail from Nepal on the northeast frontier of India, and in type they resemble the inhabitants of Eastern Asia. They might almost be mistaken for Japanese, and are the best soldiers the English possess in India. They are small, but extraordinarily wiry and tough little people, who fear neither hell nor the devil."

In which case they are hardly likely to fear Germans.

LOYAL PRINCES OF INDIAN EMPIRE

Stirring Patriotism of Men Whom Kaiser Thought Would Rise Against England

The Kaiser, it is said, counted upon an uprising of India's forces when he declared war against Great Britain, for had his spies not told him that the natives were seething with discontent against British rule? Never was a monarch more woefully misled and mistaken, for with one accord the rulers of the native States in India, who number 700 in all, rallied to the defence of the Empire and offered their personal services and the resources of their States for the war.

India sent over 70,000 men to the front, and accompanying these were six Indian princes, who are worth at least $250,000,000. Even the veteran Sir Pertab Singh, the Regent of Jodhpur, would not be denied his right to serve King George, and in spite of his seventy years he went to the front, accompanied by his fifteen-year-old grandson.

Forefathers Were Enemies

The Maharajah of Baroda, who placed his troops and resources at the disposal of the British Government, is one of the most powerful of Indian rulers, as well as one of the wealthiest. His forefathers fought against Britain in the Indian Mutiny, but the Maharajah is proud and eager to be on the British side to-day. He rules over a State larger than Wales, and has an income which is said to be more than $10,000,000 a year.

Another familiar prince is the Maharajah of Mysore, who placed fifty lacs of rupees (about $1,650,000) at the disposal of the Indian Government for expenditure in connection with an Expeditionary Force. His State contains nearly 6,000,000 Hindus, who contribute the flower of the Indian army, and he is one of these Indian rulers entitled to the Imperial salute of twenty-one guns.

The Maharajah of Gwalior, in addition to sharing the expenses of the hospital ship, the idea of which originated with himself and the Begum of Bhopal, offered to place large sums of money at the disposal of the Government of India and to provide horses as remounts. He accompanied the British Expedition to China eleven years ago, and presented on that occasion a hospital ship for the accommodation of the wounded.

Natives Eagerly Contributed

Another potent Indian ruler is the Maharajah of Kashmir. He recently presided at a meeting at Srinagar, his capital, and delivered a stirring speech to 20,000 people, which resulted in the subscription of many thousands of dollars. Kashmir is one of the largest and most prosperous of the Indian States, and noted for its shawl weaving and lacquer work, while its silver and copper work is rapidly rising in importance among the Oriental arts.

Mention should also be made of the Maharajah of Patiala, who also went to the front. Patiala has a splendid record of loyalty behind it, for in 1857, when practically the whole of Hindustan revolted against the British, and the Sikhs were wavering, the Rajah of that day, with only one attendant, rode into the nearest British station and placed at the disposal of the Government not only his fighting men, but the whole of his treasury.

Bad Blood

is the direct and inevitable result of irregular or constipated bowels and clogged-up kidneys and skin. The undigested food and other waste matter which is allowed to accumulate poisons the blood and the whole system. Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills act directly on the bowels, regulating them—on the kidneys, giving them ease and strength to properly filter the blood—and on the skin, opening up the pores. So many employes wished to enlist in one London bank that the men had to draw lots, in order to decide who should go.

Anti-submarine Guns

The first British Dreadnought to carry 6-inch guns behind armor for repelling torpedo craft is the Iron Duke, the fleet flagship of Admiral Sir George Callaghan. These weapons throw a 100-pound projectile and are the largest man-handled guns in the navy.

Danger Signals Warn You of Approaching Paralysis

Slowly and Surely Exhaustion Goes on Until Collapse of the Nerves is the Natural Result.

You may be restless, nervous, irritable and sleepless, but you think there is nothing to be alarmed at. You have no appetite, digestion is impaired, and there is weakness and irregularity of other bodily organs. You feel tired in body and mind, and find that you lack the energy to attend to the daily task.

MRS. ALLAN.

You may not realize that these are the symptoms of nervous prostration and the danger signals which warn you that some form of paralysis is the next step of development.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is the most successful restorative for the nerves that has ever been offered to the public. This has been proven in many thousands of cases similar to the one described in this letter.

Mrs. Thos. Allan, R.F.D., 2, Sombra, Ont., writes:—"Five years ago I suffered a complete breakdown, and frequently had palpitation of the heart. Since that illness I have had dizzy spells, had no power over my limbs (locomotor ataxia) and could not walk straight. At night I would have severe nervous spells, with heart palpitation, and would shake as though I had the ague. I felt improvement after using the first box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and after completing the treatment can now walk, eat and sleep well, have no nervous attacks and do not require heart medicine. I have told several of my neighbors of the splendid results obtained from the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

HUNS IN TRAINING

In China and Africa the Germans Rehearsed For Belgian Campaign

Dr. Louis Livingston Seaman of New York, it will be remembered, cabled to New York from Antwerp an indignant protest against the bombardment of that city by Zeppelins. Dr. Seaman is a well known figure in New York; he figured conspicuously, for instance, in the work of the American Committee for the celebration of the Century of Peace. An English journalist had an interview with Dr. Seaman, part of which may be quoted:

The doctor, said the interview, has a hobby for rushing out to war—officially when his country is engaged, unofficially otherwise. With means enough to pursue his hobby and with a surgical skill which makes him welcome in any hospital, he has seen every war of his generation "from the inside." He came to Antwerp instinctively, and the next day was tending the Zeppelin wounded and working to rouse the United States to a sense of the atrocities of German war methods.

"It is not exactly news to me," he said, "that these Germans are warmad barbarians. I have seen a good deal of them before this. In Potsdam I saw proudly displayed the astronomical instruments which the Germans, under Von Waldersee, stole from Peking. That was a vandal trick against which General Chaffee in China protested at the time. The German general sent his letter back to him without any reply.

"In that Boxer campaign (I was there) the Germans practised on the Chinese the game they are playing now on the Belgians. Their army came when all the real fighting was over. By August 13 there was no more fight left in the Chinese than is so many jack rabbits. The Germans arrived November 20, and for want of any fighting began a policy of systematic murder. They'd send punitive expeditions all round the country, levying on each village they encountered a war tax. If the tax were not paid the village was fired, and the inhabitants fired upon. From accounts which came in to us the native population was in some cases almost exterminated. That was to give the German soldier his taste of blood, to fit him for the work he is doing now in Belgium, and might be doing in England if the luck had gone that way.

"I saw more of the Germans in their colony in East Africa in 1904. I was out there investigating sleeping sickness. The Germans had imposed a most oppressive hut tax on the natives, a tax which could only be paid by six months' forced labor each year; and the natives were stirred up by their priests to revolt. German atrocity in reprisal was something incredible. One day, before my very eyes, the Germans collected 205 of the chief men of a village, assembled all the rest of the inhabitants, including women and children, strung the men up to trees and then fired volleys into their hanging bodies. The firing went on until the bodies were riddled with holes."

Killed After Act of Mercy

A shell exploded in a group of French soldiers and a dozen or more were killed. One man, who had both legs and an arm blown off, implored his superior officer to kill him. The officer put a bullet through the soldier's heart, saying, "It is better, poor devil." The officer opened his mouth to speak again and a bullet struck him in the mouth and killed him

THE STRONG MAN OF SOUTH AFRICA

General Botha Rose From Private to Commander-in-Chief—Always Fair and Broad-minded

The decision of General Louis Botha, Premier of United South Africa, to take command of the South African forces, and fight for the Empire rounds out the career of a remarkable man who has always been loyal to his flag—loyal to Britain as well as loyal to the Boer Republic.

General Botha was born at Greytown, Natal, in 1863, and when the Boer war broke out he enlisted as a private in Kruger's army. He rose to be commander-in-chief of the Boer forces and won historic victories at Colenso and other places.

When in 1910 Great Britain, in accordance with its wise policy of allowing self-government to every colony and dominion in as full measure as possible, formed the Union of South Africa, with the Boers being given absolute freedom of action,

GENERAL LOUIS BOTHA

Botha was elected the first Premier. His position has been a very difficult one. But in every crisis which arose he by strength, wisdom, and tolerance, safeguarded the interests of both Britisth and Boers. He watched the interests of his fellow-countrymen, but recognized that British dominion in South Africa was a fact to be accepted and his generous nature recognized that self-government under British protection and British ideals must be the happiest condition which the Boers could live under.

In 1912 Premier Botha was confronted by an inevitable crisis—a political clash between the parties who had a few years before met in a terrible clash of arms. General Hertzog, the Minister of Justice, and the leader of the Dutch irreconcilibles, started a bitter campaign against the British. Among other things, he objected strenuously to the part South Africa played in helping to maintain the Imperial navy. The Union was then granting $400,000 yearly for that purpose and the Unionists demanded an increase.

Botha and Hertzog finally had an angry quarrel. Botha appealed to his Cabinet, practically all of whom supported him, and he then resigned and was asked by Lord Gladstone, the Governor-General, to form another Cabinet. This he did, with Hertzog left out, and he has been Prime Minister ever since.

Personally General Botha is a very brave and very shrewd man, whose vision is wide enough to perceive the short-comings of the large number of Boers who have not enjoyed the benefits of education and whose views are narrow and bigotted. When he went to King George's coronation he was persuaded to wear knee breeches and the other regalia prescribed for a levee. Later he was made an honorary general in the British army. For those things he was abused by many of the men whom he formerly led with such great courage and skill in the South African war. And in taking his present stand he will be further abused by many of the older generation of Boers. But these old prejudices die, and when they are practically obliterated, as far as it is humanly possible to obliterate such things, the chief credit for bringing peace and prosperity to a happily united, well-governed South Africa, will belong to General Louis Botha.

THE COST IN HUMAN LIVES

More Men Killed in Modern Warfare But Percentage Much Decreased

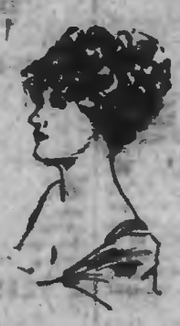
The toll—counted in human lives—of the great struggle against German militarism is going to be terribly heavy. Modern warfare is conducted by such greatly increased numbers that the casualty lists must necessarily be far higher than in bygone days, but it is some consolation to know that the percentage of combatants who fall has decreased considerably as compared with the battles which were fought under more primitive conditions.

Although the loss of over 2,600 killed and wounded sustained by the British Expeditionary Force in its first engagement with the Germans was the largest in a single battle since November 5th, 1854, when 2,357 British soldiers fell at Inkerman, it represented merely a percentage of between two and three per cent., for it is certain that close upon 100,000 British soldiers took part in the fighting. But at Inkerman the British losses were 21 per cent., as only 7,464 men were engaged.

The highest British casualties in any one day's fighting in the South African War were at Paardeberg, where 1,262 men were lost out of 15,000—a loss of 8 per cent. On the the other hand, at Waterloo the actual British losses were 6,962, or 29 per cent.

Despite foreign competition, the large majority of the British Army navigation are of British manufacture.

THE VICTROLA AND THE FAMILY—No. 4



Mother

says she likes the Victrola because the children are so fond of it.

"I always play it for them evenings before bedtime, so now I never have any trouble in getting them home.

"Then the Victrola is such a splendid help to the children's education. Through its teaching they have become familiar with the best works of all the great composers, as interpreted by the best singers and musicians. One of their favorites is Dvorak's beautiful 'Humoresque,' played by Mischa Elman.

"Besides, I have a really selfish reason for liking it. Some of the ladies of my acquaintance used to delight in inviting me to teas and receptions where they played their fine Victor Records, but now that we have a Victrola, I can have just as good music as theirs."

Redpath SUGAR

"I'VE three good reasons, Mother, for buying sugar in these sealed REDPATH Cartons.

"In the first place, I am sure of getting genuine REDPATH. Then, too, I know it is perfectly clean and pure, for it has never been exposed or handled. And the third reason is—that this Carton makes the handiest sugar box you ever saw. I just clip off the corner, and the sugar runs out beautifully as I want it."

"You are lucky, daughter. Ever since I've kept house I have always ordered REDPATH Sugar—and generally got it—but with these original packages you are always sure of the genuine, in perfect condition."

REDPATH Extra Granulated Sugar in 2 and 5 pound Sealed Cartons and in 10, 20, 50 and 100 pound Cloth Bags—is also in cult every home. 79

HOW GIBRALTAR GUARDS THE WAY

Occasionally a Shot Rings Out Warning Ships to Heave to—Eternal Vigilance Exercised

"I do not remember ever seeing a more beautiful sight than Gibraltar as we steamed slowly in," says a correspondent of The New Ezst. "It was just beginning to grow light. Far away over the Sierra Nevada the sky was turning to copper. A searchlight flashed us out, quavered a minute, and then settled down to glare at us steadily. A few minutes afterwards the port authorities were alongside. 'Take down your ensigns, captain, and disconnect your receiver,' shouted the officer in charge, 'and haul down all your flags except your ensign.' And that was our first taste of Gibraltar under war conditions.

"At first when we came in we all rushed to the bulwarks at the sight of an incoming vessel. Was it a British man-of-war? Had she got a German cruiser in tow? It is curious how soon we have all lapsed into a state almost bordering on coma. That nerves are still on the stretch, however, was clear. A covey of inoffensive casks bobbed by a neighboring ship. Germans, thought the officer of the watch, either with their clothes in a bundle on their heads trying to swim ashore, or pushing mines in front of them to blow our ships. A volley of revolver shots rang out, and the casks unearthed bobbed on their inoffensive way.

"Occasionally a distant shot booms from the Rock, a warning to a merchantman to heave to. Sometimes a host of hurried shots ring out together, something supposed to be lurking in the shadow. Otherwise, throughout the night no sound save for the ships' bells all around and perhaps the pant of a launch. The great searchlights on the Rock sweep the horizon incessantly, crossing and recrossing. The glare is so brilliant that if you gaze steadily into it something seems to detach itself from your eye or from the light and float away like a dark rag. Underneath Europa Point lie anchored five captured German merchantmen.

A German merchantman tried to run the gauntlet one night. A blank shot produced no effect, three live shots across her bows were unheeded, and then a minute torpedo boat shot out to bring her in. It is the picture of 'Dignity and Impudence' over again to see one of these spider craft shepherding into port one of these steamers. Based on Gibraltar are a variety of naval craft, and to them the patrolling of the straits is entrusted. Each craft has its regular beat on the eight or nine mile stretch of sea across to the African coast; and woe betide any hostile vessel which, having dared to run the gauntlet of the guns on the Rock tries to break through the thin grey line of sentinels."

COMB SAGE TEA INTO GREY HAIR

Darkens Beautifully and Restores Its Thickness and Lustre at Once

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn grey, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant; remove every bit of dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier ay is to get the ready-to-use tonic, costing about 50 cents a large bottle, at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While wispy, grey, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all grey hairs have disappeared. After another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant and you appear years younger.

HANDLING GREAT GUNS

Machinery Does Most of the Work on Modern Battleships

What are the operations that enter into the discharge of the great guns of a Dreadnought, those terrible 13.5 inch guns that can hurl a 1,250-pound shell a distance of fifteen miles, and penetrate the thickest armor at a distance of 5,000 yards? In the conning tower stand the captain, his navigating officer, a midshipman or two and several other officers and men. The conning tower is protected by 12-inch armor. Above it is another protected chamber, and here are the gunnery lieutenant and half a dozen officers and men. Surrounding them are the range-finders and other instruments essential for marksmanship when the object is far distant. The man at the range-finder, with his eye at the rubber eye pieces, keeps monotonously chanting out the distances as the ship approaches the target. Inside the turrets themselves the men are grouped around their guns. The gun-layers, the men who sight and fire the guns every now and then, twitch little brass handle and the great breeches rise or fall slightly as the sights continue trained upon the target.

A minute or two later, after an order has come through from the control position, the lieutenant in charge of the foremost turret suddenly rips out the order: "Bring both [illegible]!" The men standing by the breeches flick over their small levers. "Right gun ready!" "Left gun ready!" they report in rapid succession. The range, meanwhile, is decreasing rapidly, and about ten seconds later there comes the strident rattling of an electric bell. It is the signal to open fire. The gun-layer holds his breath, sees the cross wires of his telescope cutting the target, and then presses an innocent looking brass thumbpiece. As he does so there is a roar and, with a blaze of orange flame and a pall of brown smoke, a projectile weighing more than half a ton is sailing through the air on its way toward the target. Outside the turret the concussion is terrible, but inside it is barely felt, and the only means the gun's crew have of knowing their weapon has gone off is by the rocking of the turret and the recoil of the gun. Back she slides, with the water whistling and gurgling through the hydraulic valves far below. She stops, and then, as the running-out springs exert their strength, is driven back to the firing position.

The men meanwhile are working like demons. Someone, by moving a small lever which actuates a hydraulic engine, has opened the breech. A cloud of acrid cordite smoke fills the turret, but another man, turning a tap, sends a jet of water spouting into the chamber to extinguish any still-glowing fragments. Everything seems chaos, but everyone knows what to do and in less than 30 seconds we hear a sharp order, "Right gun—load!" A man moves an upright lever and an arrangement looking like a miniature lift climbs into view through the floor. It has come up from the shell-room below laden with the new charge and projectile, and stops dead in the rear of the gun. Reposing in a tray is the shot itself. Another lever is worked and a flexible chain hydraulic rammer, looking like a snake, darts out of its resting-place and pushes the shot before it into the breech of the gun. It is driven home with a dull thud. The rammer is withdrawn, another handle is pulled and two enormous brown cylinders of cordite fall into the tray just vacated by the projectile. They, too, are rammed home, and before we quite realise what has happened the hammer and lift have disappeared, the breech of the gun has been swung home and the great weapon is ready for firing again.

FINDING THE RANGE

Scientific Problem Necessary Before Naval Guns Open Fire

Probably the most important of the instruments employed in naval gunnery is the telemeter or range-finder. The accuracy of the shooting depends wholly upon the accuracy of judging the distance, for in long range shooting the shell does not travel in a straight line, but in a curve. It drops upon the target. Not only is it absolutely essential to get the proper range, but it is of vital importance to get it before the enemy. The range is found by triangulation, and is a mathematical problem worked out rapidly by the experts. The length of the telemeter, which is precisely determined, forms the base of the triangle, of which the point whose distance is to be measured is the apex. An optical arrangement serves to measure the angle at this apex, and a simple formula then gives the distance sought.

This optical arrangement is rather a complicated affair, and important parts of it are two mirrors, but its operations are rather too technical to be described. However, it may be said that the length of the base employed is an important element and that the longer it is the less is the chance of error. A six-foot base is most commonly employed. In the British navy "batteries" of several telemeters are used so connected that the operation of one moves the others and a single reading gives the mean distance.

FIVE MINUTE CURE IF STOMACH IS BAD

"Pape's Diepepsin" is quickest, surest indigestion cure known.

You don't want a slow remedy when your stomach is bad—or an uncertain one—or a harmful one—your stomach is too valuable; you mustn't injure it with drastic drugs.

Pape's Diapepsin is noted for its speed in giving relief; its harmlessness; its certain unfailing action in regulating sick, sour, gassy stomach. Its millions of cures in indigestion, dyspepsia, gastritis and other stomach trouble has made it famous the world over.

Keep this perfect stomach doctor in your home — keep it handy — get a large fifty-cent case from any drug store and then if anyone should eat something which doesn't agree with them, if what they eat lays like lead, ferments and sours and forms gas; causes headache, dizziness and nausea; eructations of acid and undigested food—remember as soon as Pape's Diepepsin comes in contact with the stomach all such distress vanishes. Its promptness, certainty and ease in overcoming the worst stomach disorders is a revelation to those who try it.

It is believed among the troops in France that bullets fired vertically upwards at aircraft never descend as bullets, the intense and prolonged friction of their flight to the limit of the trajectory and the subsequent descent of what is left of them, completely dissipating them into vapor. Thousands of bullets have been fired at aircraft, but none has been positively known to descend.

TO CHECK A COLD

It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine keep the cough loose, allay the inflammation, and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs S. E. Moore, Shortread, B.C., writes: "I wish to state my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it cured a cold which a friend said would soon put me in the grave."

GATHERING WAR NEWS

How the American Papers Are Supplied—Only One Man at Front

The Boston News Bureau says that the European war will increase the expense of foreign news gathering to an unprecedented figure, and in an ordinary year it costs the Associated Press the quite respectable sum of about $200,000 to supply its 400 customers in the United States and Cuba.

The war news reaches the United States chiefly through the medium of special correspondents of the London newspapers with whom arrangements have been made by New York dailies. This is supplemented by official statements from both the British and French War Offices.

In New York city all the general morning dailies take The Associated Press except The Sun, which operates its own news service and supplies the New York Commercial and out of town papers. In order to get a more complete service, however, several of the New York dailies have arranged with the London papers for their service from special field correspondents. The New York papers in turn syndicate this special service to other papers throughout the country.

The only American correspondent to witness the movement of German troops has been Richard Harding Davis, who was one of the few newspaper men to see the invading army enter Brussels.

A most signal honor was given Frederick Palmer, as he is the only American correspondent to accompany the British army. He represents all of the American newspapers, his despatches being given without favor to the Associated Press, United Press, International News Service and New York Sun Service. It required the services of the State Department at Washington to arrange with the British War Office for the presence of an American press representative, and Palmer was chosen by a conference of the association chiefs.

That war correspondents get fabulous salaries seems the general opinion. An old timer expresses the belief that Palmer will get at least $20,000 for his services in addition to unlimited expenses.

War Among Animals

Warfare and enmity are not confined to human beings. Among animals battles are continually raging, the results of instinctive or racial differences which, if we could analyse them, might compare with the emotions and feelings in our own breasts.

Moles, clumsy and almost blind, become perfect demons when they quarrel. No one knows what they quarrel about, but when they once start fighting one has to die. They will keep on in the presence of any number of spectators, hanging on to each other like bulldogs, and burying their enormously strong teeth in one another's flesh with the utmost fury.

Hedgehogs, another type of the quiet, inoffensive-looking animal, not only fight, but always to the death, and when one is killed, the other generally devours him. Hares, on the other hand, are proverbially the most timid of creatures, yet a fight between two hares is a ludicrous sight, as they skip and jump over each other. But a blow from the hind legs of a hare is no joke to his opponent.—London "Answers."

Great Britain possesses about five million men between the ages of nineteen and thirty-five.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

Nov. 8, 1914.

(Copyright, 1914, by Rev. T. S. Linscott, D.D.)

Sowing and Reaping. (World's Temperance Sunday.) Gal. v:1-10.

Golden Text —Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. Gal. vi:7.

1. Verse 1—What sin, if any, is sufficiently grievous to turn a minister or member out of the church if genuine sorrow is expressed for the sin?

2. Has a church any Christian right to depose any person from its membership, no matter what the sin, until the offender has been striven with and found to be obdurate? Why?

3. If a brother Christian has done us personally a grievous wrong, and has made no apology, what would Christ have us to do in the circumstances?

4. What is our duty, as Christians, to the liquor seller?

5. Verse 2—What are the burdens of the average man?

6. To what extent are we to bear one another's burden, and how can it best be done?

7. What is the chief "burden" to the community of the liquor traffic?

8. How may we best remove the "burden" of strong drink from the community?

9. Verse 3—What is true humility?

10. How much credit is due for us for our life, health, mental, or other ability, early environment, and our present providential circumstances?

11. Verse 4—Is it possible to live and act so as to have constant "rejoicing" in our own hearts at the result? Give your reasons.

12. Is it right or wrong, and why, to hanker for the appreciation or praise of our fellows?

13. Which is the happier man, and why, of two who always do their best to please God, one caring nothing for human appreciation, and the other who longs for it?

14. Verse 5—In what sense must every man bear his own burden, when compared with the invitation to cast our burden on the Lord?

15. What burden does a drinking man carry that, until he quits drinking, God will not relieve him of?

16. Verse 6—Is it possible for a Christian to retain the favour of God if he does not tell his experience to others? Why?

17. Would you say, or not, and why, that it is our duty, to tell the pastor, or other Christian teacher, if we have been helped by his teaching?

18. Verses 7-8—Would you say, or not, and why, that our every action is of the nature of seed, which we may expect will yield us fruit of the same kind?

19. What is the legitimate and natural fruit of the liquor trade?

20. What are the assured results of being led by the Holy Spirit?

21. Verse 9—If the cause of temperance advances as much during the next twenty, as during the last twenty years, what will be the result?

22. Verse 10.—What should be the master passion of every good man?

Lesson for Sunday, Nov. 15, 1914 Jesus and Peter. Mark xiv:27-31, 53-54, 66-72.

The great sources of mischief from eating are three: Quantity, frequency, rapidity; and from these come the horrible dyspepsias which make of human life a burden, a torture, a living death.

OPENS UP NOSTRILS, CLEARS HEAD, ENDS COLDS OR CATARRH AT ONCE

Instantly Relieves Swollen, Inflamed Nose, Head, Throat—You Breathe Freely — Dull Headache Goes — Nasty Discharge Stops.

Try "Ely's Cream Balm."

Get a small bottle anyway, just to try it—Apply a little in the nostrils and instantly your clogged nose and stopped-up air passages of the head will open; you will breathe freely; dullness and headache disappear. By morning the catarrh, cold-in-head, catarrhal sore throat will be gone.

End such misery now! Get the small bottle of "Ely's Cream Balm" at any drug store. This sweet, fragrant balm dissolves by the heat of the nostrils; penetrates and heals the inflamed, swollen membrane which lines the nose, head and throat; clears the air passages; stops nasty discharges and a feeling of cleansing, soothing relief comes immediately.

Don't lay awake to-night struggling for breath, with head stuffed; nostrils closed, hawking and blowing. Catarrh or a cold, with its running nose, foul mucous dropping into the throat, and raw dryness is distressing but truly needless.

Put your faith — just once — in "Ely's Cream Balm" and your cold or catarrh will surely disappear.

COWANS PERFECTION COCOA

Cowan's Cocoa is good any time——for a little "pick-me-up" when you feel tired or half hungry nothing can be more stimulating and healthful.

LUCILLE LOVE

THE GIRL of MYSTERY

BY THE

"MASTER PEN"

Copyright 1914. All moving picture rights reserved by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, which is now exhibiting this production in leading theatres. Infringements will be vigorously prosecuted.

PROLOGUE.

In print, as on the moving picture screen, "Lucille Love" is a thrilling, rapid fire story. It takes its heroine, a young woman of charm and beauty, into the strangest of situations. There she braves the perils of sea and land for the sake of her love. As the situations unfold, with the swiftness and ease of the moving picture, the reader finds himself following, as he would the living movements of the reel, the fortunes of Lucille, her foe, Loubeque, the international spy, amid scenes of shipwreck and the wildness of nature, on sea, among the islands of the cannibals and elsewhere.

But Lucille and her arch foe are not the only two in the picture and story whose movements are followed with the tribute of intense interest. The old general, Lucille's father; her lover, Lieutenant Gibson; the chief of the savages and others all stand out distinctly in the panorama of picture and story.

CHAPTER I.

The Work of a Spy.

HE was swift; he was certain; he was sure.

Faintly sweet the tantalising perfume lingered in the room, and the rustle of Lucille Love's skirts seemed still to sound against the walls of the tiny room which General Sumpter Love used as his private office; the echo of Lieutenant Gibson's pleading tones had not departed when the door leading to the servant's quarters moved.

A cautious fraction of an inch at a time, a sound so faint that nothing lived between it and silence succeeded the departure of the general's aid and the girl he loves, the girl he means to marry. As the butler's face framed itself on the threshold the door was opened that led to the ballroom, a burst of music vibrated there, then all was silence. The butler closed the door swiftly behind him and glided across the floor, stopping before the safe, his dexterous fingers manipulating the knobs with a careless certainty that spoke of the master cracksman, his face against the cold steel, his ears fairly peaked with the tensity of his listening for the click of falling tumblers. His expression betrayed no anxiety. He knew his worth, knew the pregnability of the safe in which his master placed so great confidence and to which he had consigned the papers and orders he had just received from Washington until the ball was over and he had time to study the instructions at his leisure.

The cracksman heaved a sigh of relief as his sensitive finger tips told him the last tumbler had fallen. The great iron door swung open to his tug.

He was swift; he was certain; he was sure. And a paper was clutched. His fingers fluttered like little white birds, drifting among the general's papers with a certitude that bespoke great familiarity. With a sigh of relief he stared at the sealed packet he had just seen the army officer receive and place there. The butler thrust it into his pocket, drawing out a package of bank notes and putting it in the tiny vault where the papers had been. The door closed softly, the knobs whirring under the man's touch.

Again he waited, listening, listening. The vibration of the dancer's feet continued for a second, the strains of music died. With the noiseless glide of a panther the butler slipped across the floor and closed the door behind him.

Not one motion had been wasted. For months he had served in his menial capacity for this one opportunity.

Lucille Love.

"It's about Dick's promotion, dad."

For months to come he would continue to serve in order that no suspicion might rest upon him.

Ten minutes later Thompson, alias Tommy the Dude, alias "Chi" Tom and wanted for just such jobs in many police departments of the world, glided out the rear of the house, scurrying across the moon splashed parade ground and losing himself in devious windings among the officers' homes upon the military reservation. Slipping down a narrow side street, lined with disreputable houses that leaned at drunken angles toward one another, the filthy windows winking blearily to their neighbors, he paused before the largest of these places. His hand reached toward the bell pull. From some distant part of the house came back an echo. Slowly, very slowly, the door swung open, swallowing up the figure of the thief-butler. And there the butler and his employer made their plans.

* * * * * * *

General Sumpter Love, U. S. A., smiled tolerantly to himself as he overheard the low voices of his aid and Lucille coming from the little cosy corner in which the young lieutenant had hidden his sweetheart away from the avid dancers who would have taken her away from him. Then he sighed heavily as he realized he stood on the threshold of another change; that the courtship of his aid had finally been successful and another household would soon be occupied in Officers' row, leaving him alone in this great house.

He wondered if all fathers felt this way, wondered if he could gladly give his daughter to another man and be happy watching that other remold her world. And the time was so short. That very boat in the harbor now might bear the senate's confirmation of young Gibson's promotion to the rank and pay of captain. The two men had agreed that the marriage should wait on that, and the general had to admit that the aid had lived up to his word. But, then, Gibson always did that.

Again the general shook his shoulders, striding briskly to his private office. Only in work could he get relief from these fits of depression. And there was always work to be done, for the little brown people loved their fighting, were never satisfied with peace and quiet. He pressed the annunciator on his desk, curtly commanding the soldier who responded to send Lieutenant Gibson to him.

General Love permitted a smile to play about the corners of his stern mouth as the rustle of a woman's skirt reached his ears simultaneously with the click of his aid's boots. Came a brief whispered conversation outside the door, then the aid stood upon the threshold at attention, Lucille hiding behind him in an attitude of mock timidity. The old man bit his mustache viciously, then smiled broadly.

"Well," he demanded, fumbling among the papers that littered his desk, "what have you got to say for yourself, young woman?"

Lucille slipped across the floor, twining a pair of white arms about her father's neck, the soft velvet of her cheek smoothing his brown, leathery one. It was the way she had coaxed him when a child, the way she had never overlearned or known to fail.

"It's about Dick's promotion, dad," she whispered. "It hasn't come on the Empress, and that means wait at least another month. If there was any chance of the senate's failing to confirm it we wouldn't bother you, but a month is such a long time, and—and Dick has some money now"—

"Yes, yes, yes," the general retorted gruffly, a twinkle in his eye that belied the tone. "But from what I've seen tonight and the last week since Harley started his aeroplane manoeuvers I thought there might be some change in your plans."

Lucille flushed prettily, her eyes flashing a mocking smile at the stalwart young officer, who stood now with her, holding her hand.

"Mr. Harley's a very nice man," she defended, "even if Dick does get jealous. Besides, a girl has to be amused somehow when busy old generals keep their officers working all day and night."

"I'll think it over, dear," the general said kindly, "immediately I get through with the orders that came tonight. Lieutenant," he said briskly, "you put the orders and papers from Washington in the safe as I told you? Will you get them for me?"

The aid flushed a bit, his fingers playing at the gold strap at his side.

"Why—why, general," he stammered, "I left the combination memorandum in my room, Lucille was waiting and"—

"Get it!" snapped the old man. The slightest infraction of military system touched his heart to the raw.

He studied his aid curiously when he returned and began fumbling with the knobs of the safe. The door opened, and the lieutenant's hand automatically reached inside toward the place where he had put the packet.

The telephone rang and the spy stiffened in his chair.

An expression of incredulous dismay was upon his face as he drew out a bundle of banknotes.

"Why, I don't remember these!" he cried. Then with an expression of relief, "You have already been here, sir?"

"No." General Love's tone was peremptory, crackling. He did not relish delay of any sort. "Come, come—the papers I gave you, lieutenant."

"General, they are—are—there."

"Not there!" Like the crackling of fire in dry twigs was the old man's voice. "Not there, sir! Then perhaps they, too, may be in your room."

"No, sir. I distinctly recall placing them in the order box. There was no money there at the time."

But two men had access to that safe; but two men knew of the arrival of the orders and papers. General Love suddenly rose, the chair scraping rasp-ingly upon the tense silence.

"Lieutenant Gibson," he began, his voice rivaling the sound of the scraping chair, "Lucille mentioned a moment ago that you had suddenly acquired sufficient money to justify an immediate marriage."

"Yes, sir. A legacy"—

General Love snorted his disbelief.

"Leaving the combination of this safe, with secrets which are invaluable to the United States, with secrets that would be of untold value to the enemies of the United States, with secrets that might mean the sacrifice of our territory, but countless lives—does that not strike you as strange, not to say suspicious, that such a precious thing should be left in your room, lieutenant?" The tones of the general's voice had risen, a finger vibrating through every syllable. "The papers, Lieutenant Gibson—immediately! This is your last chance."

"I placed them in the safe, and they are not there now, sir." The tones were quiet, cold, determined.

"You will go to your quarters, sir, and consider yourself under arrest. The humiliation of an escort will be spared you. However, there will be a guard about the place."

A faint little cry of protest, "Oh, father!" sounded clear and distinct against the dead silence. The young man's hand fell from salute as he stepped swiftly toward his sweetheart. General Love's arm reached out and drew the sobbing girl to him, his left hand outstretched as though the mere touch of his aid would be defiling. Gibson halted in his tracks. Again his arm rose stiffly in salute; then without a word he turned, his steps falling fainter and fainter upon the ears of the pair who listened with broken hearts.

BAD INDIGESTION

FOR OVER 10 YEARS.

ALMOST DESPAIRED OF EVER GETTING WELL.

Indigestion is one of the worst forms of stomach trouble. The stomach becomes upset and you have a raw, debilitating feeling in it. Little wonder you find that you must get rid of that nasty, bilious, burning sensation. It is not necessary for you to be troubled with indigestion if you will only try that old and well-known remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters, which is a combination of nature's best known roots, herbs and barks for the cure of all stomach and blood troubles.

Mrs. Mary MacKay, Hunter's Mountain, N.S., writes: "I was troubled with indigestion for more than ten years. I tried several doctors' medicines claiming the power to cure, but all without success. Having heard of the many cures effected by Burdock Blood Bitters, I decided to give it a trial. After taking two bottles I was completely cured. My appetite which was very poor is now good, and I can eat most everything without any disagreeable feelings.

I can strongly recommend B.B.B. to anyone suffering from indigestion."

B.B.B. is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

HOLY PLACES ARE IMMUNE.

Britain Guarantees Protection for Jeddah and Other Arabian Shrines.

LONDON, Nov. 5—The report current in London last night that the British cruiser Minerva had bombarded the Arabian seaport of Jeddah on the Red Sea is devoid of foundation. The Minerva was not within 600 miles of the place.

On issuing this denial to-day the London official press bureau publishes the text of a proclamation circulated in India pledging the British Government not to molest the holy places in Arabia.

The proclamation points out that no question of a religious character is involved by the war.

The holy places and shrines in Arabia, including Mesopotamia and Jeddah, will be immune from attack or molestation by British naval and military forces so long as there is no interference with the pilgrims from India. The governments of France and Russia have given similar assurances.

CLARK'S

SOUPS

It is variety that tempts to excess; few will err as to quantity who will eat very slowly. Take no more than a quarter of a pint of warm drink, with a piece of cold, stale bread and butter, one kind of meat and one vegetable, or one kind of fruit. This is the only safe rule of general application, and allows all to eat as much as they want.

A JAPANESE FLEET TO SAVE CANADA'S COAST?

Three Very Powerful Ships That May Reinforce British Columbia From Japanese

FROM FOE'S CRUISERS

OTTAWA, Ont., Nov. 5—No official confirmation of the German story of the naval disaster to the British off the Chilean coast has been received at the naval service department here. Neither has any word been received from the British cruiser Good Hope. If she has been damaged, as reported from Valparaiso it is believed here that she would make every attempt to reach a British port.

The news that the British battle cruiser Canopus is on the Pacific has somewhat reassured the officials here. If the story from Valparaiso proved true there are only two British cruisers left on the Pacific to cope with the German flying fleet. These are the Canopus and the Newcastle. The Newcastle is by no means capable of coping with the Scharnhorst or the Gneisenau. She is a vessel of 4,800 tons, and carries two six-inch guns and 10 four-inch guns. She is a match for the light cruisers of the German fleet, but would stand little chance against the eight-inch highly modern batteries of the larger vessels.

Canopus a Powerful Vessel.

The Canopus, on the other hand, has guns of a superior calibre to those of the German ships. She carries four twelve-inch and 12 six-inch guns, and has a speed of 19 knots. The Rainbow, the Canadian cruiser, mounts two six-inch guns and six 4-7 inchers, and is a match for either of the German light cruisers.

It is the presence of at least three Japanese cruisers in the West Pacific which should reassure Canadian coast cities. The Japanese battle cruiser Kongo and Hizen (formerly the Russian Retvizan), were known to be near Honolulu The Kongo is a formidable battleship of 27,500 tons, carries a complement of 1,100 men, and mounts eight 14-inch guns, sixteen six-inch, and 21-inch torpedo tubes, eight submerged. She is tremendously superior in armament to the Scharnhorst or Gneisenau. She has a speed of 27 knots.

Too Fast for Germans

It would be impossible for the German ships either to run from her or to fight against her. The Hizen is of 12,700 tons, carries four 12-inch guns and 12 six-inchers, and has a speed of 18 knots The Idsumo, another Japanese cruiser known to be on the Pacific, has four eight-inch guns and 14 six-inch guns and a speed of 21 knots.

It will be seen that if the German fleet runs foul of the Japanese in the Pacific there will be none left of the former to carry the tale to Valparaiso

AVIATOR BURNED TO DEATH IN MIDAIR

ALDERSHOT, England, Nov. 5. — Aviator Busk of the aircraft staff was burned to death in midair to day when the biplane which he was testing caught fire.

While about 1,000 feet above the ground the biplane suddenly burst into flames. Busk tried to descend by gliding. He continued this for nearly a mile, the aircraft meanwhile blazing furiously. The aviator was burned to death before the machine struck the ground.

A WONDER WORKER

"It heals like magic" is a favourite exclamation when Dr. Chase's Ointment is used. It works quickly, stops all itching at once, cures piles in a single night. For eczema, itch rheum, barbers' itch, skin irritations or eruptions, it is a most satisfactory treatment. Being antiseptic, it prevents blood poisoning.

A Hard Meal To Digest

Is Quickly Digested by the Taking of a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet After It Is Over.

Corn on the cob is hard to digest, for some folk, but with a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet it readily is disposed of by the stomach and digestive apparatus.

Don't drug your stomach. Give it just what it needs at the very moment it needs it. Here is the way a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet acts:

Ma—"I can eat corn now and feel O.K. A Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet will quickly digest it."

One takes a tablet just after the meal is completed. It is taken into the mouth like food; is mixed with the saliva swallowed moist and partially dissolved. It goes into the stomach and is there mixed with the stomach juices which are composed of acids and alkalies.

A Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet reinforces these juices. It quickly digests the elements which such weakened juices cannot digest.

After a while the stomach passes the meal partially digested to the intestines, where it goes through another stage of digestion. Here, as in the stomach, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets strengthen the juices of digestion and complete the work of giving the body the benefit of the meal.

There is nothing harmful in these tablets. Only nature substances which the body lacks are supplied. In a short time the blood and digestive juices are given the power they lack. Man can digest any food without injury and the entire health of the body is increased. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold wherever drugs are sold, price 50 cents a box. Anyone wishing a free trial of these tablets please address F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich., and a small sample package will be mailed free.

WEEKLY MARKET PRICES OF HIDES

Toronto, Nov. 4, 1914.

Beefhides — Continue strong, and the outlook is favourable for a good market for some time to come, owing to the large orders being placed by the different governments for leather products for war purposes. The Pittsburg stock yards have been closed and no shipments of cattle are allowed to be made from the Chicago stock yards by the United States Government owing to the discovery of many cases of the dreaded foot and mouth disease. City butcher hides flat, 16½c per lb.; country hides, flat, cured, 16 to 17c per lb.; part cured, 15 to 16c per lb.

Calfskins—Are not as strong as other classes of hide stock, receipts are being absorbed at current quotations. City skins green, flat, 16c; country, cured, 17 to 18½c; part cured, 16½c, according to condition and take off; deacons or bob clag, 90c to $1.20 each.

Horsehides—Are steady but quiet. City take off, $4.50 to $4.75; country take off, No. 1, $4.00 to $4.50; No. 2, $3.50 to $3.50.

Sheepskins—Have advanced a little for late take off, as the wool on the fleece is heavier. City lambskins, pelts or shearlings, 75c to $1.25 each; country lambskins or shearlings, 50c to $1.10.

Wool—Is moving slowly, manufacturers only buying to fill orders. Washed combing fleece (coarse), 28 to 30c; washed clothing fleece (fine), 30 to 31c; washed rejections, (burry, chaffy, etc.), 20 to 24c; unwashd fleece combing (coarse), 18 to 20c; unwashed fleece clothing (fine), 21 to 23c.

Tallow—Is unchanged, the lower grades being neglected. City rendered solid in barrels, 6 to 6½c; country stock, solid in barrels, No. 1, 6 to 6¼c; No. 2, 5½ to 6c; cake, No. 1, 6½ to 7c; No. 2, 5½ to 6c.

MOTHER! IS CHILD'S STOMACH SOUR, SICK?

If Cross, Feverish, Constipated, Give "California Syrup of Figs."

Don't scold your fretful, peevish child. See if tongue is coated; this is a sure sign its little stomach, liver and bowels are clogged with sour waste.

When babies, pale, feverish, full of cold, breath bad, throat sore, doesn't eat, sleep or act naturally, has stomach-ache, indigestion, diarrhoea, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul waste, the sour bile and fermenting food passes out of the bowels and you have a well and playful child again. Children thus harmless "fruit laxative," and mothers can rest easy after giving it, because it never fails to make their little "insides" clean and sweet.

Keep it handy, Mother! A little given to-day saves a sick child to-morrow, but get the genuine. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Remember there are counterfeits sold here, so surely look and see that yours is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." Hand back with contempt any other fig syrup.

GRAPHIC PICTURE OF FIGHTING NEAR RHEIMS

French Drive Enemy Back at the End of Heavy Artillery Duel—Joffre's Organization Comes Up to the Much Vaunted German Military Machine

Stirring is the word picture of the battle as described in the Figaro by Robert de Lesseau, who, from the French line, witnessed much of the fighting around Rheims. The battle itself, the wonderful organization of the French army—which, according to the description seems to come up to the much vaunted German military machine — the scenes of horror surrounding the field; all are brought out in pitiless detail.

"We pass through undulating vineyards," he says, "with the grapes still hanging, untouched. Here and there are vestiges of trenches where they fought two weeks ago. The smiling landscape is marred by an odour — horrid, heavy and disgusting, that stops our breath. Man have fallen there and are slowing rotting under the entanglement of vines and wire in which they are hidden. The sun is just rising.

"On the northern side (of Rheims) and the Pommery cellars the shells are raining. We can see their burst clearly. From the west comes the unnerving noise of machine guns. We oblique to the left and gain the summit of a hill which overlooks the village of Ludes.

"From this point we dominate the most vast, the most majestic of battlefields. The rearmost French batteries are aligned but a few hundred metres from us. We can see clearly the fine of the enemy's guns. The noise is overwhelming. We distinguish the higher keyed dry bark of our 'seventy-fives' from the heavier sound of the large calibre pieces which are the bass notes of this infernal orchestra.

Siege Guns Bar Progress.

"From time to time an explosion deeper, more terrible, dominates the noise. It is one of the great German howitzers which were intended for the siege of Paris, and which have been placed in position on the heights of Berru and Nogent-l'Abbesse, the positions which dominate the valley and which arrest our progress. This morning the artillery duel is particularly ferocious. We can see it in all its terrible grandeur.

"From the woods, from every clump of trees, spit the flames of the guns or puffs of smoke of bursting shells. Here and there flames flicker—farm houses or mills have caught fire. The French battery near us, hidden by a curtain of trees, bellows incessantly, artillerymen serving the four guns with an almost mechanical regularity. German shells are bursting in front of them, but their range is a bit short and the guns are untouched.

"To the right the park and chateau of Romont has been bombarded by the heavy German artillery, pointed at the Red Cross flag floating from the chateau, and which the barbarians have made their objective point. Our heavy artillery has intervened and has ended this shelling. La Pompelle is the next target for the enemy. This fort, taken, lost, retaken, fights heroically. The company defending it has lost all its officers but a sub-lieutenant, whom we were to find that night in a field hospital wounded. He had received the order, 'Fight to the last man; die, but do not retire.' He and his men obeyed until he was wounded, then a sergeant took his place and the remnants of the company held out until reinforcements came up.

Creep Forward Under Fire.

"Our infantrymen attempted to gain possession of the canal. Already they have lost many. They occupy the trenches on this side abandoned by the Germans. We can see them advancing by rushes, each unit, little groups of red and blue, dashing forward from cover to cover. For hours, terrible hours, we watch this combat, where thousands of men, half hidden, almost invisible, in the woods, the trenches and behind hillocks, creep on, all with but one object in view—to advance. The noble sacrifice of each one for the victory of all lies in it something both brutal and sublime at the same time.

"Immediately in the rear of the firing line we gain an impression absolutely different; an impression of intelligence, of activity, nervous and reasoning, of perfect order, which permits the incessant supplying of the firing line. From the front to the revictualling parks, to the field ambulances, to the brigade, division and army corps headquarters, there is a perpetual movement like nothing else than a giant ant heap; a movement wonderfully rapid, exact, methodical; a coming and going of men on foot, on bicycles, on horseback and in automobiles; of waggons and caissons. I see an artillery captain ask for ammunition and receive it ten minutes later. No anxiety, no delay. Every one seems to know his work and how to do it.

"News comes that our troops in that little wood over there are suffering heavily; at once three ambulances gallop over. Four caissons hurry along a crossroad. They are carrying ammunition for an advanced battery, and are followed by a dozen horses, which four drivers are bringing up to replace the battery horses that have been killed. In every direction orderlies are hurrying on foot, on bicycles, on motorcycles. It is all carried out with a rapidity and order that never degenerates into confusion. And this great chain of communicataion is prolonged far, far to the rear to other reserves again, more vast. One stands stupefied, astounded by the intelligence which has foreseen all this, which has left nothing overlooked, nothing undone.

Silence Enemy's Guns.

"The exigencies of the modern battle—the maximum of audacity on the first line, supported by the maximum of prudence on the second line—have been reached.

"And now the village of Prunay is the scene of action. Most of its houses are in flames, the shells exploding over it and the adjoining woods. And our artillery fire increases in answer. Faster and faster the gunners work; the boomering of the shots is merged into one great roar. Reserve caissons come dashing up to all the batteries. The artillery fire culminates in one great burst from hundreds of guns, then gradually drops again. The enemy's guns have been silenced. Far off we see some of his batteries hurrying away in disorder. Our line goes forward!

Now one realises what heroism, self-sacrifice and beauty is hidden by the trite little phrase of the official bulletins: 'Yesterday we made progress in the vicinity of ——.' We will never read one again without a thrill.

"The line advances; Prunay is taken. Now the railroad is the next objective. The artillery, in new positions, opens fire again. Our gallant infantry under its cover, sweeps up suddenly and the red and blue lines are over the railroad line. But behind them the fields are dotted with sprawling bodies and long lines of wounded are streaming to the rear. It does not matter; the line has been taken.

Fire on Hostile Aeroplane.

"The next objective is the long white road, that ribbon that is such a good target for the German heavy artillery from Nogent-l'Abbesse. Once more the batteries take position, once more their guns roar, once more the long lines of red and blue creep forward, bit by bit. The sun is going down. The flames from the cannon mouths gleam deeper. From near us comes a startling outburst of small arms fire. A reserve company is firing at a Taube that is flying high above our heads. It is their hour for reconnoitering, and our men watch for them. Whenever a German aeroplane makes a figure eight in the air the German guns open shell fire on the spot below it a few moments later. It is their signal. The aeroplane turns and makes its way back to the enemy's lines, untouched, alas!

"Night falls; a starry, balmy night, during which no one should fight, no one should die. Far off the battle is still going on, in the east near Chalons, in the west toward Soissons. The shadows bring no lull. The German searchlights commence to scour the horizon. Coming through the vines under the mill of Verzenay we can see simply through the dusk little black spots, thousands of men, sliding and running. They are the Senegalese, who will be hurled at the German positions at dawn. They are already massing by section, under cover of a green curtain of poplars.

"We take the road back to Epernay, the road that is filled with wounded. Some of them, slightly injured, are gossiping among themselves of the incidents of the day. From them we learn some blood-stirring details; of the awful fight at the canal, where our men came tumbling down the bank and into the water, to come to gripes with the enemy on the other side; of how the zouaves, discovering a German battery sheltered in a dry dock, managed to open the gate, flooding the lock and drowning the gunners like rats; of a sergeant gunner who served alone the guns of his battery when all the crews had been killed; of all the little details that make up the glory of the day.

"The moon comes up over the trees; a great freshness comes into the night air; the high branches extend peacefully over us. But behind us, inexorably, the battle goes on.

DANDRUFF SOON RUINS THE HAIR

Makes It Lifeless, Dull, Dry, Brittle and Thin.

Girls—if you want plenty of thick, beautiful, glossy, silky hair, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for it will starve your hair and ruin it if you don't.

It doesn't do much good to try to brush or wash it out. The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop, and your hair will be silky, fluffy, lustrous, soft, and look and feel a hundred times better. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and four ounces is all you will need, no matter how much dandruff you have. This simple remedy never fails.

NEW STYLE SEA WARFARE.

Floating Mine Likened to Burglar and Garroter.

LONDON, Nov. 5.—The naval correspondent of the London Times says:

"A new phase of naval warfare is the blockade by submarine and mine. This is apparently what Admiral von Tirpitz is driving at. Seemingly it was hoped by mining in the North Sea to kill trade on the east coast, and now that this has not succeeded, the same game is being played in the Atlantic.

"The Admiral has no compunction about placing his mines where one of them may catch a big American liner with her hundreds of passengers, innocent people with no concern whatever in the war. It is quite sufficient that such vessel is making for a British port. And so with all other neutrals, the captains of the commanding officers save the crews of the merchant ships they sink, but the mines which are drifting about in the North Channel make no distinction between British man-of-war and foreign merchantmen. They will slay without discrimination.

"This is the new phase of naval warfare, something on the plane of the garroter or armed burglar, or the pirate who made his captives walk the plank."

Germans Have Been Driven Back in the Argonne Region

GERMAN SITUATION SHOWS NO CHANGE

BAYONET CHARGES GAIN GROUND FOR THE FRENCH IN THE ARGONNE REGION

The General Situation is Unchanged Says Official Communique--Fighting Continues With Extreme Violence Between Dixmunde, the Lys and the Somme, with Alternate Losses and Gains For Each Side.

GERMANS BRING UP MORE GUNS

Examiner Special:

PARIS, November 6. — The French have again resorted to a series of bayonet charges to check the German advance in the Argonne region. As a result they have been able to press the enemy still further back, according to this afternoon's official statement. The general situation in the north is unchanged. The fighting continues with extreme violence between Dixmunde, the Lys and the Somme. The Germans continue their efforts to blast and hack a way through to the coast but, although there have been gains and losses at several points, the general battle line remains about the same. The Germans have brought up additional guns and are subjecting Arras to a violent bombardment, but so far without dislodging the Anglo-French force there.

PARIS, November 6.—Despite the declaration in to-day's official statement that the situation in the north is unchanged, there is plenty of evidence that from the standpoint of the allies material gains are being made.

The Belgians now control both banks of the Yser and have mounted guns which will absolutely prevent the Germans using boats in the flooded area.

The French are pushing the Germans back on Lille. A combined force has held Arras, and again forced the enemy back from Armentieres, and well to the north of Lille. A combined war fleet is again bombarding the German positions in the vicinity of Ostend. An attempt by greatly strengthened German forces to take the offensive in the Argonnes has been repulsed with heavy losses in a series of brilliant French bayonet charges.

Officials at the military headquarters here say that the situation to-day resembles that prevailing when the Germans began their retreat from the Marne. The allies are everywhere either on offensive or holding their present lines. Where the Germans were able to make gains in the fighting up to November 1st, they have now been forced to surrender that advantage.

RUSSIAN ARMY NEEDS GREATER NUMBER OF ARTILLERY PIECES

GENEVA, Nov. 4.—Cannon is the feature which minimizes the effectiveness of the enormous numbers of men Russia is able to throw into the field. So says a Russian Colonel, now living in retirement here.

"An army must have a quantum of cannon in proportion to its force of infantry," the Colonel told me.

Mr. Bianconi, the famous geographer, said recently the Russian armies opposed to the Austrians and Germans on the outbreak of the war, i.e., on August 1st, numbered about 800,000; on August 10th this army had increased to 1,200,000, and by September 15th, another million fighting men was added. From say November 1st Russia can count on an army in the field of 5,000,000, this number being kept up by reinforcements as killed and wounded fall out of the ranks.

"Yes it is true the resources of Russia as regards men are practically inexhaustible," commented the Colonel. "She could, if the occasion arose, double or even triple the number of effectives given by Mr. Bianconi. But these men could only be utilised as reserves, and would be sent to the front as the need for their services arose, to make good losses in battle. Each of these army corps would have to be armed with the minimum number of guns, otherwise they could not fulfill the task assigned to them.

"As it is the Russian artillery is numerically as well as technically superior to that of the Austrians, but numerically at any rate, it is inferior to that of the Germans. It, therefore, rests with us only to put into action at the present time, such a number of troops as will be in due proportion to the number of guns they can carry.

"Another point," said the Colonel in conclusion, "is the necessity of at least double the number of officers to properly command and control such a vast mass of men."

Interest In The Big Bout

There is great interest over Saturday night's wrestling bout between Andy Gibson of Toronto and Mr. Hardy, and the probabilities are that a big crowd will see the two clash in a bout to a finish. Both men are in good shape.

P.C. DOWNS NOW AN INSTRUCTIONAL OFFICER

P. C. Jas. Reid of the local Police Force, has received a card from Sgt. Downs, formerly of this City, that he is now an instructional officer at the military camp, at Windsor. He is momentarily expecting a call to the front.

LUCILLE LOVE STORY AND FILM

On page five of to-day issue appears the first instalment of the remarkable story of "Lucille Love, the Girl of Mystery." This is one of the most fascinating stories the Examiner has published, and it gains additional interest from the fact that at the Royal Theatre on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, the film representation of the same parts of the story will be given.

Guy Fawkes Was Burned

By Celebration at Downer's Corners Last Night

The Guy Fawkes' celebration at Downer's Corners last night was the largest and most enthusiastic ever held there. The hall, recently enlarged, was crowded from the entrance to the rear of the platform. Supper early in the evening was all that could be desired, and some of the city's public men are said to have tarried somewhat around the table. Among those present were Bro. McCartney of Millbrook, Rev. H. J. Keith, Adjutant McElhiney, Ald. Green, Ald. Duncan, Ald. Johnston, Fire Chief Howard, Mayor Buller, J. H. Burnham, M.P., Geo. A. Gillespie, M.P.P. and others.

After the supper there was an extensive rogramme, including speeches from the visitors. Adjutant McElhiney acted as chairman in a most acceptable manner.

Bro. McCartney paid a compliment to Col. Sanderson's lodge upon the fine new building, of which they could now boast.

The speech of the evening was made by Rev. H. J. Keith, who dwelt upon the tenets of the Protestant religion and directed attention to the fact that it was necessary to think deeply on these things and to practice them. Preaching was of little use.

While feeling respect for Roman Catholics and their religion as they expressed it, the members of the Protestant religions viewed the matter differently. Rev. Mr. Keith pointed out that the tendency of people was to view the evangelization of the world as a matter of arms instead of persuasion.

Ald. Johnston created considerable laughter by this caustic and humorous references to his colleagues.

Ald. Green expressed his gratification at being present and spoke of the good work done by the Order.

Ald. Duncan and Chief Howard were also heard in brief speeches.

Mr. Burnham spoke afew words on the war and pointed out the necessity of all the little centres throughout the country congregating together to make up the mighty army which would go out to victory. Each little gathering was of as great importance as the most material rivet in the hull of a great ironclad. The Roman Catholic church, said Mr. Burnham, is not crying out against the war, but intended to use it as a weapon against Protestantism and to prevent its own decline. The interest and power of the church had been declining in recent years, and the presence of 22,000 Catholic priests at the front was evidence that they expected to make religious capital out of the war.

He believed that the mailed fist of Germany and the autocracy of the Roman Catholic church were the two great dangers that civilization had to face. After Germany was defeated the Protestants of the world would have to see to it that the Catholics did not regain a lot of lost prestige. The Roman church was building on the theory that in times of war and suffering men's minds turned to religion and were prepared to take advantage of that fact for the enlargement of the membership and increasing of the power of the church.

Mr. Gillespie made a very pleasing speech and was heartily applauded. He referred to the pleasure it gave him to be present and extolled the members upon the good work done by the order.

At the conclusion of the meeting the large crowd, all of which could not find places during the early part of the evening in the enlarged hall, went outside where the burning of an effigy of Guy Fawkes took place.

THE GERMAN NORTH SEA RAID

THE COUNTY COUNCIL TO GIVE A GRANT

$400 a Month Will Be Paid Until the New Council Takes Hold —Money For Relief Work

PASSED THIS MORNING

A grant of four hundred dollars per month will be authorised by the Peterborough County Council for relief purposes. This epitomises the report of the Committee that was appointed to look into the matter. The Committee, which was headed by Dr. Kindred, have recommended that the Council grant the sum of four hundred dollars per month and that a committee be appointed to arrange for its disposition. The Committee will be asked to determine whether the fund shall be supplied to the Canadian Patriotic Relief Fund, the Belgian Relief Fund or for local relief.

The monthly contribution of four hundred dollars will remain in effect until the January session of the County Council The 1915 council will be delegated with the responsibility of arranging for any additional relief that may be required.

It proposed to ask the Government to increase the bounty for the destruction of grey timber wolves from $15 to $20. The destruction by wolves of deer and other animal in the north country is excessive, and it is felt that some additional inducements should be offered for the extermination of the offenders.

The Council expect to wind up the bulk of the business this afternoon, although it may become necessary to convene for a few hours to-morrow morning.

The Cure Is Pronounced A Failure

Examiner Special:

WASHINGTON, Nov 6.—After an exhaustive investigation the United States Public Health Service to-day announced that Dr F. F. Friedman, the Berlin physician, had failed with his tuberculosis cure. The investigation showed that "one-fourth of all the cases receiving treatment developed running sores or abscesses at the place where they were injected." The report added that while some patients were buoyed up after an injection of the serum, others "progressed to a speedy death."

Hiawatha Boys Are Off To War

On Tuesday night, Oct. 27, four of Hiawatha's boys left for the war: Johnson Paudash, Geo. Paudash, W. Andersan, Henry Muskrat, with the good wishes of all their friends, who gathered at the dock to bid them farewell. After a Minister had offered up a prayer, the crowd sang "God Be With You Till We Meet Again" The four brave boys stepped into a launch that took them to Gore's Landing, where a waiting automobile took them to Cobourg, where they joined the 40th Northumberland Regiment.

FEW RECRUITS HAVE FAILED TO MEET TEST

21st Battalion of Second Contingent is Hard at Work Drilling at the Kingston Camp

NOTES OF INTEREST

KINGSTON, Nov. 5—The work of examining the recruits of the 21st Battalion is proceeding rapidly, and will be completed in a few days. As the members of each company pass the medical examination and are attested they receive their uniform and equipment. So far very few have failed to pass the rigid examination and those that have been rejected have been refused chiefly because of poor teeth or defective eyesight.

The right half of the Battalion still continue drill on Artillery Park Square and the left half on the Cricket Field. It is surprising how rapidly the men are mastering the elementary instructions and from present appearances will develop speedily into an efficient well-trained unit.

It is fully expected that by the early part of next week all the soldiers here will be fully equipped.

Capt. A. K. Hemming, Halifax, and his bride, arrived in the City last night. Capt. Heming is adjutant of the 21st Battalion.

Preparations are being made for the assembling of the troops in the Armouries for divine service Sunday morning.

Medical inspection will take place in future at the Armouries instead of at the Hospital at 815 a.m. and 3.45 p.m.

Ten per cent. of the men of the Battalion may be allowed written passes up to 12 midnight daily. All other men must be in quarters at last post, 10 p.m.

Physical drill parade will be held daily from 6.30 to 6.45 a.m.

Lieut. P. C. McGee has been appointed Acting Sergt. Major of the right half Battalion.

THE DIVISION COURT

The regular monthly sittings of the Division Court were held to-day. Sixteen cases were heard by His Honour Judge Huycke. In a few instances, judgment was reserved until Monday.

The following cases were on the list:

A. J. Rose vs. James Collins, $61.25.

Thomas Nelson vs. George Fox, $60.

Fred Bisstovah vs. Thomas Twomey and J. McCulloch, $91.14.

W. J. Kennedy vs. National Mfg. Co., Ltd., $8.55.

E. L. Robison vs. National Mfg. Co., Ltd., $7.60.

John Johnston vs. Peterborough Light and Power Co., $41.60.

John Green vs. E. J. Ferguson, $10.00.

Grant & Thorpe vs. V. J. Carruthers, $68.25.

A. Youngs vs. Mrs. C. M. Hunter, $10.50.

R. Smith vs. Geo. H. Duncan, $21.61.

Dr. Franks vs. W. L. Taylor, $61.50.

Thomas Sullivan vs. Geo. Perrin, $45.00.

A. J. Gibbs vs. J. D. Growley, $20.

J. J. Turner & Sons vs. Weller & Co., $20.41.

B. F. Ackerman & Co. vs. W. L. Thurlow, $36.75.

A. J. Warne vs. Thos. W. Dawspa, $40.00.

Gerusbach Importing Co, vs. C. B. Rentley, $11.85.

SAY "GOOD HOPE" WAS NOT ENGAGED

Report From British Officials in Lima, Peru, Add to the Mystery Surrounding the Naval Engagement---Claimed That German Cruisers "Bremen" and "Leipzig" Were Sent to the Bottom.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LIMA, Peru, November 6. — British subjects and officials here declare that they have received information that the Cruiser Good Hope, reported to have been set on fire by the Germans off the Chile coast, did not participate in the fight at all. They also claim that they have good reason to believe that the German light cruisers Bremen and Leipzig were sunk in the fight. It is considerd certain here that a battle between the Germans and the combined British-Japanese squadron can be expected soon.

LONDON, November 5.—According to a story issued by the official press bureau to-day, the penalty for failure to win through the allied line on the part of the German troops is bullets from the pistols of their own officers. Quoting wounded German soldiers, an eye witnesses story supplementing that made public last night, says: The prisoner told the British surgeon who attended him:: "Our officers warned us that if we faltered we would be shot from behind. I know that this threat was carried out when our terrible losses compelled us to retire. I myself was wounded by a German bullet." The report declares that the Germans had set their hearts on taking Ypres before October 1st, but that despite a prodigal sacrifice of men, they had been unable to win through the allied lines, which are still holding.

The Germans, it is stated, have won the admiration of the allies by their steady pressing toward almost certain death and by their refusal to retreat even after their ranks have been greatly decimated. The French and the Belgians are declared to be displaying wonderful dash and spirit and to be giving splendid support to the English.

LONDON, November 6.—Some developments are likely over the difference of the pay of the Canadian soldier and his brother in England. The Canadian gets pretty well three times as much as the Britisher, and obviously has so much more to spend. Many in authority are doubtful whether this is an unmixed blessing. It may be that arrangements will be made whereby the payment of full pay will be deferred, the soldiers being paid only a proportion of the amount due until they return to Canada.

4 MOUNTED RIFLE REGIMENTS WILL BE RAISED IN CANADA

OTTAWA, Nov. 5—Four regiments of Canadian mounted rifles are to be immediately organized in the Dominion. One will be raised in Ontario (probably at Toronto), one in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, one in Alberta and one in British Columbia. An official statement issued by the Militia Department to-night is as follows:

"A curious development of the fight now going on in France is the suspension of the role normally assigned to mounted troops.

The fact is beginning to leak out that the cavalry, armed with rifle and bayonet, are in the trenches, fighting side by side with the infantry; their horses, it seems, have been withdrawn from the zone of fire, and the work of reconnaissance has been entrusted to the flying corps.

"No official explanation has been vouchsafed, but there can be little doubt that the reason why the Army Council did not ask for the inclusion of cavalry, or mounted rifles, in the second overseas contingent is to be found in the tactical peculiarities of the situation which has arisen in Europe, in the western theatre of operations.

"But sooner or later the situation will change and mounted troops will resume the role, which, temporarily, they have abandoned; and elsewhere than in Europe there are localities (Egypt, for example), where in the immediate future they may be called upon to play an important part.

"It has, therefore, been decided to be ready for eventualities, and without further delay to mobilize four regiments of Canadian mounted rifles, one in Ontario (probably at Toronto), one in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, one in Alberta and one in British Columbia".

CAMPAIGN HAS CRUMBLED.

Petrograd Army Messenger Says Enemy Have Collapsed

PETROGRAD, Nov. 5—"The whole German campaign against Russia is now rapidly crumbling," says the Army Messenger. "Even in East Prussia there has been a sharp collapse in the German operations. They have abandoned their steady offensive and begun a rapid retreat".

BACK TO OLD-TIME PRICES.

Mr L. Yeates announces that he has reduced all his cigars to old-time prices owing to the scarcity of money created by the war. He will sell 10 cent cigars, 4 for 25 cents. This includes such staple lines as Beaubelvr, Arabella, Maigueritz, Van Horn, etc. Smokers of good cigars will take advantage of this and call at Louis' Cigar Store, Saturday.

SUDDEN CONVERSIONS.

Sudden conversions — change of heart—especially in politics are open to suspicion as to their genuineness. Henri Bourassa of Quebec, made a brilliant record as would-be wrecker of the Empire. He didn't do much wrecking, but that was not from lack of good will. But that did not prevent the political party of loyalty, that kept the eyes of the Empire blinking with waving flags, from undertaking the conversion of the anti-British heretic. Henri Bourassa must have shown some striking evidence of recantation of his anti-British opinions, and some adequate sorrow for his disloyal practices. Otherwise he would not have been brought into Ontario in the general elections of 1911 by the election manager of the party that professes to live, move and have its being in an atmosphere of loyalty to the Empire, and his oratory employed to save the Empire from the ruin of trading with the "Yankees." This is not mentioned as a reproach—but as a necessary incident in proof of the statement that sudden conversions, especially political, are open to suspicion. Mr. Bourassa did not repent; his conversion to Cochrane Conservatism was not genuine. The leopard did not change his spots. Mr. Bourassa is the same embittered enemy of the Empire, to-day that he was, when he was posing as the champion of the cause of loyalty upon a Conservative platform at Sudbury; as he was before the election of 1911. Queen's University, had before the war came on, invited Mr. Bourassa to address its Political Science Club. It was felt by this club, in common with a "trooly loyle" Toronto Canadian club, that Mr. Bourassa's Sudbury conversion was genuine. But after the war broke out Mr. Bourassa also broke out in the old way, and is slang-whanging Britain for bad faith and improving upon his former anti-imperial diatribes. At least this is the way it looks to the Political Science Club of Queen's University, which has cancelled its invitation to Mr. Bourassa. However, Mr. Bourassa has one advantage over some of his detractors —he is evidently sincere, and has the courage to say what he thinks—one of the advantages of living under the rule and spirit of an empire with which he finds so much fault.

THE DECIDING FACTOR.

Toronto is split into two factions over the question of the material for the construction of a bridge—the Rosedale plutocrats call it a viaduct—over the Rosedale Ravine and Don river to connect Bloor street and Danforth avenue. The expense is estimated at two million dollars. The difference of opinion is whether the bridge shall be built of steel or concrete. If built of concrete, all the materials can be "made-in-Canada," produced by our own people. If steel is adopted a lot of work will be given to United States manufacturers and workmen—mostly Germans and Austrians, employed in their steel mills; for it is stated as a fact that there is not a steel mill in Canada equipped to make the steel that will be required in such a bridge.

The deciding factor as to the material of the proposed bridge should be the fact that one material—concrete—will enable Canadian manufacturers to employ themselves for several months in providing the materials—giving employment to loyal Canadians, instead of providing, if steel is adopted, brawl money and beer money for Germans and Austrians and Hungarians employed—in working hours—in making money, and in their hours of leisure plotting ruin to Canada.

Of course, the questions of durability, cost of up-keep, etc., would be considered, but if these considerations involve a slight advantage from the employment of steel, they should be subordinated to consideration of advantage to Canadian industry and labour. Toronto pleases itself upon its exceptional loyalty to the Empire, and if its heart is in its professions, it won't hesitate to be loyal to Canada by preferring materials made in Canada. This is a time when Canadians —truly loyal Canadians—are straining every nerve, to reap compensation for the sacrifices made in this war; and one of the greatest compensations, is in industrial and commercial advantage. The air is full of appeals to keep the dollar at home; to buy only made-in-Canada goods; to bring our industries to the point of production that will justify such preference.

It is hoped that the City of Toronto won't follow the unpatriotic example of disloyalty to Canada and consequently to the Empire, of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission. This commission placed the order for the electric equipment of its first power development plant—provincially owned, and provincially paid for—at Wasdell's Falls on the Severn river—with a Swedish General Electric Company, when it might as easily and as profitably, and much more patriotically, have placed the order with a home company, the Canadian General Electric Company in Peterborough. This company supplied the electrical equipment for one of the greatest power development plants in the world, at Niagara Falls, and it certainly could have supplied the equipment for a little—comparatively—one-horse power plant at Wasdell's Falls. The order would not have been a large one, but it would have given some additional employment to a Peterborough — a Canadian—industry, and would have left some money at home which was, instead, sent out of the country.

That, however, is not the main consideration; loyalty to home industries and home interests is the main point. Corporations are not overburdened with practical loyalty to home—the Hydro Commission sending orders to Sweden for electrical equipment that could be made at home—in Peterborough, the Peterborough School Board sending to Kankakee, Illinois—in the United States—for boilers to heat our public schools, that could have been made in Canada, in Peterborough; and, perhaps, Toronto importing steel from the United States to build a bridge, instead of using concrete and spending something like two million dollars in Canada amongst our own manufacturers and working men. We should revise our boasts of our loyalty, or try to live up to them a little. In all our business transactions, even to our trifling individual purchases, we should, when there is choice presented—make loyalty to Canada, loyalty to home interests, the deciding factor—Keep the dollar at home and keep business going "as usual."

ME UND MOHAMMED.

The Allies now have two good slogans. One is "Crush the Prussian" and the other "Drive the Turk from Europe." Let Turkey meddle with Egypt and she will have Italy at her front door, glad of the chance to wipe the crescent off the European signpost. And now it is as the New York World says "Me und Gott und Mohammed." The World forsees the end of Turkey a threatened carving of that savoury bird among the powers. It adds:

Even if Bulgaria sides with Turkey, the land forces added on the German side would only cancel out against Italy and Roumania. If Bulgaria goes with the Allies, the balance of added strength will be heavily the other way, and may endanger the very existence of Austria-Hungary as a great power. Why, then, has Germany enticed her ally into the war?

No answer is possible except that the plump and amiable Mohammed V. is Commander of the Faithful. Hard beset on both her frontiers, Germany in her desperation urges a Moslem holy war in the East, and especially in Egypt and India. She may be disappointed. With Boers in the British cause putting down a Boer rebellion; with Irish Nationalists by thousands on the Belgian side; with Catholics fighting Catholics, and Greek Churchmen fighting Greek Churchmen; with Slavs fighting Slavs, and East Indians in France aiding the conquerors of India, whose physical touch would profane their very food, this war reveals race and religion as slender reeds to lean upon compared with the habit of nationality and the power of discipline.

One thing is sure. No nation except Servia risks in the war as much as the Turk, and the Turk risks it without excuse. Whatever happens, there will still be a France, an England, a Germany, a Russia. It is not certain now that there will be a Turkey.

WAR-MAKERS' PLANS WERE RIPE.

The murder at Sarajevo of a royal couple of whom most of these combatants never heard was only the prelude to a tragedy which appalls mankind. This is what war lords ask us to believe, but to that conclusion there must be emphatic protest. The world is at war because the high enterprises of the war-makers were all ready and all ripe when the June assassination took place. What has happened since then is the assassination of nations and peoples and civilisations, with an excuse so poor that the wickedness of it may be read no less in the paltry punishments inflicted in Roumia than in the savagery of siege, sack and battle.—New York World.

How Britain Helps Canada To Capture German Trade

An instance of the energy and determination with which Great Britain is setting about the work of capturing for the British Empire the foreign trade of Germany is contained in a letter to the editor of this paper from Mr. H. Hodder, the secretary of the British Empire Industrial League, 55 & 56 Chancery Lane, London, W. C. This League, which includes in a distinguished list of vice-presidents the name of Sir William Van Horne, and of the Mayors of London, York, Bristol, Belfast, Cardiff and Hull, wishes to announce through the press of the Dominion that it will be glad to hear from Canadian manufacturers requiring additional working capital for the purpose of enlarging their factories that they may increase their output and will do all in its power to help them to secure the financial support desired By united action of this sort, the Council of the League are convinced that a considerable impetus, and much effective aid, can be given to Canadians in their efforts to develop their industries and expand the export trade of the Dominion

In the letter in which he extends this invitation to Canadian manufacturers, Mr. Hodder briefly reviews the outlook, and holds that Canadian industry is bound ultimately to benefit greatly as a result of the war. Already, he says, a re-arrangement of the commercial relations of the globe is under way, and in this re-arrangement caused by the war, the Panama Canal will be of great assistance. People only dimly understand, he states, of what incalculable value this will be to the world at large and Western Canada in particular. We quote:

This re-arrangement of commercial relations offers many opportunities to young nations like Canada. It behooves the manufacturers and business men of the Dominion to rouse themselves and combine to secure the full advantages of the new commercial era whose dawn for her and for the British Empire is so replete with promise notwithstanding its crimson tinge. Canada should prepare herself to become one of the world's important exporters of manufactured goods, the produce of her own factories. Friendly markets in the shape of the Motherland and the other Dominions and Colonies of the Empire await her. She will find her way prepared for her by the operations of the British Empire Industrial League. In Russia and Italy—especially the former—the League has been particularly active for some time past and there can be no doubt that Russia will be one of the most important markets for British and British Colonial goods of all kinds. Germany, which has practically monopolised Russian markets for many years, has commercially received her death blow in the Empire of the Czar. It will require a generation for the detestation and hatred engendered against her there to disappear. This is, and will be, a great factor in opening the door to Britain and her Colonies—and especially to Canada.

Mr. Hodder states that in the opinion of the Executive Council of his League, Canadian manufacturers, if they are to get their full share of Germany's trade, both in Canada and in other countries, should at once take stock of the position and see to the provision of the plants necessary for the increased production, remembering that in order to carry on a profitable export trade it is necessary to produce commodities on a large scale. We are sure there will be many manufacturers in Canada who will be glad to seek the advice and assistance of the League, one of whose principal objects is to link up with Canada British manufacturing and financial interests and to secure the opening in the Dominion of branch factories of British firms, in short to assist in developing and expanding, as energetically as possible, the industries of the Dominion. Greater imperial organization in matters of trade will be one of the results of the war, and Canada is bound to reap immense benefit.—Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

THE KAISER'S ACHIEVEMENTS

Now wanes the third moon since your conquering host
Was to have laid our weakling army low,
And walked through France at will. For that loud boast
What have you got to show?

A bomb that chipped a towcer of Notre Dame,
Leaving its mark like trippers' knives that scar
The haunts of beauty—that's the best reclame
You have achieved so far.

Paris, that through her humbled Tripmph-Arch
Was doomed to see you tread your fathers' tracks—
Paris, your goal, now lies a six days' march
Behind your homing backs.

Pressed to the borders where you lately passed
Bulging with insolence and fat with pride,
You stake your all upon a desperate cast
To stem the gathering tide.

Eastward the Russian draws you to his fold,
Content, on his own ground, to bide his day,
Out of whose toils not many feet of old
Found the returning way.

And still along the seas our watchers keep
Their grip upon your throat with bands of steel,
While that Armada, which should rake the deep,
Skulks in its hole at Kiel.

So stands your record—stay, I cry you grace—
I wronged you. There is Belgium, where your sword
Has bled to death a free and gallant race
Whose life you held in ward;

Where on your trail the smoking land lies bare
Of hearth and homestead, and the dead babe clings
About its murdered mother's breast—ah, there,
Yes, you have done great things!

—O. S., in Punch.

LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY BANQUET IN ALL SAINTS' SUNDAY SCHOOL WAS AN UNQUALIFIED SUCCESS

Gathering of Over a Hundred Men Listened to Splendid Addresses Last Night—A Good Musical Programme.

Over one hundred Anglican laymen of the four Anglican churches of the city, gathered in the Sunday School room of the All Saints' Church for the Laymen's Missionary banquet. A spirit of optimism and determination was prevalent during the evening, and two splendid addresses of a missionary character were given.

Mr. C. E. Sisson presided, and in a brief address extended a warm welcome to the visiting brethren. Since the last splendid banquet in St. John's Church there had been another district added to this diocese, so an especial welcome was extended to the men from the St. George's Church.

At the conclusion of the addresses a hearty vote of thanks was tendered to the speakers, and those who contributed to the musical portion of the programme.

The programme was opened by the toast to "The King," which was heartily honoured and followed by the singing of "God Save the King."

Mr. Barry, who presided at the piano during the evening, then rendered a splendid piano solo which was very well received.

Mr. Allen, Secretary of the M.S.C.C., in opening his address congratulated Peterborough on the great effort the laymen had made only a short time ago in the interests of their missionary work. It had done much to break down the barrier of ignorance and prejudice against foreign missions. Here Mr. Allen paid a glowing tribute to the women of the church who had done very much to help the progress of missions.

Men, too many others, had the idea that the application of the best methods and carrying them out successfully for one year would not insure the life of the church's work. In business a man did not succeed except by applying the most up-to-date methods year after year and year after year. In Peterborough they had done a magnificent work last year, but the men should not expect that effort to carry them on for two years, or even for one year. The energy must be repeatedly applied, and with God's help the work would be done.

If the men got the best methods, got living men in the pulpits, and in the pews, and put the cause above all human weaknesses, it was not worthy of them as men and Christians to throw over the whole cause because of some trivial thing.

Our Own Land.

"There is too much to-day," said the speaker, "of flag waving and shouting the Maple Leaf Forever, and not enough of studying conditions, puting forward arnest effort to solve the problems of the Dominion, and getting the shoulder under the burdens of the country. Canada is facing a unique outlook, and the future at times looks serious."

In the East the conversion of the Indians had fell almost entirely to the Roman Catholic Church. All honour was due them for the work thy had done, and the men they had sent, but the Anglican Church should have been there. But in the West the English Church had taken a lead in the Christianization of the heathen, and there the work was still progressing.

The speaker traced the growth of the church in Canada, and in 1902 the Missionary Society of the Church in Canada was formed. The church could not expect to succeed at home unless it took an active part in the Christianizing of the people of foreign lands. In this work the innermost springs of unselfishness of the church was touched, and only if they worked for the converting of the heathen aborigines in this and many other lands, could they hope to solve the problems facing them at home. The human race was one the wild world over, and the greatest vision of the Bible could be conjured up by the words "Whosoever Will." In the eyes of Almighty God the great leader of Hosts, there was no difference between natives of one country and of another.

When he would speak of the West he would not mean Manitoba, as that had been settled in the '90's by men from Eastern Canada. They had gone there with implements and utensils and had prospered. This did not mean that because there was money in a community there was no need of sending missionaries there, or money to support them, for the only teaching in the Bible about the rich man was that it was very difficult for him to enter into Heaven. There was no greater fallacy than supposing that very rich community, whose members were hampered in their spiritual life by plenty of money, did not need missionaries.

But it was of the farther West Mr. Allen wanted to speak. Some man toured the West and when he came back would answr to your query, "Are there missionaries there?" a laconic "Yes."

"Are they doing much?"

"No."

These men might have toured the cities of the West, but they had not seen the church. They might report regarding western sub-divisions, but not the western church. The church was working out in the hills and valleys of the rural west, into which 200,000 men and women had gone from 1901-1910. It was among those men who lived in mere shacks the church was working.

Canadians lacked the sense of duty. Here the speaker paid a tribute to the Englishmen who were enlisting for the Empire. He had seen an advertisement with at the end of it "No Englishman need apply."

"If you saw to-day a call to arms, and at the end—'No Englishman need apply'—where would the future of the Empire be."

Two classes were working hard and well for the future of Western Canada. They were the Ministers of the West, and the Northwest Mounted Police. The clergy of the west today were forced to live on anywhere from a half to two-thirds what they had been getting previously. They were enduring hardships not known to any other one class of men in Canada. The wealth of the Canadian west had fled like a mist.

The speaker exhorted the men not only to be loyal to the church in their own parish, but to be loyal to the church out in the firing line. He did not wish to deprecate the establishment of Patriotic Funds, and like funds, for they all would be needed, but he did think the men who took his subscription from the church and applied it to other things would be cursed of God.

Germany had set up a false ideal. She was reaping what she had sown. So we should sow seeds that would make it certain that Canada would be a great country in the future, not only within our own boundaries, but in the eyes of the outside nations of the world. The present time demanded an especial personal sacrifice, and men should not at any cost cut off or decrease their subscription to God's work through the church.

At the conclusion of the address Mr. Weller rendered a fine solo, the chorus of which was sung by half a dozen of the men present. This number was an unusually enjoyable one.

Mr. Millman.

Mr. Millman, a Japanese missionary, just recently returned from the Orient, then addressed the gathering. Before the address the speaker asked to have his Japanese map pinned to the large Union Jack where all could see him, remarking:

"That will be no disgrace as it will represent the Anglo-Japanese alliance, of which Japan is justly proud, and of which Great Britain has no cause to be ashamed."

The time was coming when the worship of everything but God would have been passed, and all peoples, all tribes, all nations, all tongues shall, in unison worship our God.

In our day as Christians and churchmen they had a work to do, a work which would assist in bringing God's prophecy to pass. The great question was were the men to-day in line witht God's plan? The work was equally important in every part of the world, but because he had recently returned from China he would confine his remarks to that country.

The Church of England in Canada was responsible for the Christianazation of Mid-Japan, a diocese 300 miles long and 200 miles wide. It was brought into existence to encourage the church at home and help the men in the field. It had served both interests well. It had also served to liven the interest of Canadian people, and because there is a definite responsibility there the laymen of the church were displaying an intelligent and genuine interest there. To the question "when will the work be done?" there could only be one answer. When the enemy was defeated—when Idolatry and Immorality were stamped out, when the battle was won—then the work would be finished. When that would be no one could say.

"How far has Japan been evangelised?" In answer the speaker said that the country was far from evangelized. Eighty per cent. of the people had never heard of the Gospel or listened to Bible Teaching. That showed the great work that remained to be done in Japan. In Mid-Japan an Anglican church had been organized, forming a basis for the work. When the Japanese church could take care of the rural district, the missionaries would gladly withdraw to the cities.

At one time the Japs looked up to Foreign missionaries, and consulted them about everything else. But Japan had made the step from Mediaevalism to Modernism, from the last to the first ranks of the nations, and there had been a change in their attitude to the missionary. Now the missionaries went as brothers, and helpers to the Japanese, and the inate chivalry of the nation lead them to receive them as guests.

The missionary work was largely like farming. In a commercial venture one often realised immediately, but not so on the farm. And with Christianizing the Oriental. The seed was sown and after it developed the harvest was reaped. The Christian ideas are so foreign to the Japanese that not by once or twice or thrice preaching to them can they be made to understand, for they have been related for 13 centuries to Buddhism.

In the Japanese character, the side that they must build upon, was chivalry, generosity and kindliness. There was also, however, the unbeautiful side of Idolatry and Immorality. The work in Japan to-day was slow.

Massed On The Frontier

Three Turkish Army Corps Will Oppose Russian Forces

PETROGRAD, Nov. 6.—A Turkish army, 90,000 strong, consisting of the 9th 10th and 11th army corps, is massed along the Caucasian frontier, according to The Novoe Vremya. Many villages have been occupied by the outposts of this army.

The Turkish army, The Novoe Vremya continues, would consist under normal conditions of eighty battalions of infantry, sixty batteries of artillery, containing 240 guns, and forty squadrons of regular cavalry, but to it has been added fifty regiments of Kurd cavalry, amounting to 20,000 men.

Russia's sudden and energetic advance into Turkey is believed in Petrograd to have been meant to disband and overawe the Kurd tribes, who are little interested in the success of Turkish arms, and are more concerned in the safety of their own villages. Among the towns occupied by the Russians is Abhty, an important junction of the highways to the upper Euphrates river.

It is rumored in Petrograd that Gen. Sanders Pasha will assume command of the Turkish troops on the Caucasian front.

The following communication of the General Staff of the Russian army in the Caucasus was made public here last night:

"Concerning the operations during the last twenty-four hours, there is nothing important to report.

"Our troops are vigorously clearing the enemy's territory, which is occupied by small bands, the remnant of the Turkish vanguards defeated during the last few days.

"One of our columns has defeated the Turks near Bazygan, routing them and capturing the town. The Turks, in their flight, threw away their arms and scattered to the villages in the neighborhood.

"Our cavalry attacked to the east of Dyaden three Kurd regiments supported by infantry, and threw them back."

SELLS RIGHTS OF SONG TO MR. GREENLAW

Mr. Asa Huycke, composer of the "Memory's Flowers" song has sold complete publication rights to Mr. A. E. Greenlaw, the well known artist now with Dr. Gordon. Mr. Hesselberg also said the melody and harmony of "Memorys Flowers" were exceptionally fine. The words are by J. L. Milligan.

Mr. Huycke is also writing a sacred song for Mr. Greenlaw, and both of these will be published at an early date

ANNUAL MEETING

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Horticultural Society will be held this evening at 7.30 o'clock in the Council chamber. Reports will be presented and officers will be elected. All members are requested to be present.

CAPT. FEE LEFT FOR KINGSTON

Will be Attached for Duty to the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery

Captain Calvin P. Fee of the 28th Field Batery, Canadian Field Artillery, left last night for Kingston to be attached for duty to the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery. Captain Fee has had fourteen years' service in the following corps: 45th Regiment, Royal Canadian Field Artillery, Canadian Scouts, and Battery of South African Field Force, Royal Canadian Horse Artillery, 24th Battery, C.F.A., and 10th Brigade. Capt. Fee has been a resident of Peterborough for a long time and has a host of friends here who will wish him every success.

CANADIANS FOR FIRING LINE IN VERY SHORT TIME

LONDON, Nov. 5.—That the Canadian troops need not be detained much longer at Salisbury Plain is the opinion of the London Daily Telegraph, which, commenting on the King's inspection, says: "Now that their training is all but complete, the time has almost come for them to join the fighting line. They could not have a better send-off than the praise and encouragement from their Sovereign and the Minister of War.

This opinion, coming from such a responsible journal, amply refutes the ideas expressed in certain quarters that the Canadian expeditionary force would require several months' training on this side before the troops could be fit for service in the fighting line.

TICKETS FOR SALE.

Tickets for Dr. Cleaver's lecture on "Jean Valjean" in the George Street Methodist Church, next Tuesday night, are on sale at Madill's Drug Store; Mr. J. Speer's store, Hunter Street, East City, and Kernaghan's Grocery

AMBULANCE ASSOCIATION

Meeting will be Held on Tuesday Night Next in Y.M.C.A.

A meeting of the St. John's Ambulance Association was held in the Y. M. C. A. rooms on Tuesday night last, to organize a class in First Aid to the Injured, but owing to the patriotic meeting which was being held in the Armouries, was adjourned till Tuesday, Nov. 10th.

The St. John Ambulance Association was founded as a branch of The Order of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem in England in 1877, and was intended to relieve the suffering of the sick and injured by conducting an educational and practical course of instruction as to the treatment of accidents, care of the sick, transportation of wounded, and to give organized relief in time of emergency, etc., and also the formation of Ambulance and Nursing corps. Classes can also be formed for instructions in Home Nursing, Home Hygiene, or Sanitation.

A ladies' class in First Aid is being held in the Y. W. C. A. rooms, Simcoe street.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

DR. GORDON'S FAREWELL; VAST CONGREGATION HEARD CAMPAIGNER'S LAST ADDRESS

The farewell meeting of the Citizenship campaign in Peterborough, was held in the George Street Methodist church last evening. A vast congregation thronged the edifice. Every seat was occupied, and a multitude stood in the aisles, doorways and wherever the entrance of the building afforded standing room.

Dr. Gordon presided, and there were on the platform, the pastors of the city, and a number of representative citizens. Among the latter was Mr. H. G. Walker, chairman of the Business Men's committee in charge of the campaign, who has rendered such valuable and persistent service in connection with the present series of meetings. Perhaps to no other individual is so much due for the success of the campaign as to Mr. Walker.

Mr. E. O. Weber, the father of the citizenship idea, was introduced, and in appropriate remarks, expressed the appreciation of Dr. Gordon and his colleagues, for the kind co-operation of the people of Peterborough, in the series of meetings which were being brought to a close. He made special reference to the generous manner in which the newspapers of the city had given large space to the reports of the meetings, and had done all in their power to make the campaign a civic function and a community affair. He also mentioned in his expressions of thanks, Adjutant McElhaney of the Salvation Army, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Ministerial Association of Peterborough, and the Christian churches of the community, representing all denominations. His most feeling reference was to the committee, composed of business men who had taken in hand, the details having to do with the success of the campaign. In no other community had there rallied around the leaders of this movement so many stalwart business men of first-class standing, and to this fact, Mr. Weber credited the result of an enthusiastic and inspiring campaign.

Mr. Weber stated that amongst the numerous letters, epistles and questions received by Dr. Gordon, there were many references to his books and printed pamphlets, information being desired as to where these could be secured, and he stated that an arrangement had been made with Trebilcock's Bookstore, whereby any of Dr. Gordon's books could be secured, and also the pamphlets printed in connection with the campaign. He also explained that all profit from the sale of these books did not in any way revert to the doctor, but to the treasurer of the General Campaign Fund.

Mr. Albert E. Greenlaw, the coloured singer, was in great shape and in fine form last evening. Dr. Gordon humorously described him as "The husband of a lovely wife and the father of two beautiful children. This incidentally answered a question which had been sent in with reference to Mr. Greenlaw. The audience smiled as Dr. Gordon paid the gallant singer a splendid compliment for his great songs and inspiring melodies, and the appreciation of the audience for the services of Mr. Greenlaw was apparent and expressed upon every side. Last night he sang for the last time in Peterborough, the popular song, "His Majesty the King," also the plantation melody entitled, "Steal Away to Jesus." In this the choir of the George Street Methodist church, under the direction of Professor Renwick, joined in the chorus. Mr. Greenlaw's closing selection was the great song entitled "The Crucifixion." The first verse of which begins with the words, "Were You There When They Crucified My Lord." Special mention ought to be made in this connection for the services rendered by the choirs of St. Paul's church and the George Street Methodist church, under the leadership of Professor Allen and Professor Renwick, respectively, and this was done in fitting and appropriate language by the leader of the campaign, Dr. Gordon, in his remarks of general thanks of the meeting last evening.

Dr. Gordon occupied forty-five minutes in answering twenty-seven questions. These questions had reference to all phases of Christian citizenship and to all sides of Christian life.

In brief, while he could not accept all the teachings of Christian Science he was pleased with their emphasis upon the value of good cheer in life, and expressed his admiration of the people who belonged to the Christian Science church.

He affirmed that the preacher of the Gospel, ought to have the privilege of speaking in the pulpit upon the labour question which has to do with the improving of the conditions of the great masses of the people.

He affirmed that it was not safe for young people to indulge in liquor drinking, even in their own homes, and that the liquor traffic should be banished from the land

Woman is morally stronger than man. She is the incarnation of God and the conscience for the race. Were it not for Christian womanhood, of the world, the race would go to wreck and ruin. A Christian woman is the bright, consummate flower of the Christian civilization.

Preachers are not an over-paid class. The skilled mechanic on the continent of North America receives a much higher compensation for his services than the average member of the great army of one hundred thousand preachers who stand in the pulpits of the churches of this continent

With reference to the renting of pews the Doctor affirmed that the main question was not whether the pews had been rented or not, but the character of the man who sits at the end of the pew, either to welcome the stranger or exclude the casual visi-

In Aid of The Kitchener League

Splendid Concert in the Collegiate Assembly Hall Last Evening

A very successful concert was held last evening in the Collegiate Assembly Hall, under the auspices of the Canadian Kitchener league, as a result of which a very substantial sum was realized for the work. The chair was taken by Major Walker and a very interesting programme consisting of songs, recitations and tableaux was given. Each number was greeted with loud applause and encores were demanded.

The tableau entitled "The Allies of the Great War" was prettily enacted by four young ladies, Miss Galvin as Russia, Miss Judge as Belgium, Mrs. Lane as Great Britain and Miss Hickey as France. Another tableau, "The Roll Call After Battle" was also well done.

The following was the programme rendered:

Part One.

Selections—George Street Orchestra.
Opening Chorus—"O Canada."
Young Members Kitchener League.
Piano Duet—"The Bugle Call."
Misses M. McDonald and V. Carveth
Solo—"The Boys of the King."
Mr. W. Allen
Duet—"The Eve of the Battle."
Messrs. E. Bartley, W. Greenslade
Solo—"The Minstrel Boys"— Mrs. Greenslade.
Solo—Selected—Master Sam Whitehouse.
Duet—"Are You Going to Dance."
Miss M. Clancy and Mr. Lightheart.
Selections from the orchestra.

Part Two.

Piano Solo—Selected—Mr. C. Devey.
Solo—"My Ain Folk"—Miss Stevens.
Recitation—Col. Miller.
Solo—Selected—Mrs. McColl.
Recitation—Selected—Miss Sherin.
Duet—"On the Road to Germany."
Misses J. Callender and G. Clancy.
Solo—"Mona"—Mr. Lightheart.
Solo—"Angus McDonald— Mrs. Rohill.
Solo—"British to the Core."
Mrs. Downey.
Tableau—"The Allies of the Great War."

Peterboro' Man Robbed In Lindsay?

Young Man of That Town Accused of Theft From Local Shantyman

A well known local young man will come up for trial this afternoon, charged with robbing a Peterborough man of two $2 bills. The Electric City native is a shantyman, and the alleged theft is said to have taken place while he was on his way to the C. P. R. station on Wednesday. The police arrested the accused and placed him in the cells.

The accused appeared before Police Magistrate Jackson at one o'clock to-day and was represented by Mr. G. A. Jordan. As Mr. Jordan had an engagement in the north, the case was adjourned until Monday. Bail was refused.

Man Wanted In Cobourg Was Arrested Here

A man who calls himself Prof. W. W. red, arrived in Peterborough last evening, but before he had been in the City many hours, he was arrested by Detective Meagher, on information furnished by Chief Ruse of Cobourg.

About 8 o'clock last evening Chief Thompson received a telephone message from Chief Ruse of Cobourg, saying that W. W. Fred, alias Bell, alias Ross, five feet in height, stout build, dark complexion, with a moustche turning grey, and who would be selling spectacles, was wanted in Cobourg on a charge of obtaining money under false pretences.

Detective Meagher was detailed to discover "Fred," and less than half an hour later he apprehended the man at the corner of Charlotte and George streets The arrest was made about half-past 8 o'clock.

When arrested "Fred" was confronted with the charge, but had nothing to say in connection with it. He was staying at a local hotel, and said that he had just come by boat from Harwood a short time earlier in the evening. He carried two leather club bags filled with eye testing apparatus and spectacles and claimed to be a Russian. Although already credited with names (Ross, Bell and Fred) the man, when arrested, was carrying a leather club bag with a card on it bearing the name "A. Miller". A few moments before he was arrested he sent a letter to Mrs. Miller, Montreal, and it is thought that Miller is his right name. His home is in Montreal.

"Fred" or "Miller" is about fifty years of age, answers the description given above, and claims to be a Russian. When arrested he had in his possession a newspaper clipping in either the German or Russian languages, the purport of which is being investigated. Miller had $169.25 on his person who arrested. He will be taken back to Cobourg to-night. No particulars of the alleged offence are available except that the charge that will be preferred against him is that of obtaining money under false pretences.

IN AN UNDERTAKING ESTABLISHMENT

Couple Chose Peculiar Place in Which To Be Married

Marriages have taken place in balloons, and even in a cage of lions, but perhaps the most unlikely place for them to be held is an undertaking parlour. But still the extraordinary sometimes takes place, and at Lethbridge, the night before last, an anger were a couple to be united they improvised a local undertaker's parlours into a temporary Eden. The minister who solemnized the union was unable owing to housecleaning, to have the pair at his residence, and yielded to their wishes to make them happy at the place selected. The result gave his age as 46 years and his partner 40 years, and Darby and Joan spent their honeymoon at the Windsor Hotel.—Lethbridge Herald.

HEAVILY REINFORCED FOE STILL TRYING TO BREAK THROUGH TO THE COAST

Enemy Make Night Attack and Are Driven Back With the Loss of a Strong Position---Belgian Conscripts Escape the Germans.

LONDON, Nov. 6. — The renewed attempt of the heavily reinforced German forces in Belgium to smash through the Franco-British line for the French channel ports has been stoutly met by a vigorous counter offensive in the neighborhood of Ypres by the augmented army of the allies.

It is asserted in the French official report that the allies have made slight progress to the east of Nieuport, and that the German onslaughts from Dixmude to the Lys are decreasing in energy. Redoubled German activity, however, is reported in the centre, the French being there subjected to violent bombardment of many hours' duration, while on the allies' right the situation remains deadlocked.

A report from Havre says that the German troops were signally defeated in a night attack south of Dixmude, being driven into a retreat wherein they were compelled to surrender the important strategic position at the Village of Bixschoote. The Belgian War Office is authority for the statement.

According to The Daily Mail's Rotterdam correspondent, the inhabitants of Ostend have been ordered to take to their cellars with five days' provisions.

More than 3,000 Belgian conscripts belonging to the class of 1914 have escaped from the territory occupied by the Germans at the risk of being shot and joined the colors here, King Albert sent an equerry to compliment the youths.

The Standard has the following despatch from Berlin, dated Nov. 1: The Kaiser has addressed a fresh manifesto to his troops, telling them that he is now on the way to take over personal direction of the operations on the Lys, and assuring them that very little more effort is now required to carry them through victoriously to Calais.

Public opinion is not so sure of this, for, despite the rigors of the censorship, the news is trickling through of enormous losses sustained. Fears are expressed whether the German forces are strong enough to stand many more weeks of such frightful slaughter. The Frankfurter Zeitung publicly admits that the allies are pressing across out, but says that the splendid spirit of the Germans will pull them through in the end.

The Standard adds that whenever the Kaiser has taken over personal command of the troops a German disaster has invariably followed.

A VEIL OVER NORTH SEA

British Admiralty Refuses to Confirm or Deny Rumours

LONDON, Nov. 6. — Despite unprecedented activity on the part of the chief of the Admiralty, censorship on all naval movements was absolutely ironclad yesterday. As a result, many rumors of impending fighting on the sea were widely circulated.

There is no disguising the alarm felt in some quarters over the report that a strong German squadron has slipped into the North Sea, cleared for action. Such a squadron, unless promptly located by the British fleet, might cause much damage by bombarding coast cities.

The Admiralty positively refuses to confirm or deny the report that this German squadron actually is at large.

The British mine sweeper Mary was sunk by a mine in the North Sea yesterday. Six of the crew of fourteen were rescued.

Survivors who were landed at Lowestoft reported heavy gun-firing off the Yorkshire coast yesterday afternoon.

A despatch from Lowestoft reports that heavy cannonading, supposedly between British and German warships, was heard in the North Sea yesterday morning.

A despatch to The Daily Telegraph from Odessa by way of Moscow says that twelve Turkish and German transports carrying coal have been sunk near Usunguldak, on the coast of Anatolia.

A despatch from Bucharest, Roumania, says: "Turkish warships have sunk two Russian passenger steamships in the Black Sea after forcing the passengers and crew to take to the boats."

The Turkish fleet has taken refuge in the Bosphorus to avoid further pursuit by the Russian Black Sea squadron, according to an announcement from the Russian Admiralty yesterday.

MUTUALIZATION OF THE PRUDENTIAL INSURANCE CO.

Proposed Transfer of the Capital Stock From the Stock-holders to the Policy-holders is Nearing Consummation.

A UNPARALLELED EVENT

The following, taken from the "Insurance Press," published in New York, is of special interest to the 3,000 Prudential policy holders in Peterborough:

The proposed transfer of the capital stock of the Prudential Insurance Company from the stockholders to the policyholders of the company, now close to consummation, as virtually all the judicial and legislative steps to that end have been taken, is an unparalleled event in the history of insurance.

The Prudential Insurance Company is a mammoth institution, its stockholders are in possession fo a great property. An appraisal of the value of the shares of the company (par value $100) at $455 per share, by a board of eminent appraisers acting under appointment of the court, serves to measure the value of the stock. The movement to mutualize the company involves a fundamental principle the relinquishment of the stock. This will give the stockholders $455 a share as a full and final consideration for the surrender of their proprietorship, a price judicially ascertained to be fair and reasonable.

No More Dividends to Stockholders, All Profits For Policyholders.

When the mutualization proceedings have been fully carried through all the future profits of the company will belong exclusively to the policy holders and will be distributed among them, from time to time. No more dividends to stockholders will be paid by the Prudential, no more earned surplus will be segregated on stockholders' account. The policy holders of the Prudential will become the sole proprietors of the company and all future profits, to the last cent, will be applied for the sole benefit and use of policyholders.

A Purely Policy Holders' Property.

The Prudential is a great and growing concern. Probably it is still in the infancy of its development. It will be no longer a stockholders' enterprise, but will be purely a policy-holders' property, sharing all of its profits among the premium payers in the manner provided by the laws which govern the distribution of the earnings of mutual insurance corporations. Hence, stockholders' shares are to give way to policy holders' shares. The stockholder is to how himself out and the policy holders are to come into ownership and full possession of all the company is and is to be.

While under the existing low rates now enjoyed by Prudential policy holders the net cost to the present policyholders may not, at the outset, be greatly reduced on account of mutualization—as President Dryden points out—nevertheless, "every dollar earned by a continuance of the sound and economical conduct of Prudential affairs will, from the very beginning, be credited to the policy-holders as the owners of the company."

Control and Management to Rest in Policyholders.

When an insurance company becomes as great as the Prudential, with responsibilities to millions of families and tens of millions of individuals, the question of management, and the power that is to control management, in the far distant future becomes important. That is the opinion of every high-minded and far-visioned man in the insurance business, the opinion also of publicists, jurists, statesmen and plain citizens endowed with common sense. When responsibilities of control and management become so vast as the Prudential's there is only one proper place for it to rest permanently—namely, in the body of policy-holders, which means a democratic form of government where policy-holders shall have forever full representation and control. The Prudential has found a way to solve the great question of future management by providing for the election of directors by the policy holders, the directors in turn to choose the executive officers.

WAS COMING TO PETERBOROUGH

Inspector on Trail of Girl Who Ran Away From Her Employer

Close on the trail of the young girl who escaped from Mrs. E. E. Sharpe on Monday night last was a lady inspector from the Barnardo Home, Toronto, who arrived in town yesterday afternoon in search of the youthful wanderer.

On arrival here she convened with Chief of Police Short, who gave such information as he was conversant with; that the escaped girl had breakfast on Tuesday morning at Mr. Voicie's, east of Lindsay, and continued her way east towards Omemee.

The inspector informed the Chief that the girl wanted came from Klemburg, and was on her way via G.T.R. to Peterborough, where a position awaited her, but from reasons known only to herself stopped off in Lindsay. Her trunk was checked to Peterborough, and is there at the present time. It is understood that before leaving where she had previously been she appreciated a gold watch to her own use and purpose.

The Attacks Are Weaker

Decrease in Energy is Noted by the Allies

PARIS, Nov. 6. — The following official communication was issued at the French War Office last night:

"There is no new information on the operations at the north of the Lys.

"In a violent offensive movement by the Germans north of Arras, we lost a few trenches which later were retaken.

"In the Argonne (region of St. Hubert) all the German attacks have been successfully repulsed.

"Concerning the remainder of the battle front there is nothing of importance to report."

Yesterday afternoon's War Office report from Paris says:

"On our left wing the allied forces have made slight progress to the east of Nieuport on the right bank of the Yser. From Dixmude to the Lys the German attacks were renewed yesterday, but at a number of points with lessened energy, particularly with regard to the actions of their infantry.

"The Franco-British lines have at no point drawn back and our troops, undertaking the offensive, have made notable progress in several directions. Between the region of La Bassee and the Somme the day was notable, particularly for an artillery contest.

"In the region of Roye we have maintained our occupation of Le Quesnoy-en-Santerre and advanced perceptibly in the direction of Andechy.

"On the centre, between the Oise and the Meuse, there has been a recrudescence of the activity of the Germans, manifested especially by their artillery fire.

"Summing up it may be said that the attacks of the enemy at various points on our front have been repulsed, in some instances after an engagement which lasted all day long. On our right wing there is nothing new to report."

TO THE COMMITTEE

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—The greatest teacher is example, not precept. Of what use is it to preach honour and to practice the reverse? To preach religion and to practice worldliness? Of what use then is it to preach the love of God because it is a good paying business? Of what use is it to preach single-mindedness on a business basis? The strength of our clergy lies in the fact that preaching is poor "business." The most appalling damage that can be done to the cause of that sweetness which is light and of that light which is pure sweetness, is to put it all at the mercy of a lecture bureau. There seems to be no hope of regeneration from the worldliness and commercialism of the present day. Even our leaders treat it all as if virtue was a piece of pork. Better is it to load up a gramaphone with noble sentiments, with a nickel in the slot, and place it at the street corners, along with our gum-catchers, than to have flesh and blood speak for God and Home and Country, at so much per night as a good paying braineas. To the casual, the cynicism of it all is deadly. The goal of the good is reached through self-sacrifice only. How can men be led to it. How can the young be led to it by men whose tongues are in their cheeks and their hands held out behind their backs. Evangelism has received just such shocks and is dead. God help us if the hope of the home and the market-place is to be slain in the same way. Chastity is not a condition of the flesh. It is a virtue of the mind. Chastity is not for hire, neither are the chaste. Virtue must always, like Religion, speak for the love of it or she is a hireling.

Yours truly,
U. S.

TURNBULLS

Mr. Greenlaw's Career Is An Interesting One

Gifted Singer is a Native of Woodstock, Ont

Mr. Albert Greenlaw, the soloist, who has been singing so acceptably to the packed houses which have greeted Rev. Dr. Gordon every night during the past two weeks, has had a musical career from his youth that is an interesting result of having a voice, and being discovered early. That he had an unusual voice while very young, is shown by the following clippings from papers of that time.

The Concert Goer, a Canadian Musical Publication.—The principal musical event since last writing was the singing of Albert Greenlaw, basso soloist from the University of Nashville, Tenn. Albert Grenlaw is a young coloured lad, who was discovered by Mrs. Orr, a teacher of music in Woodstock. Through her exertions he was admitted to the Nashville University and is one of the soloists of the Glee Club. His voice is a rich powerful bass of wide compass, and possessing great possibilities.

The Daily Sentinel-Review, Woodstock, Ontario. — Chalmers Church was packed to its utmost capacity, and the audience was most enthusiastic in its applause from the opening until the close of the programme. Naturally the lion's share of the honours fell to Mr. Greenlaw, whose every appearance was made the occasion for a fresh burst of applause.

As will be noted, Mr. Greenlaw was born in Woodstock, and owes much to Mrs. Orr, who arranged for his admission to the Fisk University. After only a year and a half there he was given the solo parts in "Stabat Mater," which was presented at the University, and his singing so attracted the critics that it was said of him that he would be the greatest singer, black or white, that had ever been in Nashville, Tennessee.

After three years of study in the Fisk University, Mr. Greenlaw was taken on the road, with the Fisk Troup of Jubilee Singers, and stayed with them for four years, when the company disbanded. He then returned to his home in Woodstock, still a young man though well started on his brilliant musical carer. It was at this time that his first song, "Where the Sweetest Flowers Grow," was written, both words and music, and dedicated to Mr. Greenlaw's mother. The sale of this song has reached 6,000, and his last song, which has only been out for about five weeks, has already had a sale of 1,000 copies.

Two years were spent in intermittent concert and solo work at Woodstock, while a home was being established for two.

The next step was a call from Sarnia, where Mr. Greenlaw was appointed conductor and soloist of Central Baptist Church, and where he remained for four years. Regina was the next place of residence, and for another four years Mr. Greenlaw was leader and soloist of the First Baptist Church of that city.

Conditions again improved for the now well-known singer, and he transferred his field of labour to Winnipeg, where he rapidly rose from one position to the other, being, first at Nassau Street Baptist Church as leader and soloist for a year, followed by a year in the same capacity at Olivet Street Baptist Church, and, from there to the magnificent First Baptist Church, where he drew a salary of $1,200.00 a year as soloist.

Since then he has been singing in Rev. Dr. Gordon's church, the Central Congregational, at Winnipeg, and now accompanies the doctor on his lecturing tour.

All comments on the singing of Mr. Greenlaw while at Peterborough have been of most unqualified praise of his magnificent voice, and the effective way in which he controls and uses his great gift. Should he return to this city it is safe to predict that he would be given a hearty welcome by Peterborough's many lovers of a cultivated voice of such compass, volume and sweetness.

FUNERAL TO-MORROW

The funeral of the late Mrs. M. O'Brien will take place to-morrow morning at nine o'clock from the family residence to St. Joseph's Church and cemetery, Douro.

Mounted Men From Canada

Four Regiments Will Be Raised by the Government

OTTAWA, Nov. 6. — The Government has decided without further delay to mobilize four regiments of Canadian mounted rifles, one in Ontario, probably at Toronto; one in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, one in Alberta, and one in British Columbia.

There has been much debate over the fact that when the suggestions of the War Office were received as to the composition of the second Canadian contingent, no mention was made of cavalry, but it has been observed that a curious development of the war in France is the suspension of the role normally assigned to mounted troops, who are now fighting as infantry.

Sooner or later the situation will change and mounted troops will resume the role which, temporarily, they have abandoned. The four regiments of Canadian mounted rifles which the Government has decided to organize will probably be of 600 men each, a total of about 2,400.

A lime manufacturing plant in Wisconsin is the first in the United States in which the kilns are fired with gas instead of wood.

Bamboo Grown In Peterborough

Mr. Callander of the Examiner office, has grown at his residence, Weller Street, during the past summer, about fifteen of the "arundinaria dendrocalamus. It is in every day terms bamboo of the variety you trudge to the river on an idle summer afternoon. It grew to a height of about 16 feet, and was used only as an ornament in a flower garden.

Australian Cable Repaired.

VANCOUVER, Nov. 6. — The Australian cable is up and now working again. In the opening days of the war a German cruiser landed a party and wrecked the installation at the small island in the Pacific where the cable landed between Vancouver and the Antipodes. Much inconvenience was caused thereby and the work of the allied fleets in sweeping the Pacific was hampered.

This German Ship Didn't Know.

QUEENSTOWN, Nov. 6. — The German sailing ship Meipomene, which sailed from Tocopilla, Chile, July 8, laden with nitrates, was towed into Queenstown yesterday by the British cruiser which had captured her.

Capt. Endelman said neither he nor his crew had heard that a war was in progress.

LONG POSITION OF FIGHTING GRIEVES A GERMAN CRITIC

BERLIN, Nov. 4, via London, Nov. 5.—Major Morath, the military critic, discussing the military situation in the Tageblatt, indicates that the German objective in the operations around Ypres is to press the British back upon the sea, opening the way to secure possession of a strip of the seacoast. The Germans are trying to break the French left wing at Arras, he says, and the object of the operations to the east of Soissons must soon become apparent.

"That the German attacks everywhere are progressing steadily," he adds, "must give satisfaction to the Germans who have not been delighted with the long position of the fighting. In these days of our tense waiting, the German people rejoice over every indication of a victorious advance.

"This, however, can only proceed slowly owing to the strong defensive works built by the enemy for weeks.

"It is of the utmost importance for the solution of the remaining tasks of the army that the health of the troops remain excellent throughout the prolonged fighting in the trenches. Provisioning has met all requirements and the feeling in the army is excellent. Hence we can look to the future without concern.

"The losses have been very heavy during the past three months, as the soldiers know better than we at home, but just as we are not losing hope so the soldiers at the front are yielding nothing in duty and confidence."

BRITAIN ANNEXES CYPRUS

Has Been Administered by Britain Since 1878, and is now "Appropriated".

LONDON, Nov. 5 — Great Britain to-day formally annexed the Island of Cyprus in the Mediterranean, which nominally formed a part of the Turkish Empire.

The defensive alliance between Great Britain and Turkey having become annulled by the outbreak of war, the British Government decided that it was necessary to appropriate the island in order that proper provision might be made for its government and for its protection.

The island, since the Anglo-Turkish convention of 1878, had been occupied and administered by Great Britain, though it had remained under the sovereignty of the Sultan.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

OLD COUNTRY SOCCER FIXTURES

Some Interesting Results Looked For--War Interferes With Transmission of Football Results

Owing to the war it is found next to impossible to secure the results of the Saturday football games in time for publication on Saturday. This owing to the fact that the telegraph and cable services are congested with war news, which must of necessity be given the preference. However, efforts will be made to give local football enthusiasts as complete a service as circumstances will permit. This includes timely publication of the league tables and authoritative comment respecting the various fixtures. The following are the fixtures for tomorrow:

ENGLISH LEAGUE.

If Peterborough Goes Out So Will The Senators; That Is London View

LONDON, Nov. 4.—The closer one is in touch with conditions in the Canadian League the more the 1915 circuit looks as though it would be operating in the cities which originally made up the Canadian League in 1911.

The story which took its origin in Ottawa came from the pen of one of the owners of the three-time champion Ottawa Club, which went on to say that a league composed of cities like Montreal, Ottawa, in the east, Utica and Syracuse in the middle, with Hamilton and London in the west looked very good on paper, but to get such a circuit into a paying basis is another thing. But the scheme as dreamt of by the Ottawa writer was in a manner feathering his own bed, as he realises that with Peterborough out of the Canadian League that there would be little chance of Ottawa gaining a foothold in the league next year.

Montreal has not been disposed of as an International League city, and with Barrow casting longing eyes upon Syracuse as a suitable spot to transfer the delinquent Jersey City franchise, makes the chances of securing these two cities as one of the legs upon which the new class "A" circuit was to stand upon an impossibility.

It is a foregone conclusion that the six clubs in Western Ontario, including Toronto, are not given to again making any effort to have Ottawa in the league next year. The reason for this is plain. Ever since Ottawa was admitted to the Canadian League it would hardly be fair to Ottawa to state that no western club ever made a cent on a trip to Ottawa, but that about expresses the opinion the owners of the teams in the west held.

In case the European war continues after April, there is little chance that a Canadian League would be advisable next year, and the outlook at the present time is such. In the event that peace is eclared before that, a class "B" or a class "C" league in Ontario would be out of the question, and the sooner the owners come to realize this, the better for the game. The old class "D" circuit composed of the original six clubs, will be plenty good enough under the existing circumstances, and to figure Ottawa in on that would be utterly out of the question.

The important basis most minor leagues base their business upon is in the sale of promising young ball players and the chances for this is even greater when the league plays in lower classification, since the majors realize that small or rather low classified leagues harbor more young and cheap ball players. Players who practically play with the idea of graduating and not for the salary they get from a class "D" league are more liable to have unbounded ambitions to get in faster company. It is this spirit that major leagues are seeking and a sample of this is shown in the number of players who were bought and drafted from the Michigan State League, which is only a class "D" organization.

Berlin, Guelph and Galt baseball fans are clamouring for an opportunity to get a Canadian league franchise and Owner O'Neill, of the Erie franchise, could easily gain their sentiments about next season should he desire them before the annual meeting of the Canadian league is held.

FOOTBALL

In an interesting game of football played at the King Edward grounds yesterday, the King Edward team defeated the Central team by 2 goals to 1. The goals for King Edward school were scored by Jackson and Taylor, while Sherrett counted for the Centrals. Mr. Rossel refereed satisfactorily.

GRAPPLED WITH ROBBER.

Brampton Child Seized Burglar To Save Her Mother.

BRAMPTON, Nov. 6.—Burglary is rampant in Brampton, three residences having been entered this week. About midnight Wednesday the home of Charles Booth, Main street south, was invaded. Mr. Booth is only at home during the week-end, and the only occupants of the house were Mrs. Booth, her 13-year-old daughter Jessie, and Mrs. Booth's father, Henry Schooley. Mrs. Booth was awakened by a man standing by her bedside. When asked what he wanted a handkerchief was stuffed in her mouth, but her daughter Jessie, who was in another bed, grappled with the burglar and called for her grandfather. Managing to free one arm, the burglar struck the little girl in the face and broke away. Mr. Schooley rushed to telephone the police but found the wires cut and the burglar escaped. In his haste to get away the burglar left a 32-calibre revolver behind him.

Revolt In South Africa Crushed.

LONDON, Nov. 6.—A Cape Town despatch to the Reuter Telegram Co. declares that the rebellion of Gen. Christian F. Beyers in the Western Transvaal and the mutiny of Lt.-Col. Solomon Garhardus in Northwest Cape Town now appear to be completely crushed.

Unofficial reports, according to the despatch, indicate that something resembling an armistice is being observed. The rebels are still collected at certain points in the northern Free State, but all these points are marked by adequate loyal commandos.

Will Follow Husband.

Mrs. Hamilton Gault will follow her husband, the Montreal millionaire, who equipped the Princess Patricia Light Infantry, to the front. Mr Gault is a major with the regiment while Mrs. Gault is joining the British Red Cross corps.

DR. GORDON'S FAREWELL

tor. Everything depends upon the spirit of the occupant of the pew.

With reference to the question, "Should a Protestant Marry a Catholic," Dr. Gordon affirmed that the judgment of both the Roman Catholic priest and the Protestant clergyman, was to the effect that while sometimes very happy relationship resulted from the marriage between the representatives of the two great divisions of modern Christianity, yet, it was not safe for people to marry when they differed on things as fundamental, as that which divides the Roman Catholic and the Protestant churches. Dr. Gordon felt that he had the backing of both priest and preacher, when he ventured to advise young people not to violate the fundamental religious convictions which possessed them when they organized a home.

Dr. Gordon affirmed that the world is growing better and not worse. That no man can read history and come to any other conclusion than that the effect of Christianity in the world had been to improve and brighten. If one will simply stop for a moment and think of the Coleseum of Rome and five hundred years of bloodshed, not for war but for pleasure, and remember how the pleasures of the world have been improved, purified and elevated, they can only come to one conclusion, namely; that humanity is gradually rising to higher standards and to higher conditions.

He expressed his faith and confidence in the character of the man who stands in the Christian pulpit on the North American continent. He believes they are honest and sincere. That they express the convictions which have taken hold of mind and conscience and soul. That the preachers as a class, are not dominated by the Board of Management and ecclesiastical officials, but bravely and courageously utter the innermost convictions with reference to the fundamental facts and ideas of Christianity, and in their application to everyday affairs.

He thought that in a political campaign, a preacher should speak his mind, without partizanship or political bias. He rather thought that this should be done a month or so prior to that time when men lose their reason and common sense in the heat of a great political contest.

He did not believe in a standing army. A standing army is a standing invitation to fight. The untrained man who fights for his home and for his flag, is a better fighter than the trained man whose only ambition is a military promotion.

In answering the question, "Can a Man Make a Million Dollars Honestly," Dr. Gordon affirmed that in these days a million dollars was not a large amount of money. That he believed that some men were naturally gifted for the accumulation of wealth. In his opinion, it was a crime for certain men not to be rich, and an indication that they have mis-used their talents and failed to avail themselves of their opportunities. The question with reference to a man's wealth, is not the size of it, but the use which he makes of it, and the only solution for our race, commercially and socially, inside say, the next fifty or seventy-five years, will be expressed in on sentence, "What does the man of large wealth do with his wealth?"

In conclusion, Dr. Gordon asked the people who attended the meetings of this campaign to be loyal to church and pastor. Whether Protestant or Catholic, a man owes it to the welfare of the community, his home and his nation, to be true to his own church. Young people beginning married life and establishing a home, could do nothing better than at the same time to identify themselves with the church of their choice, and if at any of these meetings of this campaign, man or woman have received an inspiration and passed over the line into the Kingom of God, the Doctor knew of no better or more dignified way to place their faith in Christ, than to unite with the church, and he hoped at an early communion, after the conclusion of this campaign, multitudes would see fit to inaugurate a new life and higher aspirations, by identifying themselves with the Church of God.

Reverend Mr. Pogue of St. Paul's church, concluded by expressing on behalf of the committee and those interested in this campaign, their deep appreciation for the manner in which this camaign had been conducted by Dr. Gordon and his colleagues.

Doctor and Mrs. Gordon, who are stopping at the Oriental Hotel, will leave Peterborough on Saturday morning for Ottawa, where Dr. Gordon will conduct a Citizenship Campaign under the special auspices of the Presbyterian churches of the Capital City. The first week's service will be held in the Chalmers' Presbyterian church, and the plans for the Ottawa campaign are so comprehensive and well carried out that Dr. Gordon is looking forward to a most enthusiastic reception and a delightful period of delivering his plain talks on Christian Citizenship.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Nov. 5.—Lively profit-taking, due to the fact that prices had risen to a higher level than at any time since early in September, brought about a decided downward swing today in wheat. The market closed heavy 7-8c to 1 3-8c under last night. Corn suffered a net loss of 3-8c to 3-4c and oats of 3-8c to 1-2c. Provisions wound up unchanged to 20c higher.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Nov. 5.—The opening was strong on the Winnipeg market, caused by higher Liverpool cables and British millers buying heavily. Wheat prices were ½c to ⅝c higher, oats ½c to ⅝c higher, and flax 1⅝c to 2¼c higher. Following the opening there were further advances to the extent of ⅛c to ¼c, which placed May wheat about noon at $1.25 with the undertone strong. The heavy primary receipts in the south and receipts from the Canadian west tended to hold prices steady. The export business continues decidedly active and overnight offers were accepted this morning.

Anticipations were that more transactions in this line would be carried thru today.

A late despatch claiming a big victory for the Russians over the Germans broke the prices sharply and values declined under the previous low points for the day. Closing figures were ⅝c to ⅞c lower for wheat and ⅛c to ¼c lower for oats. Flax, on the other hand, closed higher, 1⅜c to 4⅛c.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Nov. 5.—The foreign demand for Manitoba spring wheat continues good and as cables were stronger at a further advance of 3d to 6d per quarter considerable business was done for December shipment from West St. John, from which port there was also a good demand for ocean grain room. One tramp vessel was engaged to sail from [illegible] quarter which is the highest rate paid this year so far. There was also some demand on spot for wheat and sales of 50,000 of No. 2 northern were made at 1.26⅝ per bushel c.i.f. the bay.

The market for oats continues strong and prices show a further advance of ⅛ to ¼c per bushel, but the demand is still somewhat limited. There was an improved demand from foreign buyers for low grade spring wheat flour today and sales of some round lots were made but the bids for export patent were 5d per sack below what millers are disposed to accept. Mill feed in good demand and firmer with sales of carlots for December shipment at $25 for bran and $27 for shorts.

TURK ARMY IN MOTION.

90,000 Men Massed Along Caucasian Border—Many Villages Occupied.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 5. — A Turkish army, 90,000 strong consisting of the 9th, 10th and 11th army corps, is massed along the Caucasian frontier according to the Novoe Vremya.

Many villages have been occupied by the outposts of this army.

This Turkish army, the Novoe Vremya continues would consist under normal conditions of 80 battalions of infantry, sixty batteries of artillery containing 240 guns, and forty squadrons of regular cavalry, but to it has been added fifty regiments of Kurd cavalry, amounting to 20,000 men.

Russia's sudden and energetic advance into Turkey is believed in Petrograd to have meant to disband and overawe the Kurd tribes, who are little interested in the success of Turkish arms and are more concerned in the safety of their own villages. Among the towns occupied by the Russians is Ashty, an important junction of the highways to the upper Euphrates River.

It is rumoured in Petrograd that General Sanders Pasha will assume command of the Turkish troops on the Caucasian front.

WEDDING BELLS

McGarry—Conroy.

A very quiet wedding was celebrated on November the fifth at Holy Rosary Cathedral, Vancouver, B.C., by Rev. Dr. O'Boyle, when Miss Daisy Conroy, Peterborough, Ont., was united in marriage to Mr. Stephen J. McGarry, of Seattle, Wash. The bride was given away by her brother, Dr. R. J. Conroy, of Portland, Oregon, and was unattended.

NEWS FROM THE WIRES

The winter sailings of the White Star Line steamer Olympic have been cancelled, and yesterday the members of her crew were paid off.

Mrs. Catherine Roddy, aged 99, is dead at the County of Hastings House of Refuge, where she had been an inmate for over five years. She was born in Ireland in 1815.

The order closing the Chicago yards, on account of the widespread epidemic of foot and mouth disease, was yesterday afternoon extended to cover all yards and pens in the state.

Jay Bennett, whose home is near Marlbank, in Hungerford Township, was in the woods shooting with some companions, when he was shot through the heart, death being instantaneous.

James Sewards, aged 64, coal merchant, died suddenly of paralysis in his office yesterday in Kingston. He had lived in the Limestone City all his life. A wife, two sons and two daughters survive him.

The Panama Canal is again open to traffic. Col. Goethals cabled yesterday that shipping began passing Wednesday afternoon through a channel opened through the recent landslides north of Gold Hill.

Orders have been received by the military authorities at Kingston to organize a new battery for overseas duty with the second contingent. It will be composed of 145 men, 126 horses and four 18-pounder guns.

Luigi Rava, Minister of Finance, who held office in the new Italian Cabinet, announced Wednesday, was replaced yesterday by Signor Danco, until now Minister of Public Instruction. In the latter office Danco is succeeded by Signor Grippo.

TO JOIN GEN. FRENCH?

The Prince of Wales Will Probably Go To the Front.

LONDON, Nov. 6.—The Prince of Wales, who since he joined the army at the beginning of the war has been importuning his father and Lord Kitchener for permission to go to the front, will probably soon have his wish gratified. The prince may join Sir John French's staff. His regiment, the Grenadier Guards, is now in the thick of the fight.

Army Aviator Killed.

ALDERSHOT, Eng., Nov. 6.—Aviator Dunk of the aircraft staff was burned to death in midair yesterday when the biplane which he was testing caught fire.

While about 1,000 feet above the ground the biplane suddenly burst into flames. Dunk tried to descend by gliding. He continued this for nearly a mile, the aircraft blazing furiously. The aviator was burned to death before the machine struck the ground.

Jiddah Not Bombarded.

LONDON, Nov. 6.—The report sent from London Wednesday night that the British cruiser Minerva had bombarded the Arabian seaport of Jiddah, on the Red Sea, is devoid of foundation. The Minerva has not been within 500 miles of the place.

On issuing this denial yesterday the London official press bureau publishes the text of a proclamation circulated in India pledging the British Government not to molest holy places in Arabia.

Cyprus Annexed By British.

LONDON, Nov. 6. — Great Britain yesterday formally annexed the Island of Cyprus, in the Mediterranean, which nominally formed a part of the Turkish Empire.

The defensive alliance between Great Britain and Turkey having become annulled by the outbreak of war, the British Government decided that it was necessary to appropriate the island in order that proper provision might be made for its government and for its protection.

AUSTRIAN LOSS, 1,000,000

Would Have Been Wiped Out Now But for Germany

NEW YORK, Nov. 5—Dr. J. C. Kluthe of Los Angeles, returned from Europe yesterday on the Atlantic Transport liner, Minnetonka, after serving two months as surgeon in the Austrian Red Cross.

"The Austrians estimate their losses at 1,000,000" he said. "Of that number 400,000 are wounded, 200,000 dead, and 300,000 prisoners. Had it not been for the support of Germany, Austria would have been wiped out long ago.

Russians Only 240 Miles From Berlin

RUSSIAN VICTORY ON GALICIAN BORDER

Grand Duke Nicholas Reports Another Complete Success With Austrians in Full Retreat to Fortified Positions Near Cracow---Russian Troops Are Elated by Their Advances.

LONDON, Nov. 6.—The following message has been received by Lord Kitchener from the Grand Duke Nicholas, Commander-in-chief of Russian forces:

"Following our successes upon the Vistula, a complete victory has just been gained by our troops along the whole of the front in Galicia. Our strategical manoeuvre has thus been crowned by what is incontestably the greatest success gained on our side since the beginning of the war. I am most confident of the speedy and entire accomplishment of our common task, persuaded as I am that decisive victory will be gained by the allied armies."

LONDON, Nov. 7. — The Morning Post correspondent at Petrograd says:

The Austrians are in full retreat over the entire Galician front. The movement is such as to indicate less a general defeat than a general obedience to orders to withdraw.

The Russians have been pressing with great energy upon the upper Vistula and San fronts, especially since the settlement of the main fight farther north against the German and mixed forces, but it was understood the Austrians were in possession of strong fortified positions which were still giving the Russians considerable trouble in spite of their constantly increasing numbers.

Russian Reinforcements.

On that subject by the way, I cannot too frequently correct the repeated error in the press about Russia piling up numbers at the front only in proportion as her mobilization reaches the more and more distant regions of the vast Empire. This is altogether wrong, but it is recognized here as a natural mistake for the British who are engaged in procuring and training volunteers in batches progressively. Russia maintains a large army at all times, and since the Japanese war this has become a new army in many senses. I have before explained how the Grand Duke takes to the fighting front sufficient men for the purpose of his strategic plan. Behind these and within easy reach are others ready to fill the gaps in the fighting line, and these constitute practically the second army, while far away, at home and in distant provinces yet another army is being polished up. Ever since the war began a continual flow in regular sequence has been taking place, and thus the fighting front is always kept up to full strength. From remarks in the British press one might suppose the mobilization of Russia meant that every able-bodied man is being enrolled for active service in the army and getting there as fast as the distance and sparse means of communication permit. This ridiculous notion would bring twenty million men at least into the field. Russia does not want them, but she takes all the men she wants as she wants them. It may be accepted that for every regiment at the fighting front there is a duplicate partly at the front, to fill gaps in the fighting line, while at more distant bases a second duplicate is having the final polish put on and is moving up as required.

Dead Piled up in Swathes.

I hear that the dead before the Russian lines where they were not heaps, were regular swathes, mowed down by Maxim fire during repeated and heroic attempts to force the Russian defences. Among the dead are a painfully noticeable proportion of boys of sixteen and seventeen years

OFFICIAL REPORT OF GOOD HOPE

Sunk With Rear Admiral Craddock and Crew of Nine Hundred--Monmouth Near Chilean Shore, May Be Safe

FLEET SOUGHT FIGHT

LONDON, Nov. 6.— The following statement from the Admiralty was issued to-night by the Official Press Bureau:

"The Admiralty now has received trustworthy information about the action on the Chilean Coast.

"During Sunday, the 1st of November, the Good Hope, Monmouth and Glasgow came up with the Scharnhorst, Gneisenau, Leipzig and Dresden. Both squadrons were steaming south in a strong wind and a considerable sea. The German squadron declined action until sunset, when the light gave it an important advantage. The action lasted an hour.

Good Hope Took Fire.

"Early in the action both the Good Hope and Monmouth took fire, but fought until nearly dark, when a serious explosion occurred on the Good Hope and she foundered.

"The Monmouth hauled off at dark, making water badly, and appeared unable to steam away. She was accompanied by the Glasgow, which had meanwhile during the whole action fought the Leipzig and Dresden. On the enemy again approaching the wounded Monmouth, the Glasgow which also was under fire from one of the armoured cruisers, drew off. The enemy then attacked the Monmouth again, but with what result is not known. The Glasgow is not extensively damaged and has very few casualties.

"Neither the Otranto nor the Canopus was engaged.

May be the Monmouth.

"Reports received by the Foreign Office from Valparaiso state that a belligerent warship is ashore on the Chilean coast, and it is possible that this may prove to be the Monmouth. Energetic measures are being taken on this assumption to rescue the survivors.

"The action appears to the Admiralty to have been most gallantly contested, but in the absence of the Canopus the enemy's preponderance in force was considerable."

Chose to Give Battle.

This was the news given to the British public by the Admiralty this evening just as the people were beginning to think that the German accounts of the result of the battle in the Pacific had been exaggerated. The only bit of satisfaction for the British is that their little Pacific fleet had itself chosen to give battle to a very much stronger squadron, and had not been overwhelmed until the last possible shot had been fired at the enemy.

The British cruiser Glasgow, which was with the Good Hope and Monmouth, also put up a fight against the two German cruisers Leipzig and Dresden and when her bigger sisters were put out of action managed to escape.

Lived up to Tradition.

Rear-Admiral Cradock lived up to his reputation of being one of the followers of that naval school which believes that the enemy should be engaged no matter what his superiority. According to the Admiralty, it was he who brought about the action, for the German squadron at first was disinclined to give battle. It was only when dusk came on and the light was in their favour that the Germans engaged the British, who were three to their four, while superiority in number of range guns was also in favour of the Germans. The battleship Canopus, which was sent to reinforce Rear-Admiral Cradock, had not arrived in time to place the advantage on the British side, and the British transport Otranto was of no value in the fight against armoured ships.

The loss of the ships and men, but particularly the latter, is a matter of deep regret in England.

MISSED KAISER BY 20 MINUTES

British Aviators Demolished Chateau He Had Just Left

PARIS, Nov. 7.—The Belgian Government officially confirms the fact that the British attempt to demolish the headquarters of the German General Staff at Thielt, while the Kaiser and his Chief Generals were in the building, failed by only twenty minutes.

Having a report that the Kaiser was to review part of his troops in that vicinity, British aviators proceeded to the scene, flying very high. They swooped down across the chateau, which was occupied by the Duke of Wurtemburg and his staff, and launched half a dozen bombs, completely demolishing the building. Twenty civilians and two minor staff officers were wounded and two soldiers killed. The Kaiser, however, had left twenty minutes before in his armoured car.

AN UNCONFIRMED RUMOUR OF CAPTURE OF GERMAN SHIPS

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Nov. 7.—An unconfirmed report cabled from Tokio to-day, says that a Japanese fleet in the Pacific has captured the German cruisers Scharnhorst and Gneisenau, which on Sunday defeated Admiral Cradock's squadron. The report from Tokio says that the cruisers were caught while coaling. The Admiralty has no confirmation of the report. The claim that cruisers could be taken while coaling does not seem credible, inasmuch as they took on coal and supplies at Valparaiso on Monday.

Honduras exports much of its sarsaparilla to Russia, where it is used as a tea.

WHEAT PRICES SHOWS STRENGTH

Close Firm With Advance—Staples Finished Higher

ARGENTINE INQUIRY

CHICAGO, Nov. 6.—Notwithstanding that sharp advance in ocean freight rates checked demand from exporters, wheat prices to-day showed considerable strength, the result largely of fear that the Argentine crop had suffered serious damage. There was a firm close at 1-2c to 3-4c net advance. Other leading staples, too, all finished higher compared with last night—corn 5-8c to 3-4c., oats 3-8c to 3-4c and provisions 25c to 67 1-2c.

Say Injury Severe

How much harm had been done by cold and frost to wheat in Argentina could not be inferred, but some experts were not slow to assert that the injury was severe. It is said the crop there was at a critical stage, and that frost after frost, such as reported, could not fail to have done much mischief and may have caused an approach to disaster Decidedly higher quotations at Rosario and Buenos Aires appeared to bear out this view, and helped to lift the market here.

Continued heavy receipts at primary points in the United States led to a reaction in prices, but the effect failed to last. It was asserted that in many cases the arrivals were being counted twice, first at southwestern markets and again at Chicago, or first at Minneapolis and later at Duluth. A distinct falling off in the spring crop movement was said to be noticeable, and there were late reports of flour sold at Chicago for shipment to Europe

SURRENDER OF TSING-TAU FORT

To Japanese and British forces Announced This Morning --Last of German Possessions on the Asiatic Mainland --Has Held Out Nearly Three Months After a Stubborn Defence---Many Prisoners Taken.

TOKIO, Saturday, Nov. 7, 11.30 a.m. —The German fortress of Tsing-tau stronghold and chief settlement of the colony of Kiau-Chau in the Shantung province of China, has surrendered to the Japanese and British forces, according to official announcement made here this morning.

The first step in bringing about the surrender of the fortress, the announcement says, occurred at midnight Friday, when the infantry charged and occupied the middle fort of the first line of defence. Two hundred prisoners were taken by the allies in this operation.

The fall of Tsing-tau ends the most picturesque of the minor phases of the great world war now raging. On two continents and in many of the islands of the seas where colonies of the warring nations were planted, combats of more or less interest have take place, garrisons have been captured and towns occupied peacefully, but in the little German concession on the south side of the Shantung peninsula of China there has been going on since late in August a reduced scale of war that from all accounts has duplicated nearly all the features of those battles in Europe that have resulted in the capture of fortified positions.

The capture of Tsing-tau loses to Germany her last foot of possessions on the Asiatic mainland, as well as her last strategic position outside of the German Empire in Europe. For nearly three months the German garrison amounting to about 7,000 men has held out against the land and sea attacks of the Japanese and of certain British detachments of both white and Indian troops that found themselves in China at the outbreak of the war. What the losses of the garrison have been are not known but the official Japanese and British reports have indicated that Tsing-tau has been taken at a heavy cost of men on the part of the allies.

Key to North China.

Kiau-Chau has been described as the key to Northern China, and it was because of its strategic value that Germany decided to seize it in 1897, although the ostensible reason was retaliation for the killing of two German missionaries. Four months later, in February, 1898, it was announced that the bay and province had been leased from the Chinese for a period of 99 years.

ITALY REMAIN NEUTRAL?

Embassy at Washington Thinks She Will Do So.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—Formation of the new Italian Cabinet, news of which officially reached the Embassy here to-day, probably will mean the continuation of Italy's policy of strict neutrality, according to opinions expressed at the Embassy.

"The appointment of Baron Sidney Sonnino as Minister of Foreign Affairs," said an Italian official to-day, "does not mean a change of policy, but with a Cabinet representing more broadly the various elements of the country, the Government's policy will be a more truly national expression of Italy's interests."

SEVERE PAINS AROUND THE HEART

Are Nearly Always Caused by Stomach Trouble

Don't let a pain in the region of the heart frighten you into thinking you have heart disease Just as a pain in the back seldom indicates kidney trouble, so pain near the heart is scarcely ever present in organic heart disease The pain is nearly always caused by stomach trouble for the stomach and heart are connected by many nerves, and gas on the stomach causes pressure on the heart.

The alarming pains will disappear if you tone up the stomach, eat the right things and don't worry. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are the best stomach tonic. One or two Pills after each meal soon produces a healthy appetite, the food does not distress you, you are no longer troubled with gas, sour risings in the throat, and those misleading pains around the heart. Strength and energy return, and the rich, red blood, carries renewed vitality to every part of the body. Mrs. Henry Connolly, Brookvale, P.E.I., says: "For a number of years I was a great sufferer from indigestion which, despite all the treatment I took, was gradually growing worse. I would sometimes feel as though I was smothering, and when the trouble came on I would suffer from violent palpitation and pains around the heart which greatly alarmed me I was under the doctor's treatment for a long time, but with no benefit A friend suggested Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I decided to try them. In about a month I felt much better and by the time I had taken another four boxes I was in the best of health and able to eat all kinds of nourishing food It is now several years since I was cured and I have never felt a symptom of indigestion since. I take every opportunity of recommending Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to friends who are ailing."

If your dealer does not keep these Pills you can get them by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. Brockville, Ont.

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Geo. Allan England

Painfully she began to climb the stepped path toward the upper level and Cliff Villa. And again it seemed to her the depths were calling; but now she felt positive she heard a voice—a voice she knew but could not exactly place—a hail very far away yet near — all very strange, unreal and terrifying.

"Oh—am I going to be ill?" she panted. "No, no! I mustn't! For the boy's sake, I mustn't! I can't!"

With a tremendous effort, now crawling rather than walking—for her knees were as water—the girl dragged herself up the path almost to her doorway.

Again she heard the call, this time no hallucination, but reality.

"Beatrice! Beatrice!" the voice was shouting. "O-he! Beatrice!"

His hail! Allan's!

Her heart stopped, a long minute, and then, leaping with joy, a very anguish of revulsion from long pain, thrashed terribly in her breast.

Gasping with emotion, burned with the first sudden onset of a consuming fever, half-blind, shivering, parched and in agony, the girl made a tremendous effort to hear, to see, to understand.

"Allan! Allan!" she shouted wildly. "Where are you? Where?"

"Beatrice! Here! On the bridge! I'm coming!"

She turned her dimming eyes toward the suspension bridge hung high above the swift and lashing rapids of New Hope River—the bridge, a cobweb-strand in space, across the chasm.

There it seemed to her, though now she could be sure of nothing, so strangely did the earth and sky and cliffs, the bridge, the jungle, all dance and interplay—there, it seemed, she saw a moving figure.

Dishevelled, torn, almost naked, lame and slow, yet with something still of power and command in its bearing, this figure was advancing over the swaying path of bamboo-rods lashed to the cables of twisted fibre.

Now it halted as in exhaustion and great pain; now, once more, it struggled forward, limping, foot by foot; crawling, hanging fast to the ropes like some great insect meshed in the wind-swung filaments.

She saw it, and she knew the truth at last.

"Allan! Allan—come quick! Help me—help!"

Then she collapsed. At her door she fell. All things blent and swirled, faded, darkened.

She knew no more.

CHAPTER XXIV.

"THE BOY IS GONE!"

The man, weak, wounded, racked with exhaustion from the terrible ordeal of the past days, felt fresh vigour leap through his spent veins at sight of her distress, afar.

He broke into a strange, limping run across the slight and shaking bridge; and as he ran he called to her, words of cheer and greeting, words of encouragement and love.

But when, having penetrated the palisaded area and stumbled down the terraces, he reached her side, he stopped short, shaking, speechless, with wide and terror-stricken eyes.

"Beatrice! Beta! My God, what's—what's happened here?" he stammered, kneeling beside her, raising her in his weakened arms, covering her pallid face with kisses, chafing her throat, her temples, her hands.

The girl gave no sign of returning consciousness. Allan stared about him, sensing a great and devastating change since his departure, but as yet unable to comprehend its nature.

Giddy himself with the loss of blood and terrible fatigues, he hardly more than half saw what lay before him; yet he knew catastrophe had befallen Settlement Cliffs.

The river now foamed through strange new obstructions. A whole section of the cliff was gone. No sign of life at all was to be seen anywhere down the terraces or paths.

None of the Folk, their blinking eyes shielded by their mica glasses from the morning sun, were drying fish or fruit at the frames.

The nets hung brown and stiff and dry; they should, at this hour, have been limp and wet, from the night's fishing. The life of the colony, he knew, had suddenly and for some incomprehensible reason stopped, as a watch stops when the spring is broken.

And, worse than all, here Beatrice now lay in his arms, stricken by some strange malady. He could not know the cause—the sleepless nights, the terrible toil, the shattering nervous strain of catastrophe, of nursing, of the swife rebellion.

But he saw plainly now, the girl was burning with fever. And, raising his face to heaven, he uttered a cry, half a groan, half a sob—the cry of a soul racked too long upon the torture-wheel of fate.

"But—but where's the boy?" he asked himself, striving to recover his self-control; trying to understand, to act, to save. "What's happened here? God knows! An earthquake? Disaster, at any rate! Beatrice! Oh, my Beta! Speak to me!"

Unable to solve any of the terrible problems now beating in upon him, he raised her still higher in his arms.

Loudly he shouted for help down the terrace, calling on his Folk to show themselves; to come to him and obey.

But though the shattered cliff rang with his commands, no one appeared. In all seeming as deserted and as void of human life as on the first day he and Beta had set foot there, the canyon brooded under the morning sun, and for all answer rose only the foaming tumult of the rapids far below.

"Merciful Heavens, I've got to do something!" cried Allan, forgetting his own lacerations and his pain, in this supreme crisis. "She—she's sick! She's got a fever! I've got to put her to bed anyhow! After that we'll see!"

With a strength he knew not lay now in his wasted arms, he lifted her bodily and carried her to the door of Cliff Villa, their home among the massive buttresses of rock.

But, to his vast astonishment and terror, he found the door refused to open. It was fast barred inside.

Even from his own house he found himself shut out, an exile and a stranger!

Loudly he shouted for admission, savagely beat upon the planks, all to no purpose. There came no sound from within, no answering word or sign.

Eagerly listening for perhaps the cry of his child, he heard nothing. A tomb-like silence brooded there, as in all the stricken colony.

Then Allan, fired with a burning fury, laid the girl down again, and seizing a great boulder from the top of the parapet that guarded the terraced walk, dashed it against the door. The planks groaned and quivered, but held.

Recoiling, exhausted by even this single effort, the dishevelled, wounded man stared with haggard eyes at the barrier.

The very strength he had put into that door to guard his treasures, his wife and his son, now defied him. And a curse, bitter as death, burst from his trembling lips.

But now he heard a sound, a word, a phrase or two of incoherent speech.

Whirling he saw the girl's mouth move. In her delirium she was speaking.

He knelt again beside her, cradled her in his arms, kissed and cherished her—and he heard broken, disjointed words—words that filled him with a passionate rage and overpowering woe.

"So many dead—so many!—And so many dying.—You, H'yemba! You beast! Let me go!—Oh, when the master comes!"

Allan understood at last. His mind now clear, despite the maddening torments of the past week, grasped the situation in a kind of supersensitive clairvoyance.

As by a lightning flash on a dark night, so now the blackness of his wonder, of this mystery, all stood instantly illumined. He understood.

"What incredible fiendishness!" he exclaimed, quite slowly, as though unable to imagine it in human bounds. "At a time of disaster and of death, such as has smitten the colony—what hellish villainy!"

He said no more, but in his eyes burned the fire that meant death, instant and without reprieve.

First he looked to his automatic; but, alas, not one cartridge remained either in its magazine or in the pouches of his belt. The fouled and blackened barrel told something of the terrible story of the past few days.

"Gone, all gone," he muttered; but, with sudden inspiration, bent over the girl.

"Ah! Ammunition gone!"

Quickly he reloaded from her belts. One belt he buckled round his wait. Then, pistol in hand, he thought swiftly.

Thus his mind ran; The first thing to do is look out for Beatrice, and make her comfortable—find out what the matter is with her, and give treatment. I need fresh water, but I daren't go down to the river for it and leave her here. At any minute H'yemba may appear. And when he does, I must see him first.

"Evidently the thing most necessary is to gain access to our home. How can it be locked, inside, when Beatrice is here? Heaven only knows! There may be enemies in there at this minute. H'yemba may be there—"

Anguish pierced his soul at the thought of his son now possibly in the smith's power.

"By God!" he cried, "something has got to be done, and quick!"

His rage was growing by leaps and bounds.

He advanced to the door, and putting the muzzle of his automatic almost on the lock, shattered it with six heavy bullets.

Again he dashed the boulder against the door. It groaned and gave.

Reloading ere he ventured in, he now set his shoulder to the door and forced it slowly open, with the pistol always ready his eyes caught on the darkened corners of the room. Here, there they pierced, striving to determine whether any ambushed foe were lying there in wait for him.

"Surrender!" he cried loudly in the Merucean tongue. "If there be any here who war with me, surrender! At the first sign of fight, you die!"

No answer.

Still leaving the girl beside the broken door till he should feel positive there was no peril—and always filled with a vast wonder how the door could have been locked from within—Allan advanced slowly, cautiously, into their home.

He was cool now — cool and strong again. The frightful perils and exposures of the week past seemed to have fallen from him like an outworn mantle.

He ignored his pain and weakness as though such things were not. And, with index on trigger, eyes watchful and keen, he scouted down the cave-dwelling.

Suddenly he stopped.

"Who's there?" he challenged loudly.

At the left of the room, not far from the big fireplace, he had perceived a dim, vague figure, prone upon the floor.

"Answer, or a shoot!"

But the figure remained motionless. Allan realised there was no fight in it. Still cautiously, however, he advanced.

Now he touched the figure with his foot, now bent above it and peered down.

"Old Gesafam! Heaven above. Wounded! What does this mean?"

Starting back, he stared in horror at the old woman, stunned and motionless, with the blood coagulating along an ugly cut on her forehead.

Then, as though a prescience had swept his being, he sprang to the bed.

"My son! My boy! Where are you?" he shouted hoarsely.

With a shaking hand he flung down the bedclothes of finely woven palm fibre.

"My boy! My boy!"

The bed was empty. His son had disappeared.

"I have been a sufferer from headache since childhood and have used all, or nearly all, of the so-called "cures" on the market. Some months since my attention was called to your Zutoo Tablets and I have been using them ever since with the most gratifying results. I find they cure a "sick" or "nervous" headache in a few minutes and leave no bad effect. My family use them whenever needed with equally good results. I have frequently given them to friends who were suffering from headache and they never failed to give quick relief. I find them a good remedy for "sour" stomach as well as headache. I always carry them in my grip on the road and would not be without them at any cost."

AFTER SUFFERING TWO LONG YEARS
Mrs. Aselin Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Minneapolis, Minn.—"After my little one was born I was sick with pains in my sides which the doctors said were caused by inflammation. I suffered a great deal every month and grew very thin. I was under the doctor's care for two long years without any benefit. Finally after repeated suggestions to try it we got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. After taking the third bottle of the Compound I was able to do my housework and today I am strong and healthy again. I will answer letters if anyone wishes to know about my case."—Mrs. JOSEPH ASELIN, 628 Monroe St., N.E., Minneapolis, Minn.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and today holds the record of being the most successful remedy we know for woman's ills. If you need such a medicine why don't you try it?

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

WOUNDED CALL CZAR'S SISTER 'ANGEL-COMFORTER'

Officer Tells How Grand Duchess Olga Ministers Unceasingly to Soldiers Sent to Hospital

PETROGRAD, Nov. 6—An elderly field officer relates the following story:

"On arriving from the battlefield, where I was wounded by three bullets from a machine gun, I was brought to the hospital of Rovno, where the Grand Duchess Olga Alexandrovna is working.

"I saw her Imperial Highness on the first evening when we arrived. The Grand Duchess, in the white dress and cap of a hospital nurse, with the badge of the Red Cross on her breast and a towel thrown over her shoulder, was standing near an officer with a bad wound in his side, which a doctor was just dressing. When they had done with the officer I bowed to the august Sister of Mercy; she graciously tendered me her hand, which I kissed.

"She made me sit down on a stool, asked me about my wound, and, calling up another Sister of Mercy, left me. It was evening when my wounds were dressed, and I was put to bed. At 7 o'clock in the morning Her Highness came up to me, sat down near my bed and began to ask me about how I was wounded, about the battle, about my family.

"I answered all her questions. I was unable to take my eyes off the kind face of the Grand Duchess.

"Near me lay a captain who had been seriously wounded. He turned his head toward us; the Grand Duchess leaned down to his face and asked in a low tone whether he wanted anything; then, slowly and tenderly stroking his face, she said:

"'You are better to-day; let me take your temperature.'

CHIDED BY GRAND DUKE.

"At that moment a tall admiral entered the ward. He was visiting the wounded and approached us.

"'Lolia' (diminutive pet name for Olga), he said to the Grand Duchess, 'you will be quite ill; go lie down.'

"I afterwards learnt that he was the Grand Duke Alexander Mikhailovitch.

"'Well, how are you getting on, captain?' he asked my neighbour.

"'Pretty well,' answered the other. 'I am worried about one thing but as to my wound that is nothing; it is doing well.'

"'What is worrying you?' asked the Grand Duke.

"'I had to leave home, and I do not know whether my little son has been received into the Cadet Corps. Did he get in?'

"'He surely got in,' said His Highness. 'You will hear of this to-day.'

"'How so?'

"'Do not be uneasy about it. What is your name? What is the name of your son?'

"The Captain's eyes filled with tears, which rolled down his cheeks. The Grand Duchess got a handkerchief, wiped his tears away, and, saying something in French to the Grand Duke, took out the thermometer.

"'There; you're all right to-day,' said she.

"The Grand Duke went out. The Grand Duchess called another sister, told her to bring tea, and went on to the other beds. All day long I saw Her Highness moving about among the wounded. She either was giving orders, binding up wounds or comforting and soothing the sufferers, then again going off to the operating room.

ALWAYS IN ATTENDANCE.

"I saw her with medicines and basin in her hands during the operations; I saw her day and night, early in the morning and at dinner time and evening too. Constantly and everywhere Russia is able to throw into the field, figure, appearing in all places where help and relief were most needed.

"Her presence alone, with her motherly ways, seemed to bring relief to the wounded and make them brave and patient in bearing their sufferings and pain. This Sister of Mercy was the object of our veneration and unceasing devotion.

"In the evening the Captain received a telegram which was brought to him by the Grand Duke Alexander Mikhailovitch.

"'Your son has been received into the Cadet Corps,' His Highness told him, and the Captain began to murmur words of gratitude.

"'Silence,' said the Grand Duke, with gentle severity. 'You are not to excite yourself. Sister will be angry if you are not calm.'

"Ten days after that I left the hospital. In leaving I went to the Grand Duchess and thanked her. She gave me her hand; then, taking my head in her hands, she said gently, stroking my face:

"'Now, cheer up—and good health.'

"Tears were in my eyes.

"'Your Imperial Highness,' I entreated, 'grant me a favour—write me something in memory of this time.'

"The Grand Duchess took a sheet of paper and wrote in pencil:

"'To Lieut.-Col. N—— of the XX Regiment: In kind remembrance.—Grand Duchess Olga Alexandrovna.'

"I always shall keep this paper, and I will bequeath it to my children to keep as a precious souvenir of the hospital and our 'Angel Comforter,' as all the wounded call the Emperor's sister."

WHEN BLOOD IS POISON

The blood must be altered, otherwise you are poisoned. If the kidneys fail the liver is overworked, and becomes torpid. By using Dr Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills you get both these filtering organs working right, and also ensure healthful action of the bowels. For this reason these pills are our ideal family medicine. They cure biliousness, constipation, chronic indigestion and kidney disease.

What are Peps?

Peps is the name bestowed upon a new scientific preparation put up into tablets—or pastille form, which provides an entirely new and effective treatment for coughs, colds and lung and throat troubles generally.

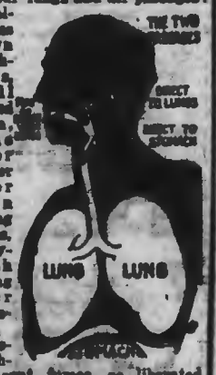
Did it never occur to you as peculiar that when you have a cough or a cold, or any chest trouble, you should apply medicine—not to your lungs, but to your stomach?

Look at it the other way round. Suppose you suffered from some stomach complaint—indigestion or ulceration. How strange you would think it if you were asked to take a medicine which had to be breathed in, and which went—not to your stomach, but to your lungs and breathing passages?

There is no connection between the stomach and the lungs (see diagram below), and when for a cold or a cough or any chest complaint you take some medicine, such as liquid cough mixtures, syrups, lozenges, which go—not to your lungs, but to your stomach—you are wasting time.

Peps—this newest remedy for coughs, colds, and lung troubles—go to the lungs and breathing-tubes, direct. Peps are really pine fumes and certain highly beneficial medicinal extracts specially prepared by a new scientific process and then condensed into tablet form. It is like making a breathable gas solid!

You put a "Pep" on your tongue and let it dissolve. As it does so the healing essences it contains turn into vapor, and you BREATHE them direct to your lungs and air passages!



These healing essences pass down your breathing-tubes, bathing all the inflamed surfaces, which no liquid or solid matter can ever reach, in health-giving pine fumes, and carrying health and healing wherever they penetrate.

These tissue-strengthening, pleasant fumes, so liberated from the dissolving Peps, are not only healing in their operation, they are antiseptic. They kill the germs of consumption, catarrh, and these many and varied throat and lung troubles so common to-day. Peps fumes—like the fumes from nature's Pine woods—get direct to the lungs and chest, and give instant relief to colds, tightness, bronchitis, etc. In short, Peps bring pine forest air to your home!

You have a nasty night cough? Take a Pep before going to bed—your cough will not trouble you! Your lungs are a little weak, and going from the warm house into the cold air outside makes you cough? Just before going out put a Pep in your mouth—there will be no coughing! Your throat feels "stuffed up," your chest feels tight, and your breathing troublesome? Peps will put matters right for you very quickly.

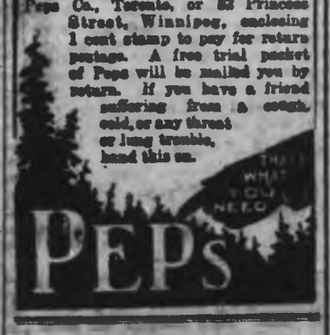
Peps, while gradually turning to vapor as soon as put into the mouth, will retain their greatness indefinitely if kept dry. Each little Peps pastille is packed in an air-tight wrapping, which is easily removed, and they are packed in neat tin pocket boxes. They are not sticky (the minister or public speaker can carry a few loose in the vest pocket); they do not spoil the appetite and ruin the digestion, like cough syrups and mixtures do; and—they DO cure coughs, colds and lung trouble!

Just as the outdoor treatment for consumption—the "breathing" treatment—is now admitted to be the only rational treatment, so the "Peps" treatment for colds and lung troubles is the only rational home treatment.

Peps cure catarrh, coughs, bronchitis, sore throat, tightness or aching across the chest, difficulty in breathing, night cough, hoarseness, asthma, laryngitis, smoker's throat, etc. Best for children because free from opium, morphine, or any poison.

All druggists and stores sell Peps at 50c. a box or 3 for $1.25. Should your dealer be out of stock, order direct (post paid) from Peps Co., Dupont St., Toronto, or 82 Princess St., Winnipeg.

FREE TRIAL.—The proprietors wish this great discovery to be widely appreciated, and have decided to offer a free trial packet to all persons who would like to test this unique remedy. Cut out this article, write across it the name of this paper, and mail it to Peps Co., Toronto, or 82 Princess Street, Winnipeg, enclosing 1 cent stamp to pay for return postage. A free trial packet of Peps will be mailed you by return. If you have a friend suffering from a cough, cold, or any throat or lung trouble, hand this on.



IT OUGHT TO BE.

"What are you going to call the new baby?"

"Reginald Claude," replied Mr Biggins.

"Isn't Reginald Claude a rather affected name?"

"Yes, I want him to grow up to be clubbable, and I fancy that Reginald Claude will start something every time he goes to a new school."

MEN DRESSMAKERS OF PARIS ON DUTY ON FIGHTING LINE

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5.—Anyone who thinks that a man who goes into the dressmaking business is necessarily effeminate has another guess coming—at least so far as the big French dressmakers are concerned.

Practically every one of the "big French dressmakers" went to the front at the first call to arms, according to Miss Gladys Hinckley, one of Washington's most notable belles, recently returned from a strenuous summer abroad, in which only the wearing of the American flag protected her and her mother from insult and injury at the hands of a mob.

"Sous les drapeaux" is the legend that adorns practically all the smart shops of the Rue de la Paix in Paris. Some of them are closed; others are in the hands of underlings and assistants.

It may or may not be true that a new army overcoat has won officer's rank for Poiret; but it is certain that Poiret is seeing service somewhere.

"They told me with pride that he was in his uniform—that ugly, baggy red and blue French uniform—by August 4th," said Miss Hinckley. "It really was a test of patriotism for Paul Poiret to have to get into that. It must fret his artistic soul if he ever looks in the glass.

The Two Worths and Others

"And Poiret was not the only one. The two Worth 'boys'—Jean and Jacques—who are regarded as British because their father was British, in spite of their very French names and their even more French looks; Doeuillet, Wagner of Drecoll's, Winter of Premet's, Bechoff David, Beer, and probably a lot of others that I don't happen to recall, all answered the call. And they did it at the time when it meant the greatest possible loss to them. Really, France could not have chosen a more inconvenient moment for hostilities, so far as the Rue de la Paix was concerned, than about the 1st of August, when all the fall and winter models were either just ready or just not ready to be shown.

"One gets a lot of interesting side lights among the establishments of the Rue de la Paix—which stands for the entire French dressmaking business to the American mind, though half of them are not on the Rue de la Paix, but on the Place Vendome, Avenue de l'Opera, Avenue d'Antin, etc., and all of them are luminous with the fires of French patriotism. All of the great couturiers answered the call when it first sounded, but some who were temporarily stationed in camps near Paris were able for a while to direct their business from camp and continued to design their models there.

Sergt. Poiret.

"Poiret's closed completely the 4th of August, but was able to re-open early in September in charge of one of the head women of the establishment. And since then this creator of fashions, which have made his name a household word on both sides of the Atlantic, is credited with having 'created' a service overcoat, unbelievably ugly, but so splendidly practical that he has been promoted from private to sergeant. He is about the youngest of them all, being still under forty—which is why he was among the first called.

"The elder Worth is the only other instance that occurs to one of so big a reputation in the world of fashion being achieved so young. But their methods are entirely different. A fashion authority has said of them: 'Worth dressed women as they were; Poiret makes them something different, so that he can dress them according to an idea that he has in his mind.'

"Worth is dead, but his two sons are no less patriotic than the others. They also are young enough to be among the first called out; and they were just able to get the fifty new models which they had designed for the fall and winter season off to Britain before going to the front.

Wagner Reported Wounded.

"Winter, another of the younger generation, now manager of the famous house of Premet, went into camp and continued sending from there designs for new gowns. Moreover, in spite of the decree of the syndicate (they have them over there as well as on this side) that under existing conditions there must be no credit to buyers, he insisted on extending credit to every American who had ever had an account with the house of Premet.

"Beer, Bechoff, David, Wagner of Drecoll's, Doeuillet, all shouldered their muskets as soon as war broke out. From Drecoll's door the word 'Vienna' was promptly torn. It is told that Wagner, waiting his orders to mobilize, worked madly putting the finishing touches on one of the best collections of model gowns that the firm has put out in years. When he went to the front his wife, a fascinatingly pretty woman, who is said to be the firm's designer, went immediately to Red Cross work.

"It is rumoured in Paris—but it is a thing hard to prove—that poor M. Wagner has ben wounded."

250,000 PAIRS MITTS.

British War Office Orders Them from Canada.

MONTREAL, Nov. 6.—Requisition from the British War Office for 200,000 pairs of woollen mitts was received by Mr. Frederick Sephart, the purchasing representative, here today. This is the second large order for mitts to be sent to Canada, and will be distributed among many firms without delay.

The large order for flannel shirts, a million in all, may be closed tomorrow.

It is understood that the average price to be paid will not be much short of $1.50 per shirt. This will therefore mean a distribution of about $1,000,000 among Canadian houses.

HOME-COMING OF THE CHILDREN
INFLUENCE OF THE MOTHER'S WELCOME

"I can't stay any longer," said a young mother as she rose and excused herself at the club meeting. "I always make it a point to be in when the children come home from school."

She hurried out of the room. The other mothers exchanged glances. "Over particular, isn't she?" asked one.

"I don't know that she is," answered an older member, thoughtfully. "If I had children at home now I should be just as particular as Mrs. Evans is. I should make it a point to be at home, if I possibly could, when they arrived from school."

"It is long ago," she continued, reminiscently, "but the memories of my school days are still very fresh, especially the times of home-coming. We children really looked forward to those times and we have never forgotten them.

"Mother was a busy woman, but no matter what she had on hand, she was always within call when we got home. We always knew she would come to the door to greet us with a loving kiss. We felt, every one of us, that she was glad to see us home again, glad to have us with her. She took the deepest interest in whatever we had to tell her. We always knew that in mother we would have an interested, sympathizing listener, and that habit of loving confidence saved us from many a pitfall, I am sure.

"If it was in the winter, mother would draw us to the cheerful fire, help us off with our coats, and always had something for us to eat—a slice of home-made bread with sugar or jelly, a cooky or a red apples. Those were happy times! How we loved our mother! There was not one of us who, while we were in school, did not look forward with pleasure to the time when the day's tasks would be over and we would go home to her.

"I can never remember a home-coming that was not exceedingly happy.

"You could never make any of us believe, either when we were children or after we had grown up, that it was a trifling matter that mother was always waiting and watching for us, with her loving welcome, her interest and her sympathy. It is one of the earliest impressions and one of the most lasting influences on us."

Again the members of the club exchanged glances.

"I'm going," said one of the mothers, rising abruptly. "I want to be there when John and Julia get home."

A number of the other members rose with one accord.

"We had better adjourn our meeting," laughted the president. "Most of our members seem to have children who need them. Shall we not vote that our meetings bein a half hour earlier after this, so that we can all be at home and ready to greet the children and make their home-coming a pleasure—something which they will remember in after years, as Mrs. Evans does hers?"

The vote was unanimous. The club adjourned, and there were some surprised, but very happy youngsters in that community ever after, when "school was out."

The military note is evident in many of the new fashions

Tricorne and continental shapes are in favour for winter hats

Black enamel jewellery set with minestones is in high favour.

THE HOME CIRCLE COLUMN

Pleasant Evening Reveries—A Column Dedicated to Tired Mothers as They Join the Home Circle at Evening Tide

CRUDE THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITORIAL PEN

A HAPPY HOME

As a reader of your paper, I believe your Home Circle Department has made many of our homes more happy. I have studied for five or six years what it would take to make a pleasant and happy home, and there is nothing that excels shrewdness, energy and intelligence. Father, mother, and children should always do or study something to comfort or please the other members of the family. There is a large family of us, and all seem to have a kind and loving disposition. When one of the family goes off on a visit and comes back, all meet that one with kisses. The happiest hours I have ever spent were at home, sitting at the table or fireside, father and mother giving us good lectures, teaching us right from wrong, telling us how to live, to make friends, and everybody would love us, and all those kind words will ring in my ears as long as I live, and will make me love their graves after they are dead and gone.

Let me tell you kind friends, life is to short to ever make it anything but happy and pleasant. We can make this life pleasant or unpleasant, just as we wish. It gives me so much more comfort to do or say something consoling to the family. I have often heard it said where there was a will there was a way, and without a will the way is dim. We must have a good will, and the way is open wide for us.

Just a few words in regard to the girls. Let them be honest and truthful, and then their neighbours will be always glad to see them coming. A girl should always keep her home nice and clean, especially her dining room, and learn how to cook, and never wait for mother to go in front of her. When a young man starts out to get himself a wife he wants to know that he is getting a nice, smart housekeeper. A nice, neat, housekeeper carries the day everywhere.

SUBSCRIBER.

Every youth should be taught that it was intended he should fill a place in the world which no one else can fill; that he should expect to fill it; and train himself for it; taught that he was made in the Creator's image, that in the truth of his being he is divine, perfect, immortal, and that the image of God can not fail. He should be taught to think grandly of himself, to form a sublime estimate of his possibilities and of his future. This will increase his self-respect and self-development in the well-proportioned living.

* * *

Be of Good Cheer.

It is useless to be disheartened because things do not go just as you would like to have them. Murmuring does not cure troubles. A disagreeable face will not alter a disagreeable fact. Try to extract some grain of comfort out of your adversities. Never despair: under whatever circumstances be cheerful and hope in the darkest hour. There is nothing so philosophical as a smile. A merry heart is the height of wisdom.

The greatest part of our griefs will disappear when viewed through the lenses of cheerfulness. Let the dark past sink out of sight. Triumph in the Lord. Look toward the sunrise. Shout in the midst of shadows as if you saw the dawn kissing the hills. Fill your soul with the visions of morning and the song of the lark. Then all will become suffused with daylight—all gloomy places will pulse with sunshine, the clammy rocks will glisten with dew.

Would you like to know the key to unlock the dorway to a happy life? It is cheerfulness; and if the earth has nothing to bring you, you can still rejoice in the Lord and rejoice evermore.

Beyond Your Ken.

The other day a man was heard discussing upon the kingdom of heaven. From his words one would have thought that he was an undisputed authority. When he was done his hearers were no wiser than before he spoke. Man can explain and define many things but the kingdom of heaven is beyond his ken. All we know about this mysterious place is what we read and believe, or what we have been told by people who know, from reading and believing or having been told. Unless our thoughts turn childward we become hopeless in our belief.

There is in a child something so pure, so much removed from the sordid and selfish tendencies of the world that it is perfectly natural to accept his belief of the kingdom of heaven. The Master doubtless realized this when He said "of such is the kingdom of heaven." Never attempt to air your belief or explain the wherefore of the great unknown. You will never be able to enter the kingdom of joy hereafter or upon earth unless you become as a little child.

Bear no grudges, my beloved. They are worse than wheat rust and the pear blight. Many a fellow has all the fruit of his heart knotted and dwarfed by grudge germs. Spray your soul with brotherly love and kindness. Forget all your hard feelings. They are not worth a place in your mind. A good sort of memory to have is one that remembers well your own faults and forgets those of others.

SHOULD ENGAGEMENTS BE SHORT OR LONG?

Engagements—should they be long or short?—is a mooted question whose answer depends upon many conditions.

What constitutes the wisdom of waiting in the case of a pair of lovers who have formed a boy and girl attachment and become engaged before their united ages reach forty would be sheer folly and waste of precious time in the case of a man and woman who have each reached two-score years or more, and who have fully considered the question and made up their minds that they will be happy as man and wife.

Such a couple are far more likely to be certain concerning their choice than a couple of younger lovers who, with the impetuosity of youth, have rushed headlong into an engagement and are anxious to let nothing interfere with marrying in hot haste.

Such a couple too often live to find to their everlasting regret that there is more than a grain of truth in the old saying about repenting at leisure.

In a case like this, an engagement of a couple of years, or even more, will be a most valuable safeguard. In the first place, the pair are young enough to afford to wait; in the second, a long engagement may prove a most valuable preparation for marriage, inasmuch as the test of time are ideally suited to one another. A are ideally suited to one another. A may only help to show them that they long engagement may also help to enable young people to cultivate tastes in common, which in their turn promote that companionship of pursuits that is such an essential factor in establishing happiness after marriage.

* * *

On the other hand, many an engagement of long standing has practically demonstrated that two natures attracted to one another at first sight are in no way suited to one another.

Unable to bear the fret and worry of a long engagement, it is hardly likely that they will get on any better in double harness. Unfortunate and uncomfortable as a broken engagement is—

Nobody will deny that it is better to have an opportunity to discover the disagreeable truth that the couples are unsuited to each other before marriage rather than afterward.

Although there are always exceptions to every case, it will be generally admitted that as a rule long engagements are a mistake, not only so far as the young people themselves are concerned, but as regards the families of both parties, they are at the best of times nerve-wearing, tedious affairs.

Love's young dream that drags itself year after year, with no prospect of marriage for a long time to come, is apt to sink to prosaic levels and lose much of the charm and romance that should surround the days of courtship; while marriage itself, when it does come, under such circumstances loses a great deal of its ideal bliss by reason of a too familiar and prolonged intercourse resulting from a lengthy engagement.

Far, far better marry in the ardour of first love than let your romance grow stale and spoiled in the early days of matrimony by reason of a dragged-out engagement, for prosaic romance is a bad thing to start wedded life on.

Someone once said that "to be ideal an engagement should be just long enough to enable the couple to study and understand each other's characters, but not so long that they grow away from each other in taste and feelings."

* * *

This is all very well in cases where prospects are good, and where the couple know something about one another beforehand. In many cases when a couple of comparative strangers meet and become engaged the test of a long engagement is not only wise but almost imperative, as the risks of matrimony are increased fourfold, for not only temperament but environment plays no small part in contributing to matrimonial bliss.

Also, trying and nerve-wearing as it may be for Edwin and Angelina not to be allowed to start housekeeping on nothing more substantial than bread and cheese and kisses, but to be kept waiting by the mundane considerations of providing themselves with enough to live upon, a long engagement is infinitely better than a too hard struggle for existence in the early days of matrimony.

For, whatever the novelists and sentimentalists may say to the contrary in this every day world of ours, which is ruled by money, it is very hard work for love not to yield to the temptation of slipping out of the window when poverty comes in at the door.

$8,500.00 Damages Awarded in Street Railway Accident

Nervous system so terribly shattered that paralysis set in.
Examined by eleven doctors.
Recovery attributed to use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Mrs. May Wright

Mrs. May Wright, 113½ King St. W., Toronto, has written of her wonderful recovery as follows:—"On May 25th, 1913, I met with an accident when a Bathurst St. car crashed into a Queen St. car and I was thrown over three seats and under the front seat. As a result my spine was badly injured and paralysis set in. My nerves were shattered and for a whole year I was in a completely helpless condition. I had no appetite and could not sleep and when it was necessary for me to appear in court I was carried in on a stretcher. I was examined by eleven doctors and among them were several of the very best medical authorities in the city of Toronto. Some of these doctors claimed I could never recover and the court awarded me $8,500.00 and costs.

The most wonderful part of it all is the benefit I have obtained by the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. Gradually and certainly this great nerve restorative has built up the nervous system until I am getting back the old time health and vigor. I sleep well now, appetite and digestion are good, and I cannot say enough in praise of this great medicine."

Facsimile of final check received by Mrs. Wright in settlement of Court's award

This interesting case proves once more the marvellous up-building and reconstructive influence of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food on the nervous system. In the most natural way imaginable this great food cure nourishes the exhausted and depleted nerve cells back to health and strength and thereby removes the cause of nervous headache, sleeplessness, nervous indigestion and nervous prostration. In almost every community of this great country are to be found people who have been cured of serious disease by this great restorative. Write for booklet on the "Nerves." Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, three months' treatment, 12 boxes for $5.00. At all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

HOME HEALTH CLUB

By DR. DAVID H. REEDER

Household Drudgery: I presume that if you were to ask the average farmer of to-day to go back to the methods of farming and do his farm work as it was done 50 years ago he would laugh at you. It was a common thing 50 years ago for the farmer to draw all of the water for his stock from a well, either by hand or with the help of a windlass or old-fashioned sweep. I have painful personal recollection of this kind of work during the long winters of Minnesota. Also of all of the hay being cut with scythes; the wheat, oats, barley and rye harvested with cradles and have even helped with a flail in the threshing of the grain. The best inventive talent has been devoted to lightening the burdens of the farm and thus enabling one man to produce more than was formerly produced by three.

The farmer finds that he must have all of the latest and best labour-saving devices and that I agree with most heartily, but what about the housework? Not only on the farm but in nearly all the homes of working people, the modern kitchen range is about the only advantage the housewife has over her grandmother's method of doing the household drudgery. True, she doesn't save all the scraps of fat and make her own soap like grandmother did, neither does she weave the cloth for the homespun clothes of her children, but she scrubs the kitchen, rubs the clothes on the wash board, and what I believe is the hardest, most frequently necessary and most dreaded work of the household, washing and drying the dishes. Three times a day for 365 days for 50 years dishwashing has been the appalling penalties imposed upon the bride who celebrates her golden wedding. The worst feature of the burden has seemed to be that it grew heavier instead of lighter because more, many more, dishes are used nowadays than were used 50 years ago.

It's only during the last ten or fifteen years that the inventors have seemed to wake up to the situation, and we now have just as good and effective labour-saving machinery for the household as we do for the farmer. On the up-to-date farm there is now a gas engine, which is used in connection with a storage battery system for lighting, and through this power the housewife who keeps up her end with the modern farmer has an electric vacuum cleaner, which does away with the sweeping and carpet beating, besides keeps her home much more sanitary than a broom ever could. One wash day she simply pushes a button connected with an electric washing machine, and in twenty minutes all of the rubbing on a big batch of clothes is done, and while these are being wrung through the electric wringer after rinsing, the washer is cleaning the second lot of clothes.

For several years the big hotels and restaurants have had successful dishwashing machines. You see men usually do the work there, and when men find hard work they try to, and do usually, find a machine to do it. I presume it will be claimed by some that because women suffrage has compelled men to wash the dishes while the wife made political speeches, that has finally developed effective dishwashing machines for small or large families, but be that as it may, I am glad we have them at last and that woman is no longer compelled to spend a couple of hours in the kitchen after each meal washing and drying the dishes because some of these little machines both wash and dry without breaking, nicking or cracking a single dish or glass, and that's better than any man could do anyway.

The fireless cooker saves a tremendous amount of work as well as fuel and food. A water supply and waste pipes also are most excellent labour-saving devices for the household, but I am inclined to think that the machines that are going to be the greatest blessing to housewives will be the dishwasher.

A GOOD MEDICINE FOR THE BABY

Baby's Own Tablets are the very best medicine a mother can give her little ones. They sweeten the stomach, regulate the bowels, break up colds, promote healthful sleep — in fact they cure all the minor ills of little ones. CHAPTER II.

A Man With but One Thought.

HUGO LOUBEQUE turned the packet of papers and orders over and over in his hand, a brooding expression in his eyes that told his thoughts were very far away from the butler gentleman who had just brought them to him. A massive figure of a man, he seemed to fill the room with his presence, the chair in which he sat seemed to have been built about him, the room itself with its magnificent furnishings was dwarfed by its occupant. Greatest of international spies, the rise and fall of many nations might have been placed at his door, rivers of blood had burst their barriers at the touch of those powerful fingers, yet all his thoughts were directed toward revenge against one man, toward the destruction of General Love.

Over and over he turned the stolen papers. Only another link it was in the chain he was drawing about the old army officer. The Italian coughed nervously, and his master looked up, waving him away without a word of praise. The man had but done his duty. Hugo Loubeque expected that.

The telephone rang and the spy stiffened in his chair, no more the dreamer. Loubeque was at work finishing this detail in his scheme of revenge.

* * * * * * *

With the ruins of every hope smashing about her, without a thought save the need for a confidante and friend in time of distress, Lucille took up the telephone to speak with her chum, the wife of a young officer who had only just reached the post a month before.

For a second, sensitized by suffering though her mind was, she did not catch the significance of the orders being given by the man whose wire had crossed her own. Then a feeling of faintness caused her to reel at the power and strength she caught in the tones. She listened, conquering her fear in one triumphant throb of love for the imprisoned officer:

"General Love's orders and papers are in my possession now. For Shanghai on the Empress tonight. Have the launch ready."

And then the buzzing of the instrument told her that she could hear no more. She rushed to the window, her heart sinking at sight of the smoke curls spewing from the big liner's funnels. The Empress was ready—ready—and her sweetheart was arrested.

Resolution so vague as to be indefinable urged her across the floor and out the door. She did not stop to analyze the impulse which urged her feet across the parade ground, down the streets of Manila toward the dock. A mad despair possessed her as she caught the signs of readiness from the Empress and saw there was no boat to take her out to the ship which carried the precious orders.

"It means the honor of the man I love."

She beat her tiny fists fiercely together. There must be a way. There must be. Faintly to her ears came a humming sound from the boat. It reminded her of another sound she had heard recently, a sound she identified with the solution of her problem—Harley and his aeroplane.

It was a five miles, but her horse could do the distance in short time. Faster even than she had reached the dock did she get to the stables. No time for saddling, for anything save the wild ride before her. Through the moonlight she dashed, the little mare accepting this new freak of his mistress with delight.

The aviator had only just returned from the dance when she flung herself from the mare and grasped him fiercely by the shoulders, shaking him in the vehemence of her command. He stared at her unbelievingly as he made out what she desired, but there was something in the entreating eyes, the drawn face, that told her deadly earnestness.

"It means the honor of the man I love."

Harley turned away, turned toward the giant plane. Breathlessly she watched him, waiting his decision. There was a curiously twisted smile upon his lips when he faced her again.

"Get in," he motioned.

* * * * * * *

Hugo Loubeque leaned against the liner's rail, pencil poised over the open page of the diary which was headed "Loubeque's Account With Love." Items upon that page had been canceled, more remained clear. The hand started to draw through one of these last when faintly to his ears reached down a drumming sound from the heavens.

As his eyes wandered up the great bird in mid heaven grew more and more distinct, the figures of a man and woman emerging. A grim smile crossed the spy's face as he put the diary and pencil back in his pocket, for Hugo Loubeque was thorough, and the item might not be canceled yet.

Grimly Hugo Loubeque watched the aeroplane approaching the Empress. Ruthless, above all authority, next to omnipotent with the power he had given his life to build up that he might be revenged upon the man who had brought about his ruin early in his career, the international spy watched this attempt at interference with his plans—for such he instinctively knew it to be—keenly.

Cheers rose from the deck at the masterly manipulation of the plane. Then the aviator's purpose of landing on the liner's deck became clear. The explosions of the motor died out abruptly. Then the plane swooped down toward the deck nose-on, righted itself and glided to a perfect landing.

Lucille separated herself quickly from the passengers. She was beginning to think again, to realize what a task lay before her. The orders and papers of her father were upon the boat, but who carried them she did not know. Of all these hundreds any one might be the thief. Harley interrupted her mood of black depression, taking her hand and wishing her luck.

"Everything is arranged with the captain," he reported. "And, Miss Love," he added earnestly, "I don't know what there is to be done, but you cannot help succeeding when you start with such spirit."

The encouragement dimmed her eyes, blinding out the sight of the aviator as he started his engine once more and, with one short glide, rose toward the element he loved. Her slender figure straightened as she turned from the rail, her head uplifted itself courageously, almost defiantly.

The sound of her own name, repeated twice in a hoarse whisper of incredulity, brought her out of her abstraction. She looked wonderingly at the man who had called her by name, amazed at the emotions twitching his powerful face.

Hugo Loubeque mastered himself with an effort. He had never seen the general's daughter before, this girl with the face and form of her mother, and this apparent resurrection of what had been a living memory so long had stunned him out of his usual composure.

"I beg your pardon," he murmured as she passed him. "I thought I recognized"— He stopped abruptly, amazed at the expression of delight and craft and joy and guile which mingled on her face as she stepped and stared into his face, and in the clash of eyes the man knew that this slip of a girl recognized him for her enemy.

Lucille stared after his retreating figure, her lips parted, her eyes twin stars for the hope that had been kindled there.

"The voice on the telephone," she whispered over and over to herself.

* * * * * * *

The international spy paced up and down the floor of his suit, for the first time in years a prey to emotions that threatened to overwhelm him.

The message in his eyes had been clear. This girl knew that the papers his underling had stolen from the general's safe were in his possession. She was his enemy, determined to go appalling lengths to thwart him, just as he must forget the instinctive love he had felt for her, this girl who came from the sky and stirred up visions of days when he had known such a thing as happiness. He settled himself in a chair, closing his eyes while he rearranged all he knew of the general's household. Undoubtedly the general's aid, with whom she was in love, had been charged with the theft.

His somber eyes glowed at the completeness of the havoc he had wrought. Not alone had General Love been struck, but his entire household.

It was an hour before Loubeque rose and moved toward the door, an expression in his eyes which told the problem had worked itself out.

In the wireless room he wrote out his message, waiting idly while his fingers clicked the operator adjust his instrument and send the message hurtling back to Manila. He wondered at the indifference of the wireless man to the import of the message.

"Not the aid, General Love sold me papers."

The operator turned indifferently.

"Signature?" he queried.

The international spy shook his head, smiling at the expression of interest kindled in the young man's eyes. He must for once do work of the most difficult sort and do it himself instead of trusting it to a subordinate. To do this he must ingratiate himself with this man.

That accusatory message must not be answered. Undoubtedly upon its receipt at Manila an investigation would be started which would open with finding the source of the original charge. To obviate this the wireless must be put out of order, must be wrecked so thoroughly it would be impossible to repair it until the Empress was out of the zone of communication.

It was a matter of hours before he got his opportunity, the operator leaving his board and going to the saloon. Hugo Loubeque wasted not a second. The sound of the man's boots had not ceased to sound before the box lay open before the spy. His hands moved like lightning, carrying out the plan he had conceived as the safest and most effective from the instructions of the operator. In and out his fingers moved, loosening a screw here, a wire there.

This story can be seen in Photo-Play at the Royal Theatre, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of each week.

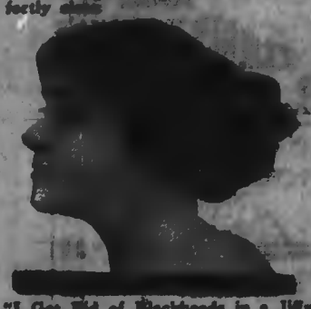
Faces As Fair As A Summer's Day

Are Possible If Stuart's Calcium Wafers Are Used for a Short Time After Each Meal.

Many people have been heard to say that they used creams and lotions for years without effect, yet after five or six days of Stuart's Calcium Wafers their complexions were perfectly clear.



"I Got Rid of Blackheads in a Jiffy by Using Stuart's Calcium Wafers."

It's easy to understand why. Creams and lotions only get at the surface, while Stuart's Calcium Wafers go right into the blood and instead of a sluggish deposit in the skin the impurities that cause skin diseases are destroyed in th perspiration that is exhaled through the pores in the form of invisible vapor. You'll never have a good complexion without pure blood, but you positively will have a fine, beautiful complexion if you use Stuart's Calcium Wafers.

They contain no poisonous drug of any kind, are perfectly harmless and can be taken with absolute freedom, and they work almost like magic. Calcium Sulphide, their principal ingredient, is the greatest blood-cleanser known to science.

No matter how bad your skin may be, Stuart's Calcium Wafers will quickly work wonders with it. It's goodby to blackheads, pimples, acne, boils, rash, eczema and a dirty "liver-up" complexion. You can get a box of Stuart's Calcium Wafers at any drug store at 50 cents a box, and you will be positively delighted with their wonderful effect. A small sample package mailed free by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., 175 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

Villa's Troops In Battle.

EL PASO, Texas, Nov. 6.—An official report received yesterday by Villa officials in Juarez said that a battle was in progress between Villa and Carranza troops 20 miles south of Aguascalientes, where the convention of chiefs recently attempted to adjust their sectional difficulties. It is said Villa has sent a force of 10,000 men and more than 100 cannon to meet the advance of the Carranza troops, whose strength is not known.

Smallpox Epidemic In Zion City.

CHICAGO, Nov. 6.—With thirty-five cases of smallpox in their midst, the religious colony at Zion City, Ill., founded by the late John Alexander Dowie, with faith healing the most notable feature of belief, bowed yesterday to strict quarantine measures.

William Glenn Voliva, present head of the sect, has fought the use of ordinary precautionary measures since the malady became epidemic.

Woman Teacher, Penniless, From Belgium, Tells of the Misery She Experienced

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—Penniless and thousands of miles away from friends Mme. E. Chenet Bihet, a Belgian teacher of languages in Seattle, Washington, has arrived in New York after being driven by the advance of the German army cross across Belgium from Liege to Ghent, and back to Maestricht, Holland. With other refugees she fled half-clothed from Liege to Brussels, where she was fed and clothed and housed at the expense of Mr. Brand Whitlock, American Minister to Belgium, until the entrance of the German army into the capital, when she again went on, this time to Maestricht and then to Liverpool, whence she left for this country.

During the time she was in Brussels she says she was one of the hundreds who owed what care they received to the activity of Mr. Whitlock. "Mme. Bihet declared that he stood out as the one unruffled, dependable figure in a maelstrom of hysteria, after the Belgian government was removed from Brussels. For Americans driven from one part of Belgium to another, she says, he found lodgings and provided them with money sufficient to purchase food. When this became impossible, she said, he established soup kitchens, to which not only Americans but hungry Belgians were bidden.

"I have relatives in the war," she also said. "Where the others who are not at war may be, I do not know. The situation in the country is inconceivable. Everywhere desolation, ruin. Cities, villages, districts, once so beautiful to the eye, with their vine-covered buildings, their little checkerboard fields of grain and flower - splashed courtyards — are abodes of the dead. The Germans, it seems, are actuated by some evil spirit. They destroy everywhere in wanton pleasure. I have seen so much misery and ruin that words cannot express the depression that has settled on me.

"The poor creatures who come from Louvain into Brussels were the epitome of misery and despair. There were few dry eyes in the capital before these people came; there were none after they arrived. It was a city that wept when the tales were told. I saw men, women and children who had left dead in Louvain their homes looted by German soldiers, burned, they came up the crowded streets, bringing such pathetically useless treasures. Many were almost mad from what they had endured.

"They told of the Germans who dragged them from cellars where they were hiding and shot their men folk while they looked on, afterward burying them in holes which the German shells blew in the streets. They saw their homes looted by German soldiers who went about drunk, and with torches set fire to houses. They they were driven out of the city by Uhlans, who herded them into the country like cattle.

Gruesome Scene of Misery.

"Into Brussels while I was there came such a succession of suffering bewildered persons from Wavre, Vise, Termonde, the district of Liege, that at times I wondered how a world of such horror could exist any longer. Walloons and Flemish, each trying to understand the other, told their tales of woe.

At nights the streets, usually so gay and cheerful with their little out of door cafes and lights, were filled with tired old men, women who tried wearily to soothe, screaming children, ugh! It was hideous. I have seen little groups of wounded, gathered by the sum of misfortune from all of Belgium, gossiping miserably over their meals. All of them had sons, husbands and sweethearts fighting the 'barbarians,' and they talked always of them, telling what they did; of their little likes and dislikes, and sometimes showing pictures. How much worse it must be now, with Antwerp, Ghent, Ostend and all the rest of the country overrun with the Germans, can only be dimly imagined."

Mme. Bihet, while waiting funds to take her back to Seattle, has been selling postal cards of Belgian scenes. Few, although well known in the city where she has lived for many years, as is attested by letters of reference which she carries, she is penniless here, having lost all of her personal belongings and what money she had with her at Liege.

SOLDIERS FIGHTING BATTLE OF EUROPEAN RULERS USING AMERICAN ARMS AS WAR WEAPONS

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—Whether they know it or not the European soldiers fighting the battle of the Kaiser, and the Czar, the president and the kings, are using instruments of American invention, or, at least, arms which had their origin in the United States and which, in some cases, have been improved abroad.

Colt, Gatling, Hotchkiss, Winchester and Maxim are names familiar to every school boy when applied to revolvers, rifles and even to quick-firing guns of larger calibre. These men, aroused to their inventive genius by the Mexican and Civil Wars, perfected the art of killing men to a remarkable degree. The guns at Liege and Antwerp are the descendants of those first used at Buena Vista and Gettysburg.

Each one of these inventors worked under conditions which might be called romantic. None of them was brutal enough to sit down and figure out a way to kill many human beings at once—which is precisely the result achieved by the terrible engines of destruction to-day.

Dr. Gatling, for example, had a noble purpose in mind when he devised the rapid-firer which bears his name. It was during the Civil War. A regiment of worn-out, starving soldiers were passing by. Gatling was moved to compassion. He thought that he could invent a gun which would make many soldiers unnecessary by using one wagon to do the work of a hundred men. His machine gun was the result. It could fire 1,200 shots a minute, but the United States government was just as slow to adopt a new military invention in 1861 as it is to-day and Gatling's invention was thrown into discard. But General Benj. F. Butler bought twelve of them at his own expense and the successful use of them in 1863 persuaded the government to adopt the invention.

The Colt revolver had its origin on a sailing vessel which carried Samuel Colt, then twelve years old, to Calcutta, in 1826. Colt was bored to exasperation by the voyage. To while the monotony he started whittling in true Yankee fashion and finally evolved the rough pattern of a revolver. When he got back to the states he followed up the idea. He submitted it to the government ten years later. The authorities at Washington laughed at him until General Zachary Taylor—like Butler in the Civil War—introduced a thousand of the weapons for his cavalrymen, to be used in Mexico. Success followed and the Colt "gun" became famous in the world over.

Hotchkiss was riding in a railroad train in 1875 when the idea of a magazine rifle which bears his name came in his mind. Some years before he had devised the murderous Hotchkiss shells and a "revolving cannon." But the masterpiece he sketched in fifteen minutes on the margin of the newspaper he was carrying at the time. The value of that rifle was appreciated almost immediately for the governments of this country. France and England adopted the weapon.

Although strictly speaking not an inventor, Winchester had enough mechanical ability to see possibilities in a "volcanic" rifle; he capitalized the invention until to-day the Winchester rifle scarcely needs all the advertising which is given to it.

Perhaps the most versatile of the quintette of American firearms inventors is Hiram Maxim, who is not to be confused with his brother, Hudson, another genius in the inventing apparatus for the fine art of killing. Hiram's inventiveness was given a bump in the right direction when he was knocked over by an old-fashioned muzzle-loading rifle. Like Newton, he profited by the blow and thought out a way to make use of the force. The Maxim-Nordenfelt rapid-firing gun—which makes the recoil serve as the motive for reloading—followed from his unconscious train. He also invented the world famous cordite, a powerful smokeless powder.

These are but a few of the great names in the history of American military and naval inventions. One could exhaust the list indefinitely by adding the names of Whitehead, the torpedo designer; Ericsson, a naturalized American, who invented the Monitor; Hudson Maxim, an authority on explosives and inventor of many different kinds; Holland, the father of the submarine boats which are now doing such extensive damage in the North Sea, and many others whose lives were spent in bringing the arts of war to a high degree of perfection.

Then, by that strange irony which seems to be revealed in striking fashion during the war-times, it can be proved that Americans have given the world the best protection against the bullets and shells of other Americans; the finest armour plate that is made anywhere!

COLDS OR COUGHS

Should Never Be Neglected.

If They Are, Some Serious Lung Troubles Are Sure To Follow.

DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP

Cures Coughs and Colds on their first inception, and will thereby prevent you from becoming affected with some serious lung trouble, such as bronchitis, pneumonia or even consumption.

When you ask for "Dr. Wood's" see that you get it as there are many imitations on the market.

"Dr. Wood's" is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price, 25c and 50c; and manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Mrs. Thomas Bridges, Gowrie, Ont., writes: "I was so bad with a cold I gave up work, and I was in bed four weeks being unable to do anything. I thought the cold was turning to bronchitis, so I changed my medicine to Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, I used three bottles, and they completely cured me, and I am as strong as ever. I highly recommend it to all sufferers.

CONSUMPTION CURE FOR CONSUMPTION

Is a medicine—not a serum. Moreover, it is a medicine with a record. It has won cases of consumption given up as hopeless by doctors and specialists. Ask for the record of David Warnock's case, one of the most striking illustrations of its power. So desperate was Mr. Warnock's condition that the specialist called in by his doctor said that he was past all hope of recovery and could not live more than 5 or 10 days. To-day, Mr. Warnock is alive and well; still living in Toronto. At the lowest ebb of his illness, he weighed only 97 lbs., and while four months of that time he lost altogether his normal weight of 133 lbs. The facts of that case are not confined to ourselves, but can be corroborated by a dozen or more independent witnesses.

In the same manner as this medicine has wrought a cure of consumption, it has proved most effectual in stubborn cases of chronic bronchitis; which had persisted for over 30 years all other medical men and other medicine could do for them.

A letter from a well-known resident of the east side of Toronto will serve to show how beneficial this medicine is for bronchitis. It reads as follows:

Mr. W. H. Copeland:

Dear Sir,—For some time past I have been thinking that it is my duty to write and tell you what a boon your medicine has been to me. I have suffered with bronchial tubes and Chronic Bronchitis for over 30 years, and have tried numerous cures, and dosed by others of our best physicians, and have never got anything to do me the least good as your Consumption Cure.

I would like to recommend your medicine to every one suffering with throat, bronchial or lung troubles. I am sure if this does a blessing to me, and will be to any who try it. You can do as you see fit with this letter.

Yours sincerely,
(Sgd.) H. FLEMMING.

"Copeland's Cure for Consumption" has been on the market now for three years. During which time hundreds of letters have been received from all classes of people telling us how benefited they have been by its use.

If you are a consumptive, or know of a consumptive or anyone suffering from weak lungs or throat, copies of letters, bearing upon their ailment that others have suffered and conquered by taking this medicine, will gladly be sent on request.

HEADACHE, COSTIVE, BILIOUS?—"CASCARETS"

To-night! Clear Your System and End Headaches, Colds, Sour Stomach.

Get a 10-cent box.

Sick headache, biliousness, dizziness, coated tongue, foul taste and foul breath—always trace them to torpid liver; delayed, fermenting food in the bowels or sour, gassy stomach.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system, is re-absorbed into the blood. When this poison reaches the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Cascarets immediately cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means your head clear, stomach sweet and your liver and bowels regular for months.

Best Treatment For All Complexion Ills

I'll tell you my panacea for all complexion troubles. If the skin be colourless, sallow, muddy, over-red, if it be rough, chapped, blotchy, pimply or troubled, there's nothing that will so surely overcome the condition as ordinary mercolized wax. The wax literally takes off a bad complexion—absorbs the dead and scarcely perceptible particles of surface skin, so gently, gradually, you experience no inconvenience at all. A new complexion is seen in evidence, one so clear, smooth, delightfully soft and beautiful, you look many years younger. One ounce of this wax, procurable at any drug store, will rejuvenate even the worst complexion. It is smeared on like cold cream before retiring and removed morning with warm water. The mercolized wax habit is a healthier and more economical one than the cosmetic habit.

If the skin be wrinkled or creased, bathe it daily in a solution made by dissolving one ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint witch hazel. This acts immediately, effacing even the deepest wrinkles.—Mrs. Rosamond, in Beauty's Mirror.

TURKS' RULE IN EGYPT ABROGATED BY THE BRITISH

The threatened Turkish invasion of Egypt presents the unique spectacle of a nation preparing to invade territory that is nominally its own. But, while Egypt still is a tributary State of Turkey, the Ottoman Empire for forty years at least has been a nothing but an active governmental parquet.

Great Britain for the last forty years has exercised a virtual protectorate over the northern African State and, in many directions, absolutely dominates Egypt. The actual administration of Egypt is vested constitutionally in native Ministers, whose number and titles correspond closely to the Cabinet of the American President. Its reigning power, however, is a khedive, at present Abbas Hilmi, who succeeded to the throne at the death of his father, Mohamed Tewfik, in 1892. The title is Persian in origin and signifies a king.

Turkey began to lose her domination of Egypt when, in 1873, the Ottoman government gave to Ismail, grandfather of the present Khedive, the rights of contracting commercial treaties with foreign nations and of maintaining armies, rights which hitherto had been withheld.

Slowly both France and England gained a foothold in the Egyptian territory, and from 1879 to 1883 considerable power in government affairs was held by two Controllers-General, appointed by those nations. England, however, intervened and suppressed a military uprising in the summer of 1882. Then she restored the authority of the Khedive.

But as France did not join in the intervention a decree was signed early in 1883 by the Khedive dissolving the previous joint control of England and France In its place, on English recommendation, the Khedive appointed an English fiscal adviser. No financial decision can be made without his concurrence, and in consequence no really important decree has been promulgated without the approval of the British Minister Plenipotentiary since the rebellion of 1882.

British domination has been made more complete by virtue of the fact that ever since 1882 the entire military occupation of Egypt has been in the hands of British officers, whose commandant has the title of sirdar. There is maintained also a British garrison, or army of occupation, consisting of a cavalry regiment, a horse artillery battery, a mountain battery a company of sappers an four battalions stationed in the Nile delta.

LOCOMOTOR ATAXIA

"My system were very low and I could not sleep at night, nor could I control my organs of body," writes Miss Robert Bustard, Maxwell, N.B. "Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cured me of what I believe was the early stage of locomotor ataxia or paralysis. I cannot describe what I suffered but now I am entirely cured."

THE WAR.

My Day Dream.

In a moment I was carried
To that terrible battle scene;
I thought I felt, I heard, I saw,
So vivid was my dream.

'Twas not an aeroplanic flight
That bore me there so soon;
It was my love for Britain's right,
That winged me there at noon.

I thought of our noble Kitchener—
God guide him to command
Our brave soldiers, as a Britainer,
In air, on sea, on land.

If on Jehovah he rely,
We, victory, shall have, sure;
The Omnipotent will ne'er deny
His help; His armies will endure.

As I viewed the soldiers mustering,
And the horses prancing on,
I heard the shout, sharp order "Fire"
And the roaring of the gun.

There were flash and crash, and shrieking,
And cannonading boom;
There were bursts of muffled weeping
And the air was thick with gloom.

I watched the sabres swinging,
As they glittered in the sun;
The British steel kept ringing—
How I wished the battle done!

I say more troops advancing,
The pipes were sounding cheer;
The Highlanders came marching;
'Twas the "Seaforths" brought me cheer.

Then the "Gordons" gay, I noticed,
"The King's Own," I love so dear,
And the "48th" from Canada,
I gave them cheer and cheer.

I saw our heroes falling,
Unhorsed, and trampled o'er;
Unheeded by frenzied comrades,
To lift them from the gore.

No time for else but duty;
Our brave soldiers have to fight;
For war is war—the beauty
Of the soldier is his heroic might.

To defend our British soil,
Let us think of them and pray
That the enemy they may foil,
And thus end this blood day.

The ground, with bodies lying,
For miles are thickly strewn;
Both men and horses dying,
And lads in youthful bloom.

To mark their slumbering bed, no stone,
For loved ones to know where;
But The Omniscient eye beholds His own;
He'll wipe off every tear.

His angels are watching o'er them,
And their souls to Heaven are borne;
Their bodies, too, He'll raise to view
On the Resurrection morn.

SHREDDED WHEAT

It is made of the whole wheat steam-cooked, shredded and baked—contains more real nutriment than meat or eggs and costs much less. Being ready-cooked and ready-to-serve it is a boon to the thrifty housewife who knows how to serve it with fruits or creamed vegetables.

For breakfast heat the Biscuit in oven to restore crispness and then pour hot milk over it, adding a little cream. Salt or sweeten to suit the taste. Better than many porridges that are boiled down without thinning. A hot, nourishing breakfast for a chilly day. Delightfully nourishing for any meal with sliced bananas, baked apples or creamed or preserved fruits of any kind.

Elections in Feb. Rumoured

The Rogers Wing of Conservative Party Again Pressing For Contest

OTTAWA, Ont., Nov. 6.—The abandonment of the recent well-organized movement in a certain influential wing of the Government for an immediate appeal to the Federal electorate is believed in certain well-informed circles here to be simply temporary. While disappointed that dissolution of Parliament was not brought about three weks ago, the Rogers wing of the Cabinet has by no means given up hope of an early election, and there are evidences of a probable dissolution immediately following a short session in January. This will give the Government an opportunity to put into effect certain very necessary financial legislation, to place before the country its record since the war commenced, and to outline an extensive programme for the future, both in military and naval maters.

To Overcome the Senate.

It will appeal for re-election on the grounds that such a programme should have the ratification of the electorate before it is proceeded with further and on the plea that the Government desires to be free from interference in its legislation by the Senate.

In the meantime as great a measure of "reform" of that body as possible will be brought about by the filling of present vacancies with Government supporters.

Government supporters profess to believe that they are losing good votes by the departure of Canadians for the front. If the Opposition had contested the bye-elections in Quebec it would have given an excuse for a general election.

IF YOU ARE A DRINKING MAN

You had better step at once or you'll lose your job. Every line of business is closing its doors to "Drinking" men. It may be your turn next. By the aid of ORRINE thousands of men have been restored to lives of sobriety and industry.

We are so sure that ORRINE will benefit you that we say to you that if after a trial you fail to get any benefit from its use, your money will be refunded.

When you stop "Drinking," think of the money you'll save; besides sober men are worth more to their employers and get higher wages.

Costs only $1.00 a box. We have an interesting booklet about ORRINE that we are giving away free on request. Call at our store and talk it over.

Feet and ankles so swollen, she could not walk up stairs

Every woman and every man, who suffers with Rheumatism—who has acute attacks of Rheumatism, Sciatica or Lumbago—whose Kidneys are weak and whose hands and feet become swollen and painful—should read carefully these two letters of Mrs. Salsbury about the magical effects of

Gin Pills FOR THE KIDNEYS

On February 14th, last, Mrs. J. A. Salsbury wrote about Gin Pills, "I can certainly say Gin Pills have done a lot of good for me. Some six years ago, I could not walk upstairs, my feet and ankles were so swollen, but I took three boxes of Gin Pills and the trouble has never returned. My mother, 63 years of age, is taking them and feels fine". Writing again on April 22nd, in reply to a request for permission to publish her letter, Mrs. Salsbury says, "You may do so, as I think it was Gin Pills that cured me, as I have not had the Rheumatism since and it is six years this spring since I was so bad".

Swollen hands and feet are a sure sign of Kidney Trouble. So is Backache or brick dust deposits in the urine. So is uncontrollable or suppression of the urine. So is Gravel (or Stone in the Kidneys.) If the urine is hot and scalding the Bladder is irritated or inflamed. In all these cases you need Gin Pills at once. Take them as Mrs. Salsbury did and cure yourself.

Gin Pills are sold in every part of Canada at 50c. a box, six for $2.50—and every box is sold with our spot cash guarantee of satisfaction or money back. Sold in the United States under the name "GINO" Pills.

A course of drill for its members is being planned by the Peterborough Civilian Rifle Association and the executive will decide upon the details at a meeting to be held on Monday night. The difficulty of securing rifles just now has hindered the activity of the club, but with a drill course and shooting practice on the miniature range the members should be kept busy. POLICE FORCE CALLED OUT

To Handle One Man—Was Said to be Unruly

PORT HOPE, Nov. 7.—John McCullough appeared in the police court yesterday on a charge of being drunk and fighting on Mill Street. If all reports are true John is no exception to the rule of "good goods in small parcels." He is a slightly built chap and would not turn the scale at more than 140 pounds. However the Chief required the assistance of two other men, the handcuffs and a delivery waggon before the prisoner could be lodged safely in the cells. The prisoner pleaded not guilty but the evidence of the Chief, Edward Wolfram and Charles Wells showed that he was very unruly and quite drunk.

When asked if he wished to give evidence, McCullough replied in the negative and was sent down for two months without the option of a fine.

Made In Peterboro

Peterborough people read with interest the "made in Peterborough" articles in the Examiner, and they would remark to themselves that this progressive spirit that is filling and infusing new life in so many of our cities and towns throughout the Dominion. Let us hope that everyone will catch the spirit, for in other words, it is "boost Peterborough." Let us talk, write and proclaim it all the time. We will feel the good of this thorough tonic. Let it mean, help our present factories to grow by demanding home made goods whenever possible.

Right here let it be said, that all the manufacturers should embrace this opportunity of advertising their wares "made in Peterborough." Only yesterday I heard a lady remark: "Why, are brooms made in Peterborough? I'll try one, the prices are the same."

This is only one commodity and one example, and it is a boost to our broom and brush manufacturers. Then by demanding home-made goods we are making that factory busier, he will require some more help, and the problem of the unemployed will begin to be solved, although we have been fortunate in this respect this winter.

If the manufacturers of Peterborough want the people of Peterborough to use their products they should let them know of them. Let them tell the people what they make and where it can be procured. The people haven't the time, nor the inclinations to get out a search warrant to find out what's made in Peterborough. That's not their business. But if you make anything in Peterborough and desire to earn the home market on that thing and don't know how to get that market, take some space in the Examiner and tell the people the advantage of buying them

GERMANS REPULSED WITH HEAVY LOSSES

Violent Day and Night Attacks on Allies' Position Cost the Enemy Dearly---The Allies Everywhere Are Holding Their Own and Are Advancing at Certain Positions

PARIS, November 7.—Violent night and day attacks by the Germans on the Anglo-French front southeast of Ypres, and on the Britsh line at Nieu Chapelle, between canal of Labassee and Arras, and against the British positions on the Oise, have been repulsed with heavy losses to the enemy. To-day's official statement declares that not only are the allies holding their own at every point, but that at certain positions they are pressing forward. The situation along the Yser is described as comparatively calm. The French, it is announced, have occupied Haucourt and Hogeville.

PARIS, November 7.—Advices from the front today say that the allies are pushing north between the flooded area of Belgium and the ocean, apparently with the intention of occupying Ostend.

The Germans are reported to have heavily entrenched to the northeast of Ostend, and to be preparing for the expected attack.

There is also severe fighting to-day on the French right, where the Germans are desperately endeavouring to break through the advance toward Metz.

To-day is a holy day for national thanksgiving throughout all Russia, to celebrate the continued advance of the four great Russian armies now in the field, against her enemies. Two armies are advancing on German soil, one on Austrian, and another on Turkish, and all, according to the reports of the war office, are at this moment victorious.

The Russians are finding the German wounded in their retreat in a terrible condition. At many points wolves have come down from the mountains and across the steppes, and have eaten the bodies of the dead and wounded. The retreating Germans are destroying everything in their path.

NEW LIGHT MAY BE ADOPTED

A new type of incandescent light has been placed at the corner of George and McDonnel Streets. The light is suspended from the pole by a stationary iron bracket. Its illuminating powers are very effective and it is altogether probable that it will be adopted by the Utilities Commission for general use throughout the city. It is an improvement over the old-style of arc lighting in that it is not so easily effected by wind or storm.

Many complaints have been heard from certain quarters of the city respecting the inadequacy of the street lighting system. These complaints are not fully borne out in the monthly report of outages which is in the hands of the Utilities Commission. Before the system was taken over by the city, lights were not reported out unless they were out all night. Now they are reported out if out at any time the officer happens along. The police are authorized to report all lights that are out, but their report does not cover the length of time that the light may be out in any one night. Sometimes a light will go out for a few minutes or an hour and then burn the remainder of the night. However, the Commission have assured the Council that steps will be taken to replace the present lighting system with something that will prove more effective. In the words of one of the Commissioners, "we have only been married a month and have not had time to get our furniture straightened around."

INDIVIDUAL CHEESE FOR EVERY FAMILY

New Method of Retailing Employed by Geo. A. Gillespie Meets Favour

Mr G A Gillespie showed the Examiner, yesterday, a new departure in the retailing of cheese He has arranged to put on the market, and is now selling, miniature cheese, each weighing slightly over one pound. They are of the same shape as the big cheese and, of course, are of the same quality. Instead of being wrapped in cheese-cloth, the small cheese have a firm covering of paraffin, which affords a thorough protection and keeps the food clean and wholesome. These individual moulds are of desirable size for family use and are already meeting with general favour.

REV. H. J. KEITH WILL PREACH FAREWELL SERMONS ON SUNDAY

Rev. H. J. Keith will conclude his pastorate at Knox church on Sunday. He will have charge of the regular Sabbath services and meetings and will preach farewell sermons in the morning and evening. During his residence in Peterborough Rev. Mr. Keith has won many friends who, apart from his congregation regret his departure from Peterborough. His sympathies have extended well beyond his parishioners, and while always thoughtful of the welfare of Knox church he had the capacity and the interest to include in his thoughts and plans the general welfare of the community. It will not be surprising, therefore, if Knox church is crowded at the Sunday services. His friends outside Knox church are reminded of his departure and his farewell messages. It is understood that the congregation is arranging for a final social on Monday evening. This will afford the opportunity of a personal farewell to Rev. Mr. Keith and also to Mrs. Keith, who in a quiet way has won the hearts of those who have met her.

WILL ENLIST THREE BRIGADES OF ARTILLERY

Composition of the Second Contingent Has Been Decided on by the Militia Authorities

BATTERY AT KINGSTON

OTTAWA, Nov. 6.—The Government has decided on the full composition of the second contingent and orders for enlistment for all units such as artillery, amoulance corps, medical corps, and engineering corps were sent out to-day. The infantry are already being enlisted. The three brigades of artillery, which comprises nine batteries in all, which make up a division, will be enlisted at once. For the time being they will be trained with 12-pounders, but will be supplied with 18-pounders when they leave for the front. Ontario has been assigned four batteries, two to be raised in Toronto and one each at London and Kingston. One battery will be raised in Quebec at Montreal. There will be one battery raised in the Maritime Provinces, two in Winnipeg and one in Calgary. Each battery has approximately 160 men, making with officers some 1,500 strength.

A. M. C. Company in Toronto.

The second contingent will include four companies of the army service corps. They are to be mobilized with one company each in Halifax, Montreal, Winnipeg and Victoria. There are 88 men in an army service corps. Of the army medical corps, a company will be enlisted by the Toronto division, and one by the Montreal division. The third company will be enlisted in three sections, part at Winnipeg, part at Victoria, and the remainder at Calgary. Each company has 283 men. The two field companies of engineers of 220 men each, which will be required, will be mobilized at Ottawa, though they will be recruited from various parts of the country.

Cyclists, Signallers, Supply Units

Orders for the recruiting of these units were issued to-day by the Militia Department. Orders for recruiting a company of cyclists and signal corps will be issued in a few days. The Cyclists will likely be mobilized at Ottawa, though recruited at various divisions. The signal company will likely be incorporated with the engineering corps.

In addition to these units there are a mass of administration units for line of communication, which will be decided upon later as to recruiting and mobilization centres. These include a divisional ambulance, a divisional supply park, a reserve park of waggons, field butchery, field bakery, railway supply detachment, and two depot units of supply.

There will also be raised later a heavy battery of artillery, which will be recruited in various parts of the country.

KAISER SAID TO BE IN SUPREME COMMAND

Is Trying to Coax or Drive His Men in Their Last Effort to Break Through the Allies' Lines---Terrific Bombardment by German Artillery

PARIS, November 7.—Baffled in attempts to carry the strong allied positions barring the way to the coast, the Germans are to-day utilizing their artillery in the hope of blasting an avenue through the opposition.

Hundreds of heavy guns are reported to be in action along the line from Ypres to the south of Arras. A perfect hail of exploding shells is being directed against the allies who, however, are well protected by deep bomb proofs.

Reports here say that the Kaiser is actually in supreme command. He is declared to be constantly moving from point to point along the line of conflict, encouraging, cajoling, threatening, as the case seems to require, but always endeavouring to stimulate with his presence the bravery of the men.

The German reserves are being distributed preparatory to another attack which will most certainly follow when the fury of the artillery bombardment slackens.

WASHINGTON, November 7.—Secretary of State Lansing was given notice to-day by the British Ambassador that cargoes of United States copper at Gibraltar, were destined for Krupps, and are being detained.

WASHINGTON, November 7.—Germany is facing a shortage of cotton, according to a cable from the American embassy in Berlin to the State Department.

LIMA, Peru, November 7.—Four big warships, whose nationality could not be ascertained, passed here on their way south yesterday.

CLOSING SESSION OF COUNTY COUNCIL

Was Recorded This Morning—Will Meet Again in January

The Fall Session of the Peterborough County Council came to a conclusion this morning. A number of by-laws were passed and other minor details adjusted. After a few valedictory remarks by the warden, Mr. Robert Shaw, the Council adjourned until January. Some of the councillors left this afternoon for their respective homes.

No action was taken in regard to the suggestion that was made by Mr. Campbell, who submitted that the 1915 Council be elected without a contest, and that the money which would be saved as a rsult of that plan, be devoted to relief purposes.

The following clipping which was taken from the Fenelon Falls Gazette has the followoing to say regarding similar action:

There are many appeals being made at this time for the alleviation of needs and conditions brought about by the war. Could not our municipalities elect their present councils next January without a contest? As an election costs about one hundred dollars, the total over the whole Dominion would amount to a large sum. It may seem a trifle soon to make this suggestion, but it may give others an opportunity to discuss the matter.

RIPE NOVEMBER STRAWBERRIES

Mr. Archie Moore has left with the Examiner a remarkable freak of the season—strawberries ripened in the open in mid-November. Mr. Moore was in Bobcaygeon yesterday, and Mr. William Loucks gave a fine cluster of ripe strawberries, grown and ripened in his garden, to Mr. Moore. Such luscious-looking fruit, ripened in November, is too good to thrust into the mouth of the author of "Our Lady of the Snows," but his poetical slander of the Canadian climate could, with poetic justice, be thrust down his throat.

WILL REMEMBER THE SOLDIERS

Shield Will be Placed in Murray St Baptist Church

A suggestion made by Rev. J. R. Webb, the Pastor of Murray Street Baptist Church, has been readily accepted by certain members of his Church, and has been carried to completion by Messrs. J. J. Turner & Sons, whose services were engaged for the purpose..

On Sunday morning next the Trustees of the Church will be asked to accept a handsome shield with the words "Lest we forget" at the top, while directly underneath is the quotation "Though sundered far, by faith we meet," after which there appears a list of the nine young men from families in Murray Street Church, who have away as soldiers for active service. A Canadian flag is draped above and at one side of the shield and the entire work is a credit not only to the designers, but those who conceived the idea. The Canadian flag, which is a part of the gift, comes from Rev. Dr. Webb, the pastor's brother, who resides in Philadelphia.

The expectation is that with these names before the worshippers during the war that they will be made the subjects of special prayer and that the families from which they have gone will realise that though absent they are not forgotten, and that the loyalty of the people shall be stimulated by the presence of this artistic reminder of the fact that Murray Street Church has worthy representation at the front.

Needless to say the families whose sons are soldiers have had no part in the arrangement. It has been done by a few who prefer that their names should not be given.

Mr. George Cochrane, the Chairman of the Trustee Board, will accept the gift on behalf of the congregation at the service to-morrow morning

THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER.

Mr. Leo Young showed the Examiner a rose bush from his garden that is literally covered with rose buds. On another bush was a rose in full bloom. For this season of the year and outside, this is remarkable. Mr. W. O'Brien of Boswell Avenue, has also a bush in his garden with a number of buds on it.

LOCAL SOLDIER BOY'S NOVEL EXPERIENCE

One of the 57th Contingent Receives Testimony of the Gratitude of the Belgians

EMBRACED IN LONDON

It cannot be denied that many of the Canadians serving with the First Contingent are having experiences in the Old Country which, to say the least, are novel and original. The relatives of a Peterborough boy have just received a letter from him, in which he states with ingenuous frankness that while looking at the Nelson monument in Trafalgar Square, London, during a visit there for dental purposes, a Belgian lady threw her arms around his neck and kissed him repeatedly. She could only speak broken English, but managed to explain that she recognised him as a Canadian soldier and wished to express her gratitude. The letter did not state whether or not the lady was young and pretty. Already one member of the First Contingent has married a young French lady; it is quite probable that another may marry a Belgian. It is gratifying to learn that a Peterborough boy was picked out as the recipient of such sweet expressions of national gratitude.

SCOTTISH FOOTBALL RESULTS

Special Wire to The Examiner:

Following were to-day's Scottish League results:

Clyde 1, Hearts 2.
Kilmarnock 1, Celtic 3.
Falkirk 1, Ayr 1.
Airdrie 4, Motherwell 1.
Rangers 4, Queens 0.
Third Lanark 0, St. Mirren 0.
Aberdeen 1, Raith Rovers 3.
Morton 2, Dundee 0.
Hamilton 2, Partick 2.
Hibernians 2, Dumbarton 2.

Leave For Kingston

Two more Peterborough boys ene train for Kingston at 8:10 by G.T.R. on Monday morning.

The names are William Hughes, of 475 Bolivar street, and Charles East, of Grand View avenue.

They enlistd in the cavalry as signallers under Lieut. Rackham about three months ago and were disappointed when no cavalry was being sent from Canada for the second contingent. They enlisted in the infantry signallers and only received their transports on Friday. They leave in civilian clothes like the other boys, and receive infantry uniforms on arrival at Kingston.

Big Programme At Royal Theatre This Evening

Manager Clayton has secured the World's Baseball Series for to-night. There will also be a complete change of motion pictures, featuring "Justice," a wonderful drama in four parts, and other special vaudeville on the same bill. Come early.

New Members Were Enrolled

The regular weekly meeting of the Kitchener Red Cross Club was held in the Green Room of the Y.W.C.A. on Tuesday evening. Quite a number of new members were enrolled, which was very encouraging to the president, Miss Garrow, who has worked hard to make the club a success. The club decided to hold a sale of home-made cooking and candy on the Market on Saturday, November 14th. This will be good news to the ladies of the City who patronized this table some time ago. Further announcements will be made in the coming week.

CHILDREN AND CIVIC BEAUTY

Though we are deep in the stress of war that is no reason why we should relax any effort to carry on the work of education and progressive civic betterment "as usual," as well as carrying on business "as usual." We, in Canada, are interested in the war, but it does not, except in some cases, touch us closely enough to make us downhearted, or indifferent to all the usual duties of citizenship.

Peterborough spends liberally upon education. Last year we paid in taxes for the support of our schools the considerable sum of $104,651. Do we get adequate value for this? We may do in the matter of intellectual training, the implanting of hard facts, or the ability to pass examinations. But do we succeed in fitting our children to the highest point for the discharge of all the duties of citizenship? For these, not only the head, but the heart, the soul, the taste, must be developed; the higher faculties cultivated.

Even in this war time most of the processes of private life are going forward as usual. Our citizens are preparing to beautify their premises and homes for the winter and in outlook for the coming year. Housewives are potting their bulbs for winter, blooming. Men are busy tidying lawns and putting them in trim for the spring.

Though the heathen may rage and the Kaiser imagine a vain thing; though the war scythe may reap its awful harvest of death, and the devastation of war blight and destroy the beauty of other lands, yet the cycle of the seasons will make its inevitable round; spring will come and the beauty of leaf and flower unfold as surely and as sweetly if the poison of desolation did not foul the air of Europe.

We must not forget our duty in the way of keeping all the machinery of civic enterprise going. We must, in some sort of way improve our standing; we must or should prune our street trees and plant more. We must or should, in a civic way, do something — it is regretted that it cannot be said do more—for general civic beautification.

Are we ready for this? Are we morally equipped? Is the cult of the beautiful a general feature of the ethical equipment of our citizens? It unfortunately is not if we judge of the representatives the people elect to do their civic business and give impulse to the idea of the city beautiful.

In this regard it is a pleasure to say that the City Council does not represent the people. It is a notorious fact that the hypothetically representative authorities of the city are not seized of any embarassing sense of responsibility as to the duty of beautifying the city. They do not as they should do, set an example for citizens to imitate.

If the taste and interests of the citizens in beautifying and keeping beautiful their private premises were modelled upon the attitude of the city authorities, Peterborough would be the frowsiest city in Canada.

Instead it is one of the most beautiful, thanks to private enterprise; but not a tenth of what it could be made with general cooperation—of the authorities and the citizens at large.

It is unfortunate that all our citizens are not solicitous for the creation and preservation of beauty of public places; and there is a possibility that this indifference is somewhat due to our home and school educational shortcomings. There is not sufficient rubbing in of the sense of respect for the property and accomplishments of others. A writer in the Craftsman has a pertinent paragraph on this point—

> While Mayor of Montpelier, I noted the fact that many boys were defacing property, scattering litter in the streets and elsewhere, destroying city improvements, tampering with devices for municipal service, trespassing upon private rights, and in numerous other ways showing either ignorance of or intent to interfere with the orderly course of community life. The police, legal and sanitary departments were frequently invoked in such cases. To me it seemed needless for a community to maintain a police force to protect itself against the vandalism of its youth who were being educated by said city at large expense.

This is pertinent to existing, and precedent conditions in this city. If, during the past generation, the system of education in our schools had been devoted to the culture of the child as a whole and not only his or her poor little fact-stuffed mind; if every child had been soul taught—the best part of his being devloped, his sense of beauty intensified his sense of right towards his neighbour; his sense of respect for the rights of others; his respect for the beauty of public and private places created by men and women with souls above the sordid care of bread and butter making—we should have had in this generation of citizenship influenced by the cult of the beautiful and fortified with the inbred principle of right regard and right doing.

The actions of children in their relations to the public, to property rights or individual nterprise, should not be a matter of discipline and police supervision. Their right action should come from principle—a principle that must be implanted by home training and, where this fails as it too often does—by school training, by something more than mere book-learning.

The undue exaltation of intellectual tillage; the education of the mind alone, without the counterbalance of moral and ethical culture is exemplified in the disastrous manifestations of German "Kultur," which, with the literary and scientific triumphs of German achievement in these fields, becomes a curse and blight to the world. For generations the children of Germany in the schools, the youths in the gymnasia and universities, have had their souls saturated with the spirit of brute force as the summum bonum, the prime thing in national life, and, lo, the result.

If education persistently and sedulously practiced can corrupt human nature and implant false ideals in a great and naturally good nation, certainly then, education, if as sedulously and persistently practiced upon Canadian children, with the object of implanting high ideals, cultivating the sense of the beautiful and all the ethical virtues that not only adorn, but form the effective basis of, the highest citizenship, can effect these objects.

It is a pleasure to note evidences that this ideal of education is being included in the curriculum of some of our teachers. It has been noted before that the Queen Mary School is a centre where honest attempts are made to educate the heart and soul, and taste of the pupils, as well as the head. The children are taught and made to respect the beauty of the school grounds and surroundings. This may be a mere matter of discipline; but it is contributory to an ethical culture that will lead the pupils to think of their duty to the public outside the area of discipline; and go far to create a generation of citizens that will be factors in the creation of a sentiment and principle that will make the work of the city beautiful an automatic process, instead of a perpetual struggle against a spirit, negative perhaps—of essential vandalism.

Last night the annual meeting of the Horticultural Society was held in preparation for the 1915 campaign of civic beautification. The work of the Society would be all the more successful, if education had done the work of culture in the hearts of the children, grown to men and women, and made them in all ways a cooperative factor in spirit and sympathy—in love of the beautiful—in the enterprise of the highest achievement of the idea of the city beautiful.

BELGIAN RELIEF

Why do we send Canadian contingents overseas? Because we desire to loyally do our duty and exercise our high privilege. We go to strengthen the army of the Mother Country in its fight for the vindication of British honour, the keeping of plighted faith. So far as Canada and Peterborough are concerned we are in this for Belgium and for the international principles of national integrity and national individuality involved in the wanton outrage of her neutrality. For Belgium, for principle, for the sake of her pledged word, whose integrity, and inviolate sanctity gives Great Britain her preeminent place of beneficial influence in the world. Britain has gone to war. She is pouring out the blood of her soldiers and the treasure of her vaults in the greatest conflict in which Britain has ever been engaged; and Canada and the Empire are with her as in duty bound. But Britain is doing more Belguim has been war swept and desolate, as with the besom of hell; her homes have been levelled and their occupants become outcast and fugitve and starving. Great Britain, which has always been the home of the desolate and oppressed, has taken to her shelter 300,000 refugees, which does not include a tithe of the remnant of her decimated population of seven million. We can't fancy the condition of these who remain except faintly by picturing Peterborough wrecked from centre to circumference, with shot and shell, and fire; with the people outraged; with every home almost destroyed; with food supplies stolen by German vandals; with all the operations of industry in city and surrounding country ceased; with entire population breadless and starving; with everything contributing to a ghastly pancrama of universal desolation and universal suffering; not to speak of the moral misery of the presence of a gloating and brutal enemy. Conceive Peterborough in such a condition, and wealthy and prosperous Canadians reduced to ruin and desolation and you can have some idea of the call that comes to us for suffering Belgium. It is not only a national duty that confronts us, but a religious duty. The Belgians are our neighbours in the sight of God, who made all men of one blood.

Are we doing what we should do? The only concerted attempt to give relief to the Belgians outside the activities of a few ladies, has been the action of the Board of Trade, which slipped its responsibilities from its shoulders by the easy way of placing subscription lists in some of the banks, with the result that might have been expected from such a fatuous method—a total of $71 contributed in the course of two or three weeks—by nine contributors, one of whom, a lady, gave $20, nearly a third of the total.

Are we doing our duty? No, is the emphatic answer. We are not even doing our duty to our good name, nor satisfying the highest call of duty implied in the divine sum of religion — love thy neighbour as thyself.

BEST MEANS.

"Sustain the Pay Roll" is a slogan that appeals to everybody. The best means of keeping up the Canadian pay roll is by buying "Made-in-Canada" goods. It provides the means for Canadian patriotic and Belgian relief funds.—Stratford Beacon.

HUMANITY'S CAUSE.

This war makes everyone serious. Serious men forget old party quarrels, old controversies which are a little bit academic. Or, if they do not forget them, they ask if there was really anything vital in these conflicts, and of so, what side are they on. Disraeli said he was on the side of the angels; but after all that was only a picturesque way of saying hat he was on the side of all sane and decent people — on the same side as Gladstone.—Toronto Star.

THE SPIRIT OF THE WEST.

With the departure of this second contingent the call comes once again to those remaining behind to prepare themselves, and thus be ready should further contingents be required. Only a mere skeleton of the old 95th Saskatchewan Rifles will remain in the city to-night. The battalion must be immediately recruited up to full strength once more. The young men of Regina owe it to those who have gone to keep the old regiment alive, and to provide men to fill the gaps created, or which may be created in the overseas contingents. Many of the substantial men of the city have already enrolled themselves in the business men's company. Their action is worthy of emulation by hundreds more.—Regina Leader.

SORE-SMITTEN BELGIUM

Seven million men, women and children in Belgium are threatened with imminent starvation The population of the United States is 100,000,000. The Belgian Relief Committee, which began work September 28, reports contributions amounting to $300,000 on October 30. This is ten cents apiece for 3,000,00 of the starving. The wealth of the United States is computed to be 130 millions. The following poem, while written for the United States, will apply to Canada:

The word went forth from Prussia:
"We do what war requires.
Before the hosts of Russia
And the slow English shires
Can move, our conquering masses
Shall smite the heart of France.
Our host through Belgium passes;
'Way for the Prussian lance!

"We would not harm you, Belgium,
Our neighbour and our friend;
But when war comes upon us
We go straight to our end.
Our way lies through your cities,
Your well-tilled fields beside;
Woe to the ill-starred neutral
Would stem the Prussian tide!"

Then up spake little Belgium,
Outnumbered ten to one:
"By the faith of all the nations,
For thus the compacts run,
We give no aid or comfort
To any in this fight.
Your way lies further southward,
Your threatenings despite".

And Belgium, little Belgium,
Upon her faith stood fast;
She murmured not nor wavered
Before the coming blast.
Without a doubt or tremour
She barred the Prussians' way,
Where are her old, famed cities,
Her fruitful farms to-day?

Where are her best and bravest
Let Prussian guns reply.
Where are her babes and mothers?
Their turn has come to die.
Their husbands and their fathers
Have paid the last great price;
Their country is a desert—
Lord, will not this suffice?

The bitter cry of Belgium
Dies out upon our shore.
Deep sympathy we give her,
What can we give her more?
Her fame is surely founded;
What would she have but fame?
Long will the world pay tribute
To the glory of her name.

Children of nations yet unborn
Will marvel when they hear
How little Belgium steadfastly
Embraced the Prussian spear;
And when, far down the ages,
Heroic deeds betide,
Men still will tell with bated breath,
How little Belgium died.

And what of the great nation,
Bulwarked by friendly seas,
Whose sons in peace and plenty
Hug close their well-earned ease?
Her fame, linked fast with Belgium's,
Will be: She had no bread
To spare for Belgium stricken,
But she mourned for Belgium dead.

THE ESSENTIALS TO GOOD SHOOTING

Written Especially For The Examiner.

The following timely, comprehensive and well prepared article has been written especially for the Examiner by a recognized authority on rifle shooting and military training generally. It should be clipped out of the paper and read and re-read, not only by the members of the Rifle Association, but by the members of the 57th as well, as it covers the subject in a most capable manner:

Military marksmanship is the highest form of shooting, and naturally claims first place in the many phases of training in which the soldier is expected to excel, and no amount of perfection he may have attained in the other parts of his training can upon service remedy any want of proficiency in military marksmanship.

Skill in good shooting is acquired by personal effort. All the instructors in the army can never make a good shot out of you if you do not apply yourself with all your might.

It is in the power of every soldier or civilian to become a good shot: when the first principles of aiming and trigger pressing are mastered, determination and will power, to succeed will pave the way.

The following qualities are possessed by every soldier and civilian in more or less degree, must be developed by daily practice:

1. Determination to hold rifle steady on the mark.
2. To obtain perfect control of trigger finger.
3. To aim correctly.

To a great extent marksmen are made at home and not on the ranges as a good many people think, and it is with the purpose of directing the personal efforts of those who desire to become good shots, into proper channels, that the essential points necessary are enumerated below.

DAILY PRACTICE.

This is the first essential and constant practice only will give the muscles complete mastery of the rifle.

The eye, brain and forefinger also need constant training to work in harmony.

Every time the rifle is taken out of the rack, or any position in which it is kept, a correct firing position should be assumed and a few snaps taken with muscles and mind braced up to determination point, observing the following rules:

1. Always open the breech of rifle to see that it is not loaded. (It is always a "supposed" empty rifle that shoots someone).
2. Select some small indistinct mark to aim at and put imaginary distances on the sights.
3. Assume a correct firing position. No fancy tricks.
4. Don't dwell on the aim—10 seconds should be the extreme limit.
5. Declare the point of aim at the instant of pressing the trigger.
6. Retain the aim on the mark after pressing.
7. Finish off with a few minutes of snap shooting and rapid fire practice.

FIRING POSITIONS.

The most essential points for all positions are:

1. A good firm grip with both hands.
2. The eye and cheek well back on the butt.
3. The butt pressed firmly into the hollow of the shoulder and not on the muscle of the arm.
4. Comfort, ease and entire absence of constraint are absolutely essential whilst firing.
5. After firing always bring the rifle to a convenient position for reloading.

AIMING.

The essential points are:

a. Sights upright.
b. Foresight central in the V or U.
c. Full sight for each shot.
d. Consistent point of aim on the six o'clock line.

TRIGGER PRESSING.

Particular attention should be given to the following points:

1. Hook the first joint of the forefinger round the lowest part of the trigger.
2. Grip the small with the remaining fingers and thumb.
3. Squeeze the thumb and forefinger toward each other.
4. Take off the first pull immediately the butt touches the shoulder.
5. Restrain the breathing whilst pressing.
6. Note whether the aim is disturbed at the instant of pressing.
7. Frequently test your own "let off" by balancing a coin on the foresight or outer hand and don't be satisfied until it remains undisturbed by the pressure of the trigger.

The firer should strive to know the exact instant the trigger should be pressed, and then apply the final pressure in the fraction of time that the sights are on the mark; this perfect trigger control is only acquired by constant daily snapping practice, during which thought must be concentrated on the trigger pressure, and the firer must be determined not to snatch or pull.

CARE OF THE RIFLE.

The accuracy of the rifle depends entirely upon the care bestowed upon it. Every bang of the butt of a rifle on the ground and every time it is roughly forced in the arm rack, or dropped, may be said to take a day off its effective life.

Too much care cannot be devoted to the cleaning and general use of the rifle.

Every person who is entrusted with a rifle should keep a constant eye on the barrel, sights pull-off and magazine:

1. The barrel and chamber must be perfectly clean and free from oil before firing. (An oily barrel throws shots high, low, right and left at different times).
2. The sights should be black and clean. Avoid using flannelette on them as this makes the sights woolly.
3. To preserve a smooth pull, keep the nose of the sear and bent of cocking piece slightly oiled.
4. Wipe the magazine out with a dry rag thoroughly. Nothing is more irritating than constant jams when firing rapid or snap shooting practices.

MENTAL AND PHYSICAL CONDITION.

Clearness of vision, steadiness of muscles, delicacy of touch on the trigger are not found in the man who smokes 50 cigarettes a day. Moderation is the key word to a good sound mental and physical condition.

To suddenly cease smoking the day before the shoot begins, will as certainly spoil a score as too much smoking. The same may be said of drink.

Men who are inclined to be a little nervous should try and concentrate all their energies of mind and body on the shot about to be fired, being determined to hit the object. Confidence and self-reliance will come to the firer as he becomes intimately familiar with the handling of his rifle. A heavy meal preceding shooting, tight equipment, tight braces and collars, are all detrimental to the would-be marksman and should be avoided. He should, above all, endeavour to cultivate determination and will power, coolness of mind and hand, for these are the foundation qualities of shooting.

ATMOSPHERIC INFLUENCE.

Once the principles of aiming and firing positions are mastered, careful attention should be given to the atmospheric conditions at the time of shooting. More bullets miss their mark owing to misjudgment of these influences than from any other cause except judging distance.

LIGHT.

In a dull light the foresight is less distinctly seen than in a good light, and more of it is unconsciously taken when aiming, therefore slightly less elevation is required on a dull day than on a bright day. (Light up, sight up. Light down, sight down). In the case of quickly changing light, such as sunshine and cloud, a more careful aim to accustom the eye to the changed conditions is all that is needed to make a good shot.

TEMPERATURE.

Before commencing to shoot any practice it should be borne in mind that the bullet meets with more resistance in cold weather than in hot weather. A high temperature acts upon the cordite in addition to lessening the resistance of air to the bullet, therefore less elevation will be required on hot days. The following table, which is easily memorised, will be found useful:

ELEVATION TABLE.

MORE	LESS
Bright day.	Dull light.
Dry day.	Wet day.
Cold day.	Hot day.
Head wind.	Rear wind.

WHAT TO DO ON THE FIRING POINT.

Select as level a place as possible and lie down obliquely, but with the face square to the target. Select a place for your elbows and take a sight at the target over your rifle. If the position is satisfactory, lower your rifle and mark the spots where your elbows rest so that you may select the same place for every shot. Having satisfied yourself that your sights are set correctly proceed to aim.

Now comes the critical moment, the "let off." No matter how good the aim, should you lose your self-control or nerve, your shot will be wasted. Do not hesitate, but with your finger firmly on the trigger, slowly close your hand, your hand, eye and brain working in perfect harmony, and you may have perfect assurance of a good shot, whatever happens.

HOLDING THE RIFLE TO AIM AND FIRE.

The position of the butt should always be the same in the shoulder, otherwise owing to the point of support changing, the shots will vary, i.e., if placed too high, high shots will result and vice versa.

The butt will be held more firmly in the shoulder if the hand is placed well to the front of the magazine, both hands must be used to press the butt into the shoulder. The firmer the butt is held the less will the recoil be felt.

Whilst aiming the following methods for focussing the vision should be employed:

1st—Look at the backsight and see that it is upright.

2nd—Look at the foresight, get it central, and take the correct amount in the V or U.

3rd—Direct the eyes to the mark.

AIMING OFF FOR WIND.

The wind gauge is invaluable for elementary shooting when firing at stationary targets, with the wind steady but for quickly changing objectives and unsteady winds, the most practical method is to aim off the mark.

To keep elevation when aiming off without difficulty, keep the 6 o'clock line thus:

TRIGGER PRESSING.

The best aids to obtaining a perfectly smooth let-off are:

Declaration of point of aim at instant of pressing.

Retaining aim on the mark after pressing.

Constant snapping practices, to train the eye, brain and forefinger to work in harmony.

To restrain the breathing.

Trigger pressing should be regarded as the most important part of firing instruction. The following points should be noted:

That the forefinger can be moved independently of remainder of hand.

To prevent jerking and pulling, a firm grip of the remaining fingers and thumb on the small of the butt are necessary.

To discharge the rifle correctly the pull must be done gently and steadily. Any sudden jerk will cause the rifle to gutter, and the result will be a poor shot. It is necessary to take a firm grip of the stock and then place a steady squeezing pressure on the trigger.

A rifleman should know when his rifle is going to discharge, yet he must know it unconsciously. His whole attention must be centred in having his sights in the correct place and his rifle plumb, so that when he has them where he wants he will find the trigger go of its own accord. This, of course, can only be obtained by constant practice.

The following should be noted:

The forefinger is used in preference to the second, because it is nearest the guard, has a quicker action, and is more readily placed on the trigger.

The first joint is used because it is more sensitive than higher up the finger, being hooked round the lower part of the trigger to obtain greater leverage.

Trades And Labour Notes

By The Official Scribe

"Modern civilization" is now passing through the most terrible crisis in the world's history and the eyes of everyone are centred on the battlefields of Europe, where a stupendous effort is being made to crush the spirit of militarism for ever. Although patriotic meetings and war bulletins are claiming first place in the minds of our citizens at the present time, there was a good attendance of delegates at the last regular meeting of the Trades ad Labour Council ready to do "business as usual," in the interests of the labour men of Peterborough, who have responded nobly to the "call to arms."

President J. J. Hartley occupied the chair.

The action of the Independent Labour Party of Hamilton in nominating W. R. Rollo, Secretary of Hamilton T. and L. Council, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of the Hon. John S. Hendrie member of the Ontario Legislature for West Hamilton, received the hearty approval of the delegates, and the Secretary was instructed to forward a donation for the campaign fund.

Labour Bureau.

The following letter was received from the Minister of Labour, in reply to a request for the establishment of a Government Labour Bureau:

Ottawa, Oct. 26th, 1914.

Dear Sir,—In reply to your letter of the 16th instant suggesting that a government labour bureau be established in your city, I may say that at the present time the government has no authority from parliament to establish such bureaus, and if it were determined to do something in that direction I don't feel that in the beginning we should establish them in the smaller places, such as Peterborough.

Many seem to think that the existence of labour bureaus would create employment for the unemployed; that is a great mistake. A few such bureaus have been established by the governments, both of Quebec and Ontario, but they cannot be said to be a success; certain municipalities have also established such bureaus, with no more satisfactory results.

The experience in Canada is that employers prefer to deal with private agencies. However, I have given considerable thought to this matter and it has not been definitely decided. We may do something toward the establishment of such bureaus in the larger cities of the country, but it is not our intention at the present time to establish them in the smaller places.

Faithfully,
T. W. Crothers,

J. J. Hartley, Esq., President, Peterborough Trades and Labour Council, Peterborough, Ont

Assessment Criticized.

It was claimed that the present system of assessment was unfair to small property owners, who were assessed to the limit, while every consideration was shown to those who were fortunate enough to possess a more substantial share of this world's goods.

The Light Brigade.

Some dissatisfaction was expressed regarding the way in which citizens of Peterborough, men of "proved" experience, had been ignored when important positions in connection with the Hydro Electric system were to be filled. Without wishing to reflect in any way upon the men chosen by the "powers that be" it was the opinion of the delegates that "home talent" should have been considered.

Independent Labour Party.

Plans for the formation of an Independent Labour Party were again discussed. Representation on the City Council is urgently needed and the delegates decided to choose a candidate to represent "labour" in the Mayoralty contest.

The next regular meeting will be held November 18th, when it is important that every delegate be present.

To insure the possession of good hair, two things are essential—reasonable care and the intelligent use of a sanitary hair dressing.

Hair that receives no attention but the daily combing and an occasional shampoo cannot be pretty. Dandruff forms on the scalp, the hair becomes dead, brittle, unwoven and falls out. There is an entire lack of that life, lustre and luxuriance which are imparted to the hair by proper care and Newbro's Herpicide.

Herpicide strikes at the very root of hair trouble by eradicating the contagion that causes dandruff and falling hair. The scalp is clean and free from scale. The hair looks alive—has gloss, beauty, snap. The itching due to dandruff stops almost instantly.

The cleanliness and purity of Newbro's Herpicide together with its exquisite fragrance, recommend it to every refined taste.

Why Smith Succeeded

He was on the job—alert and energetic. Mental ability and physical activity made him shine in his old job and brought promotion.

Smith took care of himself.

Right there is the keynote of success—one must be mentally and physically fit.

A good start is to avoid the heavy, greasy foods that cause indigestion and kindred ills, and use a wholesome, building food such as

Grape-Nuts

This healthful, appetizing food is made of selected wheat and malted barley. It contains those vital mineral salts, so necessary to health, that are often lacking in the every-day diet.

The partial melting of the barley, with the long baking (about 20 hours), makes Grape-Nuts a food that digests easily and quickly.

On a Pedestal

Those things we value most highly, as symbolizing the best in Art, in Science or in Literature, are fittingly placed upon a pedestal, where we can look up to them.

Figuratively speaking, we also place upon the pedestal of our imagination, those high ideals, those lofty aspirations, by which, in our more thoughtful moments, we would wish to guide our conduct.

Among those guiding principles, why not place upon a pedestal of its own, an ideal that may be better described as "Canada First," rather than "Made in Canada."

The "Made in Canada" movement stands for far more than mere commercial patriotism. Pride of country, pride of national resources, pride of national accomplishment in the realms of literature, art and science, pride of virile citizenship, and pride of national destiny, are all embraced within the broad sweep of this deep seated and soul stirring movement.

Future generations will look back to 1914 as an epoch marking year in Canada's history if you, in common with all her citizens, will only resolve, from this day forward, to be guided by the motto

"CANADA FIRST"

HOW TO EAT WISELY

As a universal rule in health, and, with rare exceptions, in disease, that is best to be eaten which the appetite craves or the taste relishes.

Persons rarely err in the quality of the food eaten; nature's instincts are the wisest regulators in this respect.

By eating fast, the stomach, like a bottle being filled through a funnel is full and overflowing before we know it. But the most important reason is the food is being swallowed before time has been allowed to divide it in sufficiently small pieces with the teeth; for like ice in a tumbler of water, the smaller the bits are the sooner they are dissolved. If it has been seen with the naked eye that if solid food is cut up in pieces, small as half a pea, it digests almost as soon without being chewed at all as if it had been well masticated.

FLOWER SHOW MAY BE HELD NEXT AUGUST IN PETERBOROUGH

Annual Meeting of Horticultural Society Was Held in City Council Chambers Last Night

OFFICERS FOR 1915

The annual meeting of the Horticultural Society of Peterborough was held in the City Council Chambers last evening. Mr. H. Beal, president, was in the chair, and during the evening the election of officers was held. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President—Mr. W. Stocker.
1st Vice-President—Mrs. Ritchie.
2nd Vice-President—Mr. Wise.
Secretary-Treasurer—C. H. Williamson.

Board of Directors—Messrs. Dumble, Cowan, Fisk, Kennedy, Riddle, Young, Denne, Jordan, Beal and Howard.

Park Board—Messrs. Wise, Campbell, Stocker, Kennedy, Lytle and Denne.

Auditors—Messrs. R. M. Glover and T. A. S. Hay.

Mr. T. A. S. Hay, who was present, spoke briefly of the good work of the retiring president. If the Association had accomplished anything worth while in the past year, it was due in a great measure to Mr. Beal's leadership and earnest efforts. He could say how much his efforts had been appreciated by his fellow members and how effective they had been.

The president announced that at a meeting of the Board of Trade Tuesday evening the Secretary of the Board of Trade and himself had been appointed a committee to act with one from the Horticultural Society to urge the Council to appoint a Park commission. The Society expressed itself as heartily in sympathy with anything that could be done in this matter, and it was the general opinion that whatever could be done in this matter should be looked after.

Bfore retiring Mr. Beal suggested that a cinder path be placed in Victoria Park from the fountain to the Central School, and that the path down the south side of the park, parallel with Brock street, be filled in. In both of these suggestions his opinions were concurred in by the Society and it is very probable that something along this line will be done in the near future.

The president, secretary and Mr. H. B. Cowan were appointed as delegates to the Horticultural Convention in Toronto, November 10, 11 and 12.

There was some discussion last night as to whether it would be advisable to hold a flower show in Peterborough next August. It was felt that it would be a good thing for the city if the expense would not be too heavy. Mr. Wise thought that the citizens, particularly those from English homes, would take very kindly to the idea, and that Peterborough would have a splendid flower show. A committee of Messrs. Beal, Wise and Young were appointed to look into the matter and report back to the Society as to whether or not a flower show was feasible.

Mr. Wise informd the Board that a good caretaker for Victoria Park was needed next year. He should be an experienced gardener, andthe members present agred to be on the lookout for a suitable man.

The following reports of the year's finance were received:

Are French, Not Germans

Interesting Letter From E. Baumer and G. Knipper

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly permit me a few lines in your valuable paper. Can any one of the Peterborough genealogists let me know to what nationality Mr. Knipper and myself belong? I would be very thankful for it. As far as I know, we are French. Mostly all here take us for Germans, and, like all the Germans and Austrians in Canada, we have to report every week to the Chief of Police. But we can bring proof that we are not Germans. In the following I will give you a short outline of my nationality. According to the documents which we have in our possession, one of our ancestors was an officer in the French troops under King Charles VII. of France (1622-1461), and fought against the English at Castillon on February 17th, 1453. He received for his bravery a coat of arms from the King, which remains till to-day in our family, with the right of wearing it. His descendants fought under Henri II. (1547-1559) in Lorraine. Afterwards they came under the Bourbons (1589-1789) into Alsace, and from that date on our tree of genealogy is uninterrupted till to-day. In the Franco-Prussian War (1870-1871) my father, my wife's father, Mr. Knipper's father and all my uncles were fighting under the French army. After this war they did not give their oath of allegiance to the German Government, and so they and we were always treated as French minded, and our names were put on the so-called black list. They could not expel us from Alsace Lorraine. We behaved all right, so they had no reason to do it. The Prussians wanted to Prussianize everything in Alsace, so all the names of the streets and of most of the towns got changed from French into German. Every man that did not take the oath of allegiance for the Germans had to change his name in German. Our name used to be Beaumaire. The Prussians changed it to Baumer. My wife's name is Calcaire. They baptized it as Kulck. Mr. Knipper's name used to be Niepres. The town of Luverne got Zahem, Chatenois got Kestenhols, Cernay got Sennheim, and so on. As long as the Germans are in possession of Alsace-Lorraine, we cannot change our names. We remember a few years ago our cousins from France sent us letters with the name Beaumaire on it. The postmaster of our city (a Prussian) refused to deliver them, stating there is nobody with this name in the city, and so my cousins received their letters back again, and we never got them. Some people here say we are Germans because our names are German. Of course they are, because we had to change them. If the name of a man will give his nationality, then Ackerman, Hagermann, Burke, Grubbe, Heiderman, Hoffman, Metzler, Schaib, Wildman Wolff, etc., all of this City, must be Germans. Some of those names are genuine Prussian. All the young men are compelled to serve in the army, but when we Alsatians leave it, we are more French-minded than before. Supposing the Germans take Canada and the boys have to serve in their army, are they afterwards Germans or Canadians? Supposing a Canadian family emigrates to China, or to the Eskimos, are their children afterwards Chinese or Eskimos, or are they still Canadians? We would like some ethnologist of the City to explain that for me. Our language is Alsmanic, Francenis and French, and in the schools they teach the high German. We hate the Prussians more than the British do, because we know how mean they treated us for the last 44 years. We would advise some people in this City to take up more lessons in geography and history, so they can distinguish the different nations. They don't know the difference between a German, a Dutchman and a Prussian. They call every one that comes from Europe, and does not speak the English, a Dutchman. They also call the contingent that left for England from Canada "The Canadian Contingent." In reality it is "The British Contingent from Canada, intermingled with a few real Canadians." They even do not know that King George V. of England is of German descent. Didn't the Elector of Hanover succeed Queen Anne as George I.; was not the mother of Queen Victoria a German princess? Was not her consort, Prince Albert of Saxony-Coburg Gotha a German prince? Chancellor Sir John A. Boyd, in his address to the jury at Haileybury, seeing that a lot of Germans and Austrians wanted to get the naturalisation papers, said that those papers should not be given to them, and, indeed, the applicants were refused, but all the Finlanders, Russians and Italians got them. What shall we Alsatians do? They won't let us go to the States. They won't let us go back to fight in the French army against the Germans. Even Mr. Knipper wanted to join the oversea contingent to fight the Germans and he was refused. Nobody will give him work. Apparently the Chancellor did not hear anything of the proclamation of King George V. referring to the aliens. Such an action throws a bad light on Canada. They send propagandists all over Europe so as to win emigrants to Canada, and when they come here to show their loyalty and to become good Canadian citizens, and spend all their money here, they refuse to give us the naturalisation papers. We repeat it again, we are not Germans, even if we had to serve in the German army. We are French, and we hope, that after this war, our province will be under French rule again. If there is a genealogist or a ethnologist in this city, we would like him to explain to me whether we are German or French.

—Yours very truly,
Emile Beaumaire, alias E. Baumer.
Georges Niepres, alias G. Knipper.

GREATEST VICTORY OF WAR ANNOUNCED

Russian Advance Has Been Successful at Every Point and Austro-German Armies Are Back on Their Frontiers, After Disorderly Flight—Road Blocked Only by Town of Wirballen

LONDON, Nov. 7. — The Grand Duke Nicholas has wired Gen. Joffre that the Russians have won the greatest victory of the war.

Advices from other sources convey the same information. The Town of Jaroslav, 17 miles from Przemysl, the Galicia fortress which has been besieged for many weeks, has fallen, the Russians taking 5,000 prisoners. Jaroslav was taken in the early days of the war by the Czar's forces and then evacuated for strategic reasons.

Wirballen is now declared to be the only strong fortress which bars the advance of the Russians in East Prussia. A strong flanking movement is now in progress in the zone protected by Wirballen, and there is some likelihood of the German forces there being completely enveloped.

The Austrian army which came up to the relief of the corps disputing the western bank of the River San had a terrible experience in penetrating the passes of the Carpathians, which are filled with snow.

On the centre the Czar's cohorts are massing for a drive against the main German forces on the Silesian frontier.

The correspondent of The Times has sent a long message to his paper, covering operations in the east. He says, in part:

"Victory all along the line is today's news from the commander-in-chief and from his staff and line. Not only on the battlefront on the Vistula itself, some 300 miles long, but likewise on the front designated as East Prussia, over a whole campaign exceeding 400 miles in a straight line, the German hordes are broken, defeated and despairing.

"The retreat is most marked as a point where the highest and most vital interests of the Germans required continued defence, namely on their right flank, where alone there was any chance of assisting their armies beaten in Poland.

"Once more in German territory, thereby cutting off all connection between the East Prussian front and the retreating armies, now nearing the frontiers of Poland, the Russians have taken Bakalarsheve, selected for practical reasons by the Germans for stubborn attacks.

"The Germans are now approaching the Polish frontiers. Their rear guard has been beaten out of Kola, still further east by south. The Russians have thrown the Germanic armies past Kielce, capturing 600 men and all their maxims.

"It seems that the Germans now have the bitter choice between abandoning East Prussia to insure a strong defence of the direct route to Berlin and endeavoring to hold everything at the risk of losing all."

According to information from Petrograd, Wirballen is the only obstacle to a general advance of the whole Russian front into East Prussia. The Germans, it is declared, soon will be forced to evacuate, being threatened by a flanking movement of the Russians.

Austrian troops are pushing through the passes of the Carpathians to support the Austrians who are falling back before the Russian advance in the region west of the San river. A correspondent of Lemberg states that these troops have been exhausted by the struggle through the snow-filled mountain passes and are incapable of a serious resistance.

The Russian War Office yesterday claimed that the Germans are retreating precipitately into East Prussia with the Russian armies harassing them at every point. The cold weather has apparently demoralized the Germans and many of them are reported surrendering without a fight. At several points the Russians have already penetrated the Prussian border, and some of the reports indicate that the German left wing has been isolated from the main body of the troops.

ZAM-BUK CURES PILES

Read These Strong Proofs.

Mr. Henry Fougere, of Poulamond, N.S., writes: "I suffered terribly with Piles, and could not find anything to give me relief until I tried Zam-Buk. After using this balm I am completely cured. I consider Zam-Buk the finest salve on the market."

Mr. W. J. Donovan of New Edinburgh, Ont., says: "For two years I suffered from bleeding piles; the pain was very intense. I tried numerous so-called cures, but without effect. At last I tried Zam-Buk, and am glad to say that perseverance with this ointment has resulted in absolute cure."

Mr. H. E. Hill, Shevlin, Man., writes: "I suffered a great deal with Piles and had tried many remedies, but without effect. Having tried a sample of Zam-Buk, and being encouraged by the results, I persevered; it worked like magic, effecting a complete cure."

These are but a few of the many letters received from people who have ended their suffering by Zam-Buk. Hundreds have proved that nothing will end the dull gnawing pain like Zam-Buk. Its rich herbal essences quickly end the inflammation of the hemorrhoid veins and restores them to their normal condition.

Zam-Buk is best for piles, eczema, cuts, burns, bruises, ulcers, chapped hands, cold sores, rheumatism, sciatica, and all injuries and skin diseases.

Every home needs Zam-Buk; it is purely herbal and can be used for baby or grandparent with the same gratifying results.

Refuse all substitutes; insist on having Zam-Buk; there is nothing "just as good." At all druggists and stores, or postpaid from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, on receipt of price, 50c. box, 3 boxes $1.25. For free trial box send your name and address, this advertisement name of paper, and 1c. stamp.

AN EXPLANATION

To the Editor of The Examiner

Sir,—The report of my remarks at Downer's Corners does me an injustice. I did not say that the Catholic priests of France were fighting for the Church alone and not for their country, and the cause of the allies. No one will say that the Catholic soldiers of Europe are not doing their best against each other and for their respective sides. But what I did say was that religion views wars as the chastisement of the people for their sins and that all churches and creeds expected good to themselves to come out of this horrible struggle. But the Protestant religion is a religion of sects and individuals, and being a matter between each individual Protestant and his God, can never triumph as a united body, or as a theocracy, nor seek to do so. That is an impossible supposition.

J. H. Burnham.

Note. — The Examiner cheerfully gives the portion of Mr. Burnham's letter that does him the justice of correcting an error in reporting; but it withholds the remainder, which is of a controversal character that would eminently fit the occasion upon which his speech was given, but if printed would be altogether too bitter to leave a pleasant and wholesome taste in the public mouth.

LOOKING FOR SECRET WIRELESS

Germans Have Secret Stations, British Diplomats Believe

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7. — Out of the flood of letters which pours into the British Embassy, offering, for various considerations, information of German wireless stations on American territory, some which claim information of secret stations in Maine are being used as a basis for investigation.

Others tell of stations on the Pacific coast, in South America, and in the mountain country in Scotland, where the stations are said to communicate with German ships waiting to raid the English coast.

The remarkable recent mobilization of the German ships off the South American coast with such disastrous results to the smallest British squadron has strengthened the belief of British Embassy officials here that some secret means of communication extends into South America, and that the German ships operating in southern waters may have been receiving supplies from somewhere on the Pacific coast of the southern continent.

Flag For Park Is Suggested

At the annual meeting of the Peterborough Horticultural Society last night the question of a flagpole and flag in Victoria Park came up for discussion. Mr. Wm. Lytle was responsible for opening the question, but it was objected that the cost would be too great.

Mr. Cowan—"Some public spirited citizen might donate one."

"We have no public spirited citizens in Peterborough," replied Mr. Wise quickly. "Our patriotic fund would shame a village. Lakefield could raise a larger amount than Peterborough has."

"Well, the fact remains," put in Mr. Lytle, "that the Union Jack in Peterborough is conspicuous by its absence."

A little later in the evening there was some discussion about the boulevards and driveway idea, which Mr. Cowan said should be gone ahead with as public sentiment supported the idea and as $600 a year for the next three years had been subscribed to the idea. Some one made the suggestion that the assistance of the Board of Trade be asked.

"We might better ask assistance from the Salvation Army," was Mr. Lytle's caustic remark.

ONE FARMER IN THREE LOSES .. MONEY, SAYS U.S. EXPERT

Receives 45 to 55 Per Cent. of Retail Price, Which Is Less Than in Europe.

WISHITA, Kan., Nov. 5.—A plea for more efficiency in the business of farming was made in an address before the International Dry Farming Congress here by Thomas Cooper, director of the South Dakota Experiment Station.

"Estimates indicate that the average farmer in this country receives forty-five to fifty-five cents from each dollar expended by the consumer," he said, "while farmers in most European countries receive sixty to sixty-five cents.

"In an investigation of groups of farms located in townships in Indiana, Illinois and Iowa it was found that one farmer out of every twenty-two received a labour income of more than $2,000 a year; one of every three paid for the privilege of working; that is, after deducting five per cent. interest on their investment, they lost money."

Another Sketch of Belgians

Women Bravely Send Their Men Back To Fight—King Albert is One With His Soldiers

DIXMUNDE LIKE LIEGE

NIEUPORT, Nov. 6. — (Correspondence New York World)—I dined last night with the twenty-five remaining members of a mitrailleuse company of seventy, which went into the trenches on Monday. The rest had been blown to pieces by the German artillery. Of the twenty dogs eight were alive; such is the pluck of the Belgians.

This remnant of a company attached itself this morning to another shattered company of the Belgian army, and returned to battle, laughing. Last night they feasted and saw their mothers and wives. This morning they were back in the fight.

Leave After Dark.

At a little town near Nieuport, where I slept, we were within two miles of falling shells, and during the night new, long-range batteries took up a position behind us. But the town was full of women folk of the army.

It is a seaside resort, and many of the hotels are full. At night, after a day's fighting, some soldiers always are permitted a few hours' leave. Last night, as evening approached, the women began to appear, walking out toward the Nieuport road.

Five miles away there was a carriage. Watching their faces I could see when husband, brother, or son appeared. Father and son came together and lifted a weight from a little Belgian woman's heart until she saw her son's head was bandaged. Both father and son made light of it, and I saw them later dining together and having a good time.

Ten or more women still were waiting when I passed that way, about four o'clock. The only one I saw who learned the worst was met by a kind Belgian boy, who led her away before he broke the news to her, to spare the others. He came into the hotel an hour later subdued by a woman's grief; but in half an hour he was laughing and drinking with the rest.

In the fight to-day I heard him joking. This air of devil-may-care is real. It satisfies one's idea of a soldier, and takes the grimness away.

They are all that way. Dozens of men going forward to-day once wore bandages. One had his right hand wrapped up, except his thumb. He could pull the trigger with that.

King Everywhere.

A dozen soldiers told me that the King is everywhere. I saw him twice yesterday and he slept in a little village near my hotel last night. He had no special guard. He runs around in an automobile like any staff officer. I would not have known who he was if he had not been pointed out to me. He is an informal King, who sleeps securely surrounded by the remnant of his people.

A private in a mitrailleuse company, who sat beside me last night, told me he passed the King walking on a street an hour previously, and the King recognising the insignia of the company, stopped and asked leave to shake his hand. It was to him the most natural thing in the world. He did not remember until I mentioned the King that King Albert had sent his congratulations to the brave little company. They then drank to the King of Belgium and in my honour to the United States.

Fight and Make Merry.

There is no line left between the officers and soldiers. They are just Belgians now. They fight, drink and make merry, as well as die, together, and they talk about Christmas in Brussels as if it were a certainty.

Her war is not cut and dried and manoeuvred from the rear. The King is right behind the trenches, and directs the battle in person. It is an army of individuals, all of whom are sharpshooters. They hardly know what discipline is. Instead they have esprit de corps. Now that they have been reinforced, instead of taking a rest, they are re-forming informally and heading back to the battle to die.

Gave 8,000 Lives.

The victory of the Belgians at Dixmunde is now history. For the second time since the war began the Belgians held the Germans at a crucial time. Dixmunde is another Liege, only the Belgian guns were this time mitrailleuses, to which the Germans gave the same treatment that the forts at Liege received. These mitrailleuses, dog-drawn, have been right in the trenches. Within a few hundred yards of the Yser, they are not giving the Germans a moment's rest on what dry land they have been able to find.

After watching the battle on the Yser for twenty-four hours it looked to me as if the German advance could get no further. I also doubt whether the 40,000 German troops in this little corner of Belgium will be able to hold what ground they now have.

Victory is due to the Belgians. They have held the Germans at the Yser for ten days and have paid 8,000 lives for it. They have fought practically without artillery and their losses are largely due to the Krupps rather than the German infantry.

ANOTHER DONNYBROOK STAGED IN LINDSAY

Brutal Fight at the Fair Grounds---One Man Used a Crow Bar--Scalp Was Torn Off---A Trail of Blood

LINDSAY, Nov. 7.—The baseball diamond at the Agricultural Park was the scene of a stiff argument of a wordy, as well as wrestling and fighting nature yesterday, when, according to all accounts, Messrs. Chas. Stone and Fred Brooks, of the North Ward, were assaulted by Mr. Alf. Robinson and his son, "Nipper" Robinson.

Space forbids going into lengthy details of the battle which was fought, but which was apparently of very short duration, but it appears that Messrs. Stone, Brooks and Robinson, Jr., were employed by Mr. Reese Williams in cutting the green sod off the baseball diamond. An argument of some kind took place between Stone and Robinson, and according to Stone's own statement he hit Robinson a slap for giving lip and then resumed work.

USED A CROW BAR.

Robinson, however, left his work, (so it is said), went down town and looked up his father, who returned to the fair grounds. No attention was paid to their entry, but immediately they drove across the diamond the father jumped out and grappled Stone. The latter was down in an instant, and, according to an eye-witness, before he had a chance to retaliate, young Robinson grabbed a crow bar 5 feet long and proceeded to beat Stone over the head.

The nature of the beating he thus received can be better described in the words of the attending doctor, who remarked: "Stone is very seriously hurt. He has a bad cut on the back part of the head which was apparently struck by a heavy blunt instrument as one inch of hair is torn off the head as clean as if by a razor, and below this is a 2-inch scalp wound. He was also struck behind the right ear, just on top of the bone, which blow left a lump as large as a hen's egg. Another blow on top of the right eye has completely closed the optic and discoloured the surrounding flesh. He was also bruised about the face."

Fred Brooks, who was working a few feet away first knew of the fight when he received a severe blow over the head from a shovel, and as a result he has a scalp wound 1½ inches long.

TO THE RESCUE.

Mr. John Hutchinson, who was driving on the track when the fight took place raced to the scene and the assault ended. He pictures with awful realism how Robinson wielded the 5-foot iron crow bar and endeavoured to beat the life out of his victim who was lying helpless on the ground with the blood flowing from the deep gashes in his neck and head.

TRAIL OF BLOOD.

Stone was rendered unconscious for a while, but on coming to, got to his feet and walked to his home on the corner of Colborne and Albert Streets. As he walked the blood was flowing profusely from the various wounds he received.

Drovers Miss The Prosperity That Reigned A Year Ago

A year ago drovers were not worrying whether Santa Claus came or not. Some of them might have felt able to buy his pack, so kindly had the market played into their hands. Mistake it not that any of them had a notion of starting something original and foolish. They gathered in droves of yellow-backs and papered some of the banks with them. It was the end of a perfect year for cattle dealers and the woods were full of them.

In the meantime, however, the scenes have been shifted, and those who prepared to ride high on the tide of prosperity are within hearing of the breakers.

Let it not be understood that the drover's forces of prosperity are routed. Not at all. They have been hard pressed all along the front and both wings have been threatened with an enveloping movement, but the lines of communication are intact and it is believed that any necessary retreat will be made in good order.

In brief, some of the drovers report that the glowing conditions of a year ago have been robbed of their rosiness. The outbreak of the foot and mouth disease in the United States has closed the Buffalo market and cattle cannot be shipped there. Hence there is no outlet from the Province and buying at Toronto has been light. Some drovers filled up their ranches last Spring in anticipation of the 1913 briskness repeating. Others, expecting the business pendulum to swing back, decided to be satisfied with their profits. They played the game safe and in any case have not lost. Some drovers purchased cattle in the Spring at 6c a pound, and today it looks as if five cents is the top price for their graders. Another says that had he sold his stock six weeks ago he would have received one cent a pound more than the market offers now.

Tommy Atkins Gets 'is Meals 'ot an' Reg'lar

Thanks to Army Service Corps, Which Runs Motor Wagons to the Front With the Things He Likes

LONDON, Nov. 6.—The efficient work of the British Army Service Corps in feeding the army that is fighting in France is the subject of a leter to the Morning Post from its Paris correspondent.

"No difficulty," he says, "has prevented them keeping our troops well supplied even when we were engaged in retreat, and now that happier days have come the task of the A.S.C. is carried on with clockwork regularity. It is one of tremendous magnitude. The Germans, with all their boasted ability for organization, were unequal to cope with it. They planned to live on the countries through which they passed rather than devise a scheme by which their army would be supplied from its home base. They are now, according to all accounts, suffering from their lack of foresight in this, no less than in other respects.

Field Bases and Supply.

"The British Army has its base in Britain, with depots at convenient points on the Continent. From these bases in the field the supplies are drawn and forwarded to railheads, where they are transported to the field by motor waggons. The organization fits together so well that the French commissariat are studying it closely with a view of copying its methods.

"In detailing the work arrangements had to be made to meet every possible eventuality, from a rout to a victory. Unexpected movements of troops do not affect the supply of provisions for them. Mechanical transport has made the supply columns so mobile that an additional ten or twenty miles means nothing. The combatants are never so long without food as to lose their nerve. They can bear any amount of fatigue so long as well fed.

"The amount of stores at the base is necessarily large and requires a big staff to deal with it. Shortly after the Germans began to retire from before Paris the train service was somewhat disorganized, but that difficulty no longer exists. The stores loaded on the trains for railheads—convenient positions where the motor waggons can assemble, are not really termini—are then transferred to heavy road motors obtained from British trading firms who did most of their despatch of goods by the highways. These again travel to selected spots, and from them the daily supplies go out to the soldiers.

Tea, of Course.

"Troops in reserve and those encamped refitting are given well-cooked meals of fresh meat, vegetables, etc., just as if they were at Aldershot or on Salisbury Plain. Great quantities of chilled beef and mutton are in store, and in the case of many regiments who have the latest types of army cookers dinner is served hot on the march, usually taking the form of a well-flavoured Irish stew or something similar. They also get hot tea regardless of the vagaries of German shot and shell.

Recently the Army Service Corps have become the letter-carriers to the troops, and they always include in each journey tobacco, cigarettes, matches and cheap pipes. The men have a curious eagerness for sweet things, and chocolate and jam are favourites with all ranks. Than jam, it was found by the Army Service Corps in South Africa, nothing was more popular with our troops, and the same craving is noticeable here.

"We are not providing the special and additional supplies for the Indian contingents, who have caste and religious prejudices to observe. The only complaint one hears is that tinned beef makes a monotonous diet, but that is only during the time the men are so busy fighting that they have no chance to do cooking."

THE ADVANCE IS STEADY

British War Office Says German Offensive is Failing

LONDON, Nov. 7.—The British official press bureau has issued the following statement:

"The enemy's attack has decreased in vigor and the process of pressing them back is making slow but steady progress.

"The advance has been most marked to the south of Dixmude and toward Gheleweldt, but the weather has been misty and has tended to hamper operations."

"We are on the eve of a new victory, comparable to that of the Marne." So writes Gen. Bonnal, one of France's greatest military leaders and experts, to The Paris Matin.

From the region of Ypres to Rheims the Germans yesterday hammered persistently at the allied front, but with nothing that resembled success. French troops in the neighborhood of Roye won important positions commanding the road to Andechy.

Messages from widely-separated points tell of the allied drive into Belgium, and it now seems that the Germans have been cleared from the coastal plain right up to the outskirts of Ostend. The flooded area which completed the German disaster on the Yser is hindering the movement, it being very difficult to move men and guns in such number along the comparatively few highways not under water.

Great movements of troops around Ypres are reported by French aviators. That town was the centre of vicious fighting throughout the day, the Franco-British lines holding firmly under a terrific artillery fire. It is reported that the Kaiser himself directed the assault on Ypres.

Around Arras there was sanguinary fighting.

At every point on the long front in Lorraine, France and Belgium the situation is favorable to the allies. The Germans are sacrificing men with an extravagant disregard of the "human element" that draws forth the greatest admiration from the opposing forces. But the result is everywhere futile.

A despatch from Sluis to The Telegraaf says: "It is now obvious that the Germans have abandoned their attempts to cross the Yser. Belgian troops occupy both banks of the river.

"German troops have retreated eastward in large numbers, and continued to arrive in Bruges throughout Thursday."

The Exchange Telegraph's correspondent at Amsterdam says the Germans have concentrated in Munster, 78 miles northeast of Cologne, 160,000 fresh troops, which will be sent into Belgium Sunday, when all railway traffic will stop for the present.

Reports come from the Dutch frontier that the Germans are making preparations for retirement, but military observers here say that from the fact that reinforcements are being brought up, it is certain they have not yet despaired of breaking through the allies' front and reaching either Calais or Boulogne.

Elsewhere along the great front there has been a repetition of isolated encounters which, in the French official communications, are referred to as minor affairs, but which in ordinary wars would be considered fair-sized battles.

The British fleet, according to unofficial accounts, again has taken action along the Belgian coast and has been bombarding Knocke and Zeebrugge, where the Germans are supposed to be organizing bases for their submarines.

Other Cattle Centres Profit.

CHICAGO, Nov. 7.—A large part of the cattle receiving and meat packing industries of the country, long centered here was shifted temporarily to Kansas City, Omaha, St. Joseph, Mo.; and other western cities, last night, and the Chicago Union Stock Yards, for the first time since its organization in 1864, was closed down for nine days in consequence of the prevalence of hoof and mouth disease among cattle.

The quarantine against the stock yards and all other cattle pens within the state went into effect at midnight.

TSING-TAU IS TAKEN

Kaiser's Stronghold Surrenders After Infantry Charge

LOSS TO ALLIES HEAVY

TOKIO, Nov. 7.—It is officially announced that the German fortress of Tsingtau has surrendered to the Japanese and British forces.

The first step in bringing about the surrender of the fortress occurred at midnight, when the infantry charged and occupied the middle fort of the first line of defence. In this operation they took 200 prisoners.

The capture of Tsingtau loses to Germany her last foot of possessions on the Asiatic mainland as well as her last strategic position outside of the German empire in Europe. For nearly three months the German garrison, amounting to about 7,000 men, has held out against the land and sea attacks of the Japanese and certain British detachments of both white and Indian troops that found themselves in China at the outbreak of the war. What the losses of the garrison have been are not known, but the official Japanese and British reports have indicated that Tsingtau has been taken at heavy cost of men on the part of the allies.

The operations in this isolated far eastern theatre of the war have been reduced to a scale of some 200 square miles, as compared with the whole continent of Europe, but on that account they have been none the less interesting. Aeroplanes and all other accompaniments of modern warfare have figured in both the Japanese and the German operations.

The number of the expeditionary forces has never been officially divulged, but it is said to have been upwards of 3,000 men. A British detachment, consisting of some 300 men of South Wales Borderers and 400 Indian Sikhs, under command of Brig.-Gen. Nathaniel W. Bonardiston, commander of the north China forces, was at their head; and is said to have formed a part of the centre of the Japanese line in the investment of Tsingtau. Fighting continued from the middle of September intermittently until the fall of the fortress yesterday. During this period both the German and the Japanese warships and aeroplanes engaged in the bombardment of each other's positions. In one of the most severe of these engagements on Oct. 1 it was announced that the Japanese loss was 1,700 killed and 500 wounded. It was then reported that the general would await the arrival of the siege guns before continuing hostilities. The German casualties were said to be very small. On Oct. 17 the cruiser Takachiho was blown up by the German torpedo boat S-90. The Germans had five forts exclusively for shore defences.

FRENCH HELD THE BRIDGE

Germans Are Defeated Near Sempigny as Result of Rush

PARIS, Nov. 7.—The story of an exciting incident that took place near an important bridge over the Oise, not far from Sempigny, has been received here.

The French were ordered to hold the bridge at any cost. They placed quick-firers, which played havoc for twenty minutes in the German ranks and prevented the German advance. Suddenly the bugle sounded for a French retreat and the Germans quickly pursued them over the bridge. A moment later a French aviator, who had been hovering overhead, dropped a bomb, which completely destroyed the bridge.

The French then delivered a bayonet charge, forcing the enemy into the river. A pontoon bridge was quickly constructed and the French crossed. They succeeded not only in gaining the lost position, but in establishing themselves in an advanced position at Tracy.

Body Found in Woods.

BRACEBRIDGE, Nov. 7. — The body of Joseph Gleason, about 55, was found yesterday morning in a bush about three miles from town by a search party, who have been hunting for him for several days. He left home over two weeks ago to hunt partridges. There was a bullet wound in the head and the gun was lying across his arm. No suspicion of foul play is entertained, nor no cause is known for suicide. An inquest will be held.

The Photo Drama Company's "After The Ball"

Among the supporting cast of Kelcey and Shannon in "After the Ball" is little Joyce Fair, who has made New York sit up and take notice of her acting on the legitimate stage. This is the little maiden that climbs on Mr. Kelcey's knee and to whom he tells his sad story of why he is single and why he has no home. She is a very beautiful child, blonde with big blue eyes and her acting in the film production with Mr. Kelcey wins all hearts. Some say that she is a pocket edition of winsome Effie Shannon, Mr. Kelcey's co-star. Little Joyce is now electrifying New York as the child who gets kidnapped in the "Dummy" and is the star of that production.

"After the Ball" will be shown at the Grand Opera House, Monday and Tuesday, Nov 9th and 10th. Several performances will be given each day and evening, so that all may set their own time to see it. Matinee at 2.30 and 4; Night, 7.30 and 9. Seats on sale at Box Office.

BUFFALO CATTLE MART COMPLETELY PARALYZED

BUFFALO, Nov. 6.—Pending the completion of the disinfection of the pens and yards at the East Buffalo yards, business is at a complete standstill. Not a head of cattle, sheep or hogs is at the yards to-day. Expectation that business would be resumed in a few days was blasted to-day when stock yards officials were notified by Washington authorities that not even stock shipped from clean districts in quarantined states could be handled or shipped to inter-state points for immediate slaughter. The ruling limited the source of supply to Canada and states not under quarantine.

ELECTION TRIAL POSTPONED FOR THE PRESENT

VALLEYFIELD, Que., Nov. 6.—By the consent of all parties concerned, the petition proceedings in connection with the Chateauguay by-election have been indefinitely postponed. The procedings arose out of the election of James Morris, Conservative, over Hon. Sydney Fisher, Liberal. The supporters of Mr. Fisher contested the election on the grounds of alleged bribery, and Mr. Morris entered a cross-petition.

The postponement was brought about by the intervention of Sir Charles Davidson, chief justice of the province, who advised the trial judge, Mr. Justice Charbonneau, that it was in the public interest to shelve the case during the war.

When the case came up before Judge Charbonneau last night he explained the situation. W. K. McKeown, K.C., counsel for Mr. Fisher's supporters, and J. Bisaillon, K.C., counsel for Mr. Morris, both agreed to an adjournment.

Judge Charbonneau, in closing the brief session, said: "Gentlemen, I thank you both on behalf of the chief justice and on my own behalf, for what you have done. Indeed, I think I may thank you on behalf of the Canadian people."

THE BROWNING CLUB

The Browning Club met, as arranged, on Friday night at the Y.W.C.A. at 8 p.m. A further discussion of "Childe Roland" took place and the leader then read a paper on the poem and its interpretation. Next week's meeting will also be on Friday, at the same hour. The poems for discussion are "Home Thoughts From Abroad" and "Prispice." After next week the meetings will revert to their regular day, Thursday. Those who wish to be reading ahead will be glad to know that "An Epistle of Karshish" follows the two shorter poems above-mentioned.

The poem "Childe Roland" suggested itself to Browning as he read the verses sung by Edgar in his role of Tom o'Bedlam:

"Childe Roland to the Dark Tower came,
His word was still fee, foh and fum,
I smell the blood of a British man."

Browning implies that it was the first of these three lines which called the picture up in his mind, and whether the lines are consecutive or not in the original ballad, or whether even they are all taken from one and the same ballad, we do not know. Anyway they are consecutive in Edgar's thought and cannot but have helped to create the impression that the tower to which Childe Roland came was dark with magic as well as mystery. Antiquaries tell us that Roland was the youngest brother of one Ellen, enchanted in fairyland; that he attempted her rescue and was successful. The ballad from which the lines are taken is not known, and the doubt which attaches to the form the story took in the original romance would be a good reason for Browning not attempting to tell what happened to the knight when he got there. Browning's artist sense would forbid him to interfere with the facts of the ballad if it should prove to be extant after all. Instead, he paints in the scene just before the hero reaches his goal, a picture that no artist could paint half so well, and that certainly would contradict no fifteenth century ballad or metrical romance—the picture of a soul, a soul in the dark ages, the thoughts and emotions of a brave but simple, unlettered knight, after he has entered the domain of a mysterious foe, dread, malignant, and, of diabolical power.

Browning told Dr. Furnivall, the president of the Browning society, that the poem flashed into his mind as a vivid picture, and the poem has many qualities of a dream-vision. The images that in a dream succeed one another in mere order of time are rationalised by the waking mind, when translating into language, and forced into a logical sequence of cause and effect—post hoc, ergo propter hoc. But the continuity of the poem is largely on the surface, and when one goes deeper, at a thoughtful re-reading, all sorts of difficulties and inconsistencies begin to arise, ghosts that, unlike the problems in studied compositions, will not be laid by mere hard thinking. To Stopford Brooke the poem is "a scamper over the moorlands of imagination" and reads from stanza to stanza as though the poet did not know what was coming next; nearly all will agree with this; it even reads from line to line as though the thread of thought were floating loose "for rhymes to catch at and let go."

In view of Browning's own disclaimer of any moral purpose in "Childe Roland" we have no right to interpret the poem down to its minutest details as an allegory or to insist on any very definite purpose, in the poet's conscious intentions. Dr. Furnivall tells us that Browning gave him on three several occasions an emphatic denial to the question of allegory, and the opinion of other great artists working in the same field is surely significant. The Hon. Roden Noel, one-time chairman of the Browning society, said he had never thought of the poem as having a hidden meaning, nor would he care so to regard it. And Stopford Brooke declares us altogether too bold and too bad if we read allegory into it. Doubtless the poem—quite apart from any purpose intended—does, like any other work of art, serve some good purpose, perhaps more than one. Dowden suggests that the question occurred to Browning, "What would be the hardest task to set a mediaeval knight," and in that care true courage' or 'constancy to an ideal' might represent the central thought of the poem. But other questions may well have been in Browning's mind even if he was not aware of them, e.g., "Need a man be a coward when the whole animal in him is reduced to a shuddering mass of superstitious dread?" or "Given the right conditions, the phsychological moment, and how much of the supernatural will a man read into nature?" or even, "Cannot a natural origin be found for the general belief of primitive races and even mediaeval men in giants and warlocks, sorcery and magic?"

Questions like this may well underlie the poem, but they are all subordinate to Browning's constant purpose, the purpose which runs through all his poems and which dictated their form (the dramatic monologue) as well as their matter. Browning's interest did not lie in Fairyland or in scenes of glamour; hardly any of his poems are really romantic. Browning's one absorbing interest was psychological. The human mind, its moods, motives and character, on all occasions, amid the most diverse circumstances in distant ages and in alien races, he strove to see the thoughts and emotions of his dramatis personae in actual working. He spent "a lifetime training for the sight" and he was certainly no fool to go "a-dozing at the very nonce."

Browning wants to show a mediaeval mind at work; he sets Childe Roland a harder task of knight errantry than any heroic romance ever conceived. "Take a knight," (he seems to have said to himself) "in the hour of his greatest weakness, when mind and body are exhausted and dejected after years of disappointment, when he feels he has outstayed life's welcome, set him at the weary close of a dreary day on a path that is gloomy and of appalling ugliness; pit him against an unseen, mysterious foe of superhuman power and malignant nature, make everything in the scene without add to the despondency within; reduce the animal in him to a shuddering mass of superstitious horror; and when he has reached the last degree of creepe—both body and mind—see if his soul be craven too.

Synopsis of "Childe Roland."

To the primitive savage, the woods and wilds, especially after sunset, were peopled with giants, wizards, warlocks and elves; mediaeval man believed just as strongly in witchcraft, but Christianity had translated the pagan folk lore into a new language. Enchantment was spoken of as the Black Art, and was supposed to emanate from Satan. Men knew nothing of natural laws in the Dark Ages and became as little children, facing the night side of nature. Like children, even the bravest of mediaeval warriors feared to go in the dark and peopled the night, if they had any imagination, with fearsome forms of life and dread powers of darkness.

Childe Roland is brave, but superstitious; the thing he has sworn to destroy has a most malignant nature and powers far beyond human. Its deadly influence has blighted and deformed (even demoralised) all nature round about, and the tract surrounding the Dark Tower is reputed full of peril. None of those before him whose search for the magic castle was rewarded, has ever lived to tell the tale.

As usual, in Browning, the poem takes the form of a dramatic monologue; the hero is narrating to some unseen but actual audience his experiences in approaching the Dark Tower and we are enabled to read his thoughts and emotions from the moment when he entered the ominous tract. As in a short story, we are plunged at the first words into the middle of the subject and for several stanzas our wits are on the stretch, trying to fill in the antecedent conditions that have led up to the situation of the opening lines.

The speaker is evidently back from a most perilous quest; his foe, no mortal man, but one of the powers of darkness against whom ordinary weapons—physical prowess, coat of mail and trusty steel—would be useless. Until the day he is telling of, he has followed his quest vainly, far and wide, through many a long year; all his brother knight-errant have failed; more than one of his friendship's idols have fallen, shattered; the hey-day of youth is long gone; he feels as though he had had more than his share of life's disappointments, as though he had outstayed his welcome.

On this particular day he seems to have touched the lowest depth of despondency. Extreme mental dejection and physical exhaustion combine to make him wish the thing were ended. With the courage of despair he turns out of the highway into a lonely path leading towards the unseen foe. In his mind he is aware that the power he has sworn to meet is supernatural, malignant and of devilish subtlety; the way is strange to him and the light uncertain; the long, grey day is settling slowly down into gloom; it is the hour when magic and the spirits of darkness are abroad; the tract he is crossing is reputed to be part of the domain of the Dark Tower, hidden somewhere in its midst. A sense of eeriness assails him, and he is gradually overcome, mind and body, with superstitious dread. He loses the balanced judgment of broad daylight and every object that meets his senses takes on a weird and unnatural shape. The beggar, who directed him, becomes a malicious agent in the interests of the Dark Tower, and his every action is interpreted anew in the light of this idea. Even Nature is in league against him; a red gleam in the west seems a grin of cruel joy at the capture of one more victim by the ominous tract. The sudden swallowing up of the road in the waste of the blasted heath seems quite sinister, and the work of sorcery. The very ground and what grows on it is cursed, and as it were envenomed by the baneful influence of some malignant being. The only living object in sight, a starveling old horse, gaunt, blind and mis-shapen, appears of such appalling ugliness, that, in a sudden revulsion of feeling, he fairly hates the brute, and gets savage satisfaction out of an article of his mediaeval creed that pain is a judgment for sin. By this time his senses are so tortured that he can endure no more, and, closing his eyes, he attempts to refresh his spirit at the springs of memory. But, horror of horrors, he finds them poisoned by the same insidious influence which has coiled about his very heart, an enemy sly and serpentine. He dare not look within any more, and forces his attention outwards, straining ear and eye to pierce the gathering gloom. By this time the whole man is shuddering with superstitious dread, and his heated imagination distorts the view; at each step he is looking for sorcery, and he finds it everywhere. The stream he espies can be no ordinary stream; it has come there by magic; it suggests wrath and spite and fiendishness. As the knight fords it he undergoes an agony of fear, expecting to set his foot or his lance on a dead man's face; the cry of some creature scotched by the spear rings through his brain with the awfulness of a human shriek. A confused trample of footprints on the further bank suggests a hideous melee of people fighting — shut up in a narrow space like lords writhing in a poisoned tank, or cats in a red-hot cage; and he remembers stories of what the Turks do for sport when they capture a convoy of pilgrims to Palestine Further on a rusty-toothed implement of strange design revives these images of hellish torture, Then once more, for a space he can see only the waste and blasted heath, good for nothing. Then a solitary tree, distorted and cleft at the top into the ghastly semblance of a human mouth, gaping at death. He has been looking for some weird thing to emerge from the gloom and direct him to the awful Tower, some creature of the darkness, an owl or a bat; and presently, silent as death, sails by a great raven; and as the knight looks up, he finds himself no longer in the midst of a plain, but hemmed closely in on all sides by dark, menacing mountains. He can't explain to his audiences how they got there; at the time it seemed sheer sorcery, but his hearers, with their cooler judgment, may find some natural explanation. Then there comes over him that weird, uncanny sense—so often found with mental fatigue—of having been in this same place before, a sense as vague as a memory from some pre-existence, and it persists long enough for him to test it by several successive objects of vision—the scene to right and to left, all strangely familiar. And in the midst looms up — the Tower; round, low, with never a window, made of brown stone, like nothing else in the world. From time to time, as he tells his story, a look, a protest or a question warns him that he is not carrying his audience with him, and he tries to explain. How could he see it so clearly? Why a belated gleam of sunlight revealed the mountains, bending over him like giants watching the quarry they had brought to bay; next moment, all the dark, and a yell of triumph, like the mort blown on a huntsman's bugle, blared out of the blackness. A confused babel of voices rang in his ears, shouting the names and virtues of the lost members of his brotherhood. A flare of light seemed to flash round the circle of hills and in it he saw the lost ones' faces, every one distinct, staring out at him. His soul has been harrowed up, his blood frozen, his brain tortured, through eye and ear, till the whole animal in him bristles with goose-flesh. Is he proved craven? No! in this supreme moment the will soars triumphant: "Dauntless the slug-horn to my lips I set,
And blew.

RINGWORM COVERED CHILD'S FACE

Much Inflamed. Child Not Recognizable. Troubled with Itching. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Free from Trouble.

Stanfield, Que.—"A year ago my little boy, three years old, was affected with ringworm on the chin. It did not appear to make him suffer and I paid no attention to it. But what was my surprise when after a time the eruption increased by half and was much inflamed. I commenced to use a remedy, but the breaking out only spread so that it covered the whole of his face. He was not recognizable. He scratched the eruption often, which made it red. What troubled him was the itching.

"I had taken care of it for a year without doing him any good. Then I sent for some Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I washed his face morning and evening with the Cuticura Soap and warm water before applying the Cuticura Ointment. At the end of a month he was completely free from the trouble." (Signed) Mrs. Alfred Trepanier, May 16, 1914.

IF KIDNEYS ACT BAD TAKE SALTS

Says Backache is Sign You Have Been Eating Too Much Meat

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about two ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

WINDOW BROKEN IN HOTEL ROW

In a row at the Grand Hotel this afternoon Patrick Lavery, it is alleged, broke a window and the police were summoned to still the troubled waters. Lavery was arrested and will appear in police court Monday morning. Nobody was hurt in the affair, which for a moment was a miniature Donnybrook fair, but it caused a big commotion at the hotel, and before it was over a crowd had gathered to take in the proceedings.

Appointment of Wiring Inspector

A joint meeting of the Fire, Water and Light and Power committees was held on Friday evening. Ald. Green, who presided, characterized the meeting as a "family gathering" to discuss the street lighting question, and its improvement. The question of appointing an inspector of wiring was also considered.

On motion of Aldermen Duncan and Stratton, it was moved that the matter of the appointment of an inspector of wiring be referred to the Utilities Commission with the request that they consider it and inform the committee of their finding.

PAIN CONSTANTLY TORTURED HIM

Student Became So Ill, He Was Forced To Leave Berthier College. Suffered For Two Years Until Cured By Wonderful "Fruit-a-tives" Tablets.

MAGLOIRE PAQUIN, ESQ.

St. Boniface de Shawinigan, Feb. 3rd, 1914.

"It is a pleasure to me to inform you that after having suffered from Chronic Constipation for 2½ years, I have been cured by the use of "Fruit-a-tives". While I was a student at Berthier College, I became so ill that I was forced to leave College. Severe pains across the intestines continually tortured me and it came to a point when I could not stoop down at all. At times, I used to be for three or four days without a single motion of the bowels, and I became so sick that my digestion became paralyzed. Some one advised me to take "Fruit-a-tives" and at once noticed a great improvement. After I had taken four or five boxes, I realised that I was completely cured".

MAGLOIRE PAQUIN

Many famous physicians have stated that fully 50% of the cases of Kidney Trouble, Pain In The Back, Indigestion, Sour Stomach, Appendicitis, Nervousness, Headaches, Typhoid Fever, Rheumatism and Neuralgia, are found in people who habitually suffer from Chronic Constipation. Surely, you must realize the danger of Constipation "Fruit-a-tives" acts directly on the Liver; stimulates this organ to renewed vigor; enables the Liver to give up sufficient bile to move the bowels and insures the bowels moving regularly and naturally every day. "Fruit-a-tives" will positively cure every case of Constipation, no matter how severe it may be. [illegible]

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At all dealers or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

Johnny Evers Is On The Square or He Wouldn't Have Made $40,000

If John J. Evers captain of the new world's champions, had broken his word of honour last winter he would not have earned $40,000 this year for his services on the ball field. When President Gaffney of the Boston Braves received permission from the National League to negotiate with Evers after the little Trojan had been declared a free agent because of the trouble with Charles Webb Murphy, he took Evers into a private room at the Waldorf.

"I want you to sign with the Boston club, Johnny," said Gaffney. "I am prepared to talk terms with you now."

"I have given my word to the Chicago Federal League men, Weegham and Tinker, that I will talk with nobody until they have named their terms," replied Evers. "But I promise to come back and accept your terms if they equal the Chicago figures!"

"Your word is good enough for me, my boy," responded the Boston magnate. "Go to the Knickerbocker and see the Feds, as you have agreed to do."

Evers promptly left Gaffney and 10 minutes later he was closeted with Gilmore, Weeghman, Tinker, Knabe, Hanlon and other Feds Evers was asked to count a big roll of yellow-backs on the table. He counted $30,-000 in cash and was told he could have it in advance if he would sign a three years' contract at $15,000 a year.

"I'll have to see Gaffney first," explained Evers, as the Feds urged him to accept "I gave my word I wouldn't sign with you before he had a chance to do business with me!"

So Evers returned to the Waldorf, much to the surprise of the Feds, and when Gaffney met him Johnny related what had happened.

"Just because you kept your word, Johnny, I'll give you a bonus of $25,-000 in cash if you will sign for three years at $10,000 a year," said the Braves' owner "If we finish first you will have an extra $3,000 and also money coming from the world's series".

Evers signed up at once and he isn't a bit sorry Several years ago the little second baseman lost his savings $16,000, in a business venture in Troy On top of this he broke his leg during a game with the Cubs, and also had an automobile accident, in which a Chicago newspaper man, who was his closest friend was killed. Evers became a nervous wreck and did not play again until 1912. He succeeded Chance as manager of the Cubs two years ago and received onather shock when Murphy suddenly deposed him in favour of Hank O'Day. It's almost a sure thing that Evers next year will receive another bonus for acting as the Braves' field marshal. He says that it pays to be on the square.

Hardy and Gibson Meet at Brock St. Rink To-night

The big wrestling match at Brock St. Rink to-night between Andy Gibson, of Toronto, and Alf. Hardy, has aroused a lot of interest and speculation as to the result. Both men have many admirers and a big crowd will be there to see what promises to be the warmest contest of the series. Two local boys, H. McLean and J. Cartlidge, will meet in the preliminary.

A LETTER FROM SALISBURY PLAINS

Mrs. E. Phippe, King George Street Hears From Her Son

Mrs. E. Phippe, King George street, has received the following interesting letter from her son, Pte. A. W. Phippe, who is on of the 57th quota in the first contingent of the Canadian Overseas Forces:

Oct. 19th, 1914, A Company,
Canadian Overseas Contingent,
Salisbury Plain, Eng.

Dear Mother and All,—I am pleased to say I have just received your two letters, with cards and photos, and was just starting to write you when I heard by name called out for the mail. Well, dear, I must say I feel great at present. Jack and myself are in the same tent again. We are keeping together good. Dear mother we were on the boat just three weeks and three days. It did seem a long time. I was glad to get off. When we did get off it was dark, for it was 9 o'clock Sunday night, Oct. 18th. Then we had to march to the station which was 2 miles from the docks, and as we marched through the streets of Plymouth we were cheered and the people came and shook hands, and gave us lots of fruit. It was as much as we could do to hear ourselves speak, and I shall always remember it, also the sights which I seen coming along.

Well, dear, it was 12 at night when we got into the train for Salisbury, and we could hear the cheering for a long while after we left the station. I had one or two smiles to myself. There were the same old sights once again. The fellows still wear the tight trousers here, everything seemed so different. The trains and the engines look so small after seeing them at Peterborough. I knocked my head getting into the carriage.

It was about 8 o'clock Monday morning when we got out of the train at Salisbury. Then we had to march to the camp, which was about 6 or 9 miles away. I must say I was pretty tired out when we arrived, for we had to carry everything with us, and you know we had fairly well to carry when we left Peterborough, well we had lots more from Valcartier.

I guess you have heard of Stonehenge. Well we had to pass it on our way to Salisbury Plains. It is wonderful how they can place such large stones. I will send you a P. P. of it in my next letter.

Dear mother, I am pleased to say I am a good shot with the rifle, and I bet if ever I have to go to the front I shall try not to miss one of the Germans. I am anxious to get there you know. Well, I must say the weather here is grand for the time of the year.

They do say here we may get two or three days' leave. If so, Frank Giles and I will go to Kiddie, all being well.

I remain, your ever-loving son,
ART.

P.S.—I am pleased to say we all got a bedding made of straw; also a pillow and three blankets, so don't think I shall be cold. I forgot to say a word of the airships since I got here yesterday. I have seen lots of them all around the camp. It is a grand sight to see them flying around.

Good night,
ARTHUR.

SUPPLIES WERE PLENTIFUL

On the Farmer's Market This Morning—No Increase in Price of Beef

The local demand for produce of all kinds was strong this morning. Offerings were fairly heavy and farmers had little difficulty in realizing on their stocks. Between 11 and 12 o'clock trading was particularly brisk and several tons of produce changed hands at prices that varied little from last week. As usual the first hour was given over to skirmishing for price levels. This is necessary to enable the vendors to feel the pulse of the market, so to speak, and determine the prices that should be asked for the various commodities offered. A buyer will often visit the market between the hours of ten and eleven o'clock and refrain from buying until the market has been open for at least an hour, when they will purchase freely, believing that they have avoided the possibility of paying more than market conditions might justify.

The Inside Market

Was crowded to capacity. Among the buyers in this section was Fire Chief Howard. The latter was the proud possessor of a couple of chickens and a plump-looking goose. The Chief will doubtless agree that a nice roast goose, supported by a brace of chickens, constitute a pretty fair Sunday dinner for a hard-working Fire Chief. Geese were selling at from $1.25 to $1.50 each. Chickens sold at 75c to $1 a pair. They were a little higher than last week.

It would not have taken a very large basket to contain all the eggs that were exposed for sale at 35c per dozen. eggs are scare and ligely to remain so for some time to come. Large quantities of butter were sold at the prevailing price of 30c. a pound. A few turkeys changed hands at 20c a pound.

The Outside Market

Meat and vegetables were plentiful on the outside market. Lamb sold as high as fifteen cents a pound, which is about two cents more than the price asked in the local retail stores. Very little beef was to be had. Most of the beef that is marketed is absorbed by the retailers at about 12c. per sixteen ounces. When asked as to whether the foot and mouth disease, which has resulted in the closing of some of the largest cattle markets in the United States, would have any effect on local prices, a local butcher remarked that it should have a tendency to lower prices, as it would mean a big reduction in the amount of beef exported to the other side. Pork sold at 14c a pound.

Potatoes sold for 65c. a bag, some of the farmers charging an additional five cents for single bag lots. Apples were fairly plentiful at $2 a bag. Cabbages, 35c. a dozen, and cauliflowers at 5c. each.

BOTH RAISINS AND FIGS WILL BE DEARER

Turkey's Entrance Into Theatre of War Will Affect the Market

The following comment on the market situation as regards food stuffs appeared in the Canadian Grocer this week:

The action of Turkey in taking up a role in the European theatre of war has had a direct effect on the market for figs and raisins, while the closing of the North Sea has cut off shipments of Java Coffee and other goods which come through Amsterdam. These are the important developments of the week in which the war is shown to be playing an important part in the grocery markets.

Communication with Turkey has been cut off and it is not expected that there will be any further shipments. Prices of figs and Sultana raisins are sure to advance further and Valencias are dearer in sympathy.

On Wednesday there was a reduction of 30c per cwt. in the price of sugar announced by the Canadian refiners. This change comes rather sooner than the trade had been counting on in view of the attitude of the refiners and is likely to be followed by others now that the peak load has been passed. It had been thought that the price would remain firm until about the end of the year, but it would appear that the refiners have either been shorter on high-priced raws than had been thought or that it has been decided to stay closer to the present American market.

The new No. 16 Dutch sugar standard recently issued by the Government is at least two points darker than that in use at the Montreal customs office. It is considered by the trade in that cityt that a mistake has been made as this standard threatens to cut out much of the Muscovado sugar now coming from Barbadoes, as well as much of the Jamaica yellow crystal. The trade hopes that standard will be allowed to remain as before. E. P. Mouir, secretary of the Canadian West Indian League is taking the matter up with Ottawa.

The tea situation has become even more acute during the week and promises to continue critical for some time at least until there are new supplies in London. At the sale this week the price advanced another ½d. making 3c to 4c pound during the past six weeks. Sales at auction have dropped from 30,000 to 40,000 chests to 6,000 chests, and one big firm with a weekly requirement of 1,000 to 1,500 chests this week got but 18. Cabling has been discontinued on order of the admiralty with the result that importers do not know what they have afloat; there is nothing to indicate what of their purchases have been shipped. Japans are scarce and Chinas also firm.

Shipments of fruits have been received direct at Montreal. Prices are generally lower than the tail end of the old stocks was being held at. New nuts have also come through. California fruits are very dull and lower prices are expected for apricots and prunes.

Situation regarding beans is very unsettled, particularly as the dealers in some markets were overloaded with dear stuff. Prices indicate a firm situation in the country and prices are strong.

Flour market is very dull and mills are beginning to slacken operations. Domestic demand for high-grade flour is very weak and millers have difficulty in getting second-grade for export. Besides export bids are out of line owing to high prices of wheat as compared with United States and difficulties of transportation coupled with increased freight rates.

Great Britain continues to take Canadian eggs and the price for strictly fresh is higher. The situation here will be balanced by the fact that there is a big overplus of supplies in the United States upon which we can draw

TURKS SUFFER HEAVY LOSSES

Russians Continue to Drive Troops of the Sultan Backward—Many Villages Captured

BRITISH WARSHIP HIT

LONDON, Nov. 6.—There was a lull in operations along the Turco-Russian front in Caucasia to-day except at points where the Russians continued to drive the Turkish troops backward, capturing several small villages and inflicting considerable losses. Both sides appear to be preparing for an important battle in that region, according to reports received here from various points to-night.

A despatch received by the Daily Telegraph from Tiflis, by way of Moscow, says:

"The Turkish town of Van (140 miles south-east of Erzerum, Turkish Armenia) is being besieged by a detachment of Armenians, who are aiding the Russians. The town has a large arsenal. Another Armenian detachment is operating in the rear of the Turkish army."

Bombarded Dardenelles.

The bombardment of the forts on the Dardenelles by the French and British Mediterranean fleets was kept up throughout the day, but reports from the commanders are lacking. From Constantinople despatches were received announceing that one of the British warships was struck by a shell from the forts and that an explosion occurred on board.

The Turks are said to have seized the British steamships Assiout and City of Khios at Smyrna. The Assiout, of 1,994 tons, and the Khios, of 2,283 tons, hail from Alexandria, where they left in October. The Turks are also reported to have sunk an unnamed British steamer off Aivali, in Asia Minor, after putting the crew and cargo on shore.

In the Black Sea the Turkish fleet is reported to have bombarded the fortified port of Batoum on the east shore.

The Russian troops, according to a statement from Petrograd, are approaching Erzerum, the principal city of Turkish Armenia, the advance being led by Cossacks. The city is defended by modern fortifications and a siege is expected, for which the Russians will have to bring up big guns.

The Russian Consul-General from Constantinople who had reached Odessa, has issued a statement reporting that Turkish officials were as much surprised as the Russians at the offensive undertaken by the Turkish fleet in the Black Sea. He says:

"The news of the Turkish bombardment became known in Constantinople some time after the occurrence Admitting that Turkey was fully prepared for war, nevertheless German action precipitated the crisis. I regard the extreme courtesy shown Russian officials for two days following the attack as proof of the Turkish surprise at recent events".

The Turkish Minister of Foreign Affairs furnished a large guard to the Russian Ambassador and the Consul and the private secretary of the Grand Vizier superintended the departure

A report from Athens to-night is to the effect that the former Governor of Sairniki, in Epirus, has notified the Epirotes that their country has been annexed by Greece.

Used the Bayonet.

Apparently the Russians are depending to some extent on the element of surprise in their operations in the Causcasian frontier. By forced marches they have taken several detachments of Turkish troops unawares and have routed them at the poit of the bayonet by unexpected attacks upon strongly held forts. In several cases the Turks fled, leaving behind them their wounded and artillery and supplies.

Reports from Athens and Rome say that Albania was a centre of disturbances to-day, a number of conflicts between Mussulmans and Christians being reported.

Before his departure from London the Turkish Ambassador is understod to have promised safe conduct out of the country for French and British officials in Turkey.

QUESTION WAS NOT ANSWERED

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—In the list of questions in your paper Thursday evening which Dr. Gordon was going to answer, the 14th reads, "Why is it that we cannot heal the sick as the apostles did?" When the reverend doctor came to it, he said, "I will leave this for the last," but he did not refer to it again. Perhaps the committee can tell us why this question went unanswered.

Very truly yours,
ENQUIRER.

ARMY WORM DID $300,000 DAMAGE

A Deadly Enemy to Trees, However, Might be Expected Any Time and Farmers Are Warned to be on Lookout.

TORONTO, Nov. 7.—Three hundred thousand dollars is the amount of the damage done by the army worm in Canada during the past summer, according to the estimate given yesterday at the fifty-first annual meeting of the Entomological Society of Ontario by Mr. A. Gibson, of Ottawa. Of this Ontario was the loser to the extent of $260,000. The remainder of the damage done was in Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. The pest worked its havoc in 142 townships in 37 counties.

At the meeting yesterday there was a prolonged discussion about the destructive little worm, and many interesting points were brought out. No place in the world where the army worm has ravaged the crops one year does it return the next, and, in the opinion of Messrs G. W. Baker, of Guelph, and Gibson, who read papers yesterday, there will be no return of the pest next summer in those parts of the country which were infested with it this year. Mr. Baker pointed out that there were eleven species of parasites which helped in the destruction of the worm and spoke of the best manner of dealing with it when crops were attacked. The method he advocated was that one taken by the farmers in Ontario during the summer of digging a trench a foot deep and then putting deeper holes in at given spaces. The crops attacked were oats, barley, wheat, corn, millet and clover.

Berlin Issues Threat.

BERLIN, Nov. 7. — The following announcement is given to the press from official sources:

"Germany's warning of retaliation in case German subjects between the ages of 17 and 55, who are now detained in England, were not treated differently before Nov. 5, has been unanswered by the British Government. Therefore the German Government has ordered the detention of all British of similar ages who are residing in Germany.

"This measure is not only for English subjects, but soon will be extended to British colonials, unless Germans living in British colonies are left unmolested."

OBITUARY

ADAM HAVERY.

The death occurred this morning at 7 o'clock of Adam Havery, 471 Albert Street, who passed away after a lingering illness of over two years. His death will be deeply regretted by a large number of friends.

He leaves to mourn his loss a sorrowin gwife and three daughters, Mrs. Wm. Nickol, Maxbass, North Dakota, Jessie and Christian at home.

The funeral service will be conducted by Rev. H. G. Keith, Monday, Nov. 9th, at 2 o'clock. The funeral will be held to the Little Lake Cemetery at 2.30.

MRS. W. H. IRWIN.

The death occurred in Toronto last evening of Mrs. Walter Irwin, wife of Mr. W. H. Irwin, formerly of Peterborough. The late Mrs. Irwin had been in the hospital in Toronto for some week before her death. Deceased, whoe maiden name was Elizabeth Maud Montgomery, was thirty-five years of age. She was born in Buckhorn, but lived for some time in Peterborough, she has many friends in both places who will be sorry to learn of her death.

The late Mrs. Irwin is survived by her husband and four small daughters in Toronto. Five brothers and five sisters also survive her. The remains will be brought to Peterborough to-night and the funeral will be held on Monday from the home of L. Gray, Charlotte Street.

GEORGE SINGLETON.

A well-known and respected citizen in the person of Mr. George Singleton, 161 Stewart street, passed away at his home this morning. The late Mr. Singleton has resided in Peterborough for about fifteen years and during that time he has won many friends, who will sincerely regret his death. He was born in Ireland, but for years formed in this neighbourhood, retiring some years ago to this city, where he has since resided. He was 76 years of age.

He is survived by his wife, and three daughters, Mrs. A. Cameron, Toronto; R. Little, Lakefield, and Mrs. Wilson, of Warsaw.

The funeral will be held on Monday afternoon from the family residence to the Little Lake cemetery at 3:30 o'clock. Service will be conducted at the house at three o'clock.

MRS. JOHN PEDLAR.

The death occurred in Toronto last night of Mrs. John Pedlar, of that city, and formerly of Peterborough. The late Mrs. Pedlar had been ill for a long time before her death, and passed away at her home, 55 Major Street.

Deceased was very well known in Peterborough, where she resided up till nine years ago. At that time she moved to Toronto, where she lived until her death. She was very highly respected by all who came in touch with her, and her death will be widely and sincerely mourned.

She is survived by her husband, of Toronto, and four sons, Walter, of Toronto, William of Detroit, and Lewis B. and Orland, of Toronto. One daughter, Mrs. McMillan, of Toronto, also survives her.

The remains will be brought to Peterborough on the noon C. P. R. train on Monday, and the funeral will be held to the Little Lake Cemetery.

PARIS MORE CHEERFUL.

Failure of Germans to Cross Yser Raises Hope in French Capital.

PARIS, Nov. 7.—Paris appears to be more optimistic. The hope is freely expressed that a few more weeks of patient effort on the part of the allies will result in forcing the Germans right back into the interior of Belgium and so compelling the withdrawal of the whole line from Lille to Moselle toward the frontier.

This hopefulness is based to a considerable extent on the progress of the allies east of the Yser, which is accepted as establishing that the Germans have fallen back some distance from the river. The lack of the former energy in the German offensive between Dixmude and the Lys whether it indicates a general retirement or the temporary exhaustion of their troops, is held to be all the more remarkable since there are no less than eight army corps massed on that front.

REV. DR. CLEAVER WILL PREACH

To-morrow will be missionary anniversary in the George Street Methodist Church. Rev. Dr. Cleaver, of Toronto, one of the ablest Methodists in Canada, will preach at both services. On Tuesday night he will give his celebrated lecture on "Jean Valjean" in the same church. Do not fail to hear him.

HEART WOULD PALPITATE.

HAD WEAK and DIZZY SPELLS.

Palpitation of the heart is one of the most common of all heart troubles. The heart will beat fast for several seconds, then slow, then start to flutter, and a feeling of utter depression will come over the system accompanied by weak and dizzy spells, making you feel that you are surely going to die. When you feel this way what you require is a real good heart and nerve tonic; one that will strengthen the weak heart and build up the nerve system. For this purpose we know of nothing that can equal Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

Mrs. J. S. Michelle, Lipswel, Ont., writes: "I was weak and run down, my heart would palpitate, and it would take weak and dizzy spells. A friend advised me to try your Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills so I started at once, and found that I felt much stronger, and my heart was ever so much better within a short time. I cannot praise your medicine too highly for it has done me a world of good. My husband has also been bothered with heart trouble ever since childhood and finds great relief in using your valuable pills."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50 cents per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

ENEMY AGAIN TRAPPED IN AN ARRAS SUBURB

PARIS, Nov. 7.—"We are on the eve of a new victory, comparable to that of the Marne." So writes General Bonnal, one of France's greatest military leaders and experts, to The Matin to-day.

PARIS, Nov. 6.—The violent German attacks at Arras indicate, it is thought here, that another attempt is being made to turn the French forces, similar to the effort on October 31, which failed because the French obtained early information of the German plans.

A despatch to The Soleil du Midi from Boulogne says that the attacks were made by two columns, one from Lens and the other from Douai, which joined at Bailleul (17 miles north-west of Lille).

The French had evacuated the villages north of Arras and kept their troops carefully concealed in the city. The Germans, expecting no opposition, marched into the suburb of St. Nicholas with bands playing and colours flying. Suddenly fire was opened from the houses as the enemy debouched onto the bridge over the Scarpe.

GUARDSMEN SURRENDERED.

A battalion guard with fixed bayonets dashed forward hoping to escape into the city, but French Dragoons unexpectedly appeared. Caught between quick firers and the sabres of the cavalry, the guardsmen threw down their arms, while the troops behind them beat a hasty retreat.

Meanwhile a French aviator dropped bombs, destroying the track behind an armoured train which was following the columns. On the train was found a 16-inch gun, which was being transported in sections and accompanied by a number of engineers from Krupps.

BRITISH SUCCESS AT YPRES WAS COSTLY

Russians Less Than 200 Miles From Berlin

BRITISH BAYONETS USED WITH TERRIBLE EFFECT

Two Regiments at Ypres Withstood Fierce Bombardment and Attacks During Week's Attempt To Break the Line

LONDON, Nov. 8.—A despatch to the Times from Dunkirk, France, filed Saturday night, says:

"After a desperate attack lasting the whole week the German attempt to break the allid line at Ypres has failed.

"It may be admitted that the position at Ypres two days ago was serious. The town itself was bombarded by the Germans with extraordinary violence, and under the fierce cannonading the allies had to withdraw from the town, which became a 'no man's land," across which the shells from both sides burst.

"The Germans made a superhuman and final effort under cover of a fierce bombardment of the British positions. They had prepared a determined onslaught, masses of men were launched in succession at chosen points on our front. The assault was met in a supreme way. Two regiments, one Scottish and one of the Guards, went down with bayonets to step the advance. It was the most terrible bayonet charge of the whole of the war. It succeeded; the break in the line was repaired, and the German attack was once more driven back.

"That was their last effort. To-day the Germans are dropping an occasional desultory shell in Ypres, but their attacks have ceased. They are now assailing the allied line at Arras, 40 miles further to the south, but not with the same fury as they exhibited in the onslaught of the past week.

"So fierce has been the fighting around Ypres that the casualties of the Germans are believed to have reached the enormous figure of 160,000, though these figures may prove to have been exaggerated."

ITALY WILL NOT IGNORE TURKS' ACTS IN TRIPOLI

Kaiser's Promise Has Been Broken--Bedouins Raid Italian Possessions and Fire on Troops--Will Act Quickly If No Explanation is Given

ROME, Nov. 8.—Italy is sending troops to Tripoli to defend her settlements and loyal tribesmen against Arab rebels and Bedouins, who have raided supply columns in the interior and have attacked an encampment of submissive tribesmen at Derna.

Turkey has disregared the promise made to Italy by Germany that the Porte would not attack the Italian colonies and that Turkey had no designs on Tripoli. Events are tending more and more to force Italy into the war on the side of the allies. The newest, most momentous crisis has developed in Cyrenaica, due to the aggressions of Bedouins stirred by the preachments of Turkish and German agents.

News received here to-day indicates Turkey's intention to drive the Italians out of Tripoli and to regain the provinces lost in the war between Italy and Turkey. For a weak Bedouins in the interior have waylaid small detachments of troops and have fired upon and wounded Italian soldiers. Bedouins appeared in force at Derna, on the eastern extremity of the Cyrenaica promontory, and made a savage effort to destroy the encampment that was there. The desert marauders were driven off by the Italian infantry.

It seems likely that Italy within the next day or two will demand an explanation from Turkey, and possibly from Germany, since Germany has assumed to guarantee the safety of Tripoli. The situation is already comparable to that which resulted from the acts of the Turkish fleet in the Black Sea, when Great Britain, Russia and France, giving Turkey the opportunity of disavowing and making amends, declared war when satisfaction was refused.

HAVE DIVIDED ALLIED ENEMY

LONDON, Nov. 8.—A despatch from Petrograd to the Rome Tribuna says that the Russians have completely separated the Germans and Austrians. The Germans were encircled on their left flank and compelled to retreat precipitately and on Thursday the Russians, by a swift movement, occupied all the lines of retreat toward Cracow and the Austrian army was pushed toward the Carpathians, closely pursued by the Russians.

According to the correspondent of the Tribuna, the position of the Austrians is desperate, as their only line of retreat lies across the Carpathians into Hungary, and these mountains, with the recent snowfalls, are almost impassable to a million and a half of men with provisions and munitions, transport and artillery.

HUSBAND MUST WOO AFTER WEDDING SAYS THIS DETROIT PASTOR

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 6.—Happiness in married life depends first of all upon the affility of the husband to marriage as during courtship. This marriage as during courtship. This is the opinion of 100 Detroit wives, expressed by letters collected by the Rev. Howard A. Field, pastor of the Simpson M. E. Church. All answered that the ideal husband first must be considerate lover, and also that he must also love the home; industrious even to the extent of being willing to roll up his sleeves and help tidy the house.

What County Council Did

Minutes of Last Week's Session Abridged for Benefit of Country Readers

The following are the minutes of the County Council's session, which closed on Saturday:

On motion of Messrs. Garbutt and Squire, this Council, by way of appreciation of the trophy presented to the ploughing competition, the Clerk was authorized to convey to Mr. Burnham, M.P.P., the gratitude of this body for the same.

On motion of Messrs. Campbell and Coben, the Poultry Association was granted the same of $40 on condition of there being an exhibition held.

On motion of Messrs. Coben and Fitzgerald the report of the Chairman of the House of Refuge, was adopted.

The Chairman drew the attention of the Council to a request he received to visit an old gentleman who had left the House of Refuge, who wished to make a statement to the effect that correspondence between him and his friends during his stay at the House of Refuge, was in some way obliterated, notwithstanding the fact that he had had several letters written to his friends that did not reach their destination, and also letets purported to be written to him had never reached him.

On motion of Messrs. Squire and Coben the Board of Management and Mr. Brown were authorized to carry into effect a thorough investigation.

The reports of the several committees were read and adopted:

In the financial report, a recommendation appears to provide for the paying of $400 per month until the January session of 1915, with a recommendation to the succeeding Council to continue the same as long as necessary, the said money to be paid to the Belgian Relief Fund, the Red Cross Society, or the Canadian Patriotic Association, as directed by a Committee named in the said report.

By-laws confirming the adoption of the several committee reports received their necessary readings and were finally passed, duly signed, and stamped with the Corporate seal.

The Finance Committee also provided for the paying of the sum of $150 to the Eastern Dairymen's Association in the event of a meeting being held in the City.

On motion of Messrs. Coben and Wilde the County Treasurer was appointed Honourary Treasurer for the County, re funds for the relief of the present situation as a result of the war, to be paid out at the instance of the local Associations sending them in.

On motion of Dr. Kindred and Mr. Squire, resolved that this Council express their appreciation of Mr. Campbell's services as a member of this Council, and also that this Council is extremely sorry that he contemplates retiring from public life at present, and hope he will change his mind.

Mr. Campbell, in response, said that words failed him to express his feelings with regard to the kind references to himself and that in his connection with the Council he had tried to do his duty and trusted he had made no enemies.

The Warden, on behalf of the Council, assured Mr. Campbell that the stand he had taken under all circumstances was so upright that it made no enemies, but on the contrary, had won the utmost respect of every member of the Council.

Japan Peeves The Germans

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 8.—The Berlin Lokal Anzeiger, commenting on the German defeat at Tsing-Tau, says:

"Germans will never forget the heroic fighting at Kiao-Chau and those who defended the colony. Never shall we forget the brutal violence of the yellow robbers not Britain, who instigated them. We know that we cannot settle our account with Japan at present. For years she will enjoy her booty. Our mills will grind slowly, but even if years should pass before the right moment comes at last, then a shout of joy will resound through Germany. Woe to you, Nippon!"

REBELS ACTIVE IN ORANGE FREE STATE

PRETORIA, Nov. 8.—An official statement issued to-day, says:

"Three hundred and fifty Transvaal rebels under Lieut.-General Beyers, were captured with all their waggons.

"The rebels in the Orange Free State are very active. They have again looted Harrismith.

"The Government has strengthened the garisons at Kroonstad, Bloemfontein and Kimberley, and they are perfectly able to deal with the situation.

"A great force surrounded the rebels from Senekhoetspoort and killed, wounded and captured many of them. Many of the rebels have become disspirited."

Russian Machine Speeding

Advance Guard in Posen Province Less Than 200 Miles From Berlin —Austrians Fleeing Yet

OPEN ROAD TO CRACOW

PETROGRAD, Nov. 8.—Russia has definitely begun the long promised invasion of Germany. A Russian advance guard has broken the German defence at the River Warthe, and has penetrated ten miles within the Province of Posen holding a position at Pleschen, which is 15 miles northwest of Kalisz and 62 miles north-east of Breslau. For the first time since the war began the Czar's troops have set foot in a province where the great estates of the German nobles are located.

Simultaneously the Russian drive at East Prussia has driven the Germans from Wirballen, their last position in the Russian Province of Suwalki, and has overflowed East Prussian territory from Stalluponen, 10 miles west of Wirballen, to Lyck, a distance of 60 miles, the Russian front being from 7 to 10 miles within East Prussia. Cossacks are raiding toward Gumbinnen and Insterburg.

On the southern front, South-west Poland and Galicia, the advance of the Russians has been equally rapid and irresistible. An advance guard which drive the Austrians and Saxons southward along the left bank of the Vistula after the great victory of Oct. 13 to Oct. 25 has reached the River Nidzica, less than 35 miles from Cracow, and the closest a Russian army has ever been to the gateway of Silesia.

This movement has had two results. It makes the capture of Cracow a probability and it has cut off the two Austrian armies, estimated with their German supporting corps at about 600,000 men, which have been operating at the River San and south of Przemysl.

The Official Statement.

Russia's battle front is practically a straight line from the Baltic to the Carpathians, and there seems no doubt that the Grand Duke Nicholas is ready to advance on Cracow, Breslau and Berlin with armies whose combined strength is placed at 1,800,000 effectives. The successes in East Prussia, in Western Galicia have been decisive and astonishing. Germany and Austria have been beaten in every engagement and are now pushed back to their own soil.

Rejoicing in Petrograd.

The news that Russian troops are in the Province of Posen are overrunning East Prussia and are within striking distance of Cracow has created the wildest joy in this city. Great crowds marched to the Winter Palace this afternoon and cheered the Emperor, the Grand Duke Nicholas and the popular generals. Thousands knelt while they sang the national anthem. Processions organised in the enthusiasm of the moment paraded to the British and French Embassies and saluted the Ambassadors and their suites with cheers and songs.

Venezuela has put into force drastic regulations concerning the preparation and sale of medicines and of food products.

British Show Heroism In Long Struggle

Have Fulfilled in Brilliant Manner Their Task Between Ypres and La Bassee

PARIS, Nov. 8.—The war correspondent of Le Tempes says:

"The British troops are fighting with magnificent heroism. Their vitally important mission is to hold the German hordes between Ypres and La Bassee. They have been in the trenches for several weeks, facing an enemy of overwhelmingly superior numbers, who attacks with savage fury.

"The carnage around the British trenches is frightful. Night and day the thin British line steadily faces the desperate German rushes, piling the German dead upon their breastworks.

"After one night attack a single British battalion accounted for 700 Germans, whose bodies were strewn a few yards from their trenches.

British Losses Terrible.

"The British losses also were terrible. I saw one Guards battalion with a subaltern the sole remaining officer. Some of the cavalry regiments have lost 50 per cent. of their effectives during the last week's fighting. One regiment of Lancers sat calmly upon their horses near Messines beneath a withering shrapnel fire. The order to advance was not given until the stationary regiment was decimated. Then the remainder charged into Messines afoot, completely clearing the village.

"Three days ago a British battery surprised a German brigade in close formation and within a few minutes massacred 4,000 of them.

"Despite their frightful losses, it is not true that the German army is demoralized. The youths being brought into Belgium to reinforce the Germans fire badly, but go to their death bravely, and as long as the Kaiser is able to send such young soldiers against us the German attacks will continue violent."

HEAVY LOSS IN ACTION AT YPRES

British Repulse of German Masses Was Not Without Big Toll

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, Nov. 9.— The German attack in the vicinity of Ypres has been completely checked for the time being and with notable gains made by the Allies along the Aisne. The War Office to-day expressed complete satisfaction over the situation along the entire front. It is admitted that the crushing of the German offensive at Ypres, where they concentrated for the most violent assaults has not been accomplished without heavy loss. It fell to British troops to check and then throw back the massed German forces with the bayonet. The fighting is declared to have been the most terrific of the war and the German losses far exceeded those of the Allies. For an entire week the principal German attack in an effort to pierce the Allied lines was centred upon Ypres. It is believed this attack has been so checked that the next severe pressure upon the lines is to be directed about Arras, forty miles to the south.

Von Moltke Was Ousted By Intrigue

Evidence of Kaiser's Desire to Take For Himself Complete Control of Operations

LONDON, Nov. 8.—The Copenhagen correspondent of The Standard says: The dismissal of General Von Moltke, which is now officially announced, has produced a significant and far-reaching effect on Berlin. Nobody, of course, believes that General Von Moltke has left his post on account of ill-health, as the authorities declare. Everybody knows, too, that there was a rupture between the Kaiser and Von Moltke. Nevertheless, nobody believed that the Kaiser would decide at such a critical moment to dismiss the leader of the German General Staff.

In Germany complications are foreseen with alarm as the result of General Von Moltke's being succeeded by General Von Falken Hayn. The appointment is regarded as manifesting the desire of the Kaiser to take into his own hands the complete control of all military operations. In military circles it is thought that, with the exception of the Kaiser's support, the new chief possesses no qualifications whatever. Neither has he sufficient authority or requisite military knowledge to be able to command the German army successfully. Some people hold that the change in the General Staff may create the same unfavourable situation as in Austria, where similar changes had very serious consequences and were splendidly made use of by the enemy. It is openly maintained by competent men that General Von Falken Hayn will merely be a puppet of the Kaiser, and in no sense can be compared with General Joffre.

RUSSIAN ROADS ARE HARDENING

LONDON, Nov. 8.—The roads in Russia are hardening with the frost, and the armies can now be moved more quickly, although the Russian do not possess the strategic railways that the Germans do. Silesia, too, with better going for the horses, offers an excellent field for the use of cavalry, in which Russia has proved herself to be superior, both in numbers and efficiency, to the other nations at war. The Cossacks are regaining the reputation which they lost in Manchuria, and the raid they have already made into Silesia, it is expected, will be repeated many times.

Bishop O'Brien Urged Generous Aid To Belgians

At yesterday morning's 9 o'clock mass, at St. Peter's Cathedral, His Lordship Bishop O'Brien, outlined the changes that would take place with the opening for services of the Church of th Immaculate Conception, which it is expected would take place the first Sunday in December. Rev. Dean McColl is to be Rector with Rev. Father McCarthy assistant. The latter has been assistant to Dean Kelly at Trout Creek.

At St. Peter's Cathedral Rev. Father Phelan will be rector with Rev. Father McGinnity and Rev. Father Leonard assistants. In his address His Lordship made much deserved and kindly reference to Dean McColl, who is severing his connection with St. Peter's after a number of years of faithful work.

His Lordship also urged strongly for all in his congregation to assist the Belgians by donating what they possibly could and deliver it to the car at the C.P.R. station which is leaving to-day. He briefly outlined the manner in which Belgium was drawn into the struggle, referred to the desolation that had been wrought throughout the little country, and urged not only the citizens but the farmers to contribute generously in the gifts being forwarded to alleviate the distress and want that threatens the Belgian people.

To-day's War Bulletins

HEAVY GUNS AT OSTEND.

London, Nov. 8. — Engineers from the Krupp Gun Works are mounting heavy guns at the Belgian seaport of Ostend and facing them seawards, according to a despatch from Rotterdam to the Exchange Telegraph Company.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—There is a semi-official report that the Germans are transferring a large number of troops from Belgium and France for a defence of East Prussia and Silesia.

TOKIO, Nov. 8.—Japan is still celebrating the capture of Tsing-tau. The Japs took 2,300 prisoners and lost 14 officers wounded and 428 soldiers killed or wounded.

PARIS, Nov. 8.—Many trainloads of German cavalry and guns are being sent back to Germany by way of Brussels and Louvain, evidently on their way to reinforce the armies opposing the Russians.

WHOLE PRUSSIAN REGIMENT WAS CAPTURED IN A FOG

PARIS, Nov. 8.— The Eighth Regiment of Prussian Infantry, with a battery of artillery, was captured in a fog near Warneton by two French infantry battalions. One battalion approached the Germans unperceived, while the other silently worked to the rear of their position, and they were overwhelmed before they could deal a blow. Not a single man escaped. All who attempted to run were shot. The prisoners numbered 900, and six guns were taken.

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Geo. Allan England

CHAPTER XXV.
THE FALL OF H'YEMBA.

Blinded with staggering grief and terror, stunned, stricken, all but annihilated, the man recoiled.

Then, with a cry, he sprang to the bed again, and now in a very passion of eagerness explored it. His trembling hands dragged all the bedding off and threw it broadcast. By the dim light he peered with wide and terror-smitten eyes.

"My boy!" he choked. "My boy!"

But beyond all manner of doubt the boy had been stolen.

Unable to understand, or think, or plan, Allan stood there, his face ghastly, his heart quivering within him.

What could have happened? How and why? If the door had been securely locked and the old nurse been with the child, how could the kidnapper have borne him away?

What? How? Why?

More, ever more, questions crowded the man's brain, all equally without answer.

But now, he dimly realized, was no time for solving problems. The minute demanded swift and drastic action. He must find, must save, his son! After that other riddles could be unravelled.

"H'yemba!" he cried hoarsely. "This is H'yemba's work! Revenge and hate have driven him to rebel again. To try to seize Beatrice! To steal my son! At this time of peril and affliction, above all others! H'yemba! The smith must die!"

But first he realized he must get Beatrice into safety.

In haste he ran to the door, picked up the girl and carried her to the bed. Here he disposed her at ease, covered her with the bedding, and bathed her face and hands with water from the cooling-jar.

The old nurse he laid upon the broad couch by the fire and likewise tended. He saw now she had been struck with a stone axe, a glancing blow, severe, but not necessarily fatal.

"Probably trying to defend the boy!" thought he. "Brave heart! Faithful even unto death—if death be your reward.

Leaving her, he returned to his wife.

Now, he well understod, he had no time for emotion. There must be no false move. Even at the expense of a little time, he must plan the campaign with skill and execute it with relentless energy.

He alone now stood for power, rule, order, law, in this disintegrated community—this colony racked with disaster, anarchy and death.

Upon him alone now depended its whole fate and future, and, with it, the fate and future of the world.

"Merciful Lord, what a situation!" he whispered. "At home, disruption and savagery. Outside, the Horde—the Horde now pressing onward after me!"

He sat down beside the bed and forced himself to think. Weak as he was and wounded with a spear-thrust in the lower leg as well as a jagged cut across the breast, he felt that he might still keep strength enough for a few hours more of toil.

Of a sudden he realized an overpowering thirst. Till now he had not felt it. He arose, drank deeply from the jar, then — something cooler and more calm — once more returned to Beatrice.

"The first thing is to help her," he said. "No use in losing my wits and rushing out unprepared to find the boy. If H'yemba has stolen him it's certain the boy is hidden beyond my present power in some far recess of the inter-communicating rabbit-warren of caves below there in the cliff.

"I feel positive no bodily harm will be done the child. H'yemba will hold him for power over me. He will try to exact terms—even to leadership in the colony, even to possession of Beatrice. And the penalty of refusal may be the boy's death—"

He shuddered profoundly, and with both wasted hands covered his face. For a moment madness sought to possess him.

He felt a wild desire to shout imprecations, to rush out, fling himself against the cave-door of H'yemba and riddle it with bullets — but presently calm returned again. For in Stern's nature lay nothing of hysteria. Reason and calm judgment dominated. And before he acted he always reckoned every pro and con.

"It must be a battle of wits as well as force," thought he. "A little time will decide all that. For now Beatrice demands my first care and thought!"

Now he examined the girl once more. Closing the door and lighting the bronze lamp, he carefully studied the sick woman, noting her symptoms, pulse and respiration.

"What to do?" he asked himself. "What means to take?"

He arose and rummaged the stores for drugs. Above all, he must break the fever. He therefore prepared and administered a powerful febrifuge, covered the girl with all the available bedding, and determined, if possible, to make her sweat. This done, he found no further means at hand and now turned his attention once more to Geaafam.

Her wound he bathed and bandaged and, having given her a stiff drink of brandy, poured between resisting teeth which he had to separate with his knife-blade, he presently perceived some signs of returning consciousness.

But, though he questioned the old woman and tried desperately to make her answer, he could get no coherent information.

Only the name of H'yemba and some few disconnected mutterings of terror regarded him. He knew now, however, with positive certainty that the smith was responsible for the kidnapping of his son.

"And that," said he, "means I must seek him out at once. All I ask is just one sight of him. One sight, one bullet—and the score is paid!"

He arose and, again making sure his automatic was in complete readiness, stood for a second in thought. Whatever he was now to do must be done quickly.

In a few hours, at the outside, he knew the vanguard of the pursuing Horde would enter the last valley on the other side of the canon. By afternoon another battle might be on.

"Whatever happens, I must get my grip on the colony again at once!" he realized. "Such of the Folk as are still sound must be rallied. Otherwise nothing but annihilation awaits us all!"

But, even as he faced the exit of Cliff Villa, all at once the door was hurled violently open and a harsh, discordant cry of hatred and defiance burst into the cave.

Stern saw the detested figure of H'yemba standing there, loose-hung, powerful, barbaric, his eyes blinking evilly behind the mica screens that Allan himself had made for him.

With a cry Allan started forward.

"My son!" he gasped.

There, clutched in the smith's left arm, lay the boy!

Allan heard his child crying as in pain, and rage swept every caution to the winds.

He sprang toward H'yemba, cursing; but the smith, with a heartless laugh, raised his right hand.

"Master!" he mocked. "No nearer or ye die!"

Allan, aghast, saw the flicker of sunlight on a pistol-barrel. With only too true an aim, H'yemba had him covered.

Came a little pause, tense as steel wire. Somewhere down the terrace sounded a murmur of voices. Allan seemed to sense that the rebel had now gathered his forces and that a general attack was imminent.

Time! At all hazards he must gain a moment's time!

"H'yemba!" cried he. "What is your speech with me, your master?"

"Master?" sneered the smith again. "My slave! Power has passed from you to me. From you, who speak the false, who entrap us here to suffer and die, who slay and ruin us, to me, who will yet lead the people back to their far home, to safety and to life!"

"You lie, hound!"

The smith laughed bitterly.

"That shall be seen—who lies!" he gized. "But now power is mine. I have your son in my hand. Move only and I fling him from the cliff!"

Allan felt his brain whirl; all things seemed to turn about him. But he fought off his faintness and in a shaken voice once more demanded:

"What terms, H'yemba?"

"Slavery for you and yours! Your son shall be my serf; your woman my chattel! Ha, that woman! She has already fought me, like one of these strange woods-beasts you have made us kill! See! My hair is burned and my flesh blistered with her fire-beating! But when I hold her in these hands then she shall pay for all, the vuedma!"

Stern's hand twitched, with the automatic gripped in the fingers, but the blacksmith cried a warning.

"Raise not that hand, slave!" he ordered. "You cannot shoot without the danger of killing this vile spawn of yours! And remember, too, the river lies far below, and very sharp are the waiting rocks!

"Fool that you are, that think yourself so wise! To leave this place with me! With me, skilled in all labours of metal and stone, strong to cut passage-ways—"

"You devil! You hewed a way into my house?"

H'yemba laughed brutally.

"Silently, steadily, I laboured!" he boasted. "And behold the reward! Power for me; eternal slavery for you and all your blood—if any live!"

Insane with rage and hate, Allan, nevertheless realized that now all depended on keeping his thought and nerve.

One single premature move and his son would inevitably be hurled over the parapet, down two hundred and fifty feet to the river-bed below. At all hazards, he must keep cool!

The smith, after all only a barbarian and of limited intelligence, had not even thought of the obvious command to make Stern drop his pistol on the floor.

Upon this oversight now hung all Allan's hopes.

Even though the man's retainers might rush the cave and slaughter all, yet in Allan's heart burned a clear and steady flame of hot desire to compass H'yemba's death.

And as the smith now loudly boasted, insulted, vilified, in the true manner of the savage, imperceptibly, inch by inch, Allan was turning his pistol-barrel upward.

Higher, higher, bit by bit it crept toward the horizontal. Unaccustomed to shoot from the hip, Allan realized that right before him lay a supreme test of nerve and marksmanship and skill.

To shoot and kill his boy — the thought was too hideous even to be considered. His father-heart yearned toward the frightened, crying child there in the traitor's grip.

Was Covered With Boils.
Could Not Get Rid of Them Until She Used
BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS.

When the blood becomes impure the first symptoms which manifest themselves are a breaking out of the various forms of skin trouble such as boils, pimples, abscesses, ulcers, etc., and the only treatment you can use is some sort of a good blood cleansing remedy which will put the blood into a perfect condition, and thus eliminate all the different poisons from the system which cause these different eruptions to occur.

The best blood cleansing remedy on the market to-day is Burdock Blood Bitters. All we ask you is to try it and be convinced. Thousands have used it during the past forty years, and have nothing but praise for its curative powers.

Mrs. John Fitzgerald, Plantagenet, Ont., writes: "I am one woman who cannot speak too highly of Burdock Blood Bitters. I was covered with boils, and could not get rid of them. I was advised by a friend to try B.B.B. which I did, and I can truthfully say that it completely cured me. I have never had a sign of a boil since."

See that our name appears on both the label and wrapper as there are many imitations placed on the market which are said to be "just as good."

Burdock Blood Bitters is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

EASY TO DARKEN YOUR GREY HAIR

You Can Bring Back Colour and Lustre With Sage Tea and Sulphur

When you darken your hair with Sage Tea and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it's done so naturally, so evenly. Preparing this mixture, though, at home is mussy and troublesome. For 50 cents you can buy at any drug store the ready-to-use tonic called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning all grey hair disappears, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully darkened, glossy and luxuriant. You will also discover dandruff is gone and hair has stopped falling.

Grey, faded hair, though no disgrace, is a sign of old age, and as we all desire a youthful and attractive appearance, get busy at once with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur and look years younger.

Searched for a Cure for Years—Advised to Try Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and Was Cured.

Where there is poison there is pain. This is a provision of Nature to warn you against conditions that are likely to prove serious.

PROF. SMITH.

Constipation of the bowels is undoubtedly the greatest source of disease and suffering. By using one of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills at bed-time as often as is necessary to keep the bowels regular you can cure constipation and the consequent indigestion, and remove the cause of backache, rheumatism and other painful diseases.

"Daily movement of the bowels" is the greatest law of health. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills will help you to form this habit, add to your years, and bring comfort in old age.

Professor A. T. Smith, 1 Mt. Charles street, Montreal, and formerly of Boston, Mass., writes:—"I suffered for many years from bad digestion, constipation and horrible backaches. I have been treated by many doctors, without any results. One day a friend in Boston advised the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. After using two boxes I noticed great improvement, and after the fourth box I was completely cured. My digestion is good. I never feel any pain in the back. My head is clear, and I feel like a young man. I think Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are one of the best medicines on earth."

Messiah's Dominion for a Thousand Years.

HEAVEN AND EARTH TO FLEE

Scriptures Filled With Symbolisms—Due Time to Appreciate Many of These Symbols—Earth's History Thus Revealed—Deeply Ingrained Selfishness of Humanity a Blight—Mankind Cannot Remove This Condition—Result and Great to Be Judged—The Books to Be Opened—The Book of Life.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its insertion.]

Philadelphia Pa., Nov. 8.—Pastor Russell preached to-day to a deeply interested audience. His text was, "I saw a great White Throne, and Him that sat upon it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was no place found for them." (Revelation 20:11.) He said in part:

Sin made moral cowards of our race. From early infancy fear and apprehension, especially in respect to things future, have been impressed upon us. We realize our imperfections, and know that our God is perfect, that perfection is the only standard which He could approve, and that some kind of punishment for sin must be expected. The Adversary, taking advantage of our forefathers, misrepresented the Almighty, and has used our fears to alienate us from Him and to distort His Message to us in the Bible. St. Paul assures us that this is Satan's general procedure; that he puts light for darkness and darkness for light. Thus it comes that our text, which is really one of the most beautiful and comforting in the Bible when understood, has to many become a lash in the hands of their fears.

It is needless to say that our text is one of the symbolisms of a Book filled with symbols. Guided by the Holy Spirit, God's people will in due time understand these symbols. For many of them the due time is already here.

The Throne is Messiah's, and represents His Mediatorial Dominion of earth for a thousand years. Its whiteness symbolizes the purity, the justice, of His Kingdom of Righteousness under the whole heavens. The heavens and the earth which will flee away from the presence of the great Immanuel will not be the heavens of God's Throne, nor the earth which He has given to the children of men. The heavens and the earth which will flee away, and for which no place will be found, are the symbolic ones.

In Bible symbology the earth represents established civilization; the sea represents the restless, dissatisfied masses of humanity; the mountains represent human governments, kingdoms, which constitute the backbone of present social institutions; and the heavens, spiritual influences—Ecclesiasticism, Churchianity. Thus interpreted, our text declares that when Messiah shall assume control of the world, when He shall sit upon His Throne, when He shall exercise rulership amongst men, the result will be that the social system of to-day, as well as the present day ecclesiasticism, will "flee away," will pass out of existence—no place will be found for them.

Some man may be inclined to ask, Has not Christ been the great Ruler of the world for these past nineteen centuries? And whatever may be said of the four thousand years before the coming of Christ may it not be claimed that He has been reigning ever since His ascension to the right hand of the Father?

We answer that if this be true, if the Redeemer of men has been reigning as the King of earth for these nineteen centuries, there should be something in the Bible so to teach. But we find nothing. On the contrary, we hearken to the Master's own words telling us that Satan is the Prince of this Age. (John 14:30.) Again He says, "My Kingdom is not of this world"; "I will come again and receive you unto Myself." (John 18:36; 14:3.) Again He tells us that He "went into a far country" to receive the title to His Kingdom, thence to return to take possession of it (Matthew 21:33; 25:14); and that at His Second Coming He will be the great King of Glory. In Matthew 25:31, He declares the same thing—"When the Son of Man shall come in His glory, and all the holy angels with Him, then shall He sit upon the Throne of His glory."

On the other hand, as we scan the pages of history during the past eighteen centuries we are convinced that Messiah has not been the King of the world. To think of Him as such, with the omnipotent power which we ascredit to Him, would be to charge Him with responsibility for bloody and cruel persecutions, for wars, famines and pestilences. Surely no right-minded person, after mature consideration, can rationally accept the theory that the glorious Messiah's Reign of Righteousness for the blessing of the whole earth, the uplifting of the whole race, the enlightenment of every creature and the bringing of all possible into accord with God, is in the past. We must agree that it is in the future; and that, when established, its effect upon the institutions of the present—political, social, financial, religious—will be such that they will flee away. No place will evermore be found for them.

From this standpoint alone is there hope for humanity. To-day we are living at the very climax of civilization. Yet to-day we behold more clearly than ever before that the deeply-ingrained selfishness of humanity is a blight upon all the blessings of our day.

I do not need to do more than to remind you that selfishness is to be found in every one of us; and that a semblance of righteousness is insisted upon by us all and adhered to, violators of which are styled criminals. Nevertheless it seems impossible to legislate equity, justice. The keen intellects of men find opportunities for circumventing the laws and for committing theft, murder and sin in the face of the law without likelihood of being punished.

Let me illustrate this thought: We have heard of the famines in India and of the expenditure of millions of pounds sterling by the British Government for irrigation purposes to compensate for irregularities in the rainfall. Undoubtedly the famines are to some extent due to scarcity of water. Nevertheless one of the ablest of engineers informs the world that in fifty years there has not been such a scarcity as should have caused the famines.

The famines of India, which have cost the lives of millions, are to be accredited to greed — selfishness which has flourished under the shadow of the law. Wealthy milling concerns purchase rice from the natives and grind it into flour. By agreement amongst themselves they do not compete, but press the market price of rice lower and lower until the poor natives, unable to make a profit, decline to plant, care for and harvest the crop. As a result there is famine. The poor natives suffer; but the managers of the milling properties pay large dividends of from fifty to one hundred and fifty per cent. on invested capital.

As an illustration of the exorbitant profits I will relate a case: Two young men whose accumulated savings amounted to thirty thousand rupees—about two thousand pounds, or ten thousand dollars—invested the money in rice-milling. The first year their profits were eighty thousand rupees—about five thousand pounds, or twenty-five thousand dollars. They were not in the combine to depress the price of rice, but they profited by what the combine accomplished. Such inequities of our present social order are beyond the reach and correction of the comparatively few men of ability not directly or indirectly interested in them.

Neither Jehovah nor His great Representative, Messiah, can in any sense or degree be a party to injustice, or inequity. The fact that injustice has been permitted, and that inequity has been the rule for centuries, is to be accounted for by the other fact that during all this period the world has been under the reign of sin and death, and not under the reign of Righteousness and Life. It has been under the reign of Satan, "the Prince of this world," and of the darkness of selfishness and evil—all of which his name represents—and not under the dominion of Messiah, the Representative of Jehovah and His righteousness, not under the King of Glory, the antitypical David and Solomon, the antitypical Aaron and Melchizedek.

The New Dispensation which Messiah's Kingdom will usher in is pictured in our text. It will be the dominion that will be world-wide—pure, holy, righteous, just; truthful, God-like—a great White Throne. No wonder we read that the symbolical heavens and earth, representing the old order of things—social and ecclesiastical—will all vanish away!

But let no one think for a moment that ecclesiastical princes, financial princes and political princes will voluntarily acknowledge that the hour has come for a full surrender to Messiah and to all the principles of His absolute righteousness. On the contrary, these privileged members of our race will more and more be drawn together for mutual protection—for the preservation of the special privileges which have come into their possession. Even now we see the prophecy of the Second Psalm in process of fulfilment.

We are in the very time when the Lord through the Prophet David calls the great ones of the earth to recognise the true situation of our wonderful day—that it means that the Day of Messiah has arrived, and that He should be acknowledged and His principles of righteousness obeyed. The call is, "Salute the Son, O ye kings of the earth, while ye are in the way with Him, before His anger be kindled and ye perish by the way." (Psalm 2:10-12.) But no! The prophecy declares that we are in the day when the people, the masses, will have foolish imaginations—when they will think that by their own strength they can inaugurate a reign of righteousness along the lines of Socialism or by anarchy. The people must learn that their help is in the Lord, and not in their own frail arm. They must see the force of the statement, "Blessed are all they that put their trust in Messiah." The Lord is about to establish the great White Throne of absolute justice in the world.

On the other hand, the money kings, the earthly rulers and the ecclesiastical princes are taking counsel together to-day for the preservation of the present inequities of the world, by which they are profiting. The Lord declares that in this they are banding themselves against Him and His newly-appointed King, Messiah. For over a century human liberty has been making progress, despite every endeavor to restrain it. The potentates of earth perceive the rising tide of human intelligence and of demands for equal rights. They perceive that unless something be done to counteract this general movement, the special privileges of the privilege class will disappear.

Even now they are taking counsel together how the restraints which the people are putting upon them may be broken and a reign of autocracy—political, financial and religious—be reinaugurated—a reign such as prevailed centuries ago, but now upon a higher plane, controlled by brighter wits, holding under restraint more intelligent masses.

Would that the cultured and influential princes of earth could take the proper view of the situation, and realize the fallacy of their counsels, the impossibility of averting the great changes which are upon us by reason of the time having come for Messiah to take unto Himself His great power and reign! Hearken to the Lord's words through the Prophet: "Be wise, now, therefore, O ye kings! Be instructed, ye judges of the earth! Serve the Lord with fear and rejoice with trembling. Do homage to the Son."—Psalm 2:10-12.

Could the wise of earth realize the situation and fully submit themselves to the Divine requirements of absolute justice and truth, what a blessing it would be to the world! If these princes would turn their attention from the grasping of power and wealth to the enlightenment and uplifting of the people, they would become ministers, servants, of the New Dispensation, which would be ushered in with rejoicing. But the Lord informs us that this will not be the case; and that as a result Messiah's Kingdom will be inaugurated by "a Time of Trouble such as was not since there was a nation."—Daniel 12:1

The Psalmist tells us the same—God will have in derision the puny efforts of the worldly-wise and great to establish autocracy again. He will speak to them in His wrath the lesson which they refuse to hear by loving exhortation. The new King and His Kingdom will be established in the earth; and the declaration is that amidst such Divine displeasure He shall "break them in pieces like a potter's vessel."—Psalm 2:4-9; Revelation 2:27.

God is no respecter of persons. Hence, before His Judgment Throne punishments will be meted out to the little, as well as the great, when found to be violators of the principles of justice. Would that I could impress this thought upon many of the lower classes who are crying out against the injustices in high places while practicing similar injustices themselves. Let it be remembered that the great White Throne speaks blessings, Divine favor and uplifting to all who love righteousness and hate iniquity—the small and the great.

If in the past a certain retributive justice has seemed to proceed along national lines, blessing the nations which take the more righteous course, and frowning upon those which take the more evil course, this will no longer be the case in the not distant future. The testing imposed by Messiah's Kingdom will be along individual lines. He who eats the sour grape of sin will find his teeth on edge, and his alone. Justice will then be laid to the line and righteousness to the plummet. All the "refuges of lies" by which mankind in high places have sought to deceive themselves and others will be swept away. The hidden things of darkness will be brought to light, and the glorious things of light will everywhere be recognized. Ultimately "every knee shall bow and every tongue confess," to the enthroned Messiah.

The Master said, "My Word shall judge you in the Last Day." Happy has it been for comparatively few who have heard the Master's Word in this present life, who have judged themselves thereby and have submitted themselves to His righteous precepts! These blessed ones will share with Messiah the glories of His Spiritual Empire, invisible to men. But during the Thousand-Year Judgment Day of the world (2 Peter 3:7, 8) the same words—"wonderful words of life" to those who will obey, but words of death to those who will refuse to obey—will be the standards of justice for all.

The books to be opened to all will include not only the words of the Master and of the Apostles in the New Testament, but also the Divine Message through the Prophets of Israel. According to those standards whoever would have life everlasting must conform his living and his thinking. At the end of Messiah's Reign the approval will be delivered over to the Father as perfect human beings, but the disapproved will be destroyed in the Second Death.—2 Peter 2:12; Jude 12; Acts 3:23.

Another book of life will be opened—another besides that which is now opened, which is styled "the Lamb's Book of Life," and in which are written the names of the faithful followers of Jesus in the present time. The new book of life will be for those who will be on trial during Messiah's Reign. By the close of the Millennium it will include the names of all of Adam's race found worthy of everlasting life.

The judgment of the Church in the present time is not according to works, the perfection of which would be impossible under present condition. Hence the Church's judgment is according to faith and the obedience of faith. But the world's judgment will be according to works; for knowledge will then be so great that faith will no longer be at a premium. The great Mediator will accept imperfect works according to the ability of the people; but as they rise out of degradation more will be expected until they reach perfection. Then perfect works will be required.

BACKACHE

STUDY OF AIR CRAFT NOT NEW TO RUSSIANS

LONDON, Nov. 5.—According to an article by an aeronautic expert in the Morning Post Russia has all along taken a much more lively interest in the employment of aircraft in assisting in military operations than she has been given credit for. The subject has particularly interested her since the Crimean days. In 1882 an aluminum airship was built in Russia to the designs of Schwarz, an Austrian whose idea for a rigid frame dirigible was the basis of the Zeppelin airship of to-day, this inventor's patents having been acquired by Count von Zeppelin befor he began building.

There are a number of aerial societies in Russia, headed by the Imperial Aero Club, which has branches at Petrograd, Odessa, Rostow and Don. Three years ago thre was an equipment of a hundred military aeroplanes. Of course, all those have long passed out of date, but in the interval fresh supplies have been purchased in much larger quantities, a circumstance which shows that before the outbreak of war there were several hundred military up-to-date aeroplanes in the Russian equipment. What is even more important is the fact that during the last eighteen months it has been a condition of the placing of orders that the bulk of the machines must be produced in Russia under license. Now that Russia is engaged in war it means that she has to-day ample facilities for replacing losses sustained in action, and even for supplementing her aeroplane equipment as fast as she can train pilots.

Her handicap is in connection with motors for aircraft, but France is easily able to produce sufficient aero engines for her own use and Russia's, apart altogether from the consideration that the British motor industry is able to-day to manufacture many times the number of motors required for her own service. Therefore so long as means of communication remain open between England and Russia there need be no handicap in her equipment on this account. Russia has six military and naval aerodromes, including the one for hydro-aeroplanes at Golodia Island, near Petrograd, and exclusive of the naval station stablished at Libau. Moreover, apart from the mere possession of machines, various Russian inventors have produced valuable and exclusive auxiliary instruments of offence for service with aeroplanes, of which more will undoubtedly be heard as the campaign develops.

Russia does not possess a great number of airships, but she has sundry examples of the German frameless Parseval type; of the French Clement-Bayard and Zodiac frameless types, and of the French Lebaudy semi-rigid sort. Native ideas have been exploited in the frameless Forzmann and the Jastreb and Goloubj craft, which, however, have no notable achievement in their record to date.

Tom Gallon Dead.

LONDON, Nov. 5.—The death is announced in London of Tom Gallon, the English novelist and dramatists, yesterday. He was born in 1866.

No French In Cathedral.

ROME, Nov. 7.—The Pope has received from Cardinal Lucon, Archbishop of Rheims, an emphatic denial of the reports that the Cathedral of Rheims has been used by French troops for military purposes.

The cardinal says he has personally ascertained that the cathedral has not been used as an observation post. He states that no guns have been placed near it and no soldiers have been employed in its vicinity.

OFFICIAL IS ARRESTED.

Government Employe at Halifax Had Wireless In Room.

OTTAWA, Nov. 6.—Arthur Lauf, an employe of the Government at Halifax, has been arrested on suspicion as a German spy, and is being detained by the military authorities. Lauf was employed as an interpreter in the Immigration Department. He was arrested shortly after the war broke out, but was released on producing his naturalization papers. He was arrested again as a suspected spy, his rooms were searched and a complete wireless outfit was found. He will likely be interned as a prisoner until the war is over. He has been dismissed from the service.

The Government is working at the present time on plans for the best method of handling the Germans and Austrians who will be interned as a result of the registration which is now progressing. The proposal which has met with the most favor, and which will likely be adopted, is that of utilizing their labor in the Federal and Provincial parks, cutting wood and clearing brush.

The aeroplane hasn't improved war any—only added to the horrors of it.

Though eggs may not be unscrambled, plucked officers may be refeathered.

In the process of leveling all rank love also levels a lot of good sense at times.

A VETERAN WHO WAS WITH LORD ROBERTS

Laid Low With Rheumatism—But Cured By "Fruit-a-tives".

CHATHAM, ONT., APRIL 3rd, 1913.

"I am a veteran of the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny, volunteering from the Royal Artillery into the Royal Engineers, and served under Lord Roberts during the Indian Mutiny, and am a pensioneer of the British Government. Fierce hand-to-hand fighting and continual exposure left me a great sufferer from Rheumatism, so much so that my legs swelled up, making it impossible for me to walk.

"Fruit-a-tives". They cured me of both the Rheumatism and Constipation. In my regular employment, I walk thirty miles a day and enjoy perfect health".

HAVE HAD FINE YEAR.

Hydro-Electric Municipalities All Show Big Surpluses.

TORONTO, Nov. 7.—In spite of a period of trade depression that has later been aggravated by war disturbances, the Hydro-electric municipalities are heading towards the close of a prosperous year. From figures compiled of the operations of the various municipalities, particularly those on the Niagara transmission system, up to the end of September last, a substantial surplus is shown in each case, in some instances amounting to many thousands of dollars. The list given out is not complete. Toronto will show a handsome surplus, but some slight adjustments have to be made before the exact ratio of surplus is determined. In all cases provision has been made for deducting interest and depreciation charges, and after that has been done London leads the list with a net surplus of $27,067. St. Tohmas $14,025, Hamilton $12,213, Guelph $11,468.

Ottoman Officers Freebooting.

NEW YORK, Nov. 7. — Merchandise of every conceivable value is being seized by officers of the Ottoman Government in cities of Syria under the general orders of mobilization of troops, according to reports from missionaries made public yesterday by the board of foreign missions of the Presbyterian Church.

"Under the order of mobilization," the board states, "unwilling conscripts are being gathered, each soldier being required to bring with him from his home eight days' rations, with a certain amount of money. The local officials have turned the orders to commandeer horses, mules, food and fodder into a most wicked and unbridled system of plunder."

A WORD OF GRATITUDE

"It instinctively prompts me to tell you that I was a great sufferer from itching piles and have found Dr. Chase's Ointment the best treatment obtainable," writes Mr. Fred Hins, Brodhagen, Ont. "It gives instant relief and I can recommend it to any sufferer from this dreadful disease."

Canadians Have Too Much Money.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—Some development is likely over the difference in the pay of the Canadian soldier and his brother in England. The Canadian gets pretty well three times as much as the British and obviously has so much more to spend. Many in authority are doubtful whether this altogether is an unmixed blessing, especially as leave has been granted so far very generously. It may be that arrangements will be made whereby payment of the full pay will be deferred the soldiers, instead being paid only a proportion of the amount due.

Dinner Under False Pretences.

BERLIN, Nov. 7.—(Via London.)—A newspaper of Ansbach, Bavaria, prints a letter from a post in the field, dated Oct. 28, in which the writer mentions attending a dinner on the previous evening to celebrate the return of two aviators from the vicinity of London who had dropped bombs near Dover.

More War Prisoners.

KINGSTON, Ont., Nov. 6. — There is now a regular village at Fort Henry, 37 more prisoners of war having been brought to Kingston from Montreal, making the total enrollment 360. The men are putting in the most of their time at soccer football and have of late given their guards no trouble.

UNDERLYING REASONS FOR CONFLICT

PRETEXTS and CAUSES of WAR

Prince Otto von Bismarck, "The "Iron Chancellor" of Germany. Who Edited the "Ems" Telegram.

Anne of Austria, wife of Louis XIII. of France, to Win Whose Love the Duke of Buckingham Forced England to Fit a Fleet to Relieve La Rochelle.

From "Daily Court Life in France," by Frances Elliot, G. P. Putnam's Sons.

Madame de Pompadour, the Famous Favorite of Louis XV. of France, Who Helped Along a War of Conquest Because She Was Flattered by Maria Theresa of Austria.

By Richard G. Conover.

SUPPOSE it be admitted that the Hague Peace Tribunal is a grim burlesque and that nations are bound to wage war, how shall we distinguish between a righteous reason and a prearranged pretext for the taking up of arms?

Germany and Austria cry deep-rooted danger to the Fatherland as their causa belli. England, France, Russia, Belgium and Servia duplicate the cry. Germany and Austria declare the battle motive of their foes a rank subterfuge. England, France, Russia, Belgium and Servia declare ditto. Which is the real and which is the false war cry is left to the sword to decide. Unbiased study of past world conflict in total reveals a medicum of real provocation to balance a mass of pretence, humbug, falsehood, duplicity, covetousness and reprehensible ambition, all responsible for wholesale, inexcusable human slaughter.

War statisticians set down in varying estimates that since the dawn of recorded history, fifty centuries ago, between 200,000,000 and 400,000,000 men have fallen on the battlefield or have perished as a consequence of fighting there. This is an average of from 40,000 to 80,000 war-killed a year. At first it seems an impossible figure. Commence to compute and doubt disappears. And most of those killed died for no righteous reason.

In considering causes for war these classifications may be made:—First—The deep, remote racial or national differences. Second—The immediate differences, the outcome of sudden happenings. Third: The pretexts or pretended differences.

The first two differences may possibly yield an honest reason for war, if war must be. But if they do not, they have often been played up and fanned into a war flame by the diplomatists so as to seem to carry good reasons. When there is no good reason at all of course No. 3 difference is used outright. Out of this grows very naturally:—A—the reason for the war as the man who fights it sees it. B—The reason for the war as the diplomatists who may have made it see it. And out of this again comes for public announcement:—C—The given reason for the war—in some cases it may be the real reason. D—The given reason that is a pretext. E—The specific reason showing material injury in detail. All of these reasons for a time are merely written ones. The striking of the first blow makes a solid visible reason for the nation so struck. Japan has a way of shifting quickly from intangible to tangible reasons for warfare.

Cato a Grouch.

About the year B. C. 150 had you been sitting in the gallery of the Roman Senate you would have been compelled to take notice of the champion grouch of his day, a rough, stern, red haired man with protruding teeth, known through all these centuries as Marcus Porcius Cato, the Censor. He spoke often and always with a "slam" at those who liked to take things easier than he. And always when he finished what he had to say in criticism of your shortcomings he wound up with these immortal words:—"Delenda est Carthago." This sentiment:—"I vote that Carthage no longer be," or "Also, Carthage, methinks, ought utterly to be destroyed" was expressed in season and out of season, no matter whether old Cato was talking on the Panama Canal treaty of that day or speaking against an eight hour law for the chariot drivers. He pounded it home all the time that Carthage, the rival of Rome, should be destroyed. It made no particular difference that Carthage hadn't done a thing against Rome, she ought to be annihilated. And so the grim old grouch has filled his niche in history as the unsatisfied advocate of a PRETEXT FOR WAR. Since his time there have been many Catos, but none of them so daringly to the open.

There is an oft repeated story that by the advice of her great Minister, Kaunitz, the famous Maria Theresa, Empress of Austria, put aside her pride of rank and wrote a personal letter to Mme. de Pompadour, the favorite of Louis XV. of France, seeking her aid in the establishment of a war alliance. The letter was addressed "My Cousin" and written on the plane of one equal asking a favor of another. The scheme worked perfectly. Pompadour was delighted to be deemed so powerful by the daughter of mighty monarchs and lost no time in wheedling the King to war. May 1, 1756, a treaty was signed between Austria and France pledging the conquest and partition of Prussia. France had nothing to fight Prussia for, but an appeal to a king's vanity soon found a pretext.

While not exactly a pretext for war, the initial reason for the conflict between England, France and Turkey on the one hand against Russia on the other, in the Crimea, 1854, was so inconsequentially odd that it approximated a pretence. Hundreds of thousands of lives were lost and hundreds of millions of money sacrificed because of a dispute between a few Greek and Latin monks as to which had the right to repair the roof of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre or carry the keys of the Church of the Nativity at Bethlehem. This caused the clash. The deeper causes, remote or immediate, were the political greed of Russia, the chronic revolutionary condition of the Danubian States or provinces, the rival schemes of England and Russia, a general state of military jingoism and, lastly, doubt as to the legal classification and status of Latin and Greek Christians in Turkey. But the church roof squabble started the war blaze.

Pretext for 1870 War.

The pretext for the late Franco-Prussian War, 1870 and 1871, was the objection of France to the placing of a Hohenzollern prince on the throne of Spain. The prince was Leopold of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, and he was related through the families of Murat and Beauharnais to Napoleon III., Emperor of the French himself. Queen Isabella of Spain had been banished, and the king job was offered Leopold by General Prim, the leader of the Spanish revolt. Some say that Bismark had engineered the making of the offer, well knowing that Napoleon would seize the occasion to call the affair a reason for war—or, rather, he would use it as a pretext for war.

The name of Leopold was withdrawn, but France demanded assurances that Prussia would discountenance a repetition of an attempt of a similar kind. This Prussia refused, and war came. It is pointed out that France didn't care a rap whether or not Leopold became King of Spain and that the real reasons for the war were: 1. The wonderful growth in power and consequence of Prussia. 2. The easy triumph of Prussia over Austria four years previously. 3. The bound-to-win feeling of the French army. 4. Napoleon's jealousy of Bismarck. 5. Bismarck.

As a pretext for war that of the native soldier of India, which brought on the Sepoy Mutiny of 1857, was certainly novel. The mutineers claimed that the cartridges they were compelled to use in a new rifle adopted were greased with tallow. These cartridges had to be torn with the teeth. As Hindoos were forbidden to use cow's fat, making them handle the greased cartridges was declared a deliberate scheme to insult and degrade them. As a matter of fact, when the English government heard of the anti-cartridge murmurings, it was arranged that the Sepoy should not have to use a weapon that would be repugnant to him. But as the real cause for the mutiny was deeper than this, having to do with the spread of discontent by native princes against the English conquerors, the withdrawal of the cartridge cause was of no avail. The Sepoy rose and the mutiny spread.

Another famous pretext for war is said to have followed the visit of the Duke of Buckingham to France in the year 1628. He met the French Queen, Anne of Austria, and was deeply smitten with her grace and beauty. He contrived a private audience at which he declared his devotion. As the Queen was at bitter enmity with the political master of France, Richelieu, she only half refused Buckingham's offer of service. He sprang to the chance and upon the promise of another meeting when he should prove his love in some manner eminently agreeable to the Queen he hastened back to England. He induced King Charles I. to fit out a fleet, place him at the head of it and give aid to the Huguenots being besieged at La Rochelle by Richelieu for the French King. The pretext for the war was the righteousness of one Protestant nation giving aid and succor to the Protestant portion of another nation. But this aid and succor would not have been given—so the close chroniclers say—had not the Duke fallen in love with the Queen.

In the Spanish-American War of 1898 there was a substantial sort of pretext for the declaration of hostilities against Spain by the United States, in the sinking of the battle ship Maine in Havana harbor. But while it was a fact that there was a tragic reason for wanting satisfaction or reparation, it was also a fact that the catastrophe could not be indisputably laid at the door of Spain. Nevertheless it served. Spanish barbarities in Cuba had fired the sympathies of the United States, and when the Maine blew up the country blew up, too. It was a sombre pretext, but still a pretext.

The antithesis of the pretext causing a war is the waging of a war for a good reason and then making no mention of the good reason when the treaty of peace is signed. That is, in the case of the War of 1812, when the United States fought England because the latter country insisted on searching American ships, we have an instance of peace delegates signing a peace document in which there is not a single word relative to guaranteeing the vessels of the United States from search. Territory captured during the war was listed for restoration by both nations, and some minor matters of boundary between the United States and Canada settled. But not a word about firing a shot across the bow of an American ship and conducting a forcible search. You may say this is as it should be. Why bother about unpleasant matters in making a peace? Just so, and similarly when you want to make war don't bother about the unpleasant real causes. The pleasanter pretexts will do.

The Mithridatic Wars, B. C. 88 to B. C. 63, were brought by Rome against Mithridates the Great, King of Pontus, a man of remarkable energy and genius. The cause of the first war was the charge made by Rome that Mithridates had encroached upon client cities of hers in Asia Minor. The second war was because land specified for evacuation in the first peace treaty had not been abandoned. The cause of the third war was simply strained relations and a chip on the shoulder of each. Rome won as usual.

The Crusades, or wars for Christianity, extended from A. D. 1096 to A. D. 1270. The Crusades were eight in number and the causes for them were:—The pilgrimages of the Christians to the Holy Sepulchre, where St. Helena, mother of Constantine the Great, had built a vault for the sepulchre of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, were interrupted after the Fatimites, and yet more the Seljuks, came to power. Many were ill treated and, receiving no redress, appealed to Christian Europe. The Kingdom of Jerusalem was established as a result of the first Crusade. After that the immediate causes for the subsequent crusades varied according as the defenders of the newly established kingdom attacked or were attacked by the Mohammedan enemy.

Until James I. ascended the throne of England the integral parts of the kingdom—England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales—had not been firmly blended in Great Britain. There had been many a battle between the welding nations. Sometimes war was waged on the ground of revenge for an alleged previous attack, sometimes on the plea of seizing lands inherited or owned by right of conquest and sometimes by out and out intent to forcibly annex. Several noteworthy battles were fought between the Scotch and the English for these reasons, but the events connected with them could not be designated as a regularly declared and waged war.

The Hundred Years' War.

The Hundred Years' War began A. D. 1328 and had for its cause the claim of Edward III. of England to the throne of France. The old Salic law of the Franks declared the kingdom could not fall to the distaff. Edward was the son of the daughter of Philip IV. and insisted that he inherit despite the Salic law. Sheer exhaustion of the fighters brought peace intervals, but during the century or more of struggle the great battles of Crecy, Poitiers and Agincourt were fought, with England the winner of all. But by the end of the war in 1453 the English title to anything French was reduced to the city of Calais.

The Wars of the Roses, fought in England, lasted from 1455 to 1485. The conflict was between the House of York and the House of Lancaster over the succession to the throne. York based its claim on descent from the third son of Edward III. and Lancaster from the fourth son of the same monarch. York wore a white rose as its emblem and Lancaster a red. Twelve pitched battles were fought and York seated three kings on the throne during the wars. Lancaster finally won on the field of Bosworth when Richard III. was slain.

Henry VIII. of England and Francis I. of France met on the "Field of the Cloth of Gold," a specially prepared spot near Calais for the entertainment of the English monarch during the year 1520. They skylarked in great shape, feasting and playing together like schoolboys. When they parted each swore never to cut his beard until he had visited his "good brother." Hardly had Henry got back to England when he joined a league consisting of the Pope and the German Emperor, who was also the King of Spain, Charles V. There was no good reason for it except the pretext that Francis was getting so powerful he should be trimmed down a trifle. The underlying reason was that Cardinal Wolsey, Henry's powerful minister, had been assured of succession to the papacy. Later on Francis I. was captured at the battle of Pavia and imprisoned at Madrid. He signed his name to everything that could be put on paper to gain his release, but immediately repudiated his oaths on the ground that anything obtained by threat was void.

The Forty Years War lasted from 1568 to 1609 and was the occasion of the rise of the Dutch Republic. It was brought about by Spanish persecution in the Netherlands, during which the Inquisition was established on the usual religious lines of the time by the Duke of Alva. William of Orange was the hero of the troublous period.

The Thirty Years' War, lasting from 1618 to 1648, was remotely caused by the smouldering religious hatred of half a century, principally throughout Bohemian territory. The more immediate cause was the Protestant seizure of church lands which the Catholic princes sought to reclaim, and the Emperor Ferdinand's determination, backed by Spain, to subjugate Germany to his house and faith. And the immediate cause was the pitching out of a window in the Prague palace of two of Ferdinand's royal councillors by exasperated Bohemians. As the war proceeded it took on the conquest tinge and land annexation intention.

Four great wars were waged by Louis XIV. of France solely to gratify his pride and ambition to extend the power of his realm. The war of Flanders, 1667 to 1668, was waged in the name of his wife, daughter of Philip IV. of Spain, which was considered some kind of reason along inheritance lines for forcing the conflict. The War with Holland, 1672 to 1679, was for revenge on the little republic because it sided with Spain now instead of with France as of old. The War of the Palatinate, 1688 to 1697, was just a continuance of the previous war because those who were beaten by France were not willing to stay beaten when they saw Louis reaching out for more. Finally came the War of the Spanish Succession, 1701 to 1714. Charles II. of Spain, on dying, willed his crown to the grandson of Louis XIV. of France. Archduke Charles of Austria also was a claimant. The naval powers of England and Holland refused to permit the crown of the great Spanish monarchy to be united with the French or to be worn by the ruler of Austrian territory. This is the period of the great Marlborough victories. Louis' grandson was made Spanish king.

England's Civil War.

The civil war of England through which Charles I. lost his head and Oliver Cromwell's name became world known lasted from 1642 to 1648. It was caused by the exalted ideas of the King as in his prerogatives and the refusal of Parliament to be considered a lackey in government.

Between 1700 and 1721 was fought the Northern war. It was caused by the determination of Peter the Great to make Russia a naval power and to get possession of the harbors of the Baltic. More immediate cause was the attempt to unite Livonia and Poland and the quarrel between Frederick IV., King of Denmark, and the Duke of Holstein, as well as the plot to dismember Sweden.

The war of the Polish succession, 1733 to 1735, was caused by a division of the Polish nobles, the majority of whom offered the crown to Stanislaus Leczinski and the minority to August III., Elector of Saxony.

The war of the Austrian succession, 1740 to 1748, was because Charles Albert, Elector of Bavaria; Philip II. of Spain, and August III. of Saxony would not recognize the pragmatic sanction secured by the late Emperor Charles VI. of Austria by which his crown passed to his daughter, the great Maria Theresa of history. This is the time that Frederick the Great of Prussia considered the psychic moment for him to steal the Austrian province of Silesia.

As soon as Maria Theresa had secured herself on her throne she started after Silesia. This brought on the Seven Years' War and made Frederick of Prussia immortal. It lasted from 1756 to 1763 and Frederick kept Silesia.

The French revolutionary and the Napoleonic wars, extending from 1789 to 1815, had for cause many complex things. One was the defence of France against all of Europe in the early days. The rescue of the French royal family was the cause of the allies. Later the ambition of Napoleon to become lord of all Europe—if not the world—continued the various constant campaigns. On the return of Napoleon from Elba, the cause of the Hundred Days was, of course, the effort to regain his throne.

Is there any need to tell the cause of the American Revolutionary War? The general cause was taxation without representation in the English Parliament. The remote cause was the British attitude in America that the Englishman was a better man than the American. The throwing over of the tea in Boston harbor rather than receive it and pay tax had something to do with it. And finally Lexington. No doubt 1775 to 1783 is well marked down.

The war of Denmark against Schleswig-Holstein, 1848 to 1851, was caused by an open letter of Charles XIII. of Denmark arbitrarily decreeing the continuance of the duchies with Denmark despite different laws of inheritance in the two States.

The Prussian-Denmark war of 1864 was brought by Bismarck for the sole purpose of wresting the provinces of Schleswig-Holstein from Denmark. Austria helped and when it came to divide the spoils there was, of course, trouble. This led to the Prussian-Austrian War of 1866 in a way, although the conflict was part of a deliberate policy of Bismarck to oust Austria out of German affairs in Europe for once and all. The immediate cause was the refusal of Austria to discuss to the extent that Prussia demanded mutual disarmament were to be carried out.

The civil war of the United States, 1861 to 1865, has had many far reaching effects assigned to it. There is no doubt that slavery was both a remote and an immediate cause, although the "last straw" seemed to have been the election of Abraham Lincoln. The principle of secession was not at all settled by the war. The constitution of the United States does not specify in letter or word that a State may not secede. At the close, the constitution was not altered in this respect, it being taken for granted that the result of the war was an object lesson. The firing upon Fort Sumter may be said to have forced hostilities, although the sending of supplies to the fort as an act, in perilous times, warranted some trouble.

The Boer War extended from 1876 to 1906 in an intermittent way. At one time the Transvaal was annexed to Great Britain and then relinquished—1881. Finally in it a life and death struggle began and Oom Paul and his heroic Burghers were defeated, the conflict ending 1902. The cause was the continual clash between the Dutch and the English, living as neighbors and yet feeling jealousy and contempt for each other.

The Russian-Japanese War of 1904 came about through the seizure of Manchuria by Russia with a covetous casting of eyes on Corea. The previous Chinese-Japanese War of 1894-5, occasioned by a Corean revolt and a calling upon China for assistance, had brought Japan to the front as a force and national power to be reckoned with and Russia determined she must as well settle a few things first as last.

Numberless minor wars have not been brought up for cause comment here. If they were, the tussles between the Hittites, and the Amalekites and the Philistines and the South American States, and so on, by the score, would have to be listed. All wars for independence have not been dwelt upon—the cause self-evident, as in the case of the long struggle of Cuba against Spain. There have been many flippant causes assigned for some wars that are plainly romances. Take the Balkan trouble started the Russo-Turkish War of 1877-1878 and a tale connected with it is that a tax collector insulted a blacksmith's daughter and was killed with the smith's hammer. An Afghan war is said to have been started because of failure to return a tobacco pipe and a Spanish war by the stealing of a lady's lace petticoat by a Moor.

No Pretext Needed.

In the ancient days whenever it was desired to wage war it was not necessary to hunt for a pretext. There was always the Delphic Oracle to consult and blame it on. It is even recorded that in B. C. 510 the oracle was bribed into pronouncing war against Athens! The clan of Megacles were the guilty ones, passing the money to the temple keeper at Delphi to be passed in turn to the priestess. When the Lacedæmonians came to her for a tip she earned her bribe by declaring, "Athens must be freed," which was enough leeway for the fighters straining at the leash.

England once went after Afghanistan because it would not receive a British embassy. Several years ago the London Board of Trade committee on the proposed Channel scheme had a report made concerning war and war possibilities. It showed between 1700 and 1870 altogether 117 cases of hostility. Of these ten were preceded by actual war declarations; 107 without any warning. Of forty-one cases the reason for giving no warning was to gain time to take the enemy unawares. Twelve cases of outbreak were due to opposition to governmental plans to postpone hostilities and throw the responsibility for breaking the peace on the enemy. Nine cases of motive were to anticipate the designs of other powers. Sixteen cases were sudden raids and acts of reprisal. Four cases were the outcome of the progress of war with one state leading to violation of other countries' rights. Five cases showed that help had been given to states already in hostility. This has been said of war by an eminent publicist:—

"In no country can the statement by the responsible Minister of the cause of war be taken in a spirit of faith. It is necessary he should deceive the public. He must secure the solid support of the country, and this he cannot do if he tells the whole truth and nothing but the truth. Being human, he must do all he can to save himself from blame in the event of disaster, and for this purpose he has to convince people that the war is justly expedient, and even inevitable. He has also to conciliate the public opinion of nations—at least of those nations powerful enough to thwart him; and this he does not hesitate to do at the expense of his veracity. Thus he tries to make still more obscure the state of affairs which is already too obscure for the ordinary understanding. He shoves prominently forward whatever factor in the case best serves his purpose and calls it the whole cause of the war."

Cicero's famous aphorism was "The natural state of man is war." It used to be thought the Roman system was solely responsible for the truism. But was it not so applied now?

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Gentleman Chauffeur

A Story of the Purchase of Mexican Oil Lands

By F. A. MITCHEL

Cuthbert Harrington, a portly gentleman with mutton chop whiskers, partly gray hair, florid complexion indicating high living and making a fine contrast with an azure polka dot neck scarf, sat in his private office in a skyscraper not far from Wall street, New York, opening his mail. He put the letters in different baskets as he read them till he came to one that arrested his earnest attention. He pondered over it for some time, then tapped a bell.

"Tell Mr. Erskine I would like to see him," he said to the attendant who entered.

Mr. Erskine, a tall, slender man with a shirt collar so high that it seemed to have pushed his hair back from his forehead, entered with a serious look on his face. No one of Mr. Harrington's subordinates ever entered his presence without appearing to suppose that he had been called for a purpose of supreme importance.

"Mr. Erskine," said the magnate, "I have a letter from Mexico this morning from Perkins saying that Manuel Furtado is very ill and likely to die."

"Senor Furtado is dead," replied Erskine, with unheard of daring, venturing to interrupt his chief.

"Dead! How do you know that?"

"His death is mentioned in the morning papers."

"What! Furtado dead! I didn't see it. Let me have the paper."

A journal was produced and the item pointed out.

"Erskine," said Harrington, turning to his subordinate, "this is a crisis in the oil industry of Mexico. Furtado owned the most valuable petroleum lands in that distracted country. There will be a race between some one sent out by me and some one sent by Sir Oliver Tisdale's British combination to buy these lands that belong to the Furtado estate. It is well known that the prospective heirs have wished these lands sold, but Furtado would sell nothing. General Grant said that victory in war depends on getting there first with the most men. In this case victory for us depends upon who gets there first with the most money."

"We are nearer Mexico than England."

"In this case we are at the same distance. Joe Blinker has kept me advised that John Handiside, the Tisdale manager here, has long been trying to get possession of this property. He will send"—

The door opened, and a clerk entered.

"Joseph Blinker says that he has important information for you, sir."

"Send him right in."

Mr. Blinker was about twenty-five years old, stupid looking, but a close observer would have remarked a crafty eye. He was a spy of Mr. Harrington's in Mr. Handiside's employ.

"What is it, Joe?" asked Mr. Harrington eagerly.

Joe instinctively looked at the walls and the ceiling for an eavesdropper, then said:

"Mr. Handiside is leaving by train this evening for Mexico."

"The deuce you say! How do you know that?"

"I was directed to purchase his sleeping section and his ticket."

"But how do you know they are for Mr. Handiside?"

"I was directed to engage a cab to be at his house at 5 o'clock this afternoon."

"How much of all this have you done?"

"Bought the tickets."

"How about the cab?" asked Mr. Erskine.

"I have not yet ordered it."

"Mr. Harrington," said Erskine, "may I have a few moments' conversation with you?"

"Yes. Joe, wait outside."

When alone Mr. Erskine said: "This information gives us a fine advantage. We may possibly delay Mr. Handiside while some one leaves by the evening train empowered to buy the Furtado property."

"How delay Handiside?"

"Let Joe give me the order for the cab. I will manage the rest."

"I think I see your point."

"Whom will you send?"

"Whom will I send? Why, I'll go myself! Whoever gets the Furtado property will own what turns the scale of a monopoly of the oil product of Mexico. The matter is altogether too important to trust to a subordinate. Now tell me how you propose to delay Handiside."

The door was locked to avoid interruption, and the two men went into secret conference.

* * * * * * *

"Bee," said Hugh Erskine, who surprised his wife by going home to luncheon, "I have a bit of work for you this afternoon."

"What is it?"

Erskine told his wife of the rivalry for the oil property in Mexico, unfolded his plan to delay Handiside and explained how he wished her assistance. Then he kissed and went to the garage in the rear of his house.

"Clark" he said to his chauffeur, "I wish you to take a note to a man on Staten Island. You needn't hurry. Take the whole afternoon."

When Carl had departed his master began an examination of his cars, selecting a closed one, on which he had gas to make certain changes. He sent for a locksmith, whom he directed to fix the locks to the doors so that they could not be opened from the inside. This done, Erskine drove a nail into the sash of every window so that it could not be opened. Next he bored a hole from behind the driver's seat into the interior of the car. Having finished all this, he went to a drug store and purchased a rubber bulb and tube.

Mr. Erskine then went to his dressing room, where he found his wife with cosmetics ready to make him up so that he would not be recognized for himself. He was smooth shaven, and his wife had no difficulty in fixing on him a beard. His hair was light, and she blackened it with pomade. Then he got into a suit of his chauffeur's clothes that he had brought from the garage and, after surveying himself in a pier glass, went out to get the car he had altered.

At the appointed hour Chauffeur Erskine pulled up at the residence of the representative of Sir Oliver Tisdale's British oil corporation. The front door was opened, a gentleman whom Erskine recognized as Mr. Handiside came out, kissed his hand to his wife who appeared at an upper window and got into the car, giving his directions before closing the door.

Mr. Handiside was being driven through a narrow street leading down to the Hudson river when there was a puff and the car was filled with a fine powder. Astonished, he tried to let down a window. It could not be moved. Then he tried the one on the other side of the car. This, too, was stuck fast. He rapped on the partition between him and the chauffeur. No response was accorded him. Lastly, he tried to open a door and failed.

Meanwhile Mr. Handiside was breathing in the powder that filled the car. It had been injected by the chauffeur, who had squeezed a rubber bulb, forcing it through the tube, an end of which had been inserted into a hole bored in the partition. The man inside began to feel languid, drowsy, and his efforts to get out of the car relaxed. Finally he passed into dreamland.

When Mr. Handiside came out of his trance it was quite dark. He vaguely saw what was evidently a hall, but his surroundings, being invisible, he could not see them. He got up and felt about him till he came to a door and, turning the knob, opened it and looked into a dimly lighted corridor. Returning to the room, by the increased light he saw a dresser, and on it were matches. Lighting one, he stood before an electric switch and turned on more light.

By this time it was evident to Mr. Handiside that he was in a hotel. Pushing a button, he called for some one from below. A bellboy responded, who called the night clerk, and Mr. Handiside was informed that the evening before a chauffeur had driven up to the hotel, said that he had a fare who was ill and begged to be permitted to leave the invalid till his family could be communicated with. The landlord had consented, and Mr. Handiside had been carried in and put to bed. The chauffeur had gone off to bring a doctor, but had not returned. Since the invalid seemed to be gently sleeping he was left to himself.

Day was breaking, and Mr. Handiside, feeling weak, decided to return to his bed. At 8 o'clock he arose, called up his own chauffeur by telephone and was driven to his home to break the news of his strange adventure to his wife.

How near Mr. Handiside's surmises as to the cause of his experience were to the truth is not known. He certainly never knew who had been his chauffeur in his ineffectual effort to reach the railway station. He took the next through train southward, but somehow he had a feeling that the delay he had been subjected to would be fatal to his buying the Furtado oil lands.

Meanwhile Cuthbert Harrington, dressed in somewhat shabby traveling clothes and a felt hat pulled down over his eyes, was driven to the station, where he entered a private compartment in a sleeping car. He reached his destination without having been recognized, and the morning after the funeral of Manuel Furtado appeared at the home of the deceased man's oldest son, and after an effort that lasted ten hours succeeded in getting the property at a price the heirs never had dreamed of. The papers were signed sealed and delivered at 10 o'clock that night, when Mr. Harrington went to bed to sleep the sleep, if not of the just, at least of the winner.

The next morning he called on young Furtado to say goodby before going to the station, and while standing in the patio who should come through the large Mexican doorway but Mr. Handiside.

"Good morning, Mr. Handiside," said the American magnate. "Come to buy the Furtado oil lands? There's the principal heir to the property right there. Mr. Handiside, Senor Furtado."

With this Mr. Harrington took his departure, was driven to the station and returned to New York.

Hugh Erskine was well to do before he demeaned himself to become Mr. Handiside's chauffeur, but this service made him a double millionaire. Mrs. Erskine has since assumed a leadership in New York society. She says she made more by dressing her husband once than she ever made in dressing herself in all her life.

As for the Furtado heirs, though they became rich by the sale of their lands they have been miserable ever since that they did not get more.

HOW "TIZ" HELPS SORE, TIRED FEET

"TIZ" is grand for aching, swollen, sweaty calloused feet or corns.

Good-bye sore feet, burning feet, swollen feet, sweaty feet, smelling feet, tired feet.

Good-bye corns, callouses, bunions and raw spots. No more shoe tightness, no more limping with pain or drawing up your face in agony. "TIZ" is magical, acts right off. "TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet—the only remedy that does. Use "TIZ" and wear smaller shoes. Ah! how comfortable your feet will feel. "TIZ" is a delight. "TIZ" is harmless.

Get a 25 cent box of "Tiz" now at any druggist or department store. Don't suffer. Have good feet, glad feet, feet that never swell, never hurt, never get tired. A year's foot comfort guaranteed or money refunded.

YOUR BLOOD is the canal of life but it becomes a sewer if clogged up. All life consists of building up and tearing down and just in the same manner that the blood carries to the various parts of the body the food that the cells need for building up, so it is compelled to carry away the waste material that's thrown down. These waste materials are poisonous and destroy us unless the liver and kidneys are stimulated into refreshed and vigorous life.

DR. PIERCE'S Golden Medical Discovery is the balancing power—a vitalizing power. It acts on the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition—on the purifying filters which clean the blood. Then fresh vitalized blood feeds the nerves, heart—and brain. This well known alterative relieves catarrh of the stomach and headaches accompanying same, and has been successful for more than a generation as a tonic and body-builder. It builds up the run-down system. You need it—if you are always "catching cold"—or have catarrh of the nose and throat. The active medicinal principles of American Native roots are contained, without alcohol, and you can get this tonic in liquid or tablet form at any drug store or send 50 cents in 1-cent stamps for trial box of tablets.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

A despatch from Salonika says that Onegraphos, the former governor of that seaport, has addressed a proclamation to the Epirotes, informing them of the annexation of Epirus by Greece.

The British steamer Italia of the Anchor Line, bound from New York to Mediterranean ports has been detained at Gibraltar. The authorities there state the the Italia has contraband of war aboard.

Michael Serago of New York was sentenced yesterday by Justice Davis to serve from 20 years to life imprisonment in Sing Sing for the murder of William G. Martin, a Toronto milliner, last February.

A fourth squadron is being raised in London, Eng., by King Edward's Horse to make good losses sustained by the regiment in the firing line. One hundred men from any of the dominions are required.

The Carranza troops retired before an advance of 10,000 Villa soldiers after fighting twenty miles south of Aguascallentes, according to an official Villa report yesterday. Gen. Leon commanded the Carranza forces.

The correspondent of The London Times in Pas de Calais sends the following under Thursday's date: "I am credibly informed that the German losses in the supreme attack on the British between Ypres and Lille are well over 50,000."

The North German Lloyd Line steamer Kronprinzessin Cecelie, arrived in Boston Harbor yesterday, ending her trip from Bar Harbor, Me., where she had been interned since a few days after the opening of the European war.

STRAIN TOO GREAT.

Germans Are Weakening as Result of Terrible Losses in Flanders.

NORTH FLANDERS, Nov. 7.—There are signs of the morale of the German troops, who for the last fortnight have been hurled against the British army around Ypres, is giving way. The army cannot attack day after day an enemy who resists successfully and only falls back when overwhelmingly outnumbered without losing heart.

A letter written by a German reserve officer to his wife fell into the hands of the British a few days ago. Its tone is absolutely hopeless. The writer described the sufferings and losses of his regiments. They had been eleven days continuously in the trenches, had all lost hope, and he feared they were doomed. On the strength of this evidence as to the morale of the Germans a counter-attack ordered by the Germans was repulsed from the positions they had just occupied.

German Steamer Blown Up.

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 7.—A large German steamer has been blown up south of the Danish island of Langeland, in the great belt by a mine said to have been placed by the Germans. A number of her crew were lost.

During the past fortnight two German trawlers and one German steamer have been destroyed in this region. There are no Danish mines in the waters where the disasters have occurred, as they were gathered up by a Danish steamer some time ago.

AN EASY WAY TO STOP HEAD NOISES

Good Advice For Those Who Have Deafness

Men and women who are growing hard of hearing and who experience a stuffy feeling of pressure accompanied by tension, sometimes in their head like water falling or steam escaping should take prompt and effective measures to stop this trouble. Head noises are almost invariably the forerunners of complete or partial deafness and many deaf people suffer from them constantly. Sometimes these head noises become distressing and nerve racking, with their never ceasing "hum" that drives the sufferer almost frantic and complete nervous breakdown and even violent insanity have been known to result.

Thanks to a remarkable scientific discovery made recently in England it is now possible to almost instantly lessen the severity of these head noises and in a very short time to completely and permanently overcome them. With the disappearing of the head noises, the hearing also greatly improves and very frequently can be restored to normal. This English treatment is known as Parmint and can be easily and safely self administered at home. Leading druggists in Peterborough and vicinity now have it in stock. Get from your druggist 1 oz. Parmint (Double strength) and mix it at home with ½ pint of hot water, and 4 oz. of granulated sugar. Stir until dissolved and then take one tablespoonful four times a day until the noises disappear and hearing improves. Parmint is used double strength in this way not only to reduce by tonic action the inflammation and swelling in the Eustachian tube and thus to equalize the air pressure on the drum but to correct any excess of secretions in the middle ear and the results it gives are both remarkably quick and effective.

Important: In ordering Parmint always specify that you want double strength; your druggist has it or he can get it for you; if not, send 75c to the International Laboratories, 74 St. Antoine St., Montreal, P.Q., who make a specialty of it.

Berlin Alleges Afghan Move.

LONDON, Nov. 7. — A report received in Berlin from Constantinople says that the Ameer of Afghanistan has sent an army of 170,000 men, with 136 guns, to the Indian frontier. This news was given out in official quarters in Berlin yesterday to the press. The railroad from Herat to Kushk has been destroyed, says the Berlin story, and a number of Indian border tribes have joined the Afghans.

According to information given out in Berlin official quarters yesterday to the press, Sheik Ul Islam, the chief ecclesiastical dignitary of Mohammedanism in Turkey, has issued a decree in Constantinople, saying in the fighting with Russia, Britain and France, the duty of every Mussulman is to his faith. This decree has been spread throughout the Mohammedan world and announced to the pilgrims at Mecca.

NOTHING LIKE IT FOR COLDS

Mrs. Holland Ferguson, Sheffield, N.B. writes: Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine has cured my children and myself of severe colds. We are never without it in the house. There is nothing like it for colds and throat trouble and it is so soothing and pleasant to take, my children would drink a whole bottle if they were permitted.

Missionary Problem Is Not Hopeless

But Encouraging, Said Rev. Dr. Cleaver Yesterday — Despair Toward Christianizing the World Was Most Damnable of Attitudes

SPLENDID MUSIC BY CHOIR

The Rev. Dr. Cleaver, D.D., of Toronto, occupied the pulpit of the George Street Methodist Church at both services yesterday. The occasion was the Missionary Anniversary of the Church, and at both morning and evening services there was a good congregation present.

In the morning the Choir rendered a splendid unaccompanied anthem, which was a beautiful vehicle for its ability. The Choir, yesterday morning, excelled its usual standard, which has proved so acceptable to the congregation of, and visitors to, the Church, and their rendition of the difficult anthem was very effective and acceptable. The Choir appeared to be exceedingly well balanced and perfectly trained. The goodly number of voices added to the effect, and at both services yesterday the Choir acquitted themselves very creditably under the leadership of Mr. J. H. Renwick.

In the morning, Dr. Cleaver took his text from the 35th verse of the fourth Chapter of John, which reads as follows:

"Say not ye there are four months and then cometh the harvest; behold I say unto you lift up your eyes and look on the fields; for they are white already for the harvest."

The general tone of Dr. Cleaver's whole sermon was encouragingly optimistic. He drew attention to the fact that as yet the Church had given only insignificant sacrifice for the Christianizing of the heathen abroad, yet they had accomplished wonderful things. What then could be accomplished if the work was attacked in real earnest? All that was needed was a little more consecration and a good deal more zeal.

In order to prevent overlapping, explained the speaker, each Christian Church had agreed to be responsible for a certain definite proportion and portion of the heathen in foreign lands. To the Methodist Church in Canada fell the lot of Christianizing 14,000,000, ten million of them in China and four million in Japan. At present there were in the neighbourhood of 150 missionaries representing the Canadian Methodist Church at work with this object in view. To accomplish it in the present generation five hundred missionaries were needed. Yet, to support these five hundred, in place of the one hundred and fifty now there, would only take one cent per day contribution from every member of the Methodist Church.

In referring to the difference between the life of a woman in a Christian and non-Christian country, Dr. Cleaver said that an educated Turkish woman, who was touring America, was asked what the life of a woman in Turkey was, and she replied in all seriousness, "It is hell." This statement would describe the life of the ordinary woman in non-Christian countries. It was unnecessary to dwell on the horrible conditions in India, where, out of the 144,000,000 women, 26,000,000 were widows and of those 100,000 were widows under ten years of age. A widow in Indian was treated as an outcast and cursed as no black slave in any land had ever been cursed. To combat these customs, to bring about a condition of Christianity and its attendant good influences in that part of India known as North Bengal, there was only one missionary to every two million people. In Africa there were 5,000,000 women who were not even included in the plans of the missionary societies of the Christian Church. According to estimates there were 500,000,000 people in the world to-day who must go down to the grave without having heard the Gospel teachings—without having the opportunity of embracing Christ.

In the face of these facts some of the Church members pleaded despair, and threw up their hands, saying: 'We cannot do anything. The problem seems infinite." Despair, said the speaker, was the most damnable of all attitudes. There was absolutely no justification for it. Three hundred years ago the Christian Governments of the world controlled seven per cent. of the world's territory. Now the Christian powers controlled eighty-two per cent. One hundred years ago there were 400,000,000 people under Christian regime, whereas now there are 1,000,000,000. The heathen nations had increased in numbers 40 per cent., whereas the Christian nations had increased 200 per cent. In these Protestant nations alone—Germany, England and the United States there were 600,000,000, more than all in the non-Christian nations of the world.

Ten years ago there were 12 missionary societies, now there are over 1,000. At that time North America did not support a single missionary abroad, and now they had an army of 33,000. So the increase of late years, in Protestant Christian missionaries was 3,000 per cent. whereas the increase in the population of heathen nations was only 40 per cent.

Dr. Cleaver, in continuing, presented many other encouraging statistics, showing that while as yet the Church had been only playing with the problem of foreign missions yet they had accomplished wonderful things. The future held in store a great possibility and the realization of the great need constituted a call. In concluding Dr. Cleaver made a stirring appeal for greater interest in missions. If the members of the Canadian Church would only care for the heathen then there would be a resultant changes in the interest shown and the work done.

FIERCE DON COSSACKS ACHIEVE WILD DEEDS OF VALOUR FOR TSAR

Untamed Troopers on Spirited Horses Are Hardly Restrained From Attack on Warsaw, Knives in Teeth, Thinking They Have Reached Berlin—Youth Kills Eleven Germans, Another Captures Captor

WARSAW, Oct. 10, 1914.—The gathering of the Russian hosts has poured a stream of picturesque soldiery through Poland to the frontiers of Germany and Austria, writes Alan Ostler in a letter to the New York Herald.

There are Cossacks from the Don, wearing their caps on one side and flaunting bushy love locks over their temples, like the cherished "horns" of the Arab warrior; Georgians; narrow-waisted, dandified Circassians; Little Russians; flat-faced, withered-looking Siberian troops; men from the Altai and the Urals; and, most picturesque of all, wild-eyed, bewildered Mohammedans from the Kirkhiz steppes and Turkestan.

Of all that have passed through Warsaw, none made so strange a show as these untamed Bashi-Bazouks. They came clattering into town on shaggy ponies that squealed and snapped at one another and wanted to fight with tramcars and motors and the sober steeds that are harnessed to the droshkas. And the men were as wild as the horses they bestrode. Perched on their high-framed, uncomfortable looking saddles, they stared about them in ferocious wonder, swearing strange guttural Moslem oaths, "Mashallah!" and "Wallah!" and "Billahi!" They wore striped wide trousers of mixed silk and cotton and turned up embroidered riding boots of red leather. Broad knives and knobbly butted pistols were stuck into their sashes, and their rifles clinked and dangled at their backs.

Their great-grandfathers fought Napoleon clad in mail, and the Parisians of 1814 crowded to see them in their camp under Platoff in the Champs Elysees, and wondered at their yataghans and painted bows and arrows. Save that the gun has superseded bow and arrow, they are much the same in 1914 as their ancestors of a century ago.

Thought Warsaw Berlin.

At sight of Warsaw, they believed already that they had reached Berlin, and spurred forward, knives between their teeth and guns held ready. It was with the greatest difficulty that they were halted for a while on the outskirts of the town, while a regiment of more sophisticated troops was turned out to escort them through the streets. Finally they were marched through between a double line of soldiery, by side streets and byways, to the racecourse on the further side of the town, and there they bivouacked.

The eager sightseers who would fain have flocked to the place were discouraged after the Russian method; but a privileged few were permitted. It was of little avail, however, to question them, for hardly anyone could understand their outlandish dialect. My Polish friend, Mr. S——, striving hard to make himself understood by one hairy, muscular horseman, whose bridle was tastefully decorated with sequins and whose saddlebags were gloriously striped and fringed in Oriental style, seemed to me to make less headway than a Tyneside collier would make in conversation with a Devon or Cornish fisherman.

The dialogue became a thing of frowns and head shakings and pantofimic gesture. The Bashi-Bazouk, it seemed, had questions to ask, too, and urgently desired answers. By dint of patience and distinct articulation an understanding was achieved at last.

Seeking Gold Watches.

"Is it true," the wild man wanted to know, "that the Germans carry gold watches, or have they only silver ones?"

I fancy that S——, to keep him in a good temper, declared that every German is born with a magnificent gold watch in his waistcoat packet. If that is so, judging from the gleam of joyful resolution that forthwith illuminated the hairy gentleman's countenance, I foresee a painful experience in store for the first Teuton who fails to disgorge a gold watch on demand.

The hairy individual had five saddlebags on his crupper, but only two of them appeared to contain anything.

S—— asked the reason of these five saddlebags. The explanation was simple. One, it semed, was to carry hay for the shaggy pony; another contained oats, intended for the consumption of that same intelligent if ill-tempered animal—except in time of need, when the rider might be obliged to make porridge of them for himself.

As for the three empty sacks—

"I dare say I shall find something to put into them before the war is over," said the owner, hopefully.

Stories of the individual prowess of the Cossacks, hopelessly incredible stories, many of them, are the order of the day in Warsaw.

We have revelled in the valour of the young Don Cossack who slew eleven Germans with his own hand and came out of the encounter with no fewer than sixteen sword and bullet wounds. His photograph, that of a wildly, heroically handsome lad, had been in all the newspapers for days, and his unpronounceable name is heard everywhere. Doubtless it has travelled even as far as Britain by now.

There is the story of the Cossack who was captured, horse and all, by an Austrian scouting party, but yet contrived to escape and bring an Austrian officer back to camp as his prisoner. He was tripped in the half light of early morning by a rope across the road and lay stunned for a time, as the story goes. When he recovered his senses he was disarmed and a captive.

The Austrian officer commanding his captors mounted the Cossack's pony, but the pony would not move. It remained indifferent to beatings with the flat of a sabre and prods from the point of it; for there is a special method of stimulating Cossack mounts to activity, and the Austrian officer knew it not.

The Cossack prisoner said that he could make the horse go, and finally he was ordered to mount behind the officer and do so. Whereupon he clasped the Austrian tightly above the elbows and dug his heels into the animal's side.

"Hik!" said the Cossack, and the horse flew like the wind.

This is a perfectly true story. At least—well, anyhow, I didn't invent it.

Belgians In North France Fight Bravely

With Allies' Aid Have Beaten the Enemy Into Unmistakable Retreat From Dixmunde

NORTHERN FRANCE, Nov. 8.—It is now more than three weeks since a fluke of fate led me into Dixmunde. It seemed to me then an impossible thing that the Belgians, with all their courage, their dogged, desperate gallantry, on this last strip of territory could resist and hold that great mass of hostile men who were trying to smash their way through behind those guns. But what seemed to me impossible is now a splendid achievement. The remnant of the Belgian army, aided in the nick of time by French troops, who came up with their batteries, have not only held and stemmed the dreadful thrust of the enemy which was enormously superior in weight of metal, but have beaten them back into an unmistakable and continuing retreat. There is no doubt about this. The very air in all that region between Furnes and Nieuport, Dixmunde and Pervyse is cleared of odour and fume of battle. Peace and a strange new quietude have come to places like Oostkerke and Ramscapelle, which ten days ago were under the pall of sulphurous smoke and in the zone of bursting shrapnel.

At Furnes it is no longer an adventure, with the chance of death at every turn in the road, to travel through villages on the way to Nieuport, Plage or Wulpen. Dixmunde itself is accessible to any man who wishes to study the effect of the war upon this town, which has sustained its powers of destruction to the full.

Purely Personal.

Ward Boss: Where'd ye git the black eye, Grogan?

Grogan: Look here, Spillisey, Oi'm a mimber av the organization an Oi belaves in sticking to yer leader, but Oi'll not permit ye to pry into me personal and family affairs.

Batch of Letters From the Front

AN OLD FOOT-BALLER.

(From Private F. Wagstaff of the Bedford Regiment, who played for Sandy Town Football team).

I did have a rough time of it when I got wounded. I got hit about three o'clock, and I had to lay like a little frog from that time until it got dark, and the time seemed to me days, for I dare not chance getting up. It was pouring with rain all the time. I thought sometimes: "I wish they had done me in altogether."

The other week we were the other side of the River Marne, and went to attack a big hill. There were about 200 Germans, all mobs. We had got through one wood and then we had to retire, and you ought to have seen the way we rolled down a great hill with fixed bayonets, all of a heap.

I hadn't been down on the road many minutes when who should come along but Chicky Smith, all of a pant and blow.

He twigged me, and said. "Oh Stub, I never saw anything like it in all my life." I said, "More ain't I," and we went down the road together, dodging the shrapnel as it burst, into the village.

Dodging shrapnel is like children running for scrambling sweets. The shells don't half let you have it. The Germans fire six guns at a time, and they sound beautiful.

OUTPOSTS' SURPRISES.

(From Private Alexander Fotheringham, of the Royal Scots Fusiliers).

I was engaged in a cycle corps, and one day a handful of our company were engaged in outpost duty when we were taken by surprise by a batch of Uhlans.

There was absolutely no alternative, on account of the overwhelming numbers against us, but leave our cycles and beat a hasty retreat.

For three miles we were pursued by the enemy, until the 15th Hussars appeared on the scene to effect a timely rescue.

Our turn, however, was not long in coming One Saturday night 10 of us—all privates—were out on a road when we observed a number of horsemen in the distance galloping in our direction.

After a hurried consultation the eldest member of our little company gave a whistle at an arranged time when the Germans, who were at the time unaware of our presence, were within shooting distance, and quick as lightning we spread ourselves across the road and opened a rapid fire.

Within a matter of minutes all the horsemen were accounted for, much to the relief of the Villagers, who had been alarmed at the approach of the Germans.

"EARLY DOORS".

"A party of the King's Own" writes a sapper, "went into their first action shouting 'Early doors this way! Early doors, sixpence!'"

"The Kaiser's Crush" is a description by a sergeant of the Coldstreams of a dense mass of Germans emerging to the attack from a wood and preparing to meet them with the bayonet.

"Lord, Bill, it's just like a play, an' us in the limelight," says a little Cockney, and as the artillery fusillade passed over their heads, and a great ironical cheer went up from the British trenches, he added, "but it's the Kaiser wot's gettin' the bird.'

"PEOPLE WOULD GIVE YOU THEIR HEARTS."

(Leter from Private Talbot, of the Army Service Corps).

You ask for facts regarding the war. Well, you would have to see things with the naked eye to believe them. What you see you know is the truth.

As regards France in general, they are a long way behind England in so far as trams, 'buses, etc., are concerned, but the country is simply handsome. There is not a bit of idle land anywhere for all you can see for miles is nothing but wheat and fruit trees. The houses and villages, I should think, were built years ago. They put you in mind of the old-fashioned pictures of villages you see at home. The people are the most cordial I have seen, and at the present moment they would give you their hearts if they could . . . .

The German soldier in himself is nothing more than a doll. He does not know what he is fighting for and thinks his Kaiser is a supreme being. When our boys meet them on the straight it's all up. You never saw such pictures of misery.

I must close—the familiar order is being shouted along the line: "All rifles loaded and handy by your side"

'BUS DRIVER AT THE FRONT.

Private F. Dodkin, home from the front on sick leave, writes to refute the suggestion in a French soldier's letter (published in The Evening News on Wednesday) that the accidental burning of a British ammunition waggon was caused by 'bus drivers from London" smoking pipes, contrary to orders, while filling petrol tanks. Private Dodkins says:

"I have been driver of a motor lorry in charge of ammunition. I would like to publish the following facts to contradict the French soldier's letter:

"In the first place our officers take every precaution to guard the safety of ammunition waggons. When we are not on the move we have a roll call at 7 a.m., and afterwards we muster with rifles and put in from one to one and a half hours' rifle drill. We also take our turn in line picket and outpost duty.

"I do not want to blow my own trumpet, but I must say that the 'bus drivers from London are doing splendid service in the field, and I think that our officers and N.C.O's will be the first to admit the truth of this."

The government is encouraging experiments in France with a device to protect against hail, essentially a large lightning rod of pure copper, which is said to so affect atmospheric electricity that hail storms cannot form.

ANOTHER ATTEMPT TO BREAK THROUGH

Examiner Special:

PARIS, November 9.—The Germans have again assumed the offensive at Dixmunde and Ypres. After a general slackening of their attack, following a week of constant artillery fire and night infantry charges, the forces of the Kaiser have returned to their task of endeavouring to pierce the allied lines at these points, with renewed vigour. The official communique issued by the war office to-day, declares the allied lines still hold at every point. The renewed attacks of the German forces have been held in check, and suffered heavy losses.

LONDON, November 9.—With Parliament convening on Wednesday for its second war session, the greatest interest is being manifested in the attitude of the Opposition towards the Government, especially in relation to the affairs of the Admiralty. There is also the question of the plans adopted by the war office in raising the army for service in France and Belgium, as well as the system of censorship which permits the public to know but little of what is transpiring in the field.

Members of the Opposition feel that despite the fact that the vessels sunk in the North Sea by the German submarine raid, were of little real value, England has ben humiliated by the heavy toll taken there. The defeat of Admiral Craddock's squadron off the Chilian coast, came as a climax to the growing sentiment for demand that the Admiralty assume some offensive to offset these victories for the Germans.

There is a possibility that the same patriotism that prompted the opposing factions in Parliament to present a united front when war was first threatened, will work its influence against any criticism from the Opposition. There has been a great demand, however, for the abolishment of much of the red tape still clinging to all war office transactions. Many Unionist leaders believe the Government must either resort to conscription or adopt a radically different system of recruitng. There was no official comment to-day on the late Berlin wireless stating that the fleet of Admiral Craddock had been "annihilated in the Pacific." The wireless also stated that the Kaiser had conferred the iron cross upon the officers and crew of the cruiser Karlsruhe.

PARIS, November 9. — A very heavy fog still prevails between Dixmunde and the Lys, seriously interfering with the work of the artillery as well as that of the air scouts. Despite these handicaps, however, the allied forces have advanced slowly in this section, the communique states. The situation elsewhere is unchanged.

TOKIO, Japan, November 9.—Since the fall of the German position at Tsing-Tau, the question of Japan sending an army to Europe, has begun to attract increasing attention. It is believed that such a move would be welcomed by France. The army would go by way of Canada.

ATHENS, Nov. 9.—Reports reaching here declare that the British and French warships are bombarding and rapidly reducing the Turkish forts at the Aegean entrance of the Dardanelles. It is believed here that with the fall of these forts the allied fleets will turn their guns on the Trojan Plain and on the ancient city of Troy.

CRESSMAN'S NEW ARCADE IS STRIKING

Opened for the First Time on Saturday, It Attracted Wide Attention and Won General Compliments Upon Fine Addition to Street's Appearance.

THE LARGEST STORE IN EASTERN ONTARIO

The new arcade entrance to Cressman's big departmental store delighted the Saturday night crowd that saw it for the first time in its flood of light playing uponon rich mahogany and quartered oak panels, and the dress materials which were used in the first display.

The arcade is the feature of the latest addition to the Cressman store. Just a year ago the increasing business necessitated extensive alterations which provided for a largely increased space on the second, third and fourth floors. Recently the adjoining Schneider premises were taken over, permitting a sweeping change in the frontal appearance and in some of the departments.

There are few stores in the province that employ the arcade idea for their entrance, but in Toronto and Montreal there are a number of splendid effects achieved in this manner. The Cressman arcade is first of all proportionate to the building. It extends forty-four feet back from the street line and along the greater length of the passage way is six feet wide. At the entrance and rear it widens out freely and in its entirety is roomy, airy and well lighted. Naturally, both sides of the passage are devoted to show purposes, and the ample facilities provided have been utilised to the fullest extent.

Great Silent Salesmen.

In their capacity and attractive finish these two long windows and the deep display window at the rear of the arcade produce a striking effect. At the same time they give the store a wealth of show windows in fact a total of 180 feet. This exceeds the show window space of any store in the province, as the store itself is the largest with the exception of the very large departmental stores like those in Toronto. The former central entrance has been closed and gives way to the main arcade entrance. This alteration gives one great central window thirty-four feet in length. The advantages thus afforded by the use of the new an old window spaces places the Cressman store in the very front rank in this regard. Its extensvie "silent salesmen" are on the main thoroughfare, and the arcade actually invites one to examine the goods thus displayed so advantageously.

Have Fine Appearance.

The arcade has a dome of panelled quartered oak. The back wall of the show windows is made of crotch cut mahogany imported from New York. The floors are of quarter cut oak with a pretty inlaid border. The arcade's floor is of terrazzo and a rich tone is added by the marble base of the windows. Forty-seven 60 c.p. lamps provide the necessary light required to give the display windows their full value at night.

At the rear of the arcade there are entrances into men's wear and main store. The idea should not be conveyed that the men's department is otherwise separate from the rest of the building, for there is easy communication within the building and behind the arcade's rear wall. On Saturday night there was the first evidence of the display advantages which the arcade offers. The north windows were devoted to children's wear; the south containe a fine showing of ready-to-wear, millinery and accessories, and the rear show case displayed dress goods and silks. The effect is really beautiful, and while utility was the principal object aimed at, the design brings out a decorative effect that immediately strikes the attention of the passing crowds. The staple department has been changed as a result of the addition. The men's wear section is roomier than ever and is well located. Other departments requiring attention will be arranged in the near future. The whole work was carried out under the direction of Mr. E. N. Jones.

MORE MEN TO BE RECRUITED IN PETERBORO'

Major Walker Receives Order to Re-commence Enlisting for Second Contingent

START TO-NIGHT

Local boys who were disappointed in not getting a chance to go with the second contingent quota to Kingston last week, will be glad to hear that they will get another opportunity at once. Major Walker, commanding officer of the 57th Regiment, has received orders from Kingston to recommence recruiting here and to continue until further notice. 200 men are needed to comlete the battalion at Kingston, and the different centres will recruit more men until this number is made up. To insure getting a chance, therefore, Peterborough recruits who are anxious to go should lose no time in enlisting. A medical examiner will be at the armouries at 8 o'clock to-night to examine applicants. Word has been received from Kingston that only three or four of the 57th contingent have been rejected at Kingston, which is an effective testimony to the work of the doctors here.

RED MILL TO-DAY

Series No. 1 of the Great EUROPEAN WAR

Remarkable moving picture taken on the scene of action by Cherry Kearton, special agent of the Belgian Government. Admission only 5 cents.

NEW G. T. R. LINE SHOULD BE BUILT HERE BY CHRISTMAS

If the present rate of progress on the laying of the heavy rails on the Grand Trunk line between here and Belleville is sustained the work ought to have progressed as far as this city by Christmas. Whether the work goes on as satisfactorily as it has or not depends largely upon the weather, which may hamper operations considerably. Th new track should make a phenomenal chanbe in the line between here and Belleville.

DR. PAKENHAM WILL SPEAK

An address by Dr. Pakenham, Dean of the Faculty of Education, Toronto University, and an old Peterborough boy, will be the feature of the joint session of the City and County Teachers' Association in the Assembly Hall of the Collegiate Institute on Thursday night. Dr. Pakenham's subject will be "Some Problems in Ontario Education." There will be a musical programme as well.

TRYING TO GET RID OF SAM GOMPERS

Leader of Miners' Federation Leading a Movement to Place Himself at the Head of American Federation.

THE ANNUAL MEETING

Special to The Examiner:

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Nov. 9. — the American Federation of Labour opened this morning, with all the delegates present, including many from Canada, it was evident that this might be the last term for the veteran leader, Samuel Gompers, as President.

Under the leadership of Murdock McDonald, leader of the Miners' Federation, there is a determined open campaign to retire Gompers this year on the score that his methods are out of date and conservative. McDonald leads an organization representing the membership of nearly half a million, and its influence is great. The Federation will also discuss a means of ending the European war, by working through the labour organisations of Germany, France and Great Britain.

Has Volunteered For Active Service With Second Contingent

Lieut.-Col. W. H. Young went to Ottawa early this morning. He was one of the first officers in Peterborough to volunteer his services, when the war broke out. The 10th Brigade ranked fourth in efficiency at Petawawa Camp, last summer, only Toronto, Kingston and Ottawa being higher. If he cannot get command of a Brigade he is willing to go as surgeon to one of the Brigades being formed.

Norwood Man Appointed To

Position of Deputy Collector of Inland Revenue at Peterborough

OTTAWA, Nov. 9.—The following appointments have been made in the Inland Revenue Department: George W. Taylor of Ottawa to be Assistant Deputy Minister and Secretary of the department: William F. Miller of Hamilton to be District Inspector of Inland Revenue for the Toronto Inspection District; William Parker of Norwood to be Deputy Collector of Inland Revenue at Peterborough.

MASSEY-HARRIS WORKS WILL START AGAIN

Examiner Special:

BRANTFORD, Ont., Nov. 9.—The good news has been received here that the extensive industries controlled by the Massey Harris Co., which closed down when war broke out, will be reopened at once, to employ eight hundred men, five days a week for an indefinite period. It is expected other Massey Harris concerns in various parts of Canada will also be reopened shortly.

TO-DAY'S MARKETS

Examiner Special:

TORONTO, Nov. 9.—Live Stock Market—Receipts heavy, trade low, prices varied. Extra prime steers, $7.65 to $7.75; good butcher steers, $7.25 to $7.50; choice butcher cows, $6.40 to $6.50; choice butcher bulls, $6.25 to $6.60; heavy stockers, $6.25.

ONE THOUSAND IN DONATIONS

WOODSTOCK, Nov. 9.—At its regular meeting, Woodstock Water and Light Commission voted $200 to the Oxford Patriotic Fund, and $800 for the relief of the Belgians.

RUSSIA'S WIN IS A COMPLETE ONE

Lines of Communication of Austrian and German Army Are Practically Cut Off and Their Position is Serious--Czar's Forces Now Ready for the Dash to Berlin.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, November 9.—So complete is the victory of the Russian army along the East Prussian and Galician frontier that the Czar's general staff may now choose the manner in which the campaign in the interests of the allied powers arranged against Germany may be conducted.

With an advance cavalry patrol in the provinces of Posen and with the East Prussian frontier crossed, the army of the Czar has attained its full movements. The speed with which the last force has been moved has startled the military experts. It is declared in official circles that motor sleds in great numbers are now en route to the front from Petrograd, and should it be decided to press the advance into Germany, the Russian artillery will be able to transport its guns over the snow with the greatest possible speed.

Additional reports bring fresh details of the great Russian victory, and the British war office express the greatest satisfaction at the success of the Russians.

The lines of communication of the Austrian and German armies are declared to have been practically cut and the position of the enamy is now extremely serious.

Word has reached here that the Turkish treasury is empty. There is a great sentiment against the war party in Constaninople is also evidenced by the fact that martial law has been declared in that city; many arrests have also been made. The offenders have been immediately courtmartialed and executed.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—A despatch from Copenhagen to the Central News says: "According to a Berlin telegram, Germany is making great preparations for a winter campaign, with tents, sleighs and furs for its entire army."

BERLIN, via Amsterdam, Nov. 9.—The retirement of the German forces behind the Warthe River, is admitted in an official statement from the war office to-day, but there was nothing to indicate that concern is felt officially over the continued advance of the Russians. Reports reaching here declare that many of the great estates in Posen province are being deserted. The border inhabitants are heading for the interior. Reports of some excitement in Vienna, following rumours of general Russian victories have reached here, but the war office declares the German and Austrian armies are still intact, and conducting their strategical retreat in the best of order.

Faced Serious Charge To-day

Case Was Adjourned for a Week and Prisoner Was Allowed Out on $4,000 Bail

A McGill Street man appeared in the Police Court this morning to face a very serious charge of an offence against a young girl thirteen years of age. Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared on behalf of the prisoner and Acting Crown Attorney Wearing was in charge of the prosecution. At the request of the Crown the case was adjourned a week to allow them to prepare a complete case against the accused. He pleaded "not guilty" to the charge.

The prisoner is a comparatively young man and the young girl against whom he is alleged to have committed the offence, resides in the same part of the City.

This morning he was allowed out on $4,000 bail—two sureties of $2000 each.

Vermont Poisoning

MIDDLEBURY, Vt., Nov. 9. — Fifteen persons are dead and several others are in a dying condition in the hospital at Bristol as a result of the most extensive poisoning case in the history of the State. The tragedy is the direct result of a prohibition law that failed to pephibit, and Dr. J. A. Bisbee, owner of the Bisbee drug store, at Bristol, is under arrest charged with selling the poisoned substance.

Dr. Bisbee, who admits making a mistake in the concoction of liquor intended for sale at his store, will be given a hearing before Judge James Donoway early next week. He has been threatened with death by relatives of those who died as a result of drinking th poisoned liquor, and is in a condition of collapse at the jail, requiring the attention of a physician daily.

All of those who died as a result of the mistake bought liquor at the store, and the source of the trouble was soon located. In all twenty-five persons were affected by the druggist's error, and of the ones made ill seven are still in a serious condition.

Dr. Bisbee is a graduate of the University of Michigan, and practiced for several years in Chicago before coming to Bristol. State's Attorney Tuttle is investigating the case and will take charge of the prosecution.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

MONDAY, NOV. 9, 1914

THE HANDWRITING.

General Von Bernhardi, the literary mouthpiece of the German doctrine of force as the ideal of government, in one of his utterances thus gave voice to the aspiration of the ideal of its mission. H says: "For as (the German military party) there are two alternatives and no third—world dominion or downfall." The alternative vised edition of the calgraphic mural on its plate. "World dominion" is rapidly merginging into "downfall." The Kaiser is confronted with another handwriting than that of Bernhardi. He is confronted with the rehas ceased ot exist and certainty takdecoration of the banquet hall of Belshazzar.

CONGRATULATIONS.

The congratulations extended by The Examiner to Rev. Father Phelan, upon the occasion of his promotion to the office of Rector of St. Peter's Cathedral, will be shared by the citizens as a whole, irrespective of religious affiliations. This promotion is significant for two or three reasons. It is a pleasure to see a Peterborough boy, born, reared and educated amongst us, made the recipient of a great dignity and responsibility. His appointment, appears to a layman, as no doubt it did to his ecclesiastical superior—by the way another Peterborough boy—to be suggested, by faithful service as a priest and by high character of manhood. Congratulations will naturally come from those associated in former years with Rev. Father Phlan's prominence in the field of lacrosse, where he displayed the qualities of throughness and aim to excel, that in a different sphere in later life have paved the way to a promotion that may be regarded as the first step in the fulfilment of the Divine plandit—"Thou has been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things." Rev. Father Phelan, with no doubt, however, of his success, will not find it easy to follow Very Rev. Dean McColl, who, as rector of St. Peter's, has accomplished a work in the material as well as spiritual upbuilding of the parish, that will need energy and zeal to equal, and will find correspondingly effective expression in a new field of priestly pioneering—in the parish of the Immaculate Conception, East City, of which he has been placed in charge.

HAIL AND FAREWELL.

Peterborough citizenship and the guild of the Gospel ministry suffer a distinct loss in the removal of Rev. H. J. Keith, who leaves to-morrow for Edmonton; and Edmonton cannot say that Peterborough has not sent her of our best. Jacob, the patriarch, served seven years for Rachael, but in seven years' service to Knox Church Rev. Mr. Keith has won more than a wife; he has won for Knox Church a prominent place among the flourishing churches and congregations of the city. The beautiful new church, erected during his regime, has been filled with a correspondingly increased congregation, and a comparatively struggling charge has become, not only a prosperous self-sustaining ecclesiastical entity, but a peer among the prosperous, progressive and progressing church centres of Peterborough. Rev. Mr. Keith has made himself abundantly worthy both as a minister and a citizen, of the universal esteem in which he is held by all classes of citizens, as well as by his ministerial co-workers. Like King Duncan he hath borne his faculties meekly. To meekesty—and almost demureness—of demeanor he has added inveriable courtesy and kindliness; and in all his relations he has attained a rare combination of achievement seldom reached by men in public life—at once faithfully done his duty and faithfully minded his own business, in every application of that term. Rev. Mr. Keith in his seven years' residence and usefulness in the city, has "won golden opinions from all sorts of men," and we all regret to lose, what Edmonton gains—a good man, a good preacher, a good minister, and a good citizen.

UNITED STATES POLITICS.

If the result of the recent elections is prophetic of coming events, and if th progress of Republican advantage continues, that party will stand a fair chance of winning the next presidential election. In that event we may expect to see radical changes from the tariff policy now in operation under Democratic administration, which has not yet had a chance to show complete effects. In the event of the Republicans coming to power, we may expect to see a substantial return to the conditions that obtained under the Payne-Aldrich policy of extreme protection. If that happens we shall find a great curtailment of the lucrative market that Canadian farm products now have in the United States. Still the sane steady and safe administration of President Wilson, his great financial reforms, he has only bgeun to put into practice, his careful and cautious Mexican policy, his steady hand at the national tiller in this time of international complication, may be factors in conducing to a popularity for himself and his policy that may commend him to the confidence of the electors in the presidential election of 1916. He will need all the popularity he may gain, for it is possible that at the next presidential struggle, the Republican party will show a more united front. The rebuff givn the "progressive" wing of the Republican party, led by ex-President Roosevelt, a few days ago, points to the probability that the breach in the ranks of the great Republican party will be pretty well closed by the time another test of party struggle is due.

THE EXPLANATION.

A reader of the New York Herald asks:

"Is it not queer that the peoples of India, Australia, Canada and South Africa, are fighting for Britain and the British."

To this the Herald replies, in substance, that they are not fighting for Britain and the British, but for the British Empire, "in which they feel they have as deep an interest as the British have." And the Herald adds:

Of the significant developments of this great war this is by no means the least. If Canadians, Australians, Africans and Indians regarded themselves as conquered by or mere appendages to England they would not be fighting at all.

British policy towards the outlying elements of the Empire has created a bond, which is not one of force but of affection that has made imperial interests common. The overseas dominions are so intimately adopted into the imperial family; so thoroughly invested with all the privileges, rights and benefits, inherent in the British scheme of constitutional application of the highest principles of Christian civilization, that region or place, latitude or longitude, religion or race, do not affect the oneness of the family relationship. We of the British Empire are one in citizenship, and why should we not be one in the discharge of the highest duties of citizenship—in rallying to repel the assault upon the liberties of mankind, of which the British Empire is at once the example and the champion? Under the circumstances it is not "queer," but the most natural, the most inevitable thing imaginable, that the peoples composing the British Empire should, from centre to circumference, be united in defence as if they were all the denizens of one compact little state. The vaunt of a Roman in the palmy days of the Empire was, "Civis Romanus sum." That was a proud, but a brief, boast; for Roman citizenship founded on force, was a far different thing from the boast a British islander, a Canadian, an Australian, a New Zealander, an East Indian, a South African, a Catholic, a Protestant, a Moslem, a heathen, can make with infinitely more justifiable pride—Civis Britannicus sum—I am a British citizen. Each British citizen stands in civil status; in the matter of right, of privilege, of personal freedom, upon the same high level.

ECONOMIC EPIGRAMS.

Dr. Samuel Johnson defined patriotism as "the last refuge of a scoundrel." The man who gets his income from this country in a time of war, and spends a good share of it in another, is the last kind of scoundrel that could be considered a patriot.

Buying Canadian-made goods is not a fad. It's organized common sense. Only foreigners can afford to ignore a policy that means our National prosperity.

Every dollar spent for the goods your fellow-countrymen make is as important just now as every Canadian bullet sent into the ranks of the enemy.

What do you think of the man who draws his pay in one country and spends it in another? Leave that to the Chinaman and the Italian.

It's as much the duty and to the advantage of every Canadian to buy goods made in Canada as for a Canadian soldier to fight for his own country, instead of going over to the enemy.

After this it will be hard to convince Germans that anybody ever went to Ostend for pleasure.

The Plight Of Belgium Is Worse Than Described

LONDON, Nov. 6.—Conditions in Belgium are far worse than they have been described. This is the statement made here by Mr. Willard K. Shaler, the American who, as a representative of the American Commission for the Relief of Belgium, has made a tour of that country.

"I left Rotterdam," said Mr. Shaler, "on October 28 for Brussels by way of Bergen-op-Zoom and Antwerp, accompanied by Mr. H. A. Johnson, American Consul at Ghent, and the Dutch Consul at Ghent. As we neared the Belgian frontier we saw the pitiful plight of refugees in Holland. Once in Belgium we came across a stream of poor persons pouring back into Antwerp in every conceivable kind of conveyance and on foot. They carried their babies and belongings.

"Between Antwerp and Mechlin the destruction of habitations in every town and hamlet was practically universal. Families were living in partially burned buildings or in improvised structures. The suffering is intense and food supplies practically do not exist.

"The news I brought to the central committee in Brussels that 10,000 tons of cereals purchased by the American commission for the immediate relief of the situation in Belgium, was en route from England to Rotterdam, spread quickly among the people of Brussels and in the neighbouring districts. The announcement was timely, for in many sections the inhabitants were growing restless, foreseeing certain famine. As more than thirty per cent. of the Brussels population now live entirely on soup and bread which is distributed to them daily, and on potatoes, which they receive only once a week, the fear that the bread supply would cease loomed large. On Friday and Saturday last many of the well to do persons in Brussels had no bread. I could not buy any myself at any price, but fortunately the poor got their meagre supply through the soup kitchens.

"The Central Committee in Brussels for the last three weeks have been receiving appeals imploring immediate assistance from many parts of Belgium. They have pumped new courage into the people with the news that food is being brought to them through the American commission.

"On Saturday two delegates from Captain T. F. Lucey, the commission's Rotterdam representative, arrived in Brussels with the information that the first food vessel had arrived in Rotterdam and that supplies had been loaded into small steam craft and lighters and were to leave by canal by way of Antwerp for Brussels on Sunday. If those who are giving so generously in America could have shared the joy of Brussels when it heard this news they would have been more than repaid for the many sacrifices which generosity on such a scale must entail.

"On Monday, as I traced my way back through devastated Belgium, I passed on the frontier of Holland our lighters with the grain that will bring hope and life to these afflicted people. They constantly express their undying gratitude for American help and sympathy. Without America they feel they would be crushed out of existence by famine and war."

Mr. Shaler brought with him a letter written by Field Marshal Baron Kolman von der Goltz, Military Governor of the occupied part of Belgium, to Mr. Brand Whitlock, American Minister to Belgium, regarding the relief work. Baron von der Goltz, in his letter, welcomes the undertakinng of the American committee and gives assurances that the food imported by the committee will be kept exclusively for the use of the Belgian civil population, that it will be exempt from requisition by the military authorities and that it will remain entirely at the disposal of the committee.

TO CRUSH DEMOCRACY.

Strip off all wrappings, take off all disguises, eliminate all the fervid or frenzied appeals to a higher power and militarism or absolution — or whatever else it may be called—has set out to crush democracy.—Brooklyn Eagle.

VOLTAIRE'S MISCALCULATION.

The test of the value of a prophecy lies in its fulfilment. Voltaire predicted that less than a century after his time the Bible would be practically unknown. To-day, it is printed in 600 languages and read throughout the world. Diocletian, the monster, after his long and bloody carnival of martyrdom, imagined he had annihilated the Christian faith, and vain-gloriously issued a medal commemorating the event. To-day there are nearly 500,000,000 of Christians on the globe, while Diocletian is well nigh forgotten. It is well to remember these facts at a time when we hear the would-be prophets of our day fulminating against Christianity. —Christian Herald.

WAR TIME GOVERNMENT ALLOWANCES.

The separation allowance to the families of Canadian soldiers is on the following scale per month:

Rank and file	$20.00
Sergeants and staff sergeants	25.00
Warrant officers	30.00
Lieutenants	30.00
Captains	40.00
Majors	50.00
Colonels and lieut.-colonels	60.00

The allowance is payable to wives of soldiers on the Overseas Contingetn, also to widowed mothers whose sons were their sole support. Payment is made monthly from the Department of Militia and Defence, Ottawa, cheques being issued between the 15th and the close of the month.

A MUCH ABUSED WORD.

No German, it seems, can either write or speak for five minutes on any subject without making a reference to what he calls "German culture." In all those publications issued in Chicago, New York, Milwaukee, and Cincinnati, and which exercise so very litle influence on American public opinion, there is a sickening repetition of the phrase, "German culture." It is lugged in over and over again in every heated article served up in those publications, but none of those writers seem to have any idea of what it is that they are talking about, but they speak of it as some rare and wonderful blessing that they alone have the secret of, and evidently they feel that they ought to confer it on other races even if they have to grind it into them with their boot-heels.

The editor of "The Open Court," which is published in Chicago, is Edward C. Hegeler, who explains in his paper that he was specially educated by his father for the purpose of coming to Western American and "planting the seeds of German culture. Sometimes they speak of it as if it could be carried about as seeds, and sometimes as if it were a soap you could wash with. But they all have it in some form, and nobody on earth but the Germans, possesses it. They have seeded most of the fertile fields of Belgium with it in the past few weeks, and some parts of France. There its seeds have been bullets But they want to carry it all over the world. The whole planet is a disappointment and will be until it is Germanised.

The word "culture" is being so abused that its usefulness will be quite gone very soon. For all that it used to mean some new word will have to be coined.—Toronto Star.

BIG CONVENTION TO STUDY THE ROAD QUESTION

Mayor Carter H. Harrison, of Chicago, has issued invitations to the mayors of over two thousand cities throughout the United States and Canada to send delegates to the Fifth American Good Roads Congress, which is also the Eleventh Annual Convention of the American Road Builders' Association, and the Sixth Annual Good Roads Show, which will be held at the International Amphitheatre, Chicago, December 14-18. Mayor Harrison suggests in his invitation that city engineers and street superintendents, or similar officials, be named among the delegates.

Scretary E. L. Powers, of the American Road Builders' Association, is in receipt of a number of acceptances from those assigned by the Programme Committee to prepare the papers which will be used as texts for the discussions of the different subjects at the sessions of the convention. In each case the committee aimed to select persons who are intimately in contact with the best and most recent practic on the subjects involved.

Copies of the papers so prepared will be furnishd to the persons selected to lead and participate in the discussions. Each of thse will prepare an address on the subject, with a view to bringing out all the facts and views and developments. After the paper and addresses have been presented at the convention, the discussion will be open to all.

Among the acceptances so far recived for the preparation of the paper, the following may be mentioned:

L. A. Johnston, Division Engineer, Massachusetts Highway Commission, on the subject of Road Foundations.

John N. Carlisle, Commissioner of Highways of New York, on the Organization of a State Highway Department.

Professor T. R. Agg, of the Highway Engineering Department of the Iowa State College, on the various uses and care of machinery in Road Construction and Maintenance.

A. W. Dean, Chief Engineer, Massachusetts Highway Commission, on Road Traffic.

Jahn Laylin, Division Engineer of Ohio, on Brick Roads and Strets.

H. J. Kuelling, County Commissioner of Milwaukee, Wis., on Concrete Roads.

William D. Uhler, Assistant Engineer of Highways of Philadelphia, on Bituminous Construction and Maintenance.

Thomas H. MacDonald, State Highway Engineer of Iowa, on Street Paving in small cities.

Clifford Older, Bridge Engineer of Illinois, on Surfaces or Floors for Bridges.

Other acceptances of assignments to prepare papers and lead in discussions will be announced from time to time.

HARDY BEAT GIBSON IN HARD MATCH

Toronto Man Got the First Fall But Yorkshire Lad Came Back With Next Two—Fourth Successive Victory for Hardy in Peterborough.

Alf. Hardy, the English wrestler, won his fourth match in a row in Peterborough on Saturday night, when he defeated Andy Gibson, of Toronto. The latter got the first fall in fourteen minutes, but Hardy came back with two falls in twelve and nine minutes, respectively. It was the last appearance of Hardy before a Peterborough crowd for some time, as the little Yorkshireman sails for home on Thursday, unless he can arrange a match with Eugene Tremblay, of Montreal, the Canadian lightweight champion.

Saturday night's match was very late in starting, and for a while it looked as if there would be no match betwen Hardy and Gibson. The Toronto man missed the local C.P.R. train, and when 9 o'clock came, and no sign of Gibson, the announcement was made that Jack Forbes and Hardy would go on instead, Hardy to endeavour to throw Forbes twice in an hour. The two were ready to start when Gibson arrived, getting a big hand from the crowd. He had come down on the Grand Trunk, reaching here at 9 o'clock and rushed direct to the rink.

The match was faster than the other meeting between the two. Gibson rushed things from the start and had Hardy in several tight places within a few minutes of the start. The English lad wiggled out successfully, however, although he lost a little more worried than usual. Finally, however Gibson secured a toe-hold and hammerlock on Hdy, and although the latter budged for a minute, he finally lost the fall.

The going was harder than ever when the men took the mat again. Hardy, aroused by the first decision against him, was more aggressive and he had the better of the argument, although Gibson was always dangerous. Hardy evened the count in twelve minutes when he secured a fall with a face-hold and scissors.

Nine minutes after it was all over. Hardy gettin a step-over toe-hold on Gibson. The latter could not endure the pain, and had to accede the fall.

In a preliminary bout Joe Dwyer and Geo. Crowe gave an interesting exhibition, each getting a fall.

HAVE GOT SIX DEER

Six deer have been shot to date by the Peterborough party of hunters consisting of Messrs. R. A. Elliott, C. S. McCrea, R. J. Sodec, H. B. Taylor, Barnard, R. McCamus, G. Mitchell, T. Mitchell, M. Cook and C. Chevrier. The party, which left here about a week ago, are located in the Parry Sound district. Partridge are said to be very scarce. Deer tracks are plentiful and the railway line around Parry Sound is lined with camps, from any as one hundred hunters get off at one station. A Richmond party shot a large bear on Friday and another party of six have sold their coats. The weather has been showery with some thunder, but generally fair.

UNITED STATES PRESS ON THE LATEST WAR ENTRY

"Turkey Takes Existence."

Albany Knickerbocker Press—"By attacking Russia and entering the war Turkey has staked its existence as a European power. The Allies will exact the full retribution if they are able to do."

Hard to Understand.

Philadelphia Press — "That Germany should want the assistance of Turkey on the flanks of both England and Russia is easy enough to understand. But what Turkey has to gain by her complaisance is very difficult to understand."

"One Compensation."

Ohio State Journal—"If only Turkey is driven out of Europe and the Black Sea connected with the Mediterranean, there would be at least one good compensation for this sad war."

"Interesting Possibility."

Washington Post—"One of the interesting possibilities of Turkey's outbreak is the wrenching of Palestine from the Turk and the restoration of the Holy Sepulchre to Christian hands."

"The Settlement."

Savannah News—"If the Allies are victorious in the war it is certain that they will not deal gently with Turkey in the final settlement."

"Germany Must Win."

Boston Post—"Whatever happens, Germany must win or Turkey disappears from the map of Europe. That will furnish an additional reason for hope that Germany will not win."

"If a Losing Cause."

Pittsburg Post—"In one aspect the entrance of Turkey into the struggle may be welcomed. If she has favoured a losing cause, at last her expulsion from Europe may be realized."

Treasury of Turkey Empty.

LONDON, Nov. 9. — According to private information received here from Constantinople, says The Morning Post's Berne correspondent, "the Turkish treasury is empty and an economic crisis threatens the country. The Turkish customs receipts for August were only $40,000, against $350,000 last year during the same period. The Government employees have received no salaries for several months. The money advanced by Germany already has been exhausted."

RUGBY

On Saturday the P.C.I. second played the Lakefield High school at Lakefield. In spite of the superior weight of the Lakefield team, the P.C.I. came out victors by a score of 19 to 9. The tackling of Simpson of the P.C.I. was the feature. O'Brien did some good punting. F. Jobbitt refereed satisfactorily. The line-up for the victors was as follows:

Scrimmage—Harstone, Byers, Webster.
Insides—Cameron, Austin.
Middles—Cunningham, Lyle.
Outsides—Milburn, McIntyre.
Quarter—Frost (captain.)
Halves—Stone, O'Brien, Soward.
Flying wing—Simpson.

COLD STEEL STEMMED RUSH

German Attempt in Vain to Break Allies' Line at Ypres

END IN DISASTER

LONDON, Nov. 9.—A despatch to The Times from Dunkirk, France, filed Saturday night, says:

After a desperate attack, lasting the whole week, the German attempt to break the allied line at Ypres has failed.

It may be admitted that the position at Ypres two days ago was serious. The town itself was bombarded by the Germans with extraordinary violence and under the fierce cannonading the allies had to withdraw from the town which became a "no-man's land," across which the shells from both sides burst.

"The Germans made a superhuman and fatal effort under cover of a fierce bombardment of the allied positions. They had prepared a desperate onslaught. Masses of men were launched in succession at chosen points on our front. The assault was met in a supreme way. Two regiments, and Scottish and one of the Guards, went down with bayonets to stem the advance. It was the most terrible bayonet charge of the whole war. It succeeded, the break in the line was repaired and the German attack was once more driven back.

"That was their last effort. To-day the Germans are dropping an occasional desultory spell into Ypres, but their attacks have ceased. They are now assailing the allied lines at Arras, forty miles further to the south, but not with the same fury as they exhibited in the onslaught of the past week.

"So fierce has been the fighting around Ypres that the casualties of the Germans are believed to have reached the enormous figure of 100,000, though these figures may prove to have been exaggerated."

Notwithstanding that fresh onslaughts have been made by the Germans against the allied forces all along the other great line of battle, the Kaiser's forces either have been repulsed, or else held back well in hand. The Germans evidently have been unable to discover the desired weak spot in the line of the allies.

The notably stout and effective resistance on the part of the British army at Ypres seems to have prevented the German forces from launching their new attack against the Franco-British troops southeast of Ypres, as at first planned and attempted.

The left wing of the German army was yesterday the new objective point of the French, the campaign starting in aggressively between Rheims and the frontier of Lorraine. After desperate encounters, the French succeeded in capturing important strategic positions along the River Meuse and to the north of Nancy. The losses on both sides are reported as extremely heavy. Reinforcements have been sent to the French and British armies, which are holding the line of battle between Ypres, Belgium, and Roye, France, in the expectation that the German troops soon will advance the new army of 350,000 men now being organized in Belgium for a final onslaught in the attempt to reach the French sea coast.

At only one point on the two battlefronts do the Germans claim success. That is to the west of the Argonne region, there the German Emperor's forces have succeeded in taking from the French an important height near Vienne-le-Chateau region. Elsewhere the French troops have made progress and retaken the positions which they had lost during the course of the week. This is notably so in the Aisne valley around Soissons, where they have regained the ground which the Germans by fierce assaults had taken from them.

The Belgians, who are holding the line reaching to the coast, have also made progress, and it would thus seem that the Germans are still waiting for additional reinforcements before renewing their attempt to smash through to the French seaport.

The fighting yesterday was carried on in a fog, which interfered with the work of the airmen, and likewise with the artillery.

While the reports of the allies' offensive in the west have given hope in London that the Germans will fall back to a line further removed from the sea, all uneasiness has not passed, for they have previously shown wonderful recuperative powers. The presence of the Russians in East Prussia and Silesia, however, although the latter are only cavalry, it is believed here, will prevent the Germans from sending any more troops to the west if it does not compel them to withdraw some of their troops from that region.

Engineers from the Krupp gun works are mounting heavy guns at the Belgian seaport of Ostend and facing them seawards, according to a despatch from Rotterdam to the Exchange Telegraph Co.

The Telegraaf's correspondent at San Vangeant states that the Germans are persistently reported as retreating toward Antwerp, and that the troops stationed at Saluste have been transferred by transport to the left bank of the Terneuzenghent Canal.

The Telegraaf's correspondent quotes a German officer as declaring: "We must go back, but nevertheless we shall conquer."

Extensive investigation of smoke prevention by the United States Geological Survey has led to the conclusion that it is mechanically possible and that the best results have been attained by the use of mechanical stokers.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Nov. 7.—Predictions that domestic receipts of wheat next week would show a decided falling off, helped today to give quotations a lift. As a result the market closed steady at 1-4c to 5-8c above last night. Corn wound up with a net gain of 1-8c to 1-4c, and oats of ¼c to 5-8c. In provisions; the outcome varied from unchanged figures to 37½c.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Nov. 6.—The wheat market opened ⅛c to ⅜c higher, oats ⅛c to ¼c up and flax made a sharp advance of 2⅛c to 94½c. One prominent firm in the export trade stated that all that they had on sale for export were sold, and no offers were accepted, which indicates the demand is still unsatisfied. Trading in futures was fair, and despite fairly heavy selling operations prices were strong generally. November takes the lead in strength, being 1⅞c higher. The advance which occurred at the close was due to fronts in the Argentine, wheat closing 1⅛c to 2⅜c higher, oats ⅜c to ½c, and flax 2⅛c to 2½c higher.

The cash situation was visibly improved today, offerings of all grades were good and trading active in all lines. Exporters and millers were bidding fairly heavily for cash wheat.

The total number of cars inspected Friday were 378, as against 1,207 last year, and in eight were 380.

Deliveries thru the elevating houses were: Wheat, 15,000 bushels; oats, 6500 bushels, and flax, 7000 bushels.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Nov. 7.—The demand from foreign buyers for Manitoba spring wheat today was good, but with the limited quantity of ocean grain room available from here and other ports the volume of business was steady, and sales of a few loads were made. The spot demand for coarse grains continues rather quiet owing to the fact that buyers seem to be fairly well supplied for the present, but the tone of the market is firm. Demand for flour for both export and local account was quiet. Trade in millfeed is more active and the undertone to the market is firmer. Butter unchanged. Receipts for the week 4878 packages, as compared with 5140 for the same week last year. Cheese steady. Receipts 51,700 boxes, as against 34,963 for the same week a year ago. Eggs 1c per dozen higher. Receipts for the week 1218 cases, against 8179 for the same week last year.

Stocks: Wheat, 4,448,814; corn, 24,222; oats, 1,120,262; barley, 98,290; flax, 82,498; flour, 86,078 sacks.

MINNEAPOLIS GRAIN MARKET.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 7.—Wheat—No. 1 hard, 94.18½; No. 1 northern, $1.17½ to $1.17½; No. 2 do., $1.11½ to $1.15½; December, $1.14½.

Corn—No. 3 yellow, 69c to 70c.

Oats—No. 3 white, 46c to 46½c.

Flour—Fancy patents, $5.20; first clears, $4.75; second clears, $3.60.

DULUTH GRAIN MARKET.

DULUTH, Nov. 7.—Wheat—No. 1 hard, $1.19½; No. 1 northern, $1.18½; No. 2 do., $1.14½; December, $1.16½ to $1.18½.

CHEESE MARKETS.

VICTORIAVILLE, Que., Nov. 7.—On the cheese board here today, 1000 boxes were sold at 14c.

COWANSVILLE, Nov. 8.—On the dairy board here Saturday eight factories offered 291 packages of butter. All were sold at 30½c.

SOLDIER BOYS SEE LONDON

Many of Canadian Contingent Pay Visit to British Capital

LONDON, Nov. 9.—One of the unusual signs of the town just now is the large number of Canadian troops who have been brought to the city from their camp on Salisbury Plains, and shown the big city from the vantage point of taxicabs. The men seem to be plentifully supplied with money and have enjoyed their vacation hugely. New batches have been brought in every second day and London has more than welcomed the brothers from across the water.

There is a prospect of a big parade through the streets of London when Britons will get a chance to size up their stalwart compatriots. Everybody is demanding this honor for the men and the Canadian colony is especially anxious to see it accomplished.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

It is officially announced in Vienna that there were 256 cases of cholera in Galicia last Thursday. Of these, 126 cases were in Przemysl.

The nine-year-old son of Joseph Perkins, was accidentally shot by his brother, aged seven, at their father's home yesterday morning, and died shortly afterwards.

The body of Minghella Michiele, an Italian, was found lying in a ditch alongside the G. T. R. tracks near Kingston Saturday afternoon. He was struck by a fast west-bound train.

An agitation is proceeding in Britain strongly backed by trades union bodies for the payment of a pound weekly to disabled soldiers, sailors, and widows of those killed in action.

Augustin Rodriguez, member of the Huerta commission sent to Niagara Falls mediation conference last May, was arrested Saturday in Mexico City. The charge against him is not known.

The Petrograd Bourse Gazette's Warsaw correspondent says that 21 persons have died in hospitals there during the last few days from wounds received from German bombs dropped from aeroplanes.

F. C. Dulmage, manager of London branch of the United Typewriter Co., and one of the best known breeders of white Plymouth Rock chickens, in Canada, died yesterday after a long illness. He was 44 years of age.

Word has been received at Kingston to recruit a portion of the heavy battery. The guns to be used will be the 4.7 inch type. The section to be organized here will consist of lieutenant and 39 men, besides shoemakers and saddlers.

To Tie Up Belgium Railways.

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 9.—(Via London.)—According to the newspaper Vaterland, all the employes of the Belgian railways plan to go on strike, thereby adding to the difficulties of the Germans.

Comment On German Defeat

German Paper Says Fall of Tsingtau Will Be Avenged

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 9.—(Via London.)—The Berlin Lokal Anzeiger, commenting on the German defeat at Tsingtau, says:

"Germans will never forget the heroic fighting at Kiaochau and those who defended the colony. Never shall we forget the brutal violence of the yellow robbers nor England who instigated them. We know that we cannot settle our account with Japan at present; for years she will enjoy her booty. Our mills will grind slowly, but even if years should pass before the right moment comes at last, then a shout of joy will respond through Germany, 'Woe to you, Nippon!'"

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

SCRAPS OF WAR NEWS

FAMILY LOSS HEAVY.

COPENHAGEN—The house of Saxe-Meiningen has suffered more than any other German princely family. Prince Frederick was killed at Namur, and the princess, who is now seriously prostrated, has lost also her father-in-law, her cousin, her grandnephew, and her 19-year-old son Ernest, who fell at Maubeuge.

"A PETROL WAR."

LONDON—"This war is a petrol war," writes a young officer of the staff of Gen. Sir John French, to his wife. "Everything is done by machinery, and victory will come to the side that has the most petrol. An army crawls on its stomach and the upkeep of the stomach depends on the petrol supply. Most of our transport is composed of motor-lorries, and many a familiar firm name is now seen on the roads of France. Our old friends Carter, Paterson (London's biggest delivery concern) is particularly in evidence, their vans having been commandeered by the score. There are plenty of brewers' vans, too, no longer carrying beer, but biscuits and beef." The success of the British flying corps he attributes largely to the fact that an adequate supply of the first quality is kept constantly at the front. "Our aeroplanes," he says, "have rendered ordinary scouting quite obsolete."

PARIS—A fox terrier belonging to a French reservist followed its owner to the fighting line and remained with him until he fell wounded. The faithful animal then managed to attract the attention of the ambulance men and led them to his master.

VIENNA—Mourning for those in action has been forbidden by a special imperial decree.

HELSINGFORS, Finland — The famous Russian writer, Maxim Gorky, has enlisted as a private in the Russian Army Medical Corps.

LONDON—British journalism has contributed 600 men to Lord Kitchener's army. Most of them were already members of the Territorials.

LONDON—Half of the Germans we saw while fighting at Cambrai had no boots, and to obtain them they robbed the dead and wounded, writes Private Bloomfield in a letter home.

COPENHAGEN — According to the Kolnische Geitung, the Riveria has been converted into a howling wilderness by anti-war riots, and that Nice, Monte Carlo, Cannes, and Mentone are little better than a heap of ruins.

PARIS—The war office has found it necessary to issue a special notice warning the people not to play with German shells picked up on the battlefield. Several souvenir collectors have been badly hurt by exploding shells.

LONDON—Trooper George Pritchard, writing from Netley Hospital to his mother, says: "I got hit in the arm from a shell. What do you think of the charges of the 9th? It is well worth getting hit for. Seven of our officers got killed last Thursday, but Captain Grenfell got saved at the same time as me. H is going on fine."

"HUMAN VEGETABLES."

PETROGRAD—A German colonist, driving toward Warsaw, was stopped by a Cossack patrol. Asked what were the contents of the car, he replied, "vegetables." The Cossack pierced a sack with his sword, producing a resounding cry. "That kind of vegetables?" said the Cossack, hastily examining the contents of the sacks. In the upper ones two Germans were found, one wounded by the sword, then a few sacks of cucumbers, and underneath German proclamations calling on the inhabitants to revolt against Russia. The spies were handed over for court-martial and the proclamations burned.

ROUGH MARCHING.

LONDON—In a letter to "all the boys at home," an Irish guard says: "I can tell you w are having a rough time as regards marching. I shall soon be marching on the stumps of my legs, with sore heels and blisters. We do about 15 miles a day, with Germans annoying us at night, so we cannot get any rest. I go to sleep on the march. I want to ask one favour of some of the 'bhoys,' and that is to put in one-half penn'weight each and send us a little bit of tobacco now and again, as we have had no pay yet and not likely to get any. I'm sure some of them will not mind doing a good turn. Tobacco is very scarce; if one is seen with a 'fag' about 20 ask for the end."

COSSACKS THOUGHT CANNIBALS.

PETROGRAD — A wounded Cossack relates that when searching a hayloft at Insterburg he found a man and his wife and child, who threw themselves at his feet. When brought before an officer speaking German the latter burst out laughing. It appeared that reports has been circulated amongst the people that Cossacks were cannibals, and that three Germans in the hayloft had been begging the Cossack not to roast and eat them.

Honoured By Choir

Mr. Fred Cole Receives Wrist Watch on Eve of His Departure With Second Contingent

An interesting event took place at the close of the evening service of the George Street Methodist church last evening, when Mr. Fred Cole, of the Dominion Bank, and for several years a member of the choir, was made the recipient of a wrist watch as a slight token of the esteem in which he is held by the choir-members.

Mr. Cole is going to the front with the second contingent. An address was read by Miss Maisie Armstrong, and the presentation was made by Miss Lillian Garbutt. Mr. Cole replied, expressing his appreciation of the kindness of the choir and the pleasant associations which he had had with all the members.

Rev. R. G. Peever, the pastor, spoke briefly of Mr. Cole's service to the choir, and his sacrifice in volunteering for the front, after, which he offered prayer. The choir concluded by singing a verse of "God Be With You Till We Meet Again."

Mr. Cole leaves behind him a warm circle of friends who will miss him very much. His associations with the choir have been of the most pleasant character and his cheerful services in that connection have been greatly appreciated. His friends all wish him God speed and a safe return.

DID GERMANS SPREAD DISEASE AMONG CATTLE

Suspicion That They Want to Cut Off Supply of Meat From the States.

MOOSE JAW, Sask., Nov. 7. — That the foot and mouth disease, which has spread with such rapidity through the States which are largely the packing house centres, is a measure of reprisal by Germany in the United States is the suggestion of a well-known local man who points out that it is a well-known fact that the large packing houses of the United States have been given an enormous export trade in beef for the British and French armies. He also bases his contention on the fact that the disease has apparently broken out in widely separated quarters of the Union, and believes that it is part of a plot by Germans in the States to destroy the source of fresh meat supply which is absolutely necessary to an army in the field.

He instances that there is a large German element in all districts where packing houses are located, and this would indicate a well-organized plan.

A motor driven cutting tool has been invented for trimming the edges of wall paper borders.

REMARKABLE ESCAPES FREQUENT IN BATTLE

There is a story told of an old veteran, of the First Napoleon, who lived until 1895, in the French village of Savary, and who owned a wooden leg, a wooden arm, a glass eye, a silver palate, a complete set of false teeth, and a silver plate on the top of his head, and yet died peacefully in bed. Compared with such men the proverbial nine-lived cat is nowhere. But as one reads the stories of great wars of the past, the manner in which famous generals have played touch and go with death is little short of miraculous.

The wonderful escape of Napoleon and Wellington were proverbial. Although bullets grazed them and riddled their clothes, and both had their horses shot under them, yet both passed through a life of battle and danger with two or three slight wounds each. But their grim old companion-in-arms, General Blucher, did not fare as well. Wounded several times while serving under Frederick the Great, he retired from the army when that irascible monarch swore at him.

In response, however, to the patriotic call he took up arms against Napoleon, and was seriously wounded at Lutzen. At Ligny, too, he was thrown down and ridden over by the French and Prussian cavalry, but by drinking quantities of his favourite gin and water the old war dog was able to lead his troops on the following day and to materially assist in the winning of the battle at Waterloo.

Marshal Ney, the bravest of the brave, was continuously fighting for 20 years, yet he escaped with only a few slight wounds to meet a traitor's doom at the hands of the Bourbon King. He headed countless charges, had dozens of horses shot from under him, eagerly courted death when leading the Old Guard at Waterloo, and yet was never seriously wounded.

Few cases are more remarkable, however, than that of General Skenzynechi, who got 30 bullets through his cloak during the battle of Ostrolenka, in the Polish insurrection of 1831, or Sir D. Lacy Evans, whose ear was perforated by a bullet in the Carlist war of 1837. Garibaldi, too, had a number of narrow shaves, but none closer than when he was resting one day at Vakurno. While drinking from a pail of water a splinter from a ricochet shell grazed his thigh and killed some people standing near.

The number of people who have escaped death through having a Bible, a coin, love letter, or some other article in their pockets is legion. During the South African war one man owed his life to the fact that the Queen's chocolate box, which he carried in the breast of his tunic, stopped a well-aimed bullet. In another case a man found a bullet embedded in a small book he carried in his pocket, and a third owed his escape to certain silver coins which deflected the mischievous missile.

Lord Wolsey came with an ace of death while serving as a captain before Sebastopol. He was assisting to replace a number of gabions under a severe fire, when a big shot struck the gabion he was holding, drove a large stone through his cheek and jaw to his neck, smashed his right wrist and severely injured him. But Lord Roberts was even more fortunate. As he stood on the tower at Lucknow signalling for the British army to advance, thousands of shots were fired at him and the flag was shot from his hand. Calmly stooping down he raised up a regimental colour and continued to wave that. His escape on that occasion was little short of a miracle.—Tid-Bits.

SLOW TRIPS FOR ENGLISH SHIPS

LONDON, Nov. 6.—Transatlantic steamships will take nearer ten days than a week henceforth to cross the ocean, owing to the fact that the shipping companies, working in co-operation with the Admiralty, will take every precaution against mines. Where mines are suspected it is likely that scout ships will be sent out in advance over the course the passenger ship is to take.

The winter trips of the Olympic, of the White Star Line have been cancelled, and to-day her crew was paid off.

News From The 21st Battalion

Medical Examination is Completed and Men Have Received Their Outfits

KINGSTON, Nov. 9.—Orders were received here to recruit, 1 lieutenant, 1 collar-maker, a farmer, trumpeter, shoe-smith and thirty-nine others for a new heavy battery being formed in this division for overseas service. As the heavy battery of this district is being situated at Cobourg the men will be recruited there.

The medical examination of the recruits of the 21st Battalion is about finished and Saturday afternoon the services of two Justices of the Peace were engaged to complete the work of attestation. A large number of men appeared at drill in their new uniforms and presented a very smart appearance.

The recruiting for the new battery has progressed very rapidly and over 100 men have enlisted already.

The innoculation of the members of the 21st Battalion against typhoid fever will be started, Tuesday.

There will be no Ambulance Corps formed in this division for service with the next contingent. The corps will be made up of men from the other districts.

Lieut.-Col. Hughes has a most efficient staff of officers. Seven or eight speak French and English and several can converse fluently in German, as well. It is doubtful if any detachment service has a more thoroughly trained staff of officers than has the 21st Battalion.

Sixty-three men, formerly of the R.C.H.A., have withdrawn from the 21st Battalion to join the new battery being organized for overseas service.

Bishop Bidwell addressed the soldiers at the services in the Armouries yesterday afternoon.

Lieut. H. O'Hara will be paymaster of the 21st Battalion. The parade of Friday showed the strength of Lieut.-Col. Hughes' detachment to be 993 men.

The class in signal instruction was commenced in the Armouries Friday.

The kitchens in the Artillery Park dormitories are models of cleanliness and efficiency. In addition to the cooking stoves, gas ranges have been installed to facilitate the task of preparing the large number of meals each day.

PACIFIC CABLE REOPENS WITH A TALE OF PILLAGE

VANCOUVER, Nov. 6.—The Pacific cable, which conects Canada with Australia, was opened to-day. It was put out of business on September 7, when the German cruiser Nurnberg steamed up to Fanning Island, flying a French flag, and accompanied by a collier.

So sure were the cable men that the ships were friendly that they launched a boat to greet the newcomers. They had hardly started when two cutters loaded with German marines and sailors in tow of a launch, came for the beach at full speed. The Germans jumped over into waist deep water and with bayonets fixed charged ashore and seized the cable headquarters. The Nurnberg's guns covered the landing party.

The Germans then lined up the cable operators. Several parties were directed to locate the shore end of the cable and this was blown to pieces by dynamite. Other men blew up the engine room, the boiler room, the refrigerating room and the dynamo room. All the instruments were smashed with sledge hammers. The papers were taken from the office and transferred to the Nurnberg. These revealed the fact that spare instruments and arms and ammunition were buried in various parts of the island, and that there was $3,000 in the office safe.

An officer went ashore, ordered the safe to be blown open and then took the money. The arms, ammunition, and instruments were found and destroyed.

It is a matter of several days since an individual contribution has been turned in to the patriotic fund. This morning, the third consecutive day, City Treasurer Adams reported that no additional contributions had been received.

NON-JURY SITTINGS OF HIGH COURT

The non-jury sittings of the High Court will be held to-morrow and Wednesday, in the Court House. Only one case, that of the Bank of Ottawa vs. R. R. Hall will be heard, and while the Court will open to-morrow the hearing of the case will not commence until Wednesday. Judge Kelley, of Toronto, will preside at the Deported Labor Men Return.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—Durban, Natal, correspondent of the Reuter Telegram Co. says that the labor leaders who were deported to England after the Rand riots last January have returned in conformity with an amnesty decree, recently issued.

Dr. H. J. Poutsma, one of the deported, stated in behalf of his companions that all had come back unconditionally, but had promised not to embarrass the Government during the war. Their landing was accomplished by any demonstration.

LOCAL YOUTH PAYS FOR WEEK END JUBILEE

Several Minor Cases Before Magistrate Dunbabin This Morning

In the Police Court, this morning, William Lavery, a local young man, was fined for being drunk and disorderly in a local hotel, on Saturday afternoon. Lavery, during a row in which he was involved, broke a window which cost him an extra $1.50, making the total bill for the spree, $7.25 plus the price of the drinks.

Joseph Fallen and Everett Castle were charged with being disorderly on George Street Saturday night. Both pleaded not guilty and they were remanded till to-morrow, as Mr. O'Connell, who is defending them, had to appear in connection with another case in Division Court.

William McMaster of Norwood was arrested yesterday for being drunk, but was allowed out on his promise to appear this morning. He did not appear, but was fined $2 and costs, totalling $5.45.

James Robertson, who had also been allowed out on parole, failed to show any signs of being present. His case will come up to-morrow.

SONGSTER BRIGADE WAS IN CHARGE

Meetings Saturday and Sunday at the S. A. Temple

The meetings Saturday and Sunday at the barracks were in charge of the songster brigade. Big crowds were in attendance, each gatherings being addressed by members of the brigade. To-night a great musical festival will be held under the auspices of the songsters. Selections played by foreign bands at the Congress will be rendered by the brigade. It is expected that Bandmaster F. W. Beer, wife and family, late of London, England, will arrive from Calgary on the local and will be present at the meeting to-night. Bandmaster Beer was for many years cornet soloist in the International Staff Band, and has held other prominent positions with leading bands.

CHAIN LETTER INVITING PEACE

Chain letters for peace are being sent broadcast at the present time, the following one having been received by a Peterborough lady:

"O, Lord, bless all mankind, and let there be peace. I implore Thee, and bring us all to dwell with Thee."

This prayer is being sent around the world, and it is said that all who write it will be free from misfortune. It is to be copied within nine days, and sent to nine people.

TROOPS ARE FIGHTING WITH MAGNIFICENT HEROISM

Their Vitally Important Mission is to Hold the German Hordes Between Ypres and La Bassee—Carnage Around the British Trenches is Frightful.

PARIS, Nov. 9.—The war correspondent of Le Temps says:

"The British troops are fighting with magnificent heroism. Their vitally important mission is to hold the German hordes between Ypres and La Bassee. They have been in the trenches for several weeks, facing an enemy of overwhelmingly superior numbers, who attacks with savage fury.

"The carnage around the British trenches is frightful. Night and day the thin British line steadily faces the desperate German rushes, piling the German dead upon their breastworks.

"After one night attack a single British battalion accounted for 700 Germans, whose bodies were strewn a few yards from their trenches.

"The British losses also were terrible. I saw one Guards' battalion [illegible] officer. Some of the cavalry regiments have lost 50 per cent. of their effectives during the last week's fighting. One regiment of Lancers sat calmly upon their horses near Messines beneath a withering shrapnel fire. The order to advance was not given until the stationary regiment was decimated. Then the remainder charged into Messines afoot, completely clearing the village.

"Three days ago a British battery surprised a German brigade in close formation and within a few minutes massacred 4,000 of them.

"Despite their frightful losses, it is not true that the German army is demoralized. The youths being brought into Belgium to reinforce the Germans fire badly, but go to their death bravely, and so long as the Kaiser is able to send such young soldiers against us the German attacks will continue violent."

RUSSIANS IN GERMANY

Cavalry Has Reached Plaschen and Has Damaged Railway

PETROGRAD, Nov. 9. — The following official communication was issued from general headquarters yesterday:

"On the East Prussian front our troops have dislodged the Germans from the region of Wirballen, which was strongly fortified, and have progressed as far as Stallupoenen, 16 miles east-northeast of Gumbinnen. In the region of Rominten forest and Lyck our troops continue to press on the heels of the rear guards of the enemy.

"On the left bank of the Vistula our cavalry has penetrated German territory, damaging the railway near Plaschen station, to the northeast of Kalisz.

"On the roads to Cracow on Nov. 6 we attacked the Austrian rear guards along the Nida river and the next day were operating on the River Nidzica.

"In Galicia our troops are continuing their offensive movement. In the latest engagements on the San river we captured 135 officers and 12,000 soldiers, as well as rapid firers and munitions of war. South of Przemysl, on Nov. 6 we took more than 1,000 prisoners."

The following official communication has been received from the Russian general staff in Caucasia:

"Our troops on Nov. 6, after a fierce battle, seized the Turkish position at Koprukeui, in Turkish Armenia, 30 miles east of Erzerum, a naturally strong position and well fortified. The position covers the route to Erzerum.

"Our troops continue to pursue the defeated enemy."

Late advices from the front state that the Russians are assaulting the German forces at Sierads, on the Warthe river, southeast of Kalisz and about 15 miles from the German border. This is the only fortified position in Russian Poland still in the hands of the Kaiser's armies.

Between Oct. 25 and Nov. 4, the Russians captured on their centre 274 officers, 18,500 troops, 3 howitzers, 40 guns, 28 rapid-firers and a vast quantity of ammunition and stores.

The roads in Russia are hardening with frost and armies can now be moved more quickly, although the Russians do not possess the strategic railways that the Germans do. Silesia, too, with better going for the horses, offers an excellent field for the use of cavalry, in which Russia has proved herself to be superior, both in numbers and efficiency, to the enemy. The Cossacks are regaining the reputation which they lost in Manchuria, and the raid they have already made in Silesia, it is expected, will be repeated many times.

Retreat Cut Off.

ROME, Nov. 9.—(Via London.)—The Tribuna's Petrograd correspondent telegraphs that the Russians have completely separated the German and Austrian armies, and the Austrian retreat on Cracow has been cut off. The forces of the dual monarchy are making for the Carpathians, short of food and ammunition.

The Vienna correspondent of The Giornale d'Italia says that Vienna newspapers admit a grave defeat on the San. One hundred thousand wounded have been brought back from the front in the last ten days.

WAS ELECTED PRESIDENT

Of Lindsay Horticultural Society

LINDSAY, Nov. 9.—One of the most successful meetings in the history of the Lindsay Horticultural Society was held in the Agricultural Department. There was a splendid attendance of representative citizens, and considerable interest was manifested in the proceedings. The future outlook for the society is exceedingly bright.

Mr. E. C. Armstrong was elected as president.

Rev. H. J. Keith's Farewell Message

Large Congregations Attend Morning and Evening Services—A Tribute of Respect

EVENING SERVICE

With characteristic dignity and simplicity of manner Rev. H. J. Keith, on Sunday evening delivered his farewell message to a large and appreciative congregation. The large gathering of adherents and others that filled Knox Presbyterian Church to its capacity was a striking tribute of respect to the ministerial head who, for the past seven and a half years, has guided the spiritual destinies of the Church over which he has presided. Having accepted a call to Westminster Church, Edmonton, Rev. Mr. Keith will leave on Tuesday for his new field of labour in response to a natural ambition.

In a few brief moments of speech the retiring pastor touched upon the past and the present, the alliance that had been created between Pastor and congregation, and the happy associations that he would have to sacrifice. His text was based on Paul's exhortation to the Corinthians in which the Apostle admonishes his hearers to

Be perfected, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live at peace, and the God of power shall be with you. 2 Cor. 13: 11.

Life's Relationships.

The constant desire of the emotions to express themselves on such occasions as these, said Mr. Keith, shows how much the heart rules in all of life's relationships.

When one considers the difficulties and strained relationships that existed between Paul and the Corinthian people and then finds these closing words expressing a bond of fellowship, surely under the conditions in which we meet to-day with no painful memory of the past, we can use these words with even deeper feeling. The ideals they present are not too high for me to hold them up to you on this occasion as I bid you farewell. The first apostolic exhortation is to be perfected. That may seem an impossibility, but it would not be given if we could not aim at it. Some hear it and then say we are so far from being perfect what is the use of trying and others, fortunately few, are so satisfied with their present state that they think there is nothing more to gain. One man had said it would take 100 years at present rate to attain perfection, but Mr. Keith thought the rate should be increased so that living friends might get the benefit.

A Complete Surrender.

There is no possibility of attaining perfection unless one makes a complete surrender of his life into the hands of Him who alone can make it possible. And having begun one must continue to cooperate with Him in the changing process.

"He will teach me how to live,
All my sinful thoughts forgive,
Pure in heart I still would be,
Let my Saviour dwell in me."

And one day we shall stand before Him, by His grace, perfected. The second apostolic exhortation was, be comforted.

Bring Comfort.

There is comfort from a divine source and how necessary that source is, the minister realizes in his endeavours to bring comofrt to the hearts of his people. The late Ian McLaren had said that if he were starting his ministry again he would strive to speak more comfortingly to his people. Mr. Keith stated that for seven and a half years he had been with his people in all kinds of experiences and he felt one with them. If he had any success in ministering to their sorrows he attributed it largely to inherited power which his own mother had possessed to a wonderful degree, to such an extent that all kinds of people sought her in trouble. God had found that power in Him and had used it in the ministry to the suffering and sorrowing. From Mr. Keith's own experience he was able to point people in sorrow to the divine source. Christ had given that that the presence and power of the comforter might be more clearly realized.

"Come ye disconsolate, wherever ye languish,
Come to the mercy seat, fervently kneel.
Here bring your wounded hearts, here tell your anguish,
Earth has no sorrow that heaven cannot heal.
Again, be of one mind.

A Common Cause.

During all their years together they had worked in harmony, united in a common cause which was not the special work of a few, but of all. He urged them to continue, ever aiming at the mind of the Master who forgot himself in the desire for the many, and had sacrificed all for their sakes. They should yield to others in all non-essentials and stand shoulder to shoulder in the struggle against the world, the flesh and the devil.

Last of all they were to live in peace. Mr. Keith made a plea for the peace of God in every man's heart, the peace that results from a life forgiven. There was another peace that should exist between themselves and their fellows. He referred to the happy relationship between Knox, St. Andrew's and St. Paul's, that united them in the common cause, Presbyterianism and the broader churches and the city in the common cause of righteousness.

The Assurance of Paul.

The larger peace of the world would also come and Jesus would be enthroned. Mr. Keith closed his message with the assurance of Paul, 'the God of Love and Peace will be with you. That was his prayer for them, and how great and necessary experience that God, the God, love and peace should be with them. He reminded them of the farewell of Samuel, when he said to the people, "God forbid that I should sin against the Lord by ceasing to pray for you." That expressed his own thought as he took leave of them. He was convinced they would continue to grow as in the past, under new leadership. "The old order changeth, giving place to new, and God fulfills Himself in many ways, lest one good custom should corrupt the world.

The Workers Change.

So the workers change, but God continues as the glory is His. The blessings of God in the past were the assurances of His presence in the future. God would continue with Himself and with them until He brought all face to face, where partings and separations were at an end. The shadows would have then disappeared and thus those who had pressed on would reflect His own glory as they stood before Him perfected. Mr. Keith closed his message with the benediction.

"Now the God of peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do His will, working in you that which is well pleasing in His sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory for ever and ever.

Col. F. W. Kerr Is Killed

Commander of the Gordon Highlanders Killed in France

LONDON, Nov. 9.—A British casualty list dated Nov. 7 and issued here Saturday night, gives the names of 15 officers killed and 60 wounded.

Among the killed are Col. Frederick Walter Kerr, of the Gordon Highlanders, third son of the late Admiral Lord Frederick H. Kerr, and Sir Gilchrist Nevil Ogilvy, of the Scots Guards, who married a daughter of the Earl of Elgin.

In the wounded list occur the names of Lieut. Lord John Wodehouse, well-known as an international polo player; Capt. Sir Victor Audley Falconer Mackenzie, of the Scots' Guards, son-in-law of Viscount Knollys, private secretary to King George; Lieut. the Hon. H. R. H. Macdonald, of the Scots' Guards, son of Baron Macdonald; Lieut. the Hon. D. E. F. Howard, of the Third Hussars.

Plenty of Mounted Men

Crack Riders in West Stampeding To Enlist

OTTAWA, Nov. — Orders will go out to-day for the recruiting of the four new regiments of mounted infantry which the Government has decided to mobilize so as to be prepared for any eventuality. The Ontario regiment will be drawn from the various cavalry squadrons throughout the Province, but will likely be mobilized at the Exhibition grounds at Toronto. The Mississauga Horse and Governor-General's Body Guard of Toronto have between them enough men anxious to enlist for active service to make up the whole regiment. However, other cavalry squadrons will be asked to furnish a certain quota.

A Stampede to Enlist.

As for Western Canada there will be a regular stampede to enlist. It will not be a question of securing the men, but it will be a problem of selection.

The Pincher Creek cowboys, the Medicine Hat ranchers and the Regina frontiersmen who are eager to get to the front but have insisted on saving the Empire on horseback, will now have their opportunity.

The West is full of expert riders and crack shots and the three Western regiments, which will be raise, should be the equal of any mounted infantry in the world. Good mounts will be more difficult to secure than good men and this may hold up speedy mobilization.

No End of Mounted Men.

More than half the Militia of the West are mounted men, so that it can be easily seen there are plenty of horsemen and they all want to go. The Manitoba military division has seven squadrons alone and there are as many more in both Alberta and British Columbia.

One Manitoba mounted regiment, the 39th Fort Garry Horse of Winnipeg, were so eager to enlist that they went with the first contingent as infantry. They can be easily transferred to cavalry as they are all riders. The British Columbia regiment is already enlisted. Col. "Jim" MacDonnell of Vancouver, has been recruiting his regiment of Rough Riders for some time. They will form the British Columbia quota and will likely be mobilized in Vancouver. The Alberta contingent will be mobilized in Calgary, and the Manitoba and Saskatchewan corps in Winnipeg.

These May Go to Egypt.

The four new regiments, like the second contingent, will be recruited by the divisional headquarters, and will be equipped at the local mobilization centres. Just when the regiment will go to the front will depend entirely upon the British War Office. So far the war office has not even asked for these men and the Government is merely preparing for any emergency. The statement issued officially last night showed that at present there is little use for cavalry. The fight is a ding-dong trench affair. However when hostilities are transferred to German soil cavalry in abundance will be required, while the Canadian authorities are inclined to think that the Western mounted infantry may be needed in Egypt to meet the hordes of Bedouin horsemen if they espouse the side of Turkey.

Expects Peace Before Easter

PARIS, Nov. 9.—The work of destruction in Arras continues. The cathedral has been badly damaged and many civilians have been killed in their houses.

Two French aviators after an aerial battle brought down two Taubes while their comrades watched, during the recent bombardment. The shells fell at the rate of 32 per minute.

The breaking of the morale of the German troops is evidenced by a new song they now are reported to be singing instead of "Deutschland Ueber Alles." The verses of the new song are to the fleet. "Glory, Glory, we are going back home to our own firesides, where there is no more war." An eminent economist here says it is certain that peace will be signed in Berlin by Easter.

A Victim of Science

Prof. Mines, of McGill, is Killed While Experimenting on Heart

MONTREAL, Nov. 9—G. E. Mines, professor of physiology at McGill University, met death mysteriously and tragically Saturday evening in his laboratory at McGill University. Just what caused his death is not known, but Principal Peterson believes Prof Mines, in the course of experiments, upon himself in his chosen branch of physiology, dealing chiefly with the phenomena of the heart action and respiration, probably lost his life through the apparatus which was attached to his body getting out of order in some unknown manner.

Prof. Mines had been in the laboratory all afternoon, working on his experiments, and his prostrate body was discovered by the janitor shortly after six o'clock. The broken mechanism was still attached over the professor's heart. He left a widow and two children.

Dr. D. D. McTaggart has issued a certificate of accidental death.

Prof. Mines was 29 years of age. He was a Cambridge University professor, and came to Montreal from Toronto University, where he was a colleague of Prof. Birdie.

HEAD OF SIEGEL STORES ON TRIAL

GENESEE, N.Y., Nov. 9. —Henry Siegel, one time merchant prince and head of the Siegel system of great departmental stores, went on trial here to-day before Justice Clark on a charge of grand larceny. Siegel, with a former partner, Frank E. Vogel, was indicted on 14 counts following the collapse of his stores, representing a loss of approximately two and a quarter million dollars. Vogel died suddenly a few weeks ago, and Siegel is said to have collapsed yesterday.

A LINDSAY MAN'S WILD HALLUCINATION

Man Said He Shot and Killed Another—Had Been Indulging Rather Freely

POLICE INVESTIGATED

LINDSAY, Nov. 7.—There were more than razors flying in the air last night, according to the reports around the police office this morning. Last night's escapade was a thriller to the blue coats, for when they started out on their tour of investigation they did not really know what danger they were about to face.

It was nine o'clock when Night Constable Woods on his usual beat, was informed by a woman, who appeared fearful and excited, that something of a terrible nature had happened to her son, and asked the officer to accompany her to her home on John Street.

Constable Wood communicated the information received to Chief Short, who was in the business office looking over the records of the day's doings. He as once enlisted in the service of his subordinate officer, and proceeded to the scene of the trouble.

On ariving at the informant's house the lady of the house was found lying on the bed prostrate, in deep mental anguish, and her son, who was the cause of such depression was nearby.

Chief Short enquired the cause of the excitement, and the young man replied that he had shot and killed a man at the boathouse on the river bank, near Parkins' mill.

This caused another icy shiver to run up the officers' spines, and they asked the man to lead the way to the scene of the awful tragedy. It was pursued across rough lots and darkened streets, without a sound from anyone of the trio, until the boathouse was reached.

"Here," said the self-convicted assassin, "is where I stood and over at the corner of the boathouse was the man whom I fired two shots into from a rifle."

Chief Short and Constable Woods went over to pick up the supposed victim but no dead or wounded man was found, nothing but the boat house was injured, and it had two large holes torn in the corner as a result of the shots.

It apears that the fellow had been indulging rather freely during the day, and it was all a wild hallucination.

Chief Short has placed a charge against the fellow for discharging firearms in the corporation limits. The gun with which he did the shooting is in the possession of the Chief, awaiting an owner.

Kaiser Holds War Council

LONDON, Nov. 9.—A Reuter despatch received to-night from Rome says:

"German advices received here say that Emperor William, much affected by the Russian victories, has held a council of war, which was attended by General von Hindenburg, the Duke of Wurtemburg and the Austrian chief of staff, Field Marshal Baron Conrad von Hoetzendorf, to decide on a further plan of campaign."

GERMAN PRISONERS WELL FED.

LONDON—"German prisoners in this country," writes a British soldier's wife, "are living on the fat of the land, and I am hardly able to keep body and soul together and feed and clothe my little children while their father is at the front. Is it quite fair? I have given my all. I receive in return a pittance."

OBITUARY

MRS. WALTER PATERSON.

Sunday afternoon a telegram was received by relatives in the city announcing the death of Mrs. Euphemia Paterson, widow of the late Walter Paterson. The deceased passed away at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. R. B. Williamson, of Milwaukee, in the presence of her two daughters and near relatives.

The late Mrs. Paterson, after the death of her husband, had made her home with her son-in-law, Mr. R. B. Williamson, first in Cincinnati, and afterwards in Milwaukee, where she enjoyed the companionship of her two remaining daughters, Mrs. William I. Lane, and Mrs. Robert B. Williamson, respectively. Here she livd a quiet and happy life, sharing her leisure moments in acts of beneficence and church work.

Mrs. Paterson was a devoted member of the Presbyterian Church. Her friends in St. Paul's Church here will remember her as one who was always identified in the various schemes of the church. Her home was a hospitable one, and no needy seeker ever called at her door in vain.

Besides her two daughters, she is survived by her son, James Paterson, of Toronto, and four brothers and two sisters: Robert Menzies, of Detroit; James Menzies, of Montreal, and Donald and William Menzies, and Catherine and Jane Menzies of this city. She was in the 72nd year of her age.

The remains will arrive in Peterborough for interment in the Little Lake cemetery on Tuesday, and the funeral will take place from the residence of W. Menzies, 291 Rubidge street, at 3 o'clock p.m.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

Will Meet On Thursday

Grand Trunk Railway Officials Will Wait Upon the City

The Grand Trunk railway officials have arranged to meet representatives of the City and Canadian General Electric Company on Thursday for the purpose of discussing the question of a lease in which all three parties are interested. The Canadian General Electric Company is anxious to secure the lease of a piece of unused railway line belonging to the Grand Trunk Railway Company. The City was first appealed to for a right of way on the Monaghan road, but the Council conceived the possibility of securing the lease of a mile of track from the Grand Trunk railway. The track is a part of the old Chemong line. The track will be used for testing electric locomotives manufactured by the Canadian General Electric Company.

LIFT LOCK HAS BEEN CLOSED

To Navigation For Year 1914.

This week will mark the closing of the Hydraulic Lift Lock for the year 1914. To all intents and purposes the Lock has been closed to navigation for several days, but it remains for the men engaged on the work to make everything snug and tight for the winter. Among the last boats that passed through was the 'Handy Boy' and the "Bessie Butler." The Captain of the former states that the water is very low and that the boat scraped the bottom at various points along the route. The tug "Beaver" has arrived with a cargo of wood. Upon her arrival here some of the wood was discovered to be afire. The blaze was easily extinguished.

Ministers Not Superstitious

Thirteen Sat Down to Dinner—Banquet to Retiring Pastors

To-day at noon an informal banquet was tendered Rev. H. J. Keith, retiring pastor of Knox Presbyterian church and Rev. F. A. Connors of Park Street Baptist church, by the Ministerial Association. Rev. Mr. Keith leaves for Edmonton to-morrow, where he has accepted the pastorate of Westminster church, and Rev. Mr. Connors expects to relinquish his duties in connection with Park Street Baptist church in a month. Thirteen ministers attended the banquet, which was held in Coleman's palm parlours. Rev. Canon Davidson was unavoidably absent. Rev. Jas Rollins, president of the Association, presided. General regret was expressed at the departure of two members who have won for themselves the respect and esteem of the community in which they moved.

OFFICIALLY APPOINTED

HOLDING EVERYWHERE.

French War Office Says Allies Have Take Offensive In North.

PARIS, Nov. 9.—The following official communication was issued by the French War Office last night:

"To the north the enemy appears to have concentrated his activity in the region of Ypres, without result. On the remainder of the line we are holding our ground everywhere.

"On the River Aisne we have reached to the northeast of Soissons, the Plateau of Vregny, on which we had not previously gained a foothold.

"Elsewhere there is nothing to report."

Yesterday afternoon's French War Office report says:

"Yesterday, between the North Sea and the Lys the fighting was less violent. Some attacks, not general, of the enemy, were repulsed in the direction of Dixmude and to the northeast of Ypres. On almost all of this front we, in turn, took the offensive and advanced, notably in the region to the north of Ploemines.

"In the neighborhood of Armentieres the British troops progressed slightly. Between La Bassee and Arras the attacks of the enemy were repulsed.

"From Arras to Soissons nothing worthy of note took place.

"Around Soissons our forces made a marked advance. In the region of Vailly, and equally on the right bank of the Aisne, we strengthened our progress to the North of Chavonne and Soupir. A German attack on Carnoelle and Heurtebise was repulsed.

"In the neighborhood of Verdun to the northwest and to the southeast of that place, we are establishing the supporting positions recently gained.

"A dense fog prevailed all day in the north, as well as in Champagne and Lorrain, hampering the action of the artillery and the aviation corps."

FLEET IS ACTIVE.

British Ships Bombard Important Points on Turkish Coast.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—The correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Co. at Athens says:

"Two British destroyers bombarded the telegraph stations at Sarmoussak and Ayasmat. The Turks sank a Greek steamer that was flying the British flag at Aivali.

"The Greek inhabitants of Smyrna are fleeing panic-stricken. A British destroyer went to Aivali to embark the British consul, but the Turks refused to permit this.

"It is stated that Forts Sedie Bahr and Kum Kaleh, in the Dardanelles, have been completely destroyed by the bombardment. The Turks, under the direction of German officers, are hastily fortifying Aivali."

Aivali is midway between Smyrna and the Dardanelles.

Bombarded Concealed Troops.

ATHENS, Nov. 9. — A British squadron cruising along the litteral of Asia Minor bombarded concealed Turkish troops on the east.

A telegraph station near Smyrna was destroyed.

A British battleship has gone to Aivali to seek the British consul, in consequence of the attitude of Turkish authorities toward British subjects.

Turks have mined the waters outside of Fort of Skiro, with a view to isolating the forts.

THE CASE OF MESSRS. BAUMER AND KNIPPER

"Lex" Writes Interesting Letter on the Subject

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I read the letter written by Messrs. Baumer and Knipper, which appeared in Saturday's issue, with very great interest. If what is stated in the letter can be proved to be correct, they have made out a very strong case for sympathetic action on the part of the people of Peterborough.

With regard to the action of Sir John Boyd in refusing to grant naturalization certificates to Germans and Australians in Haileybury, Messrs. Baumer and Knipper must remember that it is one thing to treat aliens with whose fatherland we are at war, with consideration and even, respect, so long as their conduct warrants it; but quite another to admit to all the privileges and liberties of British citizenship those whose only purpose in becoming naturalised would be treasonable. It is so well known that the German system of espionage is the most comprehensive that the world has ever known, that British people at a time like this have every right to view with suspicion the person of every one German born in the country, except such as have been naturalised sufficiently long to dispel any doubt as to their hostility. In the case of those applying now for naturalisation papers it would be folly to grant them unless it could be proved conclusively that because of their terms of residence here, together with their loyal attitude, it would be an injustice to refuse the applications. No doubt there are cases where British justice would approve the application for citizenship. And in the case of Messrs Baumer and Knipper, they must expect suspicion. They admit that they have served in the German army, and for that reason must be reservists. Surely they themselves, must see that, prima facie, they are enemies, and should be treated as such. If they were British and in Germany they would most assuredly be in a compound and treated simply as prisoners of war. For the simple purpose of self preservation it is necessary to put all Germans applying now for liberty of action in this country to the strictest proof of their loyalty to the Allies. On the face of the letter which appeared Saturday it would undoubtedly appear that Messrs. Baumer and Knipper are, to say the least, not loyal to Germany, whatever else may be said of them.

The question is asked in the letter whether Messrs. Baumer and Knipper are Germans or French, because of the fact that they were born in Alsace and their sires fought for the French in the Franco-Prussian war. Presuming that they were born since the war, there is no doubt that British law looks upon them as Germans. In Foote's International Law, 3rd ed., p. 20, it says: "Nationality, according to the English Common Law, was decided absolutely, once and for all, by the place of birth. Those who were born within the allegiance of the British Crown, and those only, were regarded throughout their lives as British subjects." It is true that the Common Law has been considerably modified, but the principle of our law is to judge nationality by place of birth. And even if Messrs. Baumer and Knipper were born before 1840 the law here would regard them as Germans. On the same page of the work referred to, it says: "On the cessation or abandonment of territory by conquest or otherwise the nationality is generally provided for by treaty, but in the absence of treaty, provisions will probably depend upon the voluntary transfer or retention of their domicile." Even though Messrs. Beaumaire and and Niepres fought against the Germans there is no doubt that by remaining in Alsace after the war they became Germans themselves, according to the rules of international war and certainly would be regarded as such by British law.

However, if what Messrs. Baumer and Knipper state is true, they call for special consideration, and since they cannot be French should be allowed to become British, if they can really qualify. Alsatians, who have remained loyal to France, demand the fullest sympathy from people who love freedom, as we do. In modern history there is nothing more pathetic than the severance of Alsace and Lorraine, not only from their beloved France, but from the ideals of democratic government, which they cherished. I suggest that the case of Messrs. Baumer and Knipper should be taken up by the Police Commission and if what they state can be conclusively proved, a strong recommendation should be made to have them admitted to the privileges of Canadian citizenship.

Yours truly,
LEX.

TWO PETERBOROUGH BOYS LEAVE FOR ARTILLERY WORK

Mr. Fred Reed of the production department of the C.G.E. works and Mr. Fred Cole teller of the Dominion Bank leave on Wednesday for Kingston to enlist in the Canadian Field Artillery for overseas service. Mr. Reed was one time a member of the Examiner staff. He was a Belmont Club man and as a Peterborough boy is widely known here. The employees of the Production Dept. presented him with a purse, and the Knight Templars remembered him with a wrist watch.

Mr. Cole was secretary of the Belmont Club, and sang in the George Street ethodist choir, who presented him with a wrist watch.

Both young men are good fellows and enjoy a wide popularity. The best wishes of their friends follow them.

Sergt. Robert Biggs, caretaker of the artillery quarters has also been selected, and four others will be chosen.

Big Earthquake at Messina.

MESSINA, Nov. 9.—(Via Rome.)—A strong earthquake shock, which was felt in this vicinity on Saturday, has caused considerable alarm among the populace, especially as following so closely the fresh activity of Mount Vesuvius. Fears are entertained that the new shock is but the forerunner of another period of earthquakes. According to the registrations at the observatory, the centre of the earthquake was about 77 miles distant from Messina.

Suicide of Soldier.

KINGSTON, Ont., Nov. 9.—While despondent, John Donnaghue, of Ottawa, a volunteer for overseas service, jumped into the St. Lawrence river Saturday afternoon and was drowned. He enlisted with the Governor-General's Foot Guards and arrived in the city on Tuesday last. The body was recovered shortly afterwards. He has a brother serving with the United States army.

Saxony's Crown Prince Wounded.

LONDON, Nov. 9. — Owing to a serious wound in the leg, received in action on the battlefield in France, Crown Prince George of Saxony has arrived at the royal castle at Dresden and will take no further part in the campaign, says a despatch from The Hague to the Exchange Telegraph Co.

DIED.

PATERSON.—In Milwaukee, Wis., on Sunday, November 8th, 1914, Mrs. Euphemia Paterson, widow of the late Walter Paterson, formerly of Peterborough, in the 72nd year of her age.

The funeral will take place from the residence of W. Menzies, 291 Rubidge Street, on Tuesday afternoon, November 10th, to the Little Lake Cemetery for interment.

KITCHENER SURE ALLIES WILL WIN

Million and Quarter Men in Training in Addition to Forces From Overseas Dominions--Losses Are Severe But Recruits Are Joining Rapidly.

WAR MINISTER CONFIDENT OF OUTCOME

LONDON, Nov. 9—Confidence in the ultimate success of the allied arms was expressed by Earl Kitchener at the Guildhall banquet tonight. He pointed out the great issue at stake, the advantages possessed by the allies in men and material, and in "that wonderful spirit which has never understood the meaning of defeat."

Lord Kitchener praised the territorials, particularly the London Scottish and the East Indians; spoke of the admiration of the British troops for "the glorious French army," and said: "Under the direction of General Joffre, who is not only a great military leader, but a great man, we may confidently rely on the ultimate success of the allied forces in the western theatre of the war."

He praised the brilliant leadership of Grand Duke Nicholas, and also "the splendid deeds of the gallant Belgian army," and the gallantry of the Japanese forces. Continuing, Lord Kitchener said:

Fighting for Existence.

"The British Empire is now fighting for its existence. I want every citizen to understand this cardinal fact, for only a clear conception of the vast importance of the issue at stake can come the great national moral impulse without which the Government's War Ministers, or even their navies, can do but little. We have enormous advantages in our resources of men and material, and in that wonderful spirit of ours which has ever understood the meaning of defeat. All these are great assets but they must be used judiciously and effectively.

"I have no complaint to make whatever about the response to my appeals for men. The progress in the military training of those who already have enlisted is most remarkable and the country may well be proud of them, but I shall want more men, and still more, until the enemy is crushed.

Discomforts Diminish.

"Armies cannot be called together as with the magician's wand, and in the process of formation there may have been discomforts, and inconveniences in some cases—even downright suffering. I cannot promise that these conditions will wholly cease, but I can give you every assurance that they have already greatly diminished and everything that administrative energy can do to bring them to an end assuredly will be done.

"The man who have come forward must remember that they are enduring for their country's sake, just as their comrades are in the shell-torn trenches.

"The introduction of elaborate destructive machinery with which our enemies had so amply and carefully supplied themselves has been the subject of much eulogy on the part of military critics, but it must be remembered that in the matter of preparation those who fix beforehand the date of a war have a considerable advantage over their neighbours.

A New Warfare.

"So far as we are concerned we are clearly open to no similar suspicion. This development of armaments has modified the application of old principles of strategy and tactics, and reduced the present warfare to something approaching siege operations.

"Our losses in the trenches have been severe, but such casualities are far from deterring the British nation from seeing the matter through. They will act rather as an incentive to British manhood to prepare themselves to take the places of those who have fallen."

In paying a tribute to the leadership of Sir John French, commander of the British expeditionary force, and his generals, and to the high efficiency and courage of the army, the War Minister said:

1,225,000 in Training.

"I think that it has now been conceded that the British army has proved itself to be not so contemptible an engine of war as some were disposed to consider it." He concluded: "Although our thoughts are constantly directed towards the trops at the front and the great tasks they have in hand, it is well to remember that the enemy will have to reckon with the forces of the great dominions, the vanguard of which we already have welcomed in this country in the very fine body of men forming the contingents from Canada and Newfoundland, while from Australia, New Zealand and other parts are coming in quick succession soldiers to fight for the Imperial cause. And besides all these there are trains in this country over 1,250,000 men eagerly waiting for a call to bear their part in the great struggle.

"As each soldier takes his place in the field he will stand forward to do his duty and, in doing that duty, will maintain the credit of the British army, which, I submit, has never stood higher than it does to-day."

ALLIES HAVE HELD FIRMLY ALONG LINE

600,000 Germans Estimated Number in Yesterday's Attacks—Lost Every Battle After 48 Hours' Fighting

WITHDRAWAL AT HAND

PARIS, Nov. 9.—The hardest fighting of yesterday and to-day was in the extreme north of France, and just over the border in Belgium, where the Germans continued without any success their effort to shatter the wedge which the allies are steadily pushing north-eastward.

Between Dixmuede in Belgium and the region of Armentieres in France German columns of an estimated strength of 600,000 attempted three main operations—to cross the Yser Canal at Dixmuede, to drive the allies from the fortified heights and woods south and east of Ypres, and to batter through the French and British line holding the River Lys and advancing from Armentieres toward Lille.

Enemy Repulsed.

The official reports of these battles state that the German attacks were repulsed by nightfall yesterday, and that the allies maintained their ground between the Lys and Langemarck, and made an important advance between Langemarck and Dixmuede. The communiques assert that the allies have made slow progress all along this line as the net result of 48 hours of fighting.

Further to the south, along the west flank to the River Oise, a heavy fog interfered with military activities, and it appears that the conflict in this region has been much less violent than for several days. East of the Oise and northeast of Soissons, along the Aisne, the allies are reported by the Government to have continued their slow progress, and are strengthening positions wrested from the Germans in the past week.

On the rest of the battle line through Rheims and the Argonne to Lorraine there were no important movements by either side. In Alsace the Germans launched an attack yesterday against the pass of Sainte Marie, but were repulsed. The official news indicates that the French line between Verdun and Belfort is effectively protecting the barrier fortresses and is maintaining a foothold in Alsace.

The outstanding feature of the unofficial reports is that the Germans are beginning to send army corps from Belgium to the Russian frontier, and that there are fresh indications that the withdrawal of the Germans from Southern Belgium and Northern France is very near at hand. Such rumours have been current often before, but the unquestionable victory of Russia and her invasion of Germany gives these reports a new importance.

Two Weeks to End It.

News has been received from official circles in Berlin that Germany reckons with certainty that the end of the struggle on the French side of the European battlefield will be definitely solved in November. The order of the Kaiser that the enemy's line must be broken at whatever sacrifice still remains unchanged.

Withdrawing Forces.

The significance of the obviously important movements of troops in Belgium in the past few days is not explained by the allied commanders. The correspondents in the rear differ as to the situation, though the majority seem to favour the view that the Germans are withdrawing important forces to stem the Russian advance.

There is, however, nothing to suggest that the Germans contemplate a general retreat to the west. Nevertheless, the tendency here is hopeful. The military experts emphasize the importance of Russian progress, saying that the Cossacks are at last at the gateway of Silesia and that German resources are being strained to the breaking point to continue the pretense of seeking in the west for a decision no longer within reasonable hope.

Near Panic in Berlin.

An Amsterdam correspondent wires: "A Berlin despatch says that almost a panic exists over the advance of the Russians, and troops are being rushed to Poland from Belgium. The movement of German troops from the western theatre of the war on a big scale is now progressing. A large number appear to have been withdrawn from the Ypres. Long military trains, filled with men and munitions, are moving into Germany by way of Brussels and Louvain."

FIRST CANADIANS LEAVE FOR FRANCE

No. 2 Stationary Hospital and Fifty Nursing Sisters Left Yesterday--Ottawa Officers in Command--One Hundred and Fifty Men in the Party.

RECEIVE FIRST HONOURS OF CONTINGENT

SALISBURY, Nov. 9.—The honour of being the first Canadian unit to leave for the front has fallen to No. 2 Stationary Hospital and fifty Canadian nursing sisters. They left to-day for France, Lieutenant-Colonel A. T. Shillington, Ottawa, in command. The staff includes nine officers and one hundred and fifty men.

Seven thousand of the Canadian expeditionary force on Salisbury Plains, including the Fourth Infantry Brigade, moved into huts to-day.

The officers of the No. 2 Stationary Hospital who have gone to the front include, in addition to Lieutenant-Colonel A. T. Shillington, the following: Majors S. H. McKee, C. J. Williams, Captains N. E. Munroe, S. H. Morris, Myrand, F. E. Currie. Supernumeraries: Captain J. W. C. Johnson, Dental Surgeon S. L. Neilly.

Dr. the Hon. H. S. Beland, who has served with the Belgian army since the outbreak of the war, applied some time ago to be attached to No. 2 Hospital whenever it was sent to the continent. All the officers named are Ottawa men.

The nursing sisters of the Canadian expeditionary force number about one hundred, and are in charge of Nursing Matrons M. C. MacDonald and H. Ridley.

GERMANS RETIRE FROM STRONG TRENCHES IN PATH OF RUSSIAN ADVANCE

Examiner Special:

PETROGRAD, Nov. 10.—That all the Russian territory is now cleared of the Germans, and that a large slice of East Prussia is in the hands of the Russians, is the claim of the Russian War Office to-day, as additional reports arrive telling of the mighty sweep of the forces of the Czar as they press onward into East Prussia, Posen and Galicia. With heavy snows having already fallen in the north, the Russian transport divisions are equipped with sledges.

THE CAVALRY IS REPORTED TO HAVE PIERCED THE LEFT GERMAN FLANK AT KONIN. THE LINE OF ENTRENCHMENTS, ERECTED BY THE GERMANS FROM CZERSTOCHOWA TO CRACOW AND KALIZ ARE DECLARED TO HAVE BEEN ABANDONED. These trenches are partially constructed of concrete and it was expected that along this line, the forces of the Kaiser would make a decided stand.

Goldap, one of the first points to be taken in the first Russian invasion, is again in the hands of Russians. The advance guard, rushing through Posen province, is declared to be approaching Thorn. The great estates of the Kaiser and the German nobility will again probably serve as battle grounds for the advancing Russians, and the retreating Germans contesting their march upon their native soil.

FRENCH CRUISER WINS IN STRANGE STRUGGLE

PARIS, Nov. 9.—A thrilling story of how a French cruiser engaged with an aeroplane and several submarines simultaneously is told by a midshipman, who says the French cruiser Waldeck Rousseau was heading for Cattaro in the small hours of the morning, when she was warned that three submarines had stolen out to get her.

Day had scarcely broken when an Austrian biplane came sailing through the air, straight towards the cruiser, hovering at not more than fifteen hundred feet above the ship. Unmoved apparently by a hail of shot from the quick-firers, the biplane let fall a bomb, which splashed into the sea about thirty feet only to the starboard abaft the bridge. A second bomb just missed the port quarter. At the same moment the lookout signalled that a submarine was only eight hundred yards to starboard. The submarine discharged a torpedo almost as soon as she was sighted, but the ship had time to shift her helm, and the deadly shaft went swirling by not more than three feet from the stern. Before it could make a second shot the cruiser had blown away its periscope and another broadside must have sunk the submarine, for she was never seen again.

Another submarine came sneaking up on the other side, and a destroyer endeavoured to draw the cruiser's fire while the submarine crept in to deal a deadly blow. The Waldeck Rousseau was easily a match for the two of them, however, and shortly after the destroyer turned and ran for the harbour with a nasty list to port, while the submarine dived to escape the storm of shell, and did not show itself again.

CANADIAN SOLDIERS FETED IN LONDON

LONDON, Nov. 9—Rarely has London's population turned out in such vast numbers to witness a Lord Mayor's show as to-day when Sir Charles Johnston assumed the ancient office. Interest in the affair was immensely increased by reason of the show partaking largely of a military display, in which the Canadians played a most conspicuous part. Three hundred men of nearly every branch now at Salisbury Plains were in line.

They were in command of Colonel Williams and Colonel Reid. A detachment of the Strathcona Horse and Princess Patricia Regiment was also included.

The men, who came from each brigade, received a vociferous welcome. At the last moment they were, by special request of the Lord Mayor, placed immediately around the state coach in recognition of his Lordship's lifelong connection with the Dominion. King Edward's Horse, in which many Canadians are serving, also played a prominent part in the procession, in which the Honourable Artillery Company and City of London battalions were conspicuous. Representatives of Australian and New Zealand corps were also in line.

A battalion of the London Scottish, who recently distinguished themselves in France, swung along to the skirl of the pipes, the crowd hailing them with great enthusiasm. But none of the military created more interest than did the veterans of the naval battalions who survived the fall of Antwerp.

Yellow flaming arc lamps have been found to give the best light in fog-drifts as their rays penetrate dust, smoke and gases.

Turks Defeated In the Caucasus

LONDON, Nov. 9.—Britain is not deeply concerned over the official statement from Constantinople that the Turks, "with the help of Allah," have crossed the Egyptian frontier. It is not believed here that the invasion can be of any great consequence.

A despatch from Petrograd says: Army headquarters in the Caucasus, under date of November 7, sends the following official communication from Tiflis regarding the Russian operations:

"Two Turkish divisions, with forty-eight pieces of field and several pieces of heavy artillery, and with a numberless band of Kurdish cavalry, moved in the direction of the hills of Hassan Kalah, twenty miles east of Erserum, towards the position at Koprukeis, which we occupied Friday night.

"They pursued a vigorous offensive turning movement, striving to surround the right wing of the Russians. Our artillery opened a murderous fire, and the Turks, though they attacked again and again, were finally compelled to take to flight. First their left wing retired and then the whole front followed. They are seeking refuge in the obscurity of the broken and uneven country to the west of the scene of their attack."

For the convenience of men there has been invented a chair, the back of which is formed to hold a coat and vest while a shoe polishing outfit is contained in the seat.

CANADIAN CATTLE AFFECTED BY U. S. QUARANTINE LAW

TORONTO, Nov. 9.—A despatch from Washington this morning announcing that shipments of live stock from Canada to the United States are for a time barred in consequence of the quarantine regulations and a somewhat discouraging effect upon traders this morning at the Union Stock Yards.

A number of United States buyers made a tour of Ontario last week in search of fat cattle for export to United States centres, and large quantities of cattle were purchased, some of which have not been shipped and will now come under the quarantine regulations.

Buy Stockers and Feeders.

"I was out with an American on Saturday," declared a member of the firm of MacDonald and Halligan, live stock dealers, "and when he got an inkling of what Washington would do he immediately quit buying in the main. United States purchases of Canadian cattle generally consist at this market of stocking and feeding cattle, but the American demand for cattle became pronounced when the quarantine across the border was declared, and undoubtedly prices would have been higher for such stock had the prohibition against the importation of Canadian stock not been passed.

Demand for Fat Cattle.

Another live stock dealer said that while the purchases for the United States at the markets consisted largely of cattle of a rather light variety, buying of heavy cattle in Western Ontario was not uncommon at all times of the year.

"It seems to me," he said, "that the effect of this prohibition will be that the Americans will have their Canadian purchased cattle killed and dressed in this country and sent across the border in this way. This should mean a better demand for butcher cattle and probably higher prices will prevail."

The receipts announced by the Union Stock Yards this morning, were large.

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Cas. Allan England

The unconscious form of Beatrice fever-burned and panting on the bed, seemed calling aloud to him: "Aim true, Allan! Aim true!"

For one false shot inevitably sealed the child's death. To wound H'yemba and not kill him meant the catastrophe. If the bullet failed to enter brain or heart H'yemba — though mortally hurt—would of a surety, with his last quiver of strength, sling the boy outward over the dizzying parapet.

Allan prayed; yet his prayer was wordless, formless and unconscious.

He dared not glance down at the automatic. His eyes must hold the smith's. And he must speak, must parley, at all hazards must still gain another moment's respite.

What Allan said in those last terrible, eternal seconds he could never afterward recall.

He only knew he was treating with the enemy, making terms, listening, answering—all with mechanical subconsciousness.

His real personality, his true ego, was absolutely absorbed in the one vital, all-deciding problem of that stiffening pistol-hand.

Suddenly something seemed to cry in his ear:

"You have it now! Fire!"

His hand leaped back with the crashing discharge, loud-echoing in the cave.

H'yemba did not even yell. But at the second when he seemed to crumple all together, falling as an empty sack falls, some involuntary jerk of his finger sent a bullet zooning into the cave.

It shattered beyond Allan in a little shower of steel and lead fragments, mingld with crock-dust.

Before these had even fallen Allan was upon him.

Neglecting for an instant the bruised and screaming child, who lay there struggling on the terrace-path, Allan seized the still-twitching body of the monstrous traitor.

With passionate strength he dragged it to the parapet.

Below, down the path, he caught a swift glimpse of grouped Folk, wondering, staring, aghast.

To them he gave no heed.

He lifted the body, dripping bright blood.

Silent, indomitable, dishevelled, he raised it on high.

Then, with a cry: "See, ye people, how I answer traitors!" he whirled it outward into the void.

Over and over it gyrated through vacant space. Then, with an echoing splash, the river took it, and the swift current, white-foaming, boisterous, wild, rolled it and tumbled it away, away forever, into the unknown.

With harsh cries and a wild spatter of bullets aimed high above them, Allan drove the cowed and beaten partizans of H'yemba jostling, fleeing, howling for mercy, down the terrace-path between the cliff and parapet.

Only then, when he knew victory was secure and his own dominance once more sealed on them, did he run swiftly back to his boy.

CHAPTER XXVI.

THE COMING OF THE HORDE.

Now that, for an hour or two at least, he felt himself free and master of the situation, Allan devoted himself with energy to the immediate situation in Cliff Villa.

Though still weak and dazed, old Gesafam had now recovered strength and wit enough to soothe and care for the child.

Allan heard from her, in a few disjointed words, all she knew of the kidnapping. H'yemba, she said, had suddenly appeared to her, from the remote end of the cave, and had tried to snatch the child.

She had fought, but one blow of his ax had stunned her. Beyond this, she remembered nothing.

Allan sought and quickly the aperture made by the smith through the limestone.

"Evidently he'd been planning this coup for a long time," thought he. "The great catastrophe of the landslide broke the last bonds of order and restraint, and give him his opportunity. Well, it's his last villainy! I'll have this passageway cemented up. That's all the monument he'll ever get. It's more than he deserves!"

He returned to Beatrice. The girl still lay there, moaning a little in her fevered sleep. Allan watched her in anguish.

"Oh, if she should die—if she should die!" thought he, and felt the sweat start on his forehead. "She must not! She can't! I won't let her—"

A touch on his arm aroused him from his vigil. Turning, he saw Gesafam.

"The child, O Kromno, hungers. It is crying for food!"

Allan thought. He saw at once the impossibility of letting the boy come near its mother. Some other arrangement must be made.

"Ah!" thought he. "I have it!"

He gestured toward the door.

"Go," he commanded. "Go up the path, to the palisaded place. Take this rope. Bring back with you a she-goat. Thus shall the child be fed!"

The old woman obeyed. In a quarter-hour she had returned, dragging a wild goat that bleated in terror.

Then, while she watched with amazement, Allan succeeded in milking the creature; though he had to lash securely all four feet and throw it to the cave-floor before it would submit.

He modified the milk with water and bade the old woman administer it by means of a bit of soft cloth. Allan, Junior, protested with yells, but had to make the best of hard necessity; and, after a long and painful process, was surfeited and dosed off. Gesafam put him to bed on the divan by the fire.

"A poor substitute," thought Allan, "but it will sustain life. He's healthy; he can stand it—he's got to. Thank God for that goat! Without it he might easily have starved."

He tied the animal at the rear of the cave, and had Gesafam fetch a good supply of grass. Thus for the present one problem at least was solved.

Beatrice's condition remained unchanged. Now and then she called for water, which he gave her plentifully. Once he thought she recognised him, but he could not be certain.

And day wore on; and now the hour of noon was at hand. Allan knew that other duties called him. He must go down among the Folk and save them, too, if possible.

Eating a little at random and making sure as always that his pistols were well loaded, he consigned Beatrice and the child into the old woman's keeping and left the cave.

On the terrace he stopped a moment, gazing triumphantly at the bloodmarks now thickly coagulated down the rocks.

Then, out over the canyon and the forest to northward he peered. His eyes caught the signal-fires he knew must be there now, not ten miles away; and with a nod he smiled.

"They've certainly trailed me close, the devils!" sneered he. "Since the minute they first attacked my two men and me, trying to repair the disabled Pauillac in that infernal valley so far to northward, they haven't given me an hour's respite! Before night there'll be war! Well, let them come. The quicker now the better!"

Then he turned, and with his determined step, still clad in his grotesque rags, descended toward the caves of the Folk, such as still were left.

Where all had been resistance and defiant surliness before, now all had become obedience and worship. He understood enough of the barbarian psychology to know that power, strength and dominance — and these alone—commanded respect with the Folk.

And among them all, those who had not seen as well as those that had, the sudden, dramatic, annihilating downfall of H'yemba had again cemented the bonds of solidarity more closely than ever.

The sight of that arch-rebel's body hurled from the parapet had effectually tamed them, every one. No longer was there any murmur in their caves, no thought save of obedience and worship.

"It's not what I want," reflected Allan. "I want intelligent co-operation, not adulation. I want democracy! But, damn it! if they can't understand, then I must rule a while. And rule I will—and they shall obey or die!"

Quickly he got in touch with the situation. From cave to cave he went, estimating the damage. At the great gap in the terrace he stood and carefully observed the wreckage in the river-bed below.

He visited the hospital-cave, administered medicines, changed dressings and laboured for his Folk as though no shadow of rebellion ever had come 'twixt them and him.

The news of Bremilu's death moved him profoundly. Bremilu had been one of his two most competent and trusted followers, and Allan, too, felt a strong personal affection for the man who had saved his life that first night at the cliffs.

Beside the body he stood, in the morgue-cave whither it had been borne. With bowed head the master looked upon the man; and from his eyes fell tears; and in his heart he felt a vacant place not soon to be made whole.

With profound emotion he took Bremilu's cold hand in his—the hand that had so deftly and so powerfully stricken down the gorilla—and for a while held it, gazing on the dead man's face.

"Good-by," said he at length. "You were a brave heart and a true. Never shall you be forgotten. Good-by!"

He summoned a huge fellow named Frumuos, now the most intelligent of the Folk remaining, and together they directed the work of carrying the bodies up to the cliff-top and there burying them.

By the middle of the afternoon some semblance of order and control had become organized in the colony. He returned to Cliff Villa, leaving strict orders for Frumuos to call him in case of need.

Very beautiful the world was that afternoon. In the soft wind the fronded palms across the river were bowing and nodding gracefully. Overhead, dazzling clouds drifted northward.

It seemed to him he could almost hear the rustle of the dry undergrowth, parched by the past fortnight of exceptionally hot weather; but, above all rose the eternal babble of the rapids. High in air, a vulture wheeled its untiring spirals. At sight of it he frowned. It reminded him of the Pauillac, now wrecked far beyond the horizon, where the Horde had trapped him. He shuddered, for the memories of the past week were infinitely horrible, and he longed only to forget.

With a last glance at the scene, over which the ominous threads of smoke now drifted in considerable numbers, he frowned. He re-entered the villa.

"No matter what happens now," he muttered, "I've got to snatch a few minutes' rest. Otherwise, I'm liable to drop in my tracks. And, above all, I must try to pull through. For on me, and me alone, now everything depends."

He sat down by the bed again, too stupefied by the toxins of fatigue and exhaustion to do more than note that Beatrice was, at any rate, no worse.

Human effort and emotion had, in fact, reached their extreme climax in him. He felt numb all over, in body, mind and soul. A weaker man would have succumbed long ago to but half the hardships he had struggled through. Now he must rest a bit.

"Bring water, Gesafam!" he commanded. When she had obeyed, he let her wash his wounds and dress them with leaves and ointment. Then he himself bandaged them, his head nodding, eyes already drooping shut from moment to moment.

His head sank on the bed, and one hand sought the girl's. Despite his wonderful vitality and strength, Allan was on the verge of collapse.

Vague and confused thoughts wandered through his unsettled brain.

What was the destiny of the colony to be, now that the Pauillac was lost and so many of the Folk wiped out? Were there any hopes of ultimate success? And the Horde, what of that? How long a respite might be counted on before the inevitable, decisive battle?

A score, a hundred questions, more and more illusory, blent and faded and reformed in his overtaxed mind.

Then, blessed as a balm, sleep took him.

A violent shaking roused him from dead slumber. Old Gesafam stood there beside him. She had him by the arm.

"Waken, O master!" she was crying. "O Kromno, rouse! For now there is great need!"

Dazed, he started up.

"What — what is it now? More trouble"

She pointed toward the door.

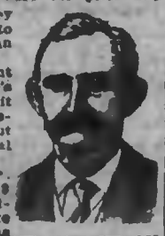
Cured Fifteen Years Ago of Piles and Eczema

By Using Dr. Chase's Ointment—Certifies That the Cure Was Permanent.

Some people have tried so many doctors and so many treatments in their search for cure for piles and eczema that they find it difficult to believe there is an actual cure.

The strong point about Dr. Chase's Ointment is that it not only brings relief promptly, but brings about actual and lasting cure.



MR. KETCHESON

In 1897 Mr. Ketcheson, 59 Douro street, Peterboro', Ont., wrote as follows:—"I was troubled for thirty years with itching piles and eczema. I could not sleep at night, and when I got warm the itching was terrible. Eczema covered my legs down to the knees, perfectly raw. I have tried every preparation I could hear of. Seeing Dr. Chase's Ointment advertised, I procured a box, and this Ointment effected a complete cure."

On Sept. 28, 1912, Mr. Ketcheson wrote as follows:—"I received a letter from you to-day, saying that you found on file a statement made by me 15 years ago. I have always given Dr. Chase's Ointment a good name since it cured me, and shall tell you how I came to use it.

"I had suffered for many years from eczema and piles, and had tried doctors and everything I could hear of in vain. Reading about Dr. Chase's Ointment, I purchased it at once, and was soon completely cured. That was fifteen years ago, so there can be no doubt of the cure being a permanent one. I have met a great many people who have been cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment."

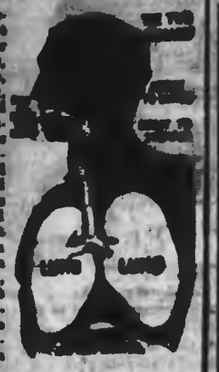
Listen!

Have you heard about Pepe? Pepe is a new scientific preparation put up into tablet or pastille form, which provides an entirely new and effective treatment for coughs, colds and lung and throat troubles.

There is no connection between the lungs and the stomach.

Suppose something were wrong with your stomach—say indigestion, or ulceration—would you think of taking some medicine which went—not to your stomach, but to your lungs? Certainly not!

Why then, when your lungs and chest are affected, should you dose your stomach—an absolutely separate organ—with medicine? Is it not far better to treat the ailing organ direct?



Pepe provide a direct treatment for coughs, colds, bronchitis, and all lung, chest and throat troubles. Pepe contain highly medicated essences and pine extracts condensed into tablet form. You put a Pep on your tongue, and as it slowly dissolves, these volatile essences turn into vapor.

You BREATHE the remedy to your sore aching lungs direct—not swallow it to your stomach, which is not ailing. (See diagram.) The healing fumes, thus breathed deep, bathe the delicate, inflamed membranes of your breathing tubes and pass right on to the tiny passages of the lungs—a course no liquid or solid medicine could possibly take.

Pepe fumes are healing and antiseptic. They heal sore tissue and kill disease germs. Pepe bring pine-forest fumes to your home, instead of you going to the pine forest!

For that cold, that night cough, that touch of bronchitis, don't dose your stomach! The trouble lies in your lungs. Pepe go to the lungs direct and will cure you.

All druggists and stores 50c. box. Write for free sample to Pepe Co., Toronto, or 68 Princess St., Winnipeg. Send only 1c stamp for postage and enclose this advertisement.

Mount Aetna Is Active.

CATANIA, Sicily, Nov. 9.—Mount Etna is again showing signs of unrest. Rumblings may be heard in the interior of the volcano and this is accompanied by the emission of great quantities of smoke. These phenomena are believed to be connected with the earthquake felt near Messina Saturday and the eruption of Mt. Vesuvius.

Warship Leaves Honolulu.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9.—According to officials here the German warship Geier, which has been undergoing repairs at Honolulu for a number of weeks, yesterday had been either interned, or has left the port. The limit of the Geier's stay expired at midnight Saturday.

Nine Men-o'-War Taken.

LONDON, Nov. 9. — According to The Westminster Gazette there are in the port of Tsingtau nine men-o'-war, including a German cruiser, four German gunboats, three German destroyers and an Austro-Hungarian cruiser, in addition to five German merchantmen, two of which were naval transports.

There are also one or two prizes, including the Russian volunteer steamer, which was captured by the Emden on Aug. 4, directly after the declaration of war, and taken to Tsingtau.

FAMOUS DESPATCHES OF PAST CAMPAIGNS

Reports From Nelson, Wellington and Lord Roberts Carefully Kept in British Museum

The despatches of Wellington from the Peninsula are classics of their kind, so concentrated and masterly are they, but possibly the most memorable despatch which ever reached Britain's shores lies under a glass case in the British Museum. It is the despatch announcing the Battle of Trafalgar and the death of Nelson. It is one of the great thrilling messages of the world, a message which meant, although perhaps not even English statesmen realized it at the time, that command of the seas and that immunity of Britain's shores and the shores of her great colonies from fear of attack which go with a supreme navy.

The despatch is simple and unadorned. It was written by Nelson's second in command, the noble Collingwood. "The ever-to-be-lamented death," it runs, "of Vice-Admiral Lord Viscount Nelson, who, in the late conflict with the enemy, fell in the hour of victory." Then follows an account of the great fight, concluding with a generous note of praise for the gallant fight put up by the foe, and finishing with the words, "It pleased the Almighty Disposer of all events to grant His Majesty's arms a complete and glorious victory."

Perhaps the most famous despatch of modern times was the one from Lord Roberts announcing the relief of Mafeking. It concludes: "The flying column under the command of Colonel D. Mahon, which relieved Mafeking, marched at the rate of fifteen miles a day for fourteen consecutive days, and successfully accomplished its object despite the determined opposition of the enemy." Simple and direct, like the man who wrote it.

Havelock's despatch concerning the relief of Lucknow is one of the nation's treasures. "The cheers of the troops echoed through the courts of the palace," he writes, "responsive to the bugle sound, and on they rushed to assured victory. The enemy could nowhere withstand them. In a few minutes the whole of the buildings were in our possession."

In the British Museum are stored many volumes of Wellington's despatches, the most interesting and safe of the longest being that which concerns the Battle of Waterloo. He first describes the action in some detail and the immensity of the result, and concludes: "Such a desperate action could not be fought and such advantages gained without great loss, and I am sorry to add that ours have been immense. The army has never upon any occasion conducted itself better. The Division of Guards set an example which was followed by all, and there is no officer or description of troops that did not behave well. I should not do justice to my own feelings or to Marshal Blücher and the Prussian army, if I did not attribute the successful result of this arduous day to the arrival and timely assistance I received from them."

"Jack" and "Tommy"

Perhaps it may be of interest to learn how Jack Tar and Tommy Atkins came by their nicknames.

The popular name given to a sailor by the man in the street originates from the tarpaulin waterproof worn by Jack in stormy weather. Curiously enough, although the subsequent is in common use, the boys in navy-blue usually resent it.

The soldier's nickname arises from an official source. Many years ago, when very few of the men in the ranks were able to write, each was supplied with a little book, in which his name, age, date of enlistment, and full particulars as to his wounds, medals, etc., were entered. If a soldier was unable to write his name in the space allotted for that purpose the colonel of the regiment would do so for him, the man himself making his mark.

In the official instructions as to the filling up of this space, in order to signify that the name was to be written in full, it gave as an example: "Name (Thomas Atkins)." Thus the British soldier came to be dubbed "Thomas Atkins."

An Unfailing Way to Banish Hairs

(Beauty Notice)

Ugly hairy growths can be removed in the privacy of your own home if you get a small original package of delatone and mix into a paste enough of the powder and water to cover the hairy surface. This should be left on the skin about 2 minutes, then removed and the skin washed and every trace of hair will have vanished. No harm or inconvenience can result from this treatment, but be sure you buy real delatone.

How Modern Submarines Are Fitted For Their Deadly Work

Description of Naval Units That Have Done More Service for Their Country Than Any Other Type of Craft in Present War.

HOW THEY ARE OPERATED

So much has been written concerning what the submarine, by a fight of imagination, may achieve, writes the naval correspondent of the London Morning Post, that most people are somewhat uncertain as to what the submarine actually is and does. To begin with, she is shaped like a cigar, and she carries a tower on her back. Inside the tubular steel hull, valves and tubes and pipes line the walls; aft, in a space so low that the engineers can hardly stand upright, are the internal combustion engines and the electric motors which drive the vessel when she is under water.

Below the floor, or deck, of the inside of the hull, are petrol and stores. Forward are the torpedo tubes. Amidships there projects downwards from the ceiling a thick brass column ending in a brass cross-piece. This is the base of the periscope. When the boat is submerged and the officer desires to see what is going on above, he sets a hand on each arm of the cross-piece which is level with his face, and rotates the column, while he looks into the mirror.

Image in Mirror.

In the mirror he beholds an image, little and bright, of a section of the sea and horizon, and by swinging it round he can scan the whole circle, reflected in the periscope above, which is the eye of the steel fish.

Alongside the periscope is the upright steel ladder leading through two hatches to the deck of the conning tower which is raised five or six feet from the top of the hull. It is about four feet in diameter, and is protected by a breast-high rail lined with canvas. Here is the wheel, and here, when the vessel is running awash, stand the captain and the quartermaster. In fine weather those of the crew who are not required below are grouped on the little half-deck below the conning tower, just above the steel hull itself. Officers and men are dressed in sea-boots, sweaters and rough clothing.

What She Does.

The submarine running awash forges sullenly onwards with a heavy grinding noise, the water lifting and dripping from the gills which project on either side of her snout. Below, the hull is filled with the crashing of the furious engines cramped into the narrow tube of steel. The engineers squat placidly among the racing rods and pistons, in the thick atmosphere tainted with fumes. Should the sea-water enter the hull and mix with the petrol gas, the fatal chlorine gas is formed, and the crew are suffocated.

The method of the submarine is to cruise at economical speed, ten knots or less, on the surface, until she sights a hostile vessel. As she is so small she can see another vessel before the other vessel can see her. Then she sinks. The captain and the crew go below; the hatches are closed; and the captain, swinging his weight upon the cross-piece from the periscope, his eye upon the mirror, gives his orders. The crew are lying along the sides, ready to turn valves on or off. The internal combustion engines are stopped and the propeller shaft is connected up to the electric motors. There is a sudden silence.

Captain's Part.

The process of submerging is a process in the brain of the captain. He has a mental picture of what each tank contains, and how much weight is driven out forward or aft at each order, and what will be the effect upon the vessel. He communicates this process to the vessel itself. He must first dip her bows slightly, then her stern, then bows again, and so on. If he makes a mistake the submarine may dive down, and then all is done.

The process is reflected in the brain of his lieutenant, who stands nearby by the captain. In ordinary vessels, if an officer faints or makes a mistake, there are a dozen people at hand who can put it right, because they know what ought to be done. Not so in the submarine. The only person besides the captain who knows what is going on is his lieutenant; but the consequences of a mistake would follow so quickly that the lieutenant could not rectify it. Nor would he know in all probability that a mistake had been made until the consequences began.

The men lying beside the valves know nothing except how to do what they are told. Nor if there any sensation of motion as the boat sinks. It seems to be as still as a drawing-room on shore.

The periscope, which is about the size of a saucer, remains about eighteen inches above the surface, and, viewed from the deck of a ship, all that is seen is a flitting pennant of white spray, as it cuts the waves, like a seabird's swing.

Upon approaching to attack the submarine sinks lower and submerges her periscope, so that her captain, looking in the mirror, sees his little and bright picture washed out in green—the green of the water. And from above nothing is visible at all.

The submarine is now blind. She cannot see through water. But she can steer a course. Her captain has made his calculations before he submerged his periscope. And the range of a German torpedo is about 3,000 yards at 25 to 30 knots. The submarine can fire her torpedoes, go about, presently rising until her periscope is above water, then herself continues underneath the surface until it is safe to rise, and like a whale, to breathe again.

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF

Girls! Try it! Your hair gets soft, fluffy and luxuriant at once

If you care for heavy hair, that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff; you cannot have nice, heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast.

If your hair has been neglected and is thin, faded, dry, scraggy or too oily get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine at any drug store or toilet counter; apply a little as directed and ten minutes after you will say this was the best investment you ever made.

We sincerely believe, regardless of everything else advertised, that if you desire soft, lustrous, beautiful hair and lots of it—no dandruff—no itching scalp and no more falling hair—you must use Knowlton's Danderine. If eventually—why not now?

UNDER BRITISH EMPIRE AS SEEN ACROSS LINE

Under the heading, "That Queer British Empire," the "Chicago Herald" commented on the rally of the Dominions to the aid of the Mother Country:

Indian troops anxious to fight in the war for Great Britain.

Irishmen, Ulsterites and Nationalists ready to help the Empire!

Australia prohibiting the export of foodstuffs except to the Mother Country!

Canada sending strong contingents!

The same story in England, Scotland, Ireland, and all the dependencies of the Empire! In this war the queer, crazy British Empire!

"It haven't a thing by take back," says Ireland, "but under the circumstances kindly show me the enemy as much as possible. I want to get at him."

"Hours of recent date received," says Canada. "Am sending men as fast as they can be gotten ready and transportation secured."

"Hurrying for a more auspicious time, may learned a part of our population justifiably beam to England," says South Africa, "we are prepared to do our utmost in the present war."

"Serious local dissatisfaction will arise, which, unless Indians are permitted to give their lives for the honorable empire, now that it is at war with a foreign nation," says India.

It's everywhere the same story. In brief it's "Confound your stupid, unreasonable, fat-headed, doomed, arrogant soul!" In time of need it's "Count on us to the limit!"

Which is why we say that the British Empire is a queer, queer institution!

CANADA must Manufacture for part of the World now involved in War.

Europe can no longer supply the Export Markets.

If you are proud of Canada, you want to see our Factories hum, our Stores alive with Business, and our Offices piled with Orders.

Let Peterborough enlist in this movement to boom Canadian Made Goods.

Let Peterborough Manufacturers get on the job, and let us read, mark and hear more of "Made in Peterborough" Goods.

How many good-going factories in Peterborough never tell our own Citizens what they manufacture.

And if they don't tell, how can they expect to sell.

Much of the European trade that was exported into Canada should now become our own. Who but our own Manufacturers should now make the Foodstuffs, the Hosiery, the Underwear, the Toys, and much of the Chemicals, Dye-stuffs, and other things Germany has supplied us?

Advertising will soon reveal which of our industrial enterprises are most worthy and best prepared to profit by Europe's need. The Firms first to advertise for this business will be the first to profit.

Who, among our manufacturers, is willing to be left out in the cold? Who, among such Firms, will fail to Advertise?

SEVASTOPOL and Plevna are names synonymous with dogged, enduring resistance in the face of famine, chivalrous courage, relentless aggression in the face of staggering losses, and marvellous engineering skill. In the one case Russians heroically defended a city, in the other they formed a circle of impenetrable steel about a foe who, in the end, capitulated to starvation as much as to overpowering odds.

With the exception of Port Arthur, probably the siege of greatest magnitude in modern times was that of Sevastopol.

It required eleven months for the French, English and Sardinians to reduce the Russian garrison, who put up a superb defence under the direction of Todleben, perhaps the greatest military engineer of his age. There was not a device known to warfare that Todleben did not bring to the defence of Sevastopol. The allied armies had 800 cannon, which was considered a great number at the time of the Crimean War, and some diligent statistician of the times reckoned that in all 1,000,000 shells and solid shot were fired.

In 1856 the effective range of an ordinary siege piece was not much greater than the distance travelled by a projectile in the first two seconds after leaving the mouth of a modern breechloader, and the initial velocity of shells was so low that the eye could follow their trajectory almost from the mouth of the piece, and men were able to dodge to a place of safety after seeing where the missile would fall.

Every avenue of entry or egress from Sevastopol was closed by the allied armies and fleet and the siege soon became a question of whether the Russians could hold out against famine, disease and losses from gunfire until relief should come.

So deadly was the fire from the besieging cannon that the defenders dug pits for safety, and Tolstoy, who was within the Russian lines, has graphically described them.

According to him they were mere excavations in the earth, the entrances to which were steep tunnels, narrow at the openings and broadening as they descended. Above some of the larger pits masts from dismantled Russian vessels were laid as beams, a sort of flooring was made, and the whole covered with earth to such thickness that neither shells nor solid shot penetrated it. Men lived in these pits for weeks, and the descriptions of conditions there, even where important officers were sheltered, are not suitable to reprint. Disease lurked in every corner and crevice. In places the walls were damp where men had been shot to pieces, and there was not always time to remove either the dead or the wounded.

While the bombardment was carried on continually, the French, under the direction of General Niel, whose engineering ability was second only to Todleben's, had sapped so close to the Russian works that a man might reach from the end of their trenches and lay his hand upon the shields of the Malakoff works. Malakoff, it was agreed by the generals of the allies, was the key to the works.

The French mine, which were far superior to those of the British in this case, were made by men who were kept digging day and night. About half of those who went into the pits never returned, and it is estimated that in every twenty-four hours 150 sappers were killed or disabled by wounds.

The British were directing their energies against the Little Redan, but because of the inefficiency of their superior officers their work was very slow. The French came into the field after the British had begun work, but they were ready for the final assault long before their allies.

At a conference of the commanders of the three armies it was decided that on September 5 a bombardment should be opened with 800 guns and that it should be sustained day and night for three days, when a grand assault should be made. At dawn of the appointed day the French batteries roared, and an unparalleled storm of shot and shell swept the Russian works. Smoke like a heavy blanket hung over the attacking batteries and earth spouted like spray from the face of the Russian defences as the shells exploded against them.

At first the Sevastopol batteries replied feebly, but as though the besieged were stunned with the deafening roar and the maelstrom of iron that surged about them, they soon ceased to work their guns and the allies hammered away at silent forts and earthworks.

The English did not join the bombardment until noon of the first day, showing once more that they were not prepared to the extent to which the French were. Military experts say that the fire directed against the defences of Sevastopol after the English batteries swelled the chorus was greater than any cannonading which the world until then had known.

In their redoubts 30,000 Frenchmen waited breathlessly for the order to charge. The French are noted for their brilliant charging, and at Sevastopol they outdid themselves. At the appointed moment—so exact had the French preparations been that the watches of the officers were set according to a single piece—three mines were exploded against the side of the Malakoff.

A roar, the mounting of the fighting passions of 30,000 men, rose even above the cannonading. Through rifts in the smoke curtain the sun glinted on keen steel as, with bayonets fixed, the charging column, an army in itself, thundered across the open ground toward the Malakoff.

The Russian guns cut loose. Rank after rank of the forward, crashing French went down, but the ranks behind swept over them as a wave plays over the backwash of its predecessor from a breakwater.

In the trenches there was fighting which has not been excelled. Immovable as rocks the Russians stood, and, irresistible, the French crashed upon them. Then the Russians wavered. It was steel against steel, and in the end men fought with bare hands and with teeth, but the French were not to be denied, and at last the Malakoff was theirs.

The English, attacking the Little Redan, had been slow in getting their charge under way. Again it was the fault not of the men but of their officers. The Ninety-seventh infantry had shortly before wavered under fire and as a punishment it was selected to lead the charge against the Russians. Not only was this a great tactical mistake but an injustice, for the Ninety-seventh was a raw organization and had scarcely ever been under fire, while almost every regiment in the British forces was clamoring for the honor of leading the assault.

It was but natural that these raw recruits whose one experience in action had been so baleful should waver again, and the British attack was all but hurled back upon itself. The Little Redan was taken through the sheer courage of the men and their field officers, not by reason of any competent commanding on the part of those high in authority.

Once in possession of the Little Redan and the Malakoff, the allies were able to destroy the Russian ships and the garrison was forced to evacuate the city.

At Sevastopol Russian military genius at its best was pitted against French ability of a brand as excellent and in the end was worsted by force of numbers and by the fighting qualities and valor of sometimes mismanaged troops. At Plevna things were somewhat reversed. The Russians were the besiegers and superior in numbers. For the most part they suffered from mismanagement, while the Turks, under Osman Pacha, exhibited staying qualities that aroused the admiration of the world and were directed by a commander whose military ability is ranked with that of the world's greatest captains. The Russians at Plevna showed aggressiveness and initiative quite equal to the stubbornness in defeat with which they are generally credited.

In 1877 the Russians, driving the Turks before them, were swarming through the Shipka Pass, which had been carried at the expense of tremendous battling, and Osman Pacha, realising the strategic value of Plevna, withdrew his army into the Bulgarian city, where met the roads from Widen, Sophia, Biela, Zimnitza and Shipka Pass. On July 18, 1877, the Russian staff awakened to the value of Plevna, and Grand Duke Nicholas ordered General Krudener to take the place.

Osman Pacha, however, was ahead of him, and where he had found nothing but a block house he had thrown up a system of defensive works by the time the Russian advance reached the town. Nevertheless, Krudener's intelligence staff was not aware that Osman Pacha had occupied Plevna, and 6,500 infantry with seven batteries were sent ahead. Straight into the town the advance guard rode, and the soldiers were already cheering over what they thought a bloodless victory when the Turks, from concealed positions, opened a deadly fire. The streets were crammed with confused fighting masses, and the Russians were slowly expelled from the city and driven back on their main body.

This showed the Russians they dealt with no passive foe, and reinforcements were sent to Krudener, but during the delay Osman built the famous Grivitza Redoubt. The excellence of the Turkish defensive works at Plevna is testified to by the statement of a military expert that their most valuable weapon was the shovel.

Reinforced, the Russians, under orders issued by Grand Duke Nicholas, hurled eighteen battalions of infantry and ten batteries at the Grivitza Redoubt, but with great slaughter they were repelled. Prince Shahofsky, whose impetuosity continually caused him to blunder, advanced with three brigades and took an important position on a hill, but the general orders for the assault had not included this move and before reinforcements could be sent him the Turks made a counter charge and with lead and steel drove the Russians out of the captured works. Shahofsky gathered the remnants of his command and in the face of an almost unbearable fire again took the hill, but the Turkish artillery pounded him and the infantry pressed him so closely that had it not been for Skobeleff and his Cossacks the brigades would have been lost.

The Russians suffered terribly in this assault, but the losses of the Turks, who were already in frightful condition from hunger, were even more severe. The black bread and cucumbers on which Osman's army subsisted were practically gone and so inadequate were facilities for caring for the wounded that the mosques were filled with men the surgeons could not attend, and in the streets the starving dogs gnawed those too weak to escape them.

On August 31 Osman Pacha made his one attempt to assume an offensive, but he was driven back. September 11 was the fete day of the Tsar, who was in the field. A grand assault was arranged, as though it were the occasion for manoeuvres and all done for show. At daybreak the cannon began a thunderous bombardment, which endured until eleven o'clock. After a lull the cannonading began again and continued until one o'clock, when it was interrupted until half-past two, and then resumed until three o'clock. As though set in motion by clockwork, as the last gun thundered three columns of Roumanians charged the Grivitza. Turkish cannon mowed down rank after rank. The defenders leaped over the battered walls and charged against the attacking columns, and all the while a merciless rifle fire decimated the Roumanian regiments, but they carried the works.

Four thousand men were killed or disabled in this superb charge, and then it was found the Turks had constructed a heavy line of fortifications in the rear of the redoubt.

At redoubt No. 10 charge and counter charge followed each other in deadly rapidity, but the Russians in the end were unable to take it. Skobeleff, under cover of a fog, took Redoubts Nos. 11 and 12, but his superiors sent him no assistance, although he had worked himself in as an entering wedge, and properly supported and reinforced could have split the Turkish defences. A few Russian cannon supported him in a dogging manner, but, while the big Turkish guns threw shells into his position, the infantry advanced steadily, pouring in a fire that all but annihilated his command.

Skobeleff and his men built ramparts of their dead, and he himself used a musket, but the charging Turks would not be denied, and the remnants of his command were obliged to retreat across open ground, where scores more were left dead or wounded.

In the assault the Russians had utilized 30,000 infantry, 12,000 cavalry and 400 guns. Their loss—dead, wounded and missing—was 18,000 men.

The Russian staff decided that the only method was to starve out the Turks, and the Tsar sent Todleben, who had served so well at Sevastopol, to direct the operations. Every channel, no matter how trivial, through which the Turks might obtain supplies or food was closed. Men died in the streets of Plevna from sheer hunger. Osman Pacha himself was so weak that when he walked abroad he had to be supported by his aide.

On October 19 the Russians again assaulted the Grivitza, but were repulsed and assaulted again to starve the garrison. By December 11 Osman Pacha faced the alternative of losing his army unobtained by honor or making a desperate attempt to break through the Russian lines, and he chose the latter course. Under cover of an artillery action the Turks retired by night across the Vid, but they were confronted by a division of Siberians on the Sofia road, and after some of the fiercest fighting of the siege were hurled back on the main body. The Russians, awake at last to what the Turks were doing, succeeded in surrounding them and the gallant Turk was obliged to surrender.

The operations around Plevna had occupied over 142 days, during which the Russians lost 50,000 and the

Nightly Vigils of American Relief Workers in England's Capital

By Cora Rigby.

OUTSIDE the London railway station crowds hung expectant. The police kept them back to let taxicabs roll in and out. A body of young fellows in new khaki uniforms swung through whistling "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary." The crowd cheered, then lapsed into silent waiting.

"Show your colors," admonished men selling the little flags of the Allies, and "For God's sake buy a flower so I can get food for the children," begged a flower woman, offering fresh roses for a penny and lucky white heather for tuppence ha'penny.

Men, women and children with strange looking bags and bedding came out of the station and filled several taxicabs. They were fleeing from the destruction of their homes in Belgium and the English murmured their sympathy.

This was the scene that passengers from the tops of buses on the Strand saw outside Charing Cross daily. The conditions were similar at the Victoria Station. The men and women, the boys and girls were at these places because they thought that wounded soldiers were coming. For a night of men touched by the cruel fingers of war they were willing to stand through many weary hours. They paid no heed to the assertions of the police that no wounded were to arrive there that day, and only when a man who had been at the Waterloo Station called out, "They are all coming in at Waterloo; I saw them," did they reluctantly disperse.

Inside the station there was a different picture. There in the dull hours when no trains were arriving and in the animated ones when section after section were pulling in at intervals of a few minutes members of the American Relief Committee remained on duty. As the trains pulled in the committee passed along their entire length, offering information and assistance. The very sight of the words "American Relief Committee" which appeared on their conspicuous badges inspired persons who had been battling with the perils of travel and the difficulties of obtaining sustenance in lands suddenly precipitated into war—with banks closed, agencies out of business, traffic demoralized and all the accustomed facilities of travel suddenly cut off.

While meeting trains was only one of the many activities of the American Relief Committee, which was organized as soon as the war was declared, it was a very important one. The railway schedules were so demoralized that not even the station masters were willing to predict when trains would arrive or how many passengers they would carry. All that was certain was that there would be unhappy, frightened, weary Americans arriving, and that at whatever cost of time or strength they must be met and helped by their fellow countrymen who were familiar with London and who had ample resources to draw upon for their assistance.

One night, after the war had been in progress several weeks and the number of Americans arriving in London was supposed to have diminished, the little band was waiting from seven in the evening until midnight, when the first section of the boat train pulled in, bringing only the vanguard of hundreds yet to come. It was Saturday night, the end of a particularly hard and trying week, but there was to be no rest for the committee that night. Section after section rolled in, filled with tired human beings claiming the sympathy and assistance of their compatriots. Some were so exhausted and disheartened by their experiences that they immediately sank down on the platform and would have remained there if there had been no one to care for them. Many were of foreign birth and had been in Germany, Austria and Hungary visiting their relatives. They had had return tickets on the German steamship lines and money had been sent to them which had never been received.

One woman, with a child in her arms and another clinging to her skirts, had been eight days on the way and most of that time had had to stand. The baby was pale and thin. "He was fat when I started," she said. "My brother was coming with me, but they took him for the army. My husband sent me money, but I did not get it. I have not heard from America for more than a month." It was the tale of hundreds. Of the twelve hundred who arrived that night four-fifths were practically helpless. The committee might have been pardoned if it had been so, too, in the face of such an unexpected service, but it merely became more energetic and capable. Until after three o'clock the members were busy seeking additional accommodations in hotels and boarding houses and in distributing the newly arrived.

"Stiff job; don't you want help?" asked an Englishman who had been watching the crowded buses and taxicabs rolling away. "I have my motor car here and I can carry a few for you." His example was followed by four other Englishmen who run their automobiles in the American service until the last unfortunate had been housed and food guaranteed by the American committee.

Every hostelry and lodging house to which the American committee sent people was carefully investigated beforehand. Young girls were especially well safeguarded in this respect. As to payment, those who had money paid and those who had none were paid for. Serving on the committee meeting the trains were several women possessed of unusual tact and sympathy, as well as worldly wisdom and a knowledge of London. Their presence not only inspired courage but prevented many a tragedy that otherwise would have been added to others for which the war was responsible.

There was no emergency for which the men and women who kept the nightly vigils were unprepared. The ill were tended and the sorrowing comforted. A wife who had been separated from her husband was assured that he would be found by the American Relief Committee and courage came back for the first time since this terrible thing had befallen her. A party had lost trunks and hand luggage. They had nothing but the clothes they wore. They were assured that the committee had clothes of all kinds and sizes for distribution and that it had facilities for looking up and recovering baggage on the Continent.

For those who had German steamship tickets and checks, which seemed as useless as the paper they were printed on, there was the information that they could get at least a part of the money they had paid out and that the remainder required would be obtained for them through some of the activities of the versatile committee. After the Tenantess had distributed American money on the Continent some Americans arrived with no other money and the American committee immediately exchanged it for English money, so that the holders could supply their immediate needs.

Two women had been robbed of money, checks and steamship tickets. They hadn't a penny to pay bus fare. Moreover, it was important that they start for home that week. They were in a panic, but one of the members of the committee took them home for the night and in two days they were fixed up with money and tickets and departed full of courage and gratitude.

Not every one was so easy to deal with. Some were almost hysterical and were exasperated by all efforts made in their behalf, but even this attitude failed to disturb the equanimity of the workers.

The Americans were not the only ones who met trains and dispensed money and kindness. They were the first, however, to carry on such systematic, regular work so that no person could fail to receive assistance. Of the various organizations which followed the example of the Americans, the Women's Emergency Corps, which looked after the interests of the Belgian and other foreign refugees, and an English committee which came into the field later to assist belated and often suffering and needy English women who were arriving from the Continent, were the most important. Besides, there were Red Cross representatives and members of religious organizations.

The Americans not only worked regularly and faithfully, but they were ready for any emergency. For instance, at five o'clock one evening word came to the Savoy Hotel that the Tennessee was bringing Americans from Havre and that they would arrive at Southampton that evening. In less than two hours men and women were on their way not to Southampton, because the landing was not made there, but to Weymouth, where they waited all night and part of the next day for the arrival of the Tennessee, which brought over more of the wealthiest persons in America, as well as some who did not have money enough to get them away from the station. By the time they had reached London, however, everything had been comfortably arranged for them by the American committee.

Over and over one heard the remark, "What would Americans have done without the committee which greeted them, housed them, fed them and sent them on their way relieved of their anxieties?" To be in a strange land without money and without resources is a terrifying experience and this happened not only to the poor but to many who were suddenly deprived of immediate resources. There was none too high to accept help and some at first but that he could have it.

Australian Warship Puts an End to the Ravages of the Speedy German Vessel---Emden in a Blaze From Stem to Stern Goes Ashore Off Coco Island---Heavy Loss of Life Among the Crew---The German Cruiser Konigsberg Chased into Port by the Chatham, Who Put Her Out of Action by Blocking the Channel.

THREE MEN WERE KILLED ON THE SYDNEY

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Eng., November 10.—(Special Cable.)—The cruiser Emden, the German terror of the Pacific, whose sensational raids upon British shipping and even upon allied war ships, have been a continual source of humiliation to the British Admiralty, is no more.

Finally forced into battle by the Australian cruiser Sydney, the Emden was sent ashore afire from stem to stern. Her grave is on Cocos Island, in the Indian Ocean, south of Sumatra, where she was driven by the Sydney after a sharp fight.

The news of the destruction of the Emden was announced by the Admiralty to-day. Almost at the same time came word of another British victory on the sea, when it was announced that the German protected cruiser Koenigsberg had been driven into port in Rufigi Island, off German East Africa. The British cruiser Chatham ran her down and the Admiralty claimed the German vessel had probably been driven ashore.

It is believed that the loss of life on board the Emden must have been heavy. She carried a crew of 361 men. In the destruction of this German vessel, the sinking of the Russian cruiser Zemtchug and the French destroyer Mosquet, has been avenged. The Emden's career has been the most picturesque of any of the Kaiser's navy. Commanded by Captain Karl Von Muller, she has swept the Pacific, capturing or sinking more than a score of merchant vessels of the allied nations, and brought her raids to a climax by boldly entering the harbour of Penang, where she sunk two of the allies' warships.

Coming on the heels of the stirring war speeches of Lord Kitchener and Winston Churchill, the First Lord of the Admiralty, the feat of the Sydney in destroying the Emden roused London to a fever of excitement to-day. The cry now is that the Good Hope and the Monmouth must be avenged. Weight of metal obviously told in the fight between the Emden and the Sydney, as the Australian ship carried heavier guns. Once on the trail of the German cruiser the Sydney was not to be denied. The Emden escaped when the Australian first came in contact with her. The German lost both of her storeships, one being captured and the other sunk, but the Emden herself fled, refusing combat. The Sydney continued her pursuit, finally overhauled her and forced her to battle.

A fleet of at least seventy vessels has been combing the Pacific in search of the Emden. She has always eluded her pursuers just when it seemed she must give battle and go to her doom before the heavier guns. When reported in one section she would suddenly appear in another and capture or send some merchantman to the bottom. In the midst of her career of sinking and capturing vessels, the Emden appeared off Madras on September 22, and shelled a portion of that city. It is estimated that she caused a loss of ten millions to the al-

START CAMPAIGN TO RAISE PATRIOTIC FUND TO $20,000

Patriotic Fund Committee Decide to Make Swift, Business-like Effort to Add Fifteen Thousand Dollars to the Fund---Will Be Affiliated With Canadian Patriotic Fund

The local Patriotic Fund committee, at a most enthusiastic meeting last night, decided to take immediate steps to raise twenty thousand dollars, inclusive of the amount already subscribed. The amount at present in the care of the City Treasurer is a little over five thousand dollars, so that an additional amount of fifteen thousand dollars will have to be collected. One half of the amount collected is to be retained for local purposes and the other half to be set aside as the contribution of the city to the Canadian Patriotic Fund of the Dominion. Action will be taken to have the Peterborough Patriotic Association affiliated with the Canadian Patriotic Fund.

Committee's Report.

The report of the sub-committee, which was submitted at last night's meeting of the Patriotic Association, follows:

1. Your Committee recommends that the local Patriotic Association be affiliated with the Canadian Patriotic Fund.

2. Your Committee recommends further that the local Patriotic Association take immediate steps to increase the amount already raised to a sum of not less than $20,000.00 (inclusive of the amount already collected.)

3. Your Committee recommends further that one-half of the said sum of $20,000.00, or one-half of the amount collected, whether the amount attained is greater then $20,000.00 or not, be set aside for local purposes, and be retained in the hands of the local committee, and that the other half thereof be set aside as the contribution of the City of Peterborough to the Canadian Patriotic Fund of the Dominion of Canada and remitted to the Treasurer of that Fund.

Your Committee is induced to reach the conclusions set forth by the following among other considerations:

(a) The Canadian Patriotic Fund was established at the recent Session of the Parliament of Canada when an Act known as "The Canadian Patriotic Fund Act 1914" was enacted, being one of eight Acts of special importance enacted at the August Session of Parliament known as the War Session.

(b) The Act of Parliament in question is "to provide a fund for "the assistance in case of need of "the wives and children, and de-"pendent relatives, officers and "men, residents of Canada, who "during the present war may be on "active service with the naval and "military forces of the British Em-pire and Great Britain's Allies."

(c) That the sum of $5.00 raised by the City of Peterborough, viewed from any standpoint, must be considered as absolutely failing to represent the combined generosity and patriotism of our citizens, and that consequently every effort should be made to raise the fund to substantial proportions.

(d) Peterborough as one of the large centres of population in the Dominion of Canada, the eighth city in population in the Province of Ontario, the centre and leading city of a large and flourishing district, settled by a loyal body of citizens, should in the opinion of your Committee uphold and support the general scheme established by Parliament for the general benefit of Canada.

(e) Your Committee is convinced that an earnest appeal to the generosity and patriotism of the citizens accompanied by an energetic, earnest and active canvass will meet with such a response from the citizens of Peterborough as will justify Peterborough's position as a leader of this district.

(f) In the opinion of your Committee it would be unpatriotic and unwise to refrain from affiliation with the General Patriotic Fund, unpatriotic as calculated to prevent that unity of effort and co-operation that should characterize the Canadian people at the present time, and unwise as it would deprive the City of Peterborough from making any moral claim for assistance from the General Patriotic Fund in case of necessity, and thereby calculated to deprive the wives, children and dependent relatives of the officers and men on active service from the City of Peterborough from the benefit of and a share in the general fund established for Canada.

Was Adopted.

This report was adopted unanimously. It was also suggested that an effort be made to hold a public meeting, one or more of the following speakers to be invited: Rev. Canon Cody and Rev. Father Minehan of Toronto, and Mr. H. B. Ames of Montreal.

Mr. O'Connell made a stirring appeal in which he urged those present to do their utmost in an endeavour to bring about the desired result. Several thousand men have gone forth from Canada to uphold the honour and integrity of the Empire, and it remains for those at home to show the dependents of these men practical consideration. It was admitted that the Committee had been somewhat lax in their efforts to make the fund a substantial one. Now that a fixed sum had been decided upon, the committee would have some goal to aim at.

Some Comparisons.

It was pointed out that Orillia had contributed $8,000 in two days, Lindsay nearly $7,000 in four days, Kingston $52,000 in a few days. Fifty thousand dollars of this amount was forwarded to the Canaian Patriotic Fund. An additional $10,00 is being raised for home relief.

A communication was received from Mr. J. H. Burnham, saying that the moneys of the Fund should be distributed through someone other than City Relief Officer Miller and asking that this matter receive immediate attention.

Mr. Miller has been relieved of his duties as administrator of the funds. he committee tendered its appreciation of the services rendered by Relief Officer Miller in respect to the administration of the Relief Fund. Arrangements will be made whereby the funds will be administered otherwise than through the City Relief Officer.

Will Be Added.

His Lordship Bishop O'Brien, Rev. R. Pogue and Rev. J. R. Webb will be invited to become members of the Executive committee. The names of Rev. J. Rollins, F. D. Kerr, W. Stocker and R. E. Layfield were added to the Finance committee. Mr. W. H. Bradburn was added to the Relief committee.

Those present were His Worship Mayor Fuller (chairman), H. Rush, A. Mowat, Ald. F. H. Dobbin, J. John, F. D. Kerr, G. A. Gillespie, W. Stocker, Rev. Jas. Rollins, F. W. Miller, J. Ridall, E. A. Peck, D. O'Connell, Dr. G. S. Cameron, G. Ball, R. M. Glover, E. Navey and R. E. Layfield.

The Allies' Lines Still Hold; German Assaults Are Repulsed

Violent Attacks by the Enemy Have All Been Ineffective Says To-day's Official Communique From Paris ---Enemy Loses Heavily in Their Efforts to Pierce the Allies' Lines.

GENERAL SITUATION STILL UNCHANGED

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, November 10. — A repulse of the German advance in the regions of Bixschoote, Ypres and Armentieres, was announced in to-day 3 o'clock communique. It was declared that the fighting continues with unabated violence between Armentieres and the sea, both sides clashing in offensive movements. South of Ypres the allies' succes in repulsing the German offensive was particularly marked. Elsewhere along the battle front, the statement declared there were but few if any changes.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—To make sure that the German cruiser Koenigsberg is effectually out of action, the British cruiser Chatham has sunk several vessels in the mouth of the Kifiji River channel, where the German crusier took refuge.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—The fierceness of the recent fighting by the British army in the neighbourhood of Ypres, is emphasiesd by the casualty list of twenty British officers and eight Indian officers killed this week, and a corresponding large number of men. In North Belgium the operations are at a deadlock, neither side being able to move the artillery in the recently inundated ground.

LONDOS, Nov. 10. — In the hour of victory and rejoicing over the success of the Australian cruiser Sydney in finally running down and destroying the German cruiser Emden, the British press this afternoon does not neglect to pay to the gallant ship of the enemy and her comamnder the honour which is their due. The Evening News, in an editorial commenting upon the destruction of the German ship, says: "To the British nation there is one regret in the destruction of the Emden, that is the possibility of the loss of the Emden's captain. A brave, ingenious and courteous gentleman, he has played the game admirably. We hope he has been saved."

OTTAWA, Nov. 10.—Major General the Hon. Sam Hughes, who reached Ottawa last night, was in his office with a mass of correspondence this morning, and has again taken over his duties as Minister of Militia. "I did not go to the front," said General Hughes to the Examiner's correspondent, "only idle curiosity would have justified me in going. They have no time for visitors on the battlefield these days. The Canadians are doing splendidly at Salisbury; they are mastering the new platoon formation with great rapidity, and as for their shooting—well, it's been all we ever claimed for it. They had just started shooting the last time I was there, and the first regiment which shot made 87 per cent. It opened the eyes of those who saw it."

General Hughes stated that he did not know when they go go across to the continent. "I would not tell you if I did. You will hear about them when they get there," he remarked.

The Minister said that all accounts of wounded British officers from the front agreed that the slaughter of the German troops on the north western line of battle was appalling. Many of them declared that so dreadful were the casualties before the allies' rifle and machine gun fire as to turn the beholder sick.

A CHANCE FOR LOCAL CYCLISTS TO GO TO FRONT

Six Required Here and Will Be Enlisted With Other Recruits at the Armouries To-night

FIVE MORE ENLISTED

That there is no lack of volunteers in Peterborough was again in evidence at the Armouries last night, when, at the request of headquarters at Kingston, recruiting for the second contingent was recommenced. Fifteen applicants presented themselves and five were successful in passing the medical examination. The Medical Officer will be at the Aromuries again to-night and intending recruits should present themselves as soon as possible.

Information has also been received from headquarters by Major Walker to the effect that the authorities have decided to raise a corps of cyclists, and that six good cyclists are required from this district. Names for enlistment will be taken at the Armouries to-night.

Women's War Fund Committee

There will be the usual monthly meeting of the Women's War Fund Committee in the Armouries in whatever room the authorities give us for the purpose, on Wednesday, November 11th, at 4:30 p.m. It is earnestly desired that every member of the committee be there. Don't let a few people fight the battle of right and decency for you. Be a good soldier of the Lord and the King and be there. The woman who has the vote and neglects to be there is as bad as the Lucastas (of whom there are not a few in Peterborough), who go there and vote for selfish and unpatriotic ends.—"The Secretary."

TO DRILL ON THURSDAY NIGHT

A meeting of the Civilian Rifle Association was held last evening, and arrangements for drill masters were discussed. The matter is being taken up with some competent persons and announcement will be made to-morrow as to who will have charge of the drilling. It is expected that the first drill will be held on Thursday evening.

Pastoral Visitation

The regular monthly meeting of the Ministerial Association was held yesterday morning, in the Y.M.C.A., with Rev. Jas. Rollins, the President, presiding. An interesting and helpful paper on "Pastoral Visitation" was given by Rev. Leonard Phelps of the Mark Street Methodist Church, which was followed by a profitable disquasion. There was a large attendance of members.

TWENTY THOUSAND, THE AIM

Last night a meeting was held in the interests of increasing Peterborough's Patriotic Fund. The report of the sub-committee was adopted, recommending that the Peterborough Patriotic Association affiliate with the Canadian Patriotic Fund. What this means will be learned by reading the report printed in another column.umn.

The report also included a decision to increase the amount already raised in Peterborough to, at least, $20,000, including the $5,000 already collected, and that half of this total, or $10,000, or more, if the total of $20,000 is exceeded, be retained in the hands of the local committee, for local administration in the interests of the dependents of our own citizens on duty at the front. And if this should prove inadequate, for local purposes, Peterborough having contributed $10,000 to the General Patriotic Fund, can consistently demand a share of this general fund, and draw upon it in proportion to the urgency of the local demand for funds for the benefit of local claimants upon it.

Peterborough has not done what, considering its size and importance, it should naturally be expected to do. With a patriotic fund totalling $5,000, Peterborough has not, it may be fairly claimed, done her share. Comparisons may be odious, but it is more distasteful to Peterborough to take a secondary place in comparison with other places.

For instance, Kingston, with virtually the same population as Peterborough—20,000—and with virtually an identical assessed value in 1913—$10,500,000—raised $52,000 in four days for patriotic fund purposes, of which $50,000 is devoted to the General Patriotic Fund and the balance retained for local distribution in relief, and the people are engaged in adding another $10,000. Moreover the Kingston city council voted $5,000 for patriotic purposes.

In proportion to population, Peterborough has contributed to the patriotic fund 25 cents per head of population, while Kingston, with virtually the same, or slightly smaller, population as Peterborough, has contributed $2.60 per head of population.

This is not mentioned by way of reproach, but by way of incentive and stimulus. Peterborough should do something in this matter worthy of herself.

Peterborough has, to institute another comparison, done better in proportion to population than most other places, in the matter of furnishing volunteers to the overseas contingent, having sent altogether 350 for all arms of the service, not including a large number of reservists. This shows that Peterborough is not lacking in loyalty to the Empire when it comes to offering flesh and blood and bravery to the cause of Empire.

It would be expected that Peterborough should make a corresponding contribution to the relief fund for the families and dependents of the large force we have sent to the front.

That we have not done better in this regard, is due perhaps to the fact that the public of the city have not been sufficiently penetrated with the knowledge of the circumstances and conditions, and the necessity of adequately meeting them. But it is evident that a better understanding of the situation will be brought home and a more decided and cooperative determination made to meet the responsibility.

At the meeting last night it was decided to increase the local patriotic fund to $20,000, including the $5,000 already raised.

The subject of bringing here some outside prominent orator to stir up public feeling in the matter of meeting our responsibility to be patriotic was discussed at the meeting. We did not need an orator to incite our soldier boys to play the stake of their lives in defence of Canada and the Empire. They volunteered—"go thou and do likewise."

Shall we be less patriotic than they? While they give services and perhaps their lives, shall be, who stay at home, pursuing the even tenor of our way, and enjoying all the benefits of peace and the comforts of home, fail to provide for the wards—their wives and children and mothers, whom they have left in our care?

Shall we set ourselves to make our patriotic fund $20,000, which will involve raising only $15,000 more?

That is the aim that is set; that is the target whose range we are to find. Every citizen is asked to read the report of the Patriotic meeting held last night, to thus seize the situation and resolve to meet the call.

Let the slogan be—

$20,000 FOR THE PATRIOTIC FUND.

THE KAISER'S DOUBLE DANGER.

The allied armies at the gates of Berlin, the Russians on the east and the British, French and Canadians on the west—is something that the Kaiser is now beginning to realize as a not remote possibility. He did not think this when he set out jauntily to guide his war machine to Paris, Petrograd and London. But the circle is closing in, and grave and grim is the danger menacing his capital and his cause. There is possibly a greater danger from within the country. Socialism is very strong in Germany, and naturally so. Socialism is revolt against tyranny and oligarchic oppression; and these have reached the maximum in Germany. So far the net of militarism has entangled the rank and file of the Socialist element in the army, but the rest of the Socialists and those that sympathize with their antagonism to Kaiserism, are passive, but perilous,potentialities, occasion presented, of active resistance in the interests of their cause. In this regard the Kaiser will learn the force of the saying—laugh and the world laughs with you. So long as the Kaiser's hosts are putting up a strong fight, so long will Socialism, even which has been blinded by the glamour of the ground-in military cult of the war party, will be silent. But if reverse comes; if some decisive disaster befalls German arms, then Socialism seeing a chance, which force has long denied it, will probably strike for itself. Herr Bebel, the foremost and most dominant Socialist propagandist in Germany, has in his career felt the force of the mailed fist. He was prominent years in the labour movement and entered the Richstag, and in 1867 led a Socialist party of 82. His followers in Germany are said to number by millions. He has always been hostile to German aggression by the rule of "blood and iron"; yet he foresaw that sometime the Kaiser would make the mad plunge for world supremacy. He also foresaw that many of the Socialist element would be forced into the ranks, swept there by the wave of militarism. He also foresaw something else, and this is best expressed in his own words as below:

> "When Germany goes to war there will be whole armies of our adherents in the fighting ranks. As long as all goes well and victory crowns our banners they can do little but let themselves be swept along on the triumphant flood. But once let the impression take root that Hohensollern prestige has lost its magic—once let the War Lord's pride be greatly humbled by a genuine disaster to his arms—then prepare for a miracle!"

We shall soon see whether the Socialist Bebel is a better foreseer than the Kaiser, who saw himself feasting in Paris on August 11th.

NOTHING LIKE IT SINCE DAYS OF NAPOLEON

LONDON, Nov. 9. — A Petrograd despatch to the Post says: "The rapidity of the movements on the battlefields in Poland have been unequalled since the days of Napoleon. Deducting the time spent in actual fighting, the Russian pursuit has been pressed for over a week at a rate averaging 17 miles per day over the Polish roads, which are very heavy after the rainy season.

"There is believed to be no doubt that the Germans in their retreat passed Czenstochowa without stopping. The troops of this column, which apparently were marching in good order, were probably the first line of the German division extricated from the disastrous fighting in Poland at the cost of the reserve troops and the allied Austrians.

"Similar tactics seem to have been employed on other points, with the object of preserving the best troops. This would appear to indicate that the Germans have given up their Russian adventure, and will once more concentrate against France and Great Britain in Belgium. Clearly the Russians are sending along forces with great rapidity on both flanks of the positions on which the defeated Germans are retreating."

Natural Capital of Russia.

The correspondent continues:—"Grand Duke Nicholas' reference, in despatches announcing his victory, to the new task of opening a new period of the war, means, if I am not mistaken, that Russia will now turn her main attention towards the settlement of the Eastern question. This means, first and foremost, the breaking up of Austria-Hungary, followed by the expulsion of the Turk from Europe, and possibly the reconstruction of a new Armenia among other rearrangements of the Balkan States. No Russian doubts that Constantinople is the natural capital of the Russian Empire, and no sacrifice will be thought too great for the attainment of this historical goal."

How The Allies Are Rolling The Danger Zone Back Upon Germany

NEW YORK, Nov. 6.—The military expert of the New York Post, says: In describing the strategic situation in northern France and Belgium today,well into the fourth month of the war, it is necessary to take into account something more than the actual vents in Flanders, the sanguinary struggles along the River Yser, the terrific battling to the south around Ypres and down towards Lille and Arras, and the general failure of the German armies to do much more than guard their own lines of communications from France through Belgium to their own frontier. These are the obvious features. In connection with the bulletins from the battlefield we must take other facts that have emerged in the news, some to receive comment, some to escape almost unnoticed. Take such facters as the stories emanating from Bordeaux regarding the probable return of the French government to Paris; the story of a general shifting of the German armies to the northeast, so that the Wurtumbergers who were fighting east of Rheims are now in Belgium and the Bavarians who fought before Nancy are now around Arras quite at the other end of the line; the story of the shifting of the British army from its trenches along the Aisne River to the line from Lille through Ypres towards the coast of the North Sea; the reports of German successes on the Aisne trenches against the French; and in all these facts there is revealed a very solid connection.

Is it altogether premature to speak of the return of the French government to Paris? In Germany the report has been received with the caustic reminder to the French that after all, the battle line still runs close to Compiegne and Soissons, which are only about fifty miles from the capital. But Bordeaux is here on more solid ground than Berlin. There may still be fighting within fifty miles of Paris, but there is no longer any probability, there is scarcely a possibility, that the fighting can be brought nearer to the capital by any appreciable number of miles, or any rate can come near enough to the capital in such force as to give ground for apprehension. For the simple fact is that the allied strategy, while it has failed in the primary purpose of the great northward drive that has now been under way for eight weeks, namely, the envelopment of the German right wing and the expulsion of the enemy from France, has nevertheless succeeded in moving the centre of decisive operations from 120 to 140 miles away from Paris. From Arras south to Noyon and Lasigny from Noyon east to Ferdun, theer are armies in contact, but their operations have little meaning.

On both sides it has been agreed that a decision shall be fought out in the north. It was General Jaffre who laid down this necessity for the Germans when he set out on his march for the Belgian frontier. That the Germans have accepted the challenge is evidenced by the fact that they have not been content to pour fresh reinforcements into Flanders, but have removed the entire corps from the Aisne and the Meuse to place them on the battle line.

On the allied side there has been the same thinning of the line along this section to reinforce the extreme western wing of the army in Flanders. Fascinating is the official British story of how General French's soldiers were removed in the silence of the night fro mtheir trences around Soissons, while their French allies slipped in to take their place. Whether the Germans or the British were the first to make the move from the Aisne into Flanders does not matter. Which ever side took the initiative apparently thought it a safe move to make. The allies probably foresaw what happened—that the places left vacant by the British in the Aisne trenches could be filled only in part by the French, that there would result a thinning of the French line along the Aisne, of which the Germans might take advantage. The Germans did. Their success around Vailly, east of Soissons, where the French confess to have lost ground, was the probable result of this thinning of the line. But apparently the allied commanders discounted such an event. A yielding of the line at this point was of little consequence in the general scheme of the campaign.

We may go further. Even if the French line should break around Rheims or around Noyon, where von Kluck has been standing for two months nearly there can be no danger of an advance on Paris; and for the simple reason that the bulk of the German armies are confronting the bulk of the allied armies far to the north, between Arras and the coast. More than that, even if the Germans along the Aisne had men sufficient to make a threatening move against Paris, they dare not do so while the allied armies are in the field intact. This, after all, was the main reason why von Kluck's great march on Paris, early in September, had to swing away from the Capital when within thirty miles of the heart of the city. It would be absurd for a German army to camp around Paris while the allied armies were untouched. So, today, it is inconceivable that the Germans will march on the French capital with the hostile armies not only in full being, but successfully holding the bulk of the German hosts in check far north in Flanders, and far to the east, along the Meuse and on the frontier.

This, then, has been obviously the central point of General Joffre's strategy since the failure of the French offensive back in August—that fortified places and cities mean little and that the field army means everything. Whereever an army is there the enemy must come to seek it. By driving with force into Flanders and Belgium he has compelled the Germans to follow him there. With the heavy fighting now taking place around Ypres, the French are in a position to argue that a decision is being worked out nearer to the German frontier than to the French capital. Ypres is almost exactly the same distance from Cologne as from Paris.

There is no mortal doubt, Lord Nelson—they ha' done wi' you an' me!

Look thou again, Sir Francis! — I see the flags a-flapping!
Hearken once more, Sir Francis! — I hear the sticks a-tapping!
'Tis a sight that calls me thither! — 'Tis a sound that bids me Come!"
T'is the old Trafalgar signal!—'Tis the beating of my drum!

Art thou ready, good Sir Francis? See they wait upon the quay!
Praise be to God, Lord Nelson, they ha' thought of you an' me!

CALLED UP.

By Dudley Clark.

(The protector of England against the Great Armada and the Man of Trafalgar remind us that, though the methods of war vary with the centuries, Drake's Drum and Nelson's Signal still inspire the British Navy with the traditions of victory.)

Come, tumble up, Lord Nelson, the British Fleet's a looming!
Come, show a leg, Lord Nelson, the guns they are a-booming!
'Tis a longish line of battle — such as we did never see;
An' 'tis not the same old round-shot as was fired by you an' me!

What see'st thou, Sir Francis? — Strange things I see appearing!
What hear'st thou, Sir Francis? — Strange sounds I do be hearing!
They are fighting in the heavens; they're at war beneath the sea!
Ay, their ways are mighty different from the ways o' you an' me!

See'st thou nought else, Sir Francis? —I see great lights a-seeking!
Hearest thou nought else, Sir Francis? —I hear thin wires a-speaking!
Three leagues that shot hath carried! God, that such could ever be!

Deaths of Wounded Soldiers Few Compared With Other Wars

Dr. Osler Anticipates New Low Record for Mortality, Only One Out of Seven Hundred Having Died in British Base Hospital at Oxford

NEW YORK, Nov. 9. —It is very natural to suppose that most of the fatalities of war are the result of wounds, but that this is far from the case is shown by some interesting records contained in an article in the special war issue of the Scientific American of November 7, which gives the following figures:

In the Crimean war, out of every thousand of French troops 236 died by disease and only 64 from wounds. Among the English troops the corresponding figures were 179 and 47. Napoleon in the march to Moscow lost two-thirds of his army, though he fought only one general engagement. The Russian armies operating against him lost in the course of five months four-fifths of their strength. The losses of the federal armies in the civil war in two years amounted to 53.2 deaths in the thousand, of which only 8.6 were caused by wounds, the remainder, 44.6 being by sickness.

In the Franco-Prussian war the losses of the Germans were 34.7 a thousand from wounds and only 30 a thousand from sickness. This is explained partly by the shortness of the campaign (seven months) and partly by the fact that the Germans were greatly superior in numbers and were able to send their sick home. In the Russo-Japanese war the ratio of deaths from wounds was three to one among the Russians and two to one among the Japanese. As for the present war in Europe, Sir William Osler has made the following observations:

"I think this war will set a new record for low mortality among the wounded. Formerly, with the best first aid and hospital work, a mortality record of five or six per cent. of those who reached the base hospitals was considered creditable. Up to date there has been but one fatality out of more than seven hundred wounded who have reached the base hospital at Oxford. This death was caused by tetanus. Thus it has been estimated that in the Russo-Turkish war (1877-1878) the cost of one human life was $16,000; in the Russo-Japanese war it was $20,400. In the Franco-Prussian was the cost was exceptionally high, viz., $23,000. This is due to the small number of great battles."

A BATCH OF LETTERS FROM THE TRENCHES

THE MAGIC BANQUET.

(Letter from Armourer Staff-Sergt. R. J. Innes to his wife at Enfield Lock.)

You ask how we are getting on. Well, just listen to this: I don't know how it was done or where it came from, but for dinner the other day we had spuds, greens, bread, duff and tea. Of course, that doesn't come off every day, but just fancy that lot on active service!

The other morning we encountered a party of Germans in a wood, and some of the "Jocks" went for them. When the Germans saw the fixed bayonets they started crying. (Many soldiers' letters repeat this strange statement.) They don't like the cold steel. Our aviators are doing fine work.

MURDERED OFFICER.

(Letter from — Weeding, of the Surrey County Council staff, now at the front.)

Poor Captain Horne, of the Cameron Highlanders, was practically murdered. He was shot in both legs and was carried to a ditch slightly in the rear of the firing line and left with a sergeant.

Then the regiment had to retire. They made a red cross on a handkerchief with his own blood and hoisted it on a stick. They advanced again later and found Captain Horne with his head knocked in by rifle butts and shot.

A LUCKY ESCAPE.

(Letter, dated October 3, from Trooper W. G. Fish, 9th Lancers, to his parents at Chingford.)

We are having very bad luck lately with the German shells. One day we came in from the trenches and got the order to groom our horses. When we had finished we were all talking together when we heard a whistling sound in the air.

Some of us scattered and some stood still; then all of a sudden there was a terrific report. A German shell had dropped right in the middle of our troop.

Altogether that day we lost eleven killed and forty-eight wounded, besides horses which had to be shot because of their injuries.

I had a little splinter each side of my neck and one beside the nose, and I think I was lucky indeed, because the sergeant I was standing beside was killed on the spot.

"OUR TROOPS MORE CONFIDENT EVERY DAY."

(Letter, from Pte. P. Young, R.A.M.C., to his brother at Brighton.)

We had a narrow escape the other day. We had all been called out of the barn where we sleep to attend a service in the hospital (which is a mansion belonging to a French admiral). We have got a parson here, so we have two services a week and Holy Communion on Sunday morning.

Ten minutes after we had left the barn a German "coal-box" crushed through the roof and through one side of the wall and dropped into the garden in front of the hospital, but luckily it did not explode.

We have not been getting so many wounded during the last few weeks. We go about as if we were at home. We have even played football in the garden, although there was a German aeroplane hovering over our heads, and a few shells bursting not far away. Our troops are doing well, and getting more confident every day.

RELIGION AND FOOTBALL.

(Letter from Private Edward Haltam, Royal Scot Fusiliers.)

As we can't always be killing Germans, we are sometimes hard put to it to kill time in the trenches. Next to religion, I think football's the thing that interests us most, and we are always eager to hear news of our teams at home.

The papers that reach us have not got much news of that kind in, and it would be a godsend to us if only somebody would take on hand to start a paper for circulating among the troops, giving nothing but the latest football news.

HOW ONE GERMAN WON IRON CROSS

HAMBURG, Friday. — The correspondent of the Hamburger Fremdenblatt gives the following account of the signal act of heroism for which Corporal Heinemann, of the field artillery, has been awarded the iron cross:

"I have had a talk with Corporal Hans Heinemann of the field artillery," writes the correspondent. "He received the iron cross at the storming of Liege. One-fifth of his battery had already been slain before it had advanced three miles and taken up its position in the trenches. All around the country the air reverberated from the thunder of the guns. The heavy artillery of the forts of Liege were hurling shells weighing hundreds of pounds.

"Suddenly in the heat of the battle one of these giant shells dropped right into the German battery. The sand was thrown up in all directions and the shell lay in the open hollow. Although it had failed to explode, the danger of it so doing at any moment was imminent, with annihilation to the entire battery. At this moment Corporal Heinemann sprang forward, picked up the 128 pound shell and carried it from the battery into the firing line, fully aware of the fact that in doing so he exposed himself to the fire of his own lines. Had the shell exploded during those seconds it would have torn him to fragments. However, luck was with him."

"Seventy feet from the battery he dropped it and hurriedly fled, but before he had covered fifteen feet the shell burst with a deafening roar, spitting its deadly hail of iron in all directions. A miracle saved the life of Hans Heinemann. Only a splinter hit his heel. Seven hours later Liege fell. Regardless of the wound, he took part in the storming and for three hours took part in the street fighting. Then he collapsed. A French surgeon dressed his wound. Belgium papers reported his dead."

DANGER OR RESPONSIBILITY.

Is danger or responsibility the heavier burden? We know a captain once, with a chance left for one night, with only a regiment of soldiers, in sole command of a post menaced by the enemy. He did not sleep that night, and the memory of that night's responsibility remained with him all of his life more vividly than any merely personal danger he had ever encountered. Yet his commanding officer met that same responsibility, on an enormously larger scale, every day and night through the campaign and the commander-in-chief bore through the whole long war the heavy burden of the everlasting fate of a nation. And the 1st sergeant of that company would probably have found the captain's regular burden, for one night, as heavy as the Captain found the colonel's.

"One volunteer from each company to man scaling ladders" they called at Vicksburg. And a dozen men from each company stepped forward, eager to take the great risk. But the commander who had first selected a single company for that service faltered in his courage before the command could be executed and rescinded the order. A whole multitude with the courage to face personal death, but too great a strain for even the grim commander to choose which of them should be ordered to do so.

The British Admiral on the sea, the French or German commander-in-chief, have the loneliest task in the world Each, like some Valkyrie must choose thousands of men for sacrifice. Each must choose a plan of action on whose success or failure the fate of his nation and the future of the world depends.

PROHIBITION IN FRANCE.

Drinks Similar to Absinthe May Be Added to the List.

PARIS, Nov. 9.—Permanent prohibition of the sale of absinthe and kindred alcoholic beverages in France may be a result of the war. Transportation and sale of absinthe were forbidden when the war began, but the traffic in intoxicants was continued. The Government has now supplemented its original order with another forbidding the sale of any alcoholic drinks similar to absinthe.

INCREASE IN PENSIONS.

British Government Adds to Allowance to Widows and Children.

LONDON, Nov. 9—The Daily News says that a white paper will be issued to-day announcing a substantial increase in the pensions for disabled soldiers, but it will not concede a pound weekly, which has been asked.

The childless widow will receive seven shillings sixpence weekly, and may qualify for an old-age pension. The additional pension for a first child is five shillings weekly and a half crown each week for the next three. For the fifth child and onward two shillings each is allowed weekly. Thus a widow with five children would get twenty-two shillings each week. The children's allowance ceases when they leave school.

Knox Church People Paid Pastor Parting Farewell

Presented Rev. H. J. Keith and Mrs. Keith With Address and Purse of Gold—Many Tributes to His Sterling Character and Splendid Service.

A TOUCHING DEPARTURE

The congregation of Knox Church bade Godspeed to the Rev. H. J Keith and Mrs. Keith, last night, and presented them with an address and purse of gold in an endeavour to show the deep love which the associations of seven years had engendered and devlpd. ccccce lerb V.. and developed.

Rev. Mr. Keith received every assurance that his departure not only affected his late congregation, but that it was a loss to the whole city. Rev. J. R. Webb, Rev. Mr. Clarry, Rev. Robert Pogue, Rev. Mr. Connors, represented most of the churches of the City, and J. H. Burnham, M. P., and Sheriff Hall were prominent laymen, who spoke the sentiments of the great body of citizens. The farewell to the successful Pastor of Knox Church was peculiarly tinged by his own characteristics. There was nothing superficial in that parting. Effusiveness and a veneer of tinsel were entirely absent. The expressions of appreciation and esteem were, after all, but expressions and failed utterly to convey the depth of feeling that welled within. The attempts at raillery to lessen the pang of parting, fell short. In spite of the promise of future success at Knox Church, of future welcomes to the first Pastor when he may return from time to time, the severance of the ties of friendship were all too keenly felt. Not a few, but many of the congregation were visibly affected. A pastorate of nearly eight years had brough Rev. Mr. Keith in close touch with his people. His presence dominated even his ultimate meeting with his congregation and friends, and did it unconsciously and without design. And yet last night's farewell will be treasured by Knox Church people. It gave them an opportunity of expressing concretely the feelings which had gradually taken from during the past seven years. Satisfaction and regrets were strangely intermingled in the last assembly with the Rev. Mr. Keith.

Ministerial Appreciation.

The Rev. R. Pogue presided during the evening. With the Rev. Mr. Webb and Rev. Mr. Clarry, he spoke in the highest terms of Mr. and Mrs. Keith. The Pastor of Knox Church had made a mistake in creating the brother ministers, and in their references to him they left no doubt of the place he held in their hearts.

Mr. J. H. Burnham.

Speaking as a citizen for the citizens, Mr. Burnham ably responded to the demands of the occasion. The influence and service rendered to the citizens by Mr. Keith could not be summed up in a few words of froth. He appealed to the best and truest in us. He appealed to our character, and he had no patent method to employ. He did not believe that God had made a mistake in cerating the world; nor that this was a disagreeable place to live in, and the sooner we could shake off this detestable mortal coil the sooner would we have fulfilled our destiny.

Mr. Burnham said he felt Mr. Keith had believed that we were here for a purpose, to cultivate character, to cultivate the sense of responsibility to face and conquer temptation, to serve our fellow men. He had appealed to the true manliness and womanliness that is in us, and unless we possess that sense we are as but sounding brass and tinkling cymbal.

Mr. Keith has lived the life he preached. His life has overflowed and has been like a fine perfume in the air. I know that men speak of him as they do of few clergymen. I have heard them say: "There is a sound, good man who is earnest to his lips. He lives the life he preaches and I only wish I could live up to what he asks." Incidentally, Mr. Burnham touched upon the subject of fellowship, and as a parenthesis, remarked that all the preaching now heard would not be necessary if Pastors received an adequate assistence from the people.

The Presentation.

After Sheriff Hall had spoken a testimony to the services and personality of Mr. Keith, Dr. McCullouch read the farewell address from the congregation. Mr. J. F. Morrison presented Mr. Keith with a purse of gold. Mr. Keith shared in the tribute of the address.

In replying Mr. Keith said he had listened to all that had been said by the congreation, the Ministers, the citizens, and what had been written in the press, and he wished one-half of it were true. I wish the picture that has been presented of our services were what they declared it. No man is more interested in Peterborough than I am. I feel it is what it is—one of the finest cities in the Dominion, and I have had the opportunity of seeing a great many towns and cities, but I have concluded that Peterborough holds first place in my admiration and affection. Anything that I have done has been with the desire that it might be more and more an ideal city. I appreciate what Mr. Burnham said as representing the people, and I will be only too glad if my work has contributed anything to the lives of the people of this City. I have found co-operation everywhere.

Though the official records show that I severed conections with Knox Church last night, you are still my people, still my friends. There are things that records cannot break, distance cannot sever. The reason for the special tie that binds us was because this was my first charge, and the hearts of the people turned first toward me.

Rev. Mr. Keith urged the congregation to be loyal to him and Knox Church by continuing their most generous support to his successor.

At the conclusion he gave the Benediction and afterwards said a personal farewell to the congregation.

THE COURT OF REVISION

The Court of Revision will meet this afternoon for the purpose of considering a number of complaints against the assessment. A deputation of lawyers representing the Retail Merchants' Association, will wait upon the Board for the purpose of presenting the claims of the appellants connected with the Association. There is one merchant in the city who has declined the services offered by the Association. He has decided to submit his own defence, and unless some redress is made, will appeal the case in the County Court. He resents the statement of one of the members of the Court of Revision who is alleged to have stated "that as long as a property owner could sell his property for what it was assessed for, he should be satisfied."

City's Offer To Company

Commissioners Will Pay $4,450.55 For Part of Distributing System Outside of City

At a meeting of the Public Utilities Commission, which was held last evening, it was decided to write the Electric Power Company and ask them if they will accept the Commissioners' offer of $4,450.55 for that part of the system outside of the Company's system outside of the City on the same basis as the arnot acknowledged before December 1.

The Waterworks Superintendent was instructed to lay a two-inch main on Rubidge Street, from the end of the present main to a point 200 feet north. The cost of the work is estimated at $232.80. The revenue from service is $13.35, and from frontages $11.10.

Mr. C. L. Howse, manager of the Public Utilities Department, was authorized to order the necessary transformers from the Canadian General Electric Company. He was also instructed to put $4,000 of insurance on the plant in the Murray Street Power House.

A Recommendation.

A communication was received from the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission, regarding the composite curves and the measurements and billing for power, and the returns to the Electric Power Company. The Comission also recommended that an offer be made by the City to the Peterborough Light and Power Company, to take over that part over that part of the system outside the City on the same basis as the arbitrators shall fix for the system within the City.

A letter was read for mthe City Council, asking that water mains be laid on Maude street, Rubidge street, south of Murray street, and Gilchrist street, between Murray street and the creek.

The Waterworks Superintendent reported that the cost of construction, up to October 1st, this year, was $16,337.11, and the net revenue from this work was $710.98, or 16.65 per cent.

YOUTHS OBJECTED TO RECEPTION AT POLICE STATION

Fined For Disorderly Conduct

In police court this morning Everett Castle and Joseph Fallon were charged with being disorderly on Saturday night near the bridge on George Street, just south of Townsend Street. Mr. G. N. Gordon conducted the prosecution and Mr. D. O'Connell defended the young men.

Detective Meagher, the first witness, said that on Saturday night about ten minutes after eleven he was going home down George Street. Just below Townsend he came upon Castle and Fallon wrestling on the sidewalk. A woman and her daughter were approaching and as the boys were blocking the sidewalk, Meagher ordered them to go on home. Castle answered the constable back, replying to the effect that he could do what he liked on the street. After an altercation in which Castle (who is sixteen years old) said that the Police Department was no good and nobody that was any good would take a position on it, Meagher arrested the young fellow and brought him to the police station. Fallon followed, and Castle resisted arrest and made it necessary for the Detective to use force on him all the way to the station. In the scuffle to arrest Castle people passing had to go out on the road to get by.

P. C. Dainard said that Fallon followed Detective Meagher into the police station. He was told to get out and was put out three times, but insisted on coming back, and the last time started to give his opinion of the police force. As a result he was arrested and put in the cells.

Everett Castle, for the defence, said that he and Fallon were walking home Saturday night about eleven o'clock and as they separated at the corner of Townsend and George Street they had stopped to talk a little while about certain memories that particular spot called to mind. As they were standing Detective Meagher came along and told them to go home. They proceeded to do so, more slowly than the Detective thought reasonable. He told them to "get ahead," whereupon witness admonished the Detective not to get excited. Meagher then arrested him. On the way to the police station witness called the officer a "boob." The officer then threatened to "punch his d——d head in."

Witness was also exceedingly indignant at the way he was used at the police station and at the company he was introduced to when he arrived there. He related in an offended tone that when he entered the cell one drunk had "one boot off and the other on" and that "there was a man with a lump on his back who walked upon and down all night muttering about feeding horses in Norwood." He said that on Sunday night one of the policemen brought two young ladies into the cell and locked them up in the same cell with him for fun. Then on Saturday night, when the last prisoner was brought in the officer referred him to the witness (who was then wearing his overcoat) as the spiritual advisor and asked him what time he was going to hold service. All of which aroused the young man's ire.

Fallon (who was in the room during the hearing of the preceding witness) corroborated Castle's evidence with astonishing accuracy. They both agreed that Meagher, when Fallon first entered the station, turned around and kicked him out with the word, "Get to h——l out of here," whereas Detective Meagher swore when recalled to the box, that he had not laid a hand on Fallon during any of the proceedings.

At the close of the case Mr. O'Connell very ably summed up the evidence to show that the two youthful defendants were not guilty of disorderly conduct. The Magistrate, however, ruled differently and finding them guilty, fined them $2 each. The case may be appealed.

In his evidence Castle complained that he was not allowed to get in touch with his father, and was kept in the cell all day Sunday, as well as Saturday night. Mr. Castle, Sr., the boy's father, went in the witness box to say that his son, on Sunday evening when he was released, was given a parting shove and injunction. The evidence caused Mr. Gordon to remark that the young man might have expected a taxi-cab to take him home.

Detective Meagher absolutely denied the story that he swore at Castle or at Fallon.

Servia Defeats Austrians.

Canon Davidson In Belleville

In an excellent sermon at Christ church Sunday evening, Rev. J. C. Davidson of Peterborough, said:

He had been struck by the flags flying, not only from public buildings, but also from individual homes, some small and worn, but each one carrying its message of National inspiration.

Canon Davidson made the suggestion that when the Canadian troops went from England to the front that flags should be hung out from the houses of citizens generally, especially of those who had the high honour of sending forth a soldier to fight for the Empire and of those who would have gone had the opportunity been given to them. The Union Jack should thrill the hearts of all who saw it, especially at this time. As a cross-emblazoned banner it was a religious flag and should carry not only a national but a religious message, stimulating to all who had eyes to see and hearts to respond.

The congregation then rose and enthusiastically joined in the National Anthem, after which the preacher proceeded with his sermon on "Concrete Christianity."

GERMANS STAKE EVERYTHING ON TERRIBLE ATTACK

At Ypres—British Are Holding Their Places and Have Actually Advanced in Face of Assaults of Unprecedented Ferocity—Fog Blankets Operations.

LONDON, June 10.—Following the comparative lull of the past few days in Belgium and along the line in Northwestern France, the Germans have thrown six Hundred thousand men into the fight for Ypres, held by British and French forces. When it seemed that the final word had been reached in the previous conflicts on his front, the fighting of yesterday is declared to be fiercer than ever before. The opposing armies simply fly at one another's throats and the attacking regiments come back in shreds. But despite everything the allies are still holding and have actually advanced at several points around Ypres and further west. The main German assaults are understood to have been delivered southeast of Ypres, all of which were frustrated. The present conflict will be the last on the present front. Either force must win or lose, and the allies await the outcome with perfect confidence.

From the bare and meagre details given out in Paris, it can be drawn that a major operation is under way. The opposing trenches are so close together that it is impossible to bring heavy guns into play for fear of inflicting as much damage on friend as on foe. Bayonet fighting is the order of the day and sanguinary contests mark every hour of the twenty-four. A heavy fog which rolled in from the North Sea served to complicate matters still further yesterday. Aviators were helpless in the face of this damp blanket and cavalry patrols were in constant danger of stumbling into a host of their enemies.

Along the sand dunes of the Flanders' coast, the Belgians are holding stubbornly to their own and all of the German efforts to advance have been beaten off. Another assault was attempted on Nieuport, but without success.

Dixmude has been under a heavy bombardment and infantry movements were reported from that zone, the allies holding their own steadily.

The storm centre is at Ypres and here the British have concentrated their effectiveness. Nothing which the Germans have been able to do has ruffled the calm of their defence. The German guns shell the British positions, their troops come forward at [illegible] line of dead and wounded marks their retreat. This manoeuvre is repeated over and over again, varied by counter assaults in which Tommy Atkins has so far more than held his own. But the cost in men is very serious, some regiments have lost nearly all their officers, and a number of splintered companies having been absorbed by others only less distressed. A chain of wounded is constantly moving rearward.

As indicated in the War Office statement the French have met with excellent success on their centre and extreme right. The situation improves steadily around Verdun.

Private advices from Berlin, by way of Copenhagen, confirm the report that the Germans are transferring a considerable number of troops from the west to the east.

The German newspapers have not published the news of the great Russian advance to the Silesian frontier.

The news has been confirmed that the Crown Prince, in person, is commanding the central army on the eastern front of battle.

Another Berlin report declares that the Germans most decidedly have not abandoned their project of reaching Calais. The report adds that the main object of the western operations is still to open a road to the French coast.

A despatch from Berlin received last night by the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co., says:

"Main headquarters reports that several of the enemy's ships again attacked our right wing yesterday afternoon, but were rapidly driven off by our artillery."

The correspondent of The Amsterdam Tijd at Antwerp says:

"The movement of German troops from the western theatre of the war, on a big scale is now progressing. A large number appear to have been withdrawn from the Yser.

"Long military trains filled with men and ammunitions are moving into Germany by way of Brussels and Louvain."

A despatch from Berlin says that a panic exists over the advance of the Russians into Eastern Prussia, and troops are being rushed to Poland from Belgium.

2ND ANNIVERSARY OF THE ANGLICAN CHURCH OF ST. GEORGE

This Flourishing Little Church Held an Anniversary Supper Last Evening

The thriving and energetic little community of English-folk forming the congregation of the growing church of St. George in South Peterborough has been celebrating its second anniversary.

Last evening the proceedings took the form of a parish supper, followed by an entertainment, in the school room, at which a very considerable number—not only of the parishioners but of friends from St. John's Church in the city as well as a few members of other communions—were present, the school room being quite filled.

After the repast, which by the way, was of the type usually known as a "New England" supper—served by the ladies belonging to the Ladies' Auxiliary, the willing hands of "mere men" cleared away the tables and re-arranged the chairs when an impromptu, informal variety entertainment was commenced.

The rector, the Rev. Jas. Price, was chairman, and opened the proceedings by a few humourous remarks, which set the whole audience up to boiling good-natured point, observing that although chairman no chair had been provided for him and called on the orchestra to open the proceedings.

Mr. Turner's orchestra of seven pieces had most generously offered their services for the occasion, and the groupe added greatly to the general enjoyment of the evening, their offerings being largely appreciated.

Mrs. Scholey (nee Miss Bessie Grenhalgh), who is a prime favourite with the St. George's people, sang a couple of songs in her usual sympathetic, unaffected style, and needless to say, was highly applauded, more especially in "The Song That Reached My Heart." Mr. Cole, a ventriloquist, gave some good specimens of his ability, more especially in his imitation of a street newsboy selling the leading Peterborough paper, which, of course, all the world knows, is the "Evening Examiner." All the artists acquitted themselves creditably, winning a large meed of applause, not the least being given to two young vocal debutantes—the Misses Cole. During the performance the rector interpolated some humourous anecdotes, of which he has apparently an endless stock, which just convulsed his hearers.

In the interval between parts I. and II., of the programme, the Rev. Jas. Price took the opportunity of saying a few words anent the assistance given by some of the members of St. John's congregation to the daughter Church of St. George, as also to the offshoot of this church, viz., the St. Alban's Mission at Brownton.

The reverend gentleman remarked that without the help of St. John's there could not have been a St. George's Church, let alone a Saint Alban's Mission. Some of the St. John's people who have a very kindly feeling towards their poorer relations at St. George's, having provided a large number of requisites for St. George's, had now turned their kindly eyes to St. Alban's and were providing the requisites for that little mission. As an instance, he stated that on Sunday evening it was announced in St. John's Church that St. Alban's needed a heating stove. During the next morning he received four offers of a heater, all from St. John's people. From the members of this church, and from an occasional worshipper there, he had received forty-eight chairs, and a harmonium. These were only some of the many gifts coming from sympathizing members of the church which had fully earned its title of "Mother."

The following is the programme submitted:

Opening Speech—The Rector.
Selection—The orchestra.
Song—Mr. A. Leigh.
Vocal Duet—The Misses Cole.
Song—Mr. Woodrow.
Song—"The Song That Reached My Heart." Mrs. Scholey.
Selection—The orchestra.
Speech—The Rector.
Selection—The orchestra.
Comic Song—"It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary." Mr. Farr.
Ventriloquism—Mr. Cole.
Song—Mrs. Scholey.
Song—Mr. Barn.
Vocal Duet—"Sweet and Low," the Misses Cole.
Song—Mr. Woodrow.
Song—"Last Night Was the End of the World," Mr. Farr.
Selection—The orchestra.
Chorus—"God Save the King."

Mr. Churchwarden Holmes then proposed a vote of thanks to the orchestra, the artistes and to the ladies who had provided the eatables and served the tables. This was seconded by Mr. Sidesman Jay, and, it is needless to say, was enthusiastically carried by this warm-hearted united audience composed mainly of British-born people.

Mr. Holmes further suggested that a similar entertainment should be held once a month — a proposition meeting with general acquiescence.

The proceeds of the evening are to be devoted to the liquidation of the cost incurred in building a shed for the accommodation of the horses and vehicles of such members of the congregation who have to drive to this place of worship, some seventy to eighty dollars having been disbursed on this project.—F. R.

CLUB HOUSES WERE SEIZED

Montreal German's Place Had Concrete Bed Foundation

MONTREAL, Nov. 10. — Through the arrest of John Hoe, alias John Hughes, Inspector Brousseau, of the Inland Revenue Department, believes that a plot has been uncovered whereby a foreign foe, by means of a battery of guns, might control from a strategical point in Longueill all five railroad lines entering Montreal. He is charged with selling liquor without a license.

Hoe's place of business, it is alleged was the rendezvous of many Germans of Montreal. The foundation of this club house is alleged to be of solid concrete construction in the style used for the mounting of heavy guns used by the German army.

Inspector Brousseau seized, when he raided Hoe's premises, a large quantity of ammunition, which turned out to be regular "war ammunition."

SEVEN PERSONS ARE INJURED

When Church Floor Collapses Near Port Hope

PORT HOPE, Ont., Nov. 10.—Seven persons were injured in the collapse of the rear half of the floor of the Methodist Church at Shiloh while special services were being held to mark the re-opening of the edifice, which had been closed a month for repairs. A large congregation had assembled for the occasion. Those hurt were: Master White, internal injuries; Albert Campbell, back hurt; Miss Elva White, leg broken; Miss Stalker, leg broken; Mrs. N. R. Smith, Mrs. Amos McMullen, and Mrs. Bullied.

The accident happened just after the congregation had assembled. With the people went down chairs, seats, and two stoves with fires burning in each.

Albert Campbell, one of the injured, had been unable to gain admission to the church owing to the size of the congregation, and he seated himself in the basement. He was crushed to the floor under the debris, and when found had a heavy beam across his back.

A REBELLION

Food Demanded.

The human body will stand a lot of abuse but sometime it will surely rebel and demand proper food in place of the pasty, starchy, greasy stuffs on which it has been made sick.

Then is the time to try Grape-Nuts, the most scientific and perfect food in the world.

A lady writes: "Three years ago I was very ill with catarrh of the stomach and was given up to die by one doctor. I laid in bed four months and my stomach was so weak that I could not keep down medicine or hardly any kind of food and was so weak and emaciated after four months of this starvation that my daughter could easily lift me from bed and put me in my chair.

"But weak as my stomach was, it accepted, relished and digested Grape-Nuts without any difficulty the first tim that wonderful food was tried.

"I am now strong and in better health than for a great many years and am gradually growing still stronger. I rely on Grape-Nuts for much of the nourishment that I get. The results have certainly been wonderful in my case and prove that no stomach is so weak it will not digest Grape-Nuts.

"My baby got fat from feeding on Grape-Nuts. I was afraid I would have to stop giving the food to him, but I guess it is a healthy fat for his health is just perfect." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

Results of Investigation

The committee appointed by the County Council to investigate the complaint of Mr. Cochlan, brought in the following finding:

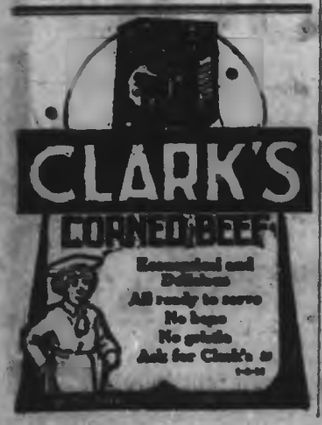
"With reference to the complaints of Mr. Cochlan now in the House of Providence as to him receiving no correspondence and his letters not reaching their destination while he was in the County House of Refuge, the superintendent and matron affirm that any letters either sent from the inmates or directed to them were handled in the usual way, there being no letters detained either way.

The superintendent acknowledged intercepting a note, not enclosed, directed to the parish priest at Lakefield, and upon interviewing the priest the next day, Mr. Beavis says the priest approved of such interception.

Mr. Beavis also stated that upon visiting the Mother Superior of the House of Providence, she stated that Mr. Cochlan made trouble there, and she expected he would do the same at the House of Refuge.

With regard to a letter that Mr. Cochlan said looked like having been tampered with, Mr. Beavis said that the letter was not properly directed and fell into the hands of some Mr. Cochlan in Douro, and was then forwarded to the House of Refuge.

With reference to being harsh with Mr. Cochlan while he was in the House of Refuge, Mr. Beavis said that he received the same treatment as the other inmates, but strict discipline with regard to cleanliness had to be exercised as Mr. Cochlan was the dirtiest inmate in the House of Refuge at that time.



TO TRAVERSE THE CANAL?

Seven British Dreadnoughts on Way to Pacific

PANAMA, Nov. 10.—Panama Canal officials and members of the Legation here say they have no information concerning the report that seven British Dreadnoughts were in the Atlantic bound west, possibly with the intention of proceeding through the Panama Canal to Pacific waters.

Col. George W. Goethals, governor of the Panama Canal zone, says he has heard nothing from Washington relative to the use of the canal by warships.

The whereabouts of the German warships in the Pacific is unknown here.

Glasgow in the Straits.

SANTIAGO, Chile, Nov. 10.—The British cruiser Glasgow, which was engaged with the German squadron in a battle off the Chilean Coast on Sunday, Nov. 1, and the British transport Otranto have passed Delgada Point Light in the Straits of Magellan, bound for the Falkland Islands, a British possession to the east of the extreme southern point of South America.

This information is contained in advices received here by the Admiralty from the naval authorities in the Straits of Magellan, who said they had seen the Glasgow and Otranto passing through the straits toward the Atlantic.

Jap Warship at Honolulu.

HONOLULU, Nov. 10. — After receiving word that the German gunboat Geier had been interned here for the duration of the war, the Japanese battleship Hizen, which has been keeping a watch for the Geier outside the harbor entered this port yesterday for fuel and provisions. Under the neutrality regulations the Hizen is privileged to remain 24 hours.

CANADIAN UNIT LEAVES FOR FRONT

SALISBURY, Nov. 10.—The honor of being the first Canadian unit to leave for the front has fallen to No. 2 Stationary Hospital and fifty Canadian nursing sisters. They left yesterday for France, Lt.-Col. A. T. Shillington, Ottawa, in command. The staff includes nine officers and one hundred and fifty men.

Seven thousand of the Canadian expeditionary force on Salisbury Plains, including the Fourth Infantry Brigade, moved into huts yesterday.

CANADA'S FOOD GIFT NOT LEFT ON DOCKS

LONDON, Nov. 9.—Hon. G. H. Perley stated that there is no truth whatever in the report published recently in a London paper that Canada's food contributions have been lying neglected on the docks owing to a failure to provide sufficient accommodation for storage.

The Local Government Board, without exception, says Mr. Perley, has dealt promptly with all cargoes from Canada, which, at the outside, have only remained in the dock for a few hours.

As an example, it may be mentioned that arrangements have already been fully made for dealing with the farmers' contribution expected shortly.

INCIDENTS OF RHEIMS SIEGE

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.— Three soldiers of France, all discharged from the French army because of disability and all bearing wounds which showed they had been in the thick of the fighting, arrived here to-day on board the steamship Rochambeau, from Havre. They were George Pieriot and Leon Leblot, on their way to their homes in Canada, and John Rosenblem, returning to his home in Holbrook, Mass. Leblot hobbled off the ship with the aid of canes.

Pierlot and Leblot were wounded in the defence of Rheims. Leblot said that in the hand to hand fighting there he received a bayonet wound in his side and was carried to the rear, While a Sister of Charity, whom he knew only as Anna, was binding his wounds, a German bullet killed her and her body fell across him. Leblot said he later returned to the firing line and was twice wounded in one leg. After that he quit.

Bodies as Barricades.

"The Germans used the bodies of their dead as barricades, and we had to climb over them," said Leblot.

Pierlot received a sabre thrust in his left shoulder before Rheims and was carried to safety by a comrade.

He said that the artillery opened the battle and rained shells on the opposing lines for three hours. Then, he said, the men closed in and fought hand to hand for three hours. Then the artillery battle was resumed.

Rosenbem was wounded at Muelhausen. In the fighting he lost his rifle and was slashed in the arm with a sabre.

The Destruction of Ypres Has Been Complete

Examiner Special:

PARIS, Nov. 10.—The Allied lines are holding solidly against the fierce, continuous attack of the Germans in the vicinity of Ypres. At the War Office it is declared that the enemy is bringing tremendous pressure to bear on what would seem to be a supreme effort to crush the allied defence. Ypres is totally destroyed by flames. The roar of the big guns is incessant, as the Germans keep constant artillery fire, under cover of which the infantry assaults are made upon the British and French trenches.

Didn't Know It Was Loaded

Mr. Harry Hall, son of Mr. Joseph Hall, South Ops, receive a painful wound in the right foot on Sunday afternoon through the careless discharge of a revolver in his own hand.

Mr. Hall had received the weapon as a gift from a member of the volunteer contingent on Saturday last, and it was at the home of Mr. Thos. Hawkins where the accident happened. It appears that young Hall, in company with Garfield Hawkins, and L. Vanstone, went out to the barn after dinner to examine the revolver, thinking it was empty, and Hall started snapping the hammer with the muzzle towards the barn floor. He clicked it around several times, when it finally went off, with the result that the ball went through his heel. On going to Mr. Hawkins' house and taking off his shoe the bullet dropped out upon the floor. He was taken to his home and a doctor summoned, who pronounced the injury not serious.—Lindsay Warder.

SAON CROWN PRINCE IS INVALIDED HOME

LONDON, Nov. 8.— Owing to a serious wound in the leg received in action on the battlefield in France, Crown Prince George of Saxony has arrived at the Royal castle at Dresden, and will take no further part in the campaign, says a despatch from The Hague to the Exchange Telegraph Company.

400,000 Meals a Day Given to Belgians Through the American Commission

Systematic Arrangements Made for Distributing Food Throughout the Country--Two More Dutch Steamships Ready to Leave England With More Supplies---Officials Tell of Fears of Famine and Give Thanks for Help Thus Far Given

LONDON, Nov. 8.—Provisions sent to Brussels by the American commission for the relief of Belgium already are supplying 400,000 meals daily, and arrangements are now complete for carrying on a similar work throughout that part of Belgium occupied by the Germans.

The Dutch steamship Jan Block is on its way loaded with 2,000 tons of wheat, rice, peas, beans and flour, and it is expected that the Dutch steamship Tellus will leave with 1,700 tons of wheat. Both ships will proceed to Rotterdam, where their cargoes will be taken over by representatives of the American commission.

Herbert Clark Hoover, chairman of the American commission, received the following telegram from Captain T. F. Lucy, the commission's representative at Rotterdam:

"Langhorne, Wyman and Bell (Morris M. Langhorne, Secretary of the American Legation to the Netherlands and Luxemburg; F. B. Wyman, member of the Relief Commission, and Edward Bell, Second Secretary of the American Embassy at London) have returned from Brussels, where 400,000 meals per day are being issued. Those persons who are able to pay are being charged five cents for the meals. The meal costs fifteen cents, and Bell says that rich and poor stand in line for these meals as the only way they can get food."

"They state that very complete arrangements have been entered into by the Central Committee for receiving and distributing supplies throughout Belgium. The country has been divided into provinces, each province handling its own distribution and being represented by two members of the Central Committee. All requisitions on this office will come from the Central Committee through the American and Spanish Ministers. A sub-committee in turn will sell food to the committees which will resell or distribute free to those in need.

"The sub-committees are formed generally by members of the town councils, so that the whole organization has an official and unquestionable standing. They are all in accord and are holding meetings from time to time at Brussels and compiling data of the needs of every district regardless of how remote. The people are elated at the shipments and the practical results given.

"Some uneasiness is felt here by Belgians as the result of quotations from the American press to the effect that supplies would be seized by the military authorities. They are afraid that this will stop the shipment of supplies. I have assured them that the supplies would come regardless of these unfounded suppositions.

"Whitlock (Brand Whitlock, American Minister to Belgium) is personally supervising and compiling the detailed requirements of the various districts to be forwarded to you."

PREPARED TO MEET EMERGENCIES.

That all emergencies are being forestalled is evident from a note issued by the Central Committee in Belgium, in which it is stated that the commission will have a delegate in each province who will see that the shipment of food supplies arrives intact, and who must be informed of any infraction by the German troops of the guarantees given by Field Marshal Baron von der Goltz, Military Governor of the occupied part of Belgium. If this delegate, protected by the American flag, learns of any such infraction he will verify it and immediately call attention to it, when the Ministers of Spain and America will make proper representations to the German authorities.

At a meeting of the Belgian Central Committee, Ernest Solvay, the Belgian manufacturer, who is a member of it, in thanking the American and Spanish Ministers and the American commission for the service rendered to Belgium, said that the population of Belgium was at the point of famine and that fear of disaster was general in view of the terrible days they had endured. Thanks to the Americans, he said, they had overcome, at least for the time being, the terrible position in which the country had been placed and the future now looked more favourable.

Joseph Botogne, Belgian Deputy and member of the Namur Town Council, and A. J. Jourens, Deputy and member of the Liege Town Council, in a signed statement sent to the commission, say:

"We have rudely suffered. After the atrocities and horrors of war we are now threatened by famine. The German armies since the beginning of the invasion have lived on our soil by requisitioning victuals of all nature.

GRAIN PRODUCTION INSUFFICIENT.

Our production of grain normally is hardly sufficient for a fifth of the consumption. The maritime route being closed for the import of grain, our country would be famished in a very short time. Solely for Liege and its environs 1,500 bags of grain a day is necessary. At the moment of writing we have hardly grain enough for a few days.

"Without the generous assistance of the United States it would mean for us famine with its unavoidable consequences of riots and plundering. We have suffering enough. At least let this misfortune be spared us. We are convinced that you will sympathize with our undeserved miseries.

"In the province of Liege the city has first been compelled to pay a war contribution of 20,000,000 francs ($6,000,000), while the requisitions which have been made so far exceed 80,000,000 francs. The city of Liege has a population of 117,000 inhabitants, and its ordinary annual budget hardly reached 14,000,000 francs."

Emile Digneffi and Paul Staes, members of the Liege town council, in a statement to the commission, say:

"To sum up the situation, an industrial population of high efficiency is entirely ont of work and cannot earn its food. It has no reserves any more in food or savings and rescue is immediately and urgently needed for fear that catastrophe would be brought home socsemht fra wdo ylly punnnnu about by impending starvation, and food for relief is only the beginning of all kinds of relief up to the time when the population is allowed to organise its work again."

lied powers by the destruction and capture of vessels, not including the loss of trade. The nearest approach to the record of the Emden has been made by the German cruiser Karlsruhe, which is still operating in the Atlantic. The Karlsruhe has sunk twelve British vessels to-date.

LONDON, November 10.—The German cruiser Emden, which has been one of the terrors of British shipping in the Pacific, has been destroyed by the British warship Sydney. The Admiralty announced to-day that the Emden has been driven ashore on Cocos Island and then burned to the water's edge.

The Sydney which finally ran down the Emden after a chase which has lasted for several days, is a part of the Australian navy. It is presumed that it was the Sydney which located the Emden only a few days ago, and sank one of her storeships and captured another. The fleet German vessel escaped, however, showing a clear pair of heels to the British vessel. The Emden's most notable feat was her raid into Penang Harbour, where she sank a Russian cruiser and a French destroyer.

The cruiser Sydney, which destroyed the Emden, called in Berlin, the "terror of the seas," is one of the protected cruisers belonging to the Australian navy. She was completed in 1913, displaces 5,600 tons, is 430 feet long, and has a speed of 25 1-2 knots. Her armament consists of eight 6-inch guns and some small quick firers, with two submerged torpedo tubes. She carried 400 officers and men. The Emden was a protected cruiser of 3,540 tons, with a maximum speed of 24 1-2 knots. Her armament consisted of ten 4.1 inch quick firing guns and two torpedo tubes. She carried 361 officers and men.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—The Admiralty announces that Captain Karl Von Muller, commander of the Emden, was among those rescued and taken prisoner.

LONDON, November 10.—That the Emden fought to the last for her life is evidenced by the fact that the Sydney did not escape without loss of life on board. Three men were killed and fifteen injured. When the Emden went ashore she was hopelessly out of commission but the Sydney made sure of her work by firing a few more shots before drawing off. Every officer and member of the crew of the Emden has been awarded the iron cross by the Kaiser for brilliant work at sea. Captain Von Muller and his men realized that sooner or later they must be sent to the bottom. The Emden's Captain was recently quoted as declaring to the German Admiralty that he knew that his vessel would some time or other be run down and destroyed, but until that time came the Emden would give a thorough account of herself.

One of the wonders in connection with the work of the Emden was the system under which she was kept supplied with coal and provisions. On August 6th it was reported that the Emden had been in action with a Russian cruiser and that both had been sent to the bottom. A month later the Emden suddenly appeared in the Bay of Bengal and sank five British merchantmen and captured another.

Since the opening of the war the German cruiser Emden has sunk or captured twenty-three vessels, including several war ships. Most of the merchantmen she acounted for were carrying the British flag. The Admiralty adds that it is thought many of the officers and men of the Emden lost their lives in the action with H.M.S. Sydney.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—The Earl of Annesley, who has large estates in Ireland and who is a lieutenant in the royal flying corps, left on a reconnaisance over Antwerp last Friday, has not been heard from since. It is feared that he has been killed by German aeroplane guns.

Glasgow and Otranto To Falkland Island

SANTIAGO, Chile, Nov. 9.—The British cruiser Glasgow, which was engaged with the German squadron in battle off the Chilean coast Sunday, November 1, and the British transport Otranto have passed Delgada Light, in the Straits of Magellan, bound for the Falkland Islands, a British possession to the east and extreme southern point of South America.

This information is contained in advices received here by the Admiralty from naval authorities in the Straits of Magellan, who said they had seen the Glasgow and Otranto passing through the straits toward the Atlantic.

ROTTERDAM, Nov. 10.—Reports received here declare that 35,000 Germans and 100 guns have withdrawn from Thieult and retreated in the direction of Ghent. The report declares this movement is part of a German retreat of considerable extent and that there is the greatest discontent in the ranks of the Kaiser's men.

NEW YORK CITY, Nov. 10.—There was a startling rumour here to-day that the United States war ship, North Carolina, had been blown up by striking a mine in the Mediterranean. The Secretary of the Navy at Washington had no information regarding it.

WOMEN CAN HARDLY BELIEVE

How Mrs. Hurley Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Eldon, Mo.—"I was troubled with displacement, inflammation and female weakness. For two years I could not stand on my feet long at a time and I could not walk two blocks without enduring cutting and drawing pains down my right side which increased every month. I have been at that time purple in the face and would walk the floor. I could not lie down or sit still sometimes for a day and a night at a time. I was nervous, and had very little appetite, no ambition, melancholy, and often felt as though I had not a friend in the world. After I had tried most every female remedy without success, my mother-in-law advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and gained in strength every day. I have now no trouble in any way and highly praise your medicine. It advertises itself."—Mrs. S. T. HURLEY, Eldon, Missouri.

Remember, the remedy which did this was Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. For sale everywhere.

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means have failed. Why don't you try it? Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

TWENTY SUBMARINES FOR GREAT BRITAIN

NEW YORK, Nov. 9. — Twenty submarines are to be built at once at the Quincy works for a foreign Government. The submarines are not to be completed here, but are to be built in sections for shipment.

There is reason to believe that the officials of the plant do not know for which of the warring nations the boats are intended.

The Bethlehem Steel Corporation sent the order to Quincy. The workmen at Quincy believe the submarines are destined to go to the English navy.

Quickest, Surest Cough Remedy is Home-Made

"Pinex" Prepared in a Few Minutes. Cheap but Unequaled

Some people are constantly annoyed from one year's end to the other with a persistent bronchial cough, which is wholly unnecessary. Here is a home-made remedy that gets right at the cause and will make you wonder what became of it. Get 2½ ounces Pinex (50 cents worth) from any druggist, pour into a 16-ounce bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. Start taking it at once. Gradually but surely you will notice the phlegm thin out and then disappear altogether, thus ending a cough that you never thought would end. It also loosens the dry, hoarse or tight cough and heals the inflammation in a painful cough with remarkable rapidity. Ordinary coughs are conquered by it in 24 hours or less. Nothing better for bronchitis, winter coughs and bronchial asthma.

This Pinex and Sugar Syrup mixture makes 16 ounces—enough to last a family a long time—at a cost of only 54 cents. Keeps perfectly and tastes pleasant. Easily prepared. Full directions with Pinex.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, and is famous the world over for its ease, certainty and promptness in overcoming bad coughs, chest and throat colds.

Get the genuine. Ask your druggist for "Pinex," ounces, and do not accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

RUSSIA MAY DEFER INVASION OF GERMANY

LONDON, Nov. 9.—Russia dominates the military situation to-day. The speed with which she has cleared the invaders from Russian Poland was totally unexpected, and must necessarily have a great effect on the campaigns in the other war theatres.

Already the terror-stricken inhabitants are reported fleeing from their prosperous Silesian homes, despite the fact that General Von Hindenburg's strong army is between them and the advancing Russians. But something besides the might of the Germans arms may enable them to remain still and for some time in security, for a significant message from Petragrad announces that Russia may defer the invasion of Germany until her historic mission toward the Bosphorus is accomplished.

The New Russian Plan.

This mission includes the complete subjection of Austro-Hungary, as well as the invasion of Turkey, and if this is the actual plan of the Grand Duke Nicholas, the Russian commander-in-chief, the Russians may be content to hold their present positions along the German border while making an aggressive war toward the south and east.

The Cossack raids continue across the German border and Berlin now admits that the Russians are well beyond the River Warthe. The Russian advance has been made over bad roads at the unprecedented rate of 14 miles daily and the German retreat has now passed Czernstochowa without stopping. The Russian line is well back of the Warthe between Czernostochowa and Kalsiz.

Another Petrograd report states that Czernstochowa is still held as the last German position in Russia, but that this is regarded as untenable.

Holland, determined to preserve the neutrality of the River Scheldt, has announced that the Flushing forts will fire on any vessel not recognized as a mail boat or other regular harbour craft.

Private reports reaching Berne, Switzerland, from Constantinople, indicate that Turkey has entered the war with an empty treasury. She has exhausted the German loan, and used up the money derived from the tax on imports.

A MESSAGE TO THIN, WEAK, SCRAWNY FOLKS

An Easy Way to Gain 10 to 30 lbs. of Solid, Healthy, Permanent Flesh

Thin, nervous, undeveloped men and women everywhere are heard to say, "I can't understand why I do not get fat. I eat plenty of good, nourishing food." The reason is that they do not get the fat, no matter how much they eat, unless your digestive organs assimilate the fat-making elements of your food instead of passing them out through the body as waste.

What is needed is a means of gently urging the assimilative functions of the stomach and intestines to absorb the oils and fats and hand them over to the blood, where they may reach the starved, shrunken, run-down tissues and build them up. The thin person's body is like a dry sponge—eager and hungry for the fatty materials of which it is being deprived by the failure of the alimentary canal to take them from the food. The best way to overcome this sinful waste of flesh building elements and to stop the leakage of fats is to use Sargol, the recently discovered regenerative force that is recommended so highly by physicians here and abroad. Take a little Sargol tablet with every meal and notice how quickly your cheeks fill out and rolls of firm, healthy flesh are deposited over your body, covering each bony angle and projecting point. Good druggists have Sargol, or can get it from their wholesaler, and will refund your money if you are not satisfied with the gain in weight it produces as stated on the guarantee in each package. It is inexpensive, easy to take and highly efficient.

Caution:—While Sargol has produced remarkable results in overcoming nervous dyspepsia and general stomach troubles, it should not be taken unless you are willing to gain ten pounds or more, for it is a wonderful flesh builder.

CATTLE IMPORT HAS CLOSED

Six Months' Ban Has Been Established Because of Disease

OTTAWA, Nov. 10.—The foot-and-mouth disease epidemic among cattle in the United States has assumed such serious proportions that the Government here has been compelled to pass stringent importation regulations applying to the whole of the Republic. Word was also received here that the United States has prohibited the importation of cattle from Canada for reasons given below. Several orders-in-council had been previously passed by the Canadian Government prohibiting the importation from a number of states of commodities which might carry the disease. The epidemic has now spread in a virulent form to no less than eleven states, including New York, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, Iowa, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Delaware, while two other states are under suspicion. It has therefore been considered necessary to prohibit the importation from any part of the U. S. of the following: Cattle, sheep, swine or goats, or the flesh, hides, hoofs, horns or other parts of such animals (with the exception of cured meats, lard and tallow), or of hay, straw, fodder or manure. The prohibition is to be in effect for a period of six months, after which it may be raised or extended, according to conditions.

So far there has been no trace of the disease reported from any part of Canada.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

THE BLACKBURN ROVERS PROVE THEIR SUPERIORITY

Sunderland Sprang a Surprise on Sheffield Wednesday--The League Tables

It was a near thing with Manchester City on Saturday. The "Blades" of Sheffield almost cut away that unbroken league record which the citizens are so proud of. It was not Sheffield's keenest blades either and the United are to be congratulated on running the Hyde road team to a goalless draw. Oldham continue to pursue the Mancunians closely and that was a very creditable victory they had at Burnley.

At Liverpool the Rovers of Blackburn proved their superiority over Everton and the points gained may be regarded as most valuable. Sunderland sprung a surprise on Sheffield Wednesday who for once found their shooting at fault. Liverpool the only team to lower Manchester City's colours this season (it was in a Lancashire Cup tie) did splendidly in dividing points at New castle.

Weak Gunners.

The Arsenal team are not doing so well now and seem to be short of ammunition. By losing to Birmingham on Saturday they drop from second place in the second division, a position which is now occupied by Bristol City, who are shaping extremely well this season. Huddersfield still hold a commanding lead.

Brighton Still Lead.

In the Southern League Exeter City were top scorers, Southend United going down before them by 7—1. Brighton and Hove just managed to share the points with Millwall, but as Reading fell to West Ham the team of the famous health resort keep their place at the top.

Poor Hibs.

While Hearts delight the Edinburgh folks Saturday after Saturday and all is joy at Tynecastle there is a feeling of depression at Easter Road where the Hibernians are none too well, and it is significant that whilst the one team is at the top of the table the other is right at the bottom. Raith Rovers had a brilliant victory at Aberdeen and Ayr's draw at Falkirk proves that the "Auld Toon" team's previous successes cannot be regarded as a flash in the pan.

BIG BASKET BALL SEASON IN SIGHT AT THE Y.M.C.A.

Real basket ball weather is at hand, and every day finds a group of men and boys at the local Y.M.C.A. getting their eye on the basket, and their muscles in trim to put up a good article of this most popular indoor game.

All indications point to the most successful basket ball season in years. Many of the old boys who have the reputation of being the fastest that ever played the game in Peterborough are back and the way they are caging the ball shows that they have not lost their eye for the basket. And the speed they display in covering the floor will make some of the youngsters pant before the season is over. Among the old timers who are back will be found Ross Dobbin, who learned the game in the local Association, and had such good training that he made the 'Varsity team his first year in college. He also managed 'Varsity. Ross is chairman of the basketball committee which assures the followers of the game lots of sport. He will also lead a team for the business men in the league which is starting this week. Ray Best, W. Richardson, G. Robertson, H. B. Cowan, P. McCarrell will be some of the prominent figures on Dobbin's team.

Charlie Sisson, another faithful worker, will lead a team for the junior business men, and he has some A1 material.

The Cressman Co. is entering a team, with both Harry and Fred on it. Fred holds laurels for being a forward of the highest calibre, and is a hard man to stop once he gets going. The Cressman boys will put in a team that will make them all travel.

There will be three teams from the senior class led by Chaud Bartlett. Walter Flowers and Bill Rew. The youngsters have all got lots of fire and dash. The Young Men's Excelsior Club of George St. Church will enter a team under the leadership of Alex. Darling, while St. Paul's will be led by D. Loucks.

If there are enough men who want to play, and do not find a place on one of these eight teams, they will be taken care of in another league.

These games will not interfere with the regular gymnasium class work. While there are some games played on Monday and Wednesday nights, they will come after the regular class.

Schedule.

RUSSIANS ARE AT THE FRONTIER

Zones of Contest Are All on German Soil in the East

PETROGRAD, Nov. 10.—The following communication from the Russian General Staff was issued last night:

"On the East Prussian frontier fighting continues. The Russian troops have occupied Solap (Goldap?) in the direction of Mlawa (Poland) we have advanced and stopped the movement of railway trains of the enemy near the stations of Soldau (East Prussia).

"Beyond the Vistula, the Germans have withdrawn from Wieclawek to Niessuma and from Konin to Sheopsy (Slupse?).

"On the roads to Cracow we are continuing to push back the rear guards of the Austrians.

"South of Przemysl Nov. 7 we captured 1,000 prisoners and a number of cannon.

All the zones of contact are now inside German territory. The Russians took 1,500 wagons laden with coal standing in the railway sidings in East Prussia in positions which the Germans had evacuated. The Russian cavalry which invaded the position had pierced the left flank of the enemy at the crossing of the Warta at Konin. These cavalry operations, with strong supports, have nullified the entire defensive preparations of the Germans inside the Polish frontier.

The Russians now hold without resistance the great line of entrenchments running from Czenstochow southward on Cracow and northward on Kalisz.

Advices received from Vienna say that the Russians are rapidly advancing on Cracow, and that in consequence the Austro-Hungarian military authorities are betraying great anxiety, and calling up every available man to the colors.

Elected To Be Tried By Jury

LINDSAY, Nov. 10.— The Lindsay man who was arrested a few nights ago, charged with the theft of two $2.00 bills from a Peterborough man, came up for trial yesterday afternoon before Police Magistrate Jackson. The accused was represented by Mr. G. A. Jordan, while Mr. G. H. Hopkins, K. C., Acting Crown Attorney, looked after the interests of the Crown.

The accused elected to be tried by a jury at the next competent court of jurisdiction.

RUSSIANS MOVE SWIFTLY.

Huge Army Is Now In Perfect Condition For War.

LONDON, Nov. 10. — The correspondent of The Times in Warsaw, telegraphing under date of Nov. 6, says that after spending a fortnight in the Polish field of operation, he has arrived at the conclusion that the Russian organizations is at last under way in every direction, and that within thirty days Germany either will have to submit to an invasion by vast Russian hosts or withdraw substantial bodies of her best troops from the western frontier.

"Russia's huge army is now moving with a precision which is remarkable," he says, "and it is advancing with incredible rapidity and smothering every rear guard action with its numbers. The transports is keeping pace everywhere, moving forward night and day. In many cases the main bodies accomplish twenty verts (about 14 miles) daily."

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Nov. 9.—Speculative selling, due to the absence of any political bullish news, operated as a drag today on the wheat market. Prices at the close were unsettled, ½c to ⅝c lower than Saturday night. Other cereals, too, suffered a net decline—corn ½c to ⅝c, and oats ⅛c to ⅜c. In provisions the outcome was unchanged to 10c down.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Nov. 9.—The wheat market was steady this morning. There were no Liverpool prices quoted, but it was understood values there were unchanged. Trading was light generally, altho, owing to heavier receipts, quite a lot of hedging was being brought out, the causing for the time being an easier tone, and prices fractionally lower. Later there was some good buying of May futures by export houses, causing a strengthening of values. The cash demand for wheat was good, oats and barley were also wanted, and all offerings were easily sold.

Good sales for export have been marked and export firms were heavy buyers of both futures and cash grains. Winnipeg wheat futures closed ⅝c to ¾c higher, oats closed ¼c to ⅜c lower, while flax closed unchanged.

Winnipeg cash: Wheat—No. 1 northern, $122½; No. 2 do., $1.17½; No. 3 do., $1.13; No. 4 do., $1.07½; No. 5 do., 96¼c; No. 6 do., 84½c.

Oats—No. 2 C.W., 57c; No. 3 C.W., 54c; extra No. 1 feed, 54c.

Barley—No. 3, 70½c; No. 4, 66½c; rejected, 61½c; feed, 61c.

Flax—No. 1 N.W.C., $1.33½; No. 2 C. W., $1.33½.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Nov. 9.—There continues to be a good demand from foreign buyers for Manitoba spring wheat, and sales of several loads were made at an advance in price of 2d per quarter, but the counter offers were 2d to 1s per quarter below what exporters were asking. The local trade in coarse grains continues quiet, but the tone of the market is very firm. Demand for flour is quiet, but the undertone to the market is strong and higher prices are being talked of. Millfeed is fairly active with a better demand from both local and country buyers.

The butter market is quiet and steady, finest creamery at the auction sale today selling at 37½c. Cheese is firm, but business over the cable was quiet today. Exports for the week were 94,649 boxes, as compared with 54,327 for the corresponding week last year.

Demand for eggs is good, and the market is active and strong.

DULUTH GRAIN MARKET.

DULUTH, Minn., Nov. 9.—Wheat—No. 1 hard, $1.19½; No. 1 northern, $1.18½; No. 2 do., $1.15½; Dec., $1.16½.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, Nov. 9.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 3077 cattle, 968 hogs, 1956 sheep ar l lambs and 170 calves.

Butchers' Cattle.

Choice heavy steers sold at $7.75 to $8; choice heifers at $7.50; good steers and heifers, $7 to $7.25; medium butchers, $6.50 to $6.75; common butcher steers and heifers, $6 to $6.25; light heifers, $5.50 to $5.75; choice cows, $6.50 to $6.75; good cows, $5.75 to $6.25; canners, $3.50 to $4.50; cutters, $4 to $4.40; bulls, $5 to $6.75.

Stockers and Feeders.

Choice feeders, 800 to 900 lbs., $6.50 to $6.75; good feeders, 800 to 900 lbs., $6 to $6.25; medium feeders, $5.75 to $6; common feeders, $5 to $5.50; stockers, $4 to $5.

Milkers and Springers.

A limited supply of milkers and springers sold at $58 to $95 each.

Veal Calves.

Choice calves sold at $10 to $10.50; good calves, $8.50 to $9.50; medium, $7 to $8; common, $6 to $7; inferior eastern calves, $3.50 to $5.

Sheep and Lambs.

Sheep, ewes, $5 to $6; culls and rams, $2.50 to $4; lambs, $7.50 to $8.15; culls, $6 to $6.50.

Hogs.

Selects fed and watered sold at $7.50; $7.75 weighed off cars, and $7.15 f.o.b. cars at country points.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Nov. 9.—At the Montreal Stock Yards west end market an easy feeling continues to prevail for cattle, owing to the liberal supplies coming forward, but prices were practically unchanged from last week. Trade in fairly good steers was fairly active, of which the supply was fair, and sales were made at $7 to $7.35, while fair stock brought from $6 to $6.75 per 100 pounds. The tone of the market for canning stock was weak, owing to the liberal offerings, and prices scored a further decline of 25c per cwt., with sales of bulls at $4.25 to $4.60, and cows at $3.50 to $4 per cwt.

There was no further change in the condition of the market for sheep or lambs, but the feeling was strong, and the prospects are that prices will go higher in the near future, owing to the fact that supplies are falling off. Ontario lambs brought $7.50 to $7.75, and Quebec $7 to $7.25, while ewes brought $7 to $7.25 per cwt.

The demand for grass-fed calves was good, at prices ranging from $6 to $10 each. Milk-fed calves were scarce and wanted. The market for hogs was firm, with a good demand from packers, and sales of selected lots were made at $8, cows at $6, and stags at $4 per cwt., weighed off cars.

Two Local Men Are Sergeants

Writing from Kingston to a member of The Examiner staff, Private Leonard Williams, of the 57th Contingent in the 21st Battalion, says:

"We are all settled down here now and are fitted out with uniforms, but have not been issued boots yet. Our company (E) is complete now in its four sections with the following sergeants: No. 1—Sergt. Williams, Cornwall; No. 2—Sergt. Alan Harper, Peterborough; No. 3—Sergt. Sam Thomas, Peterborough; No. 4—Sergt. Scott, Prescott. Capt. Gray, of Cornwall is in command, while the subalterns are Lieuts. Shepherd and Cunningham. Only one of the men from Peterborough failed in the medical examination. We have physical drill at 6:15, breakfast at 7:30, parade at 8:30 until 11:30 a.m., dinner at 12:30, parade at 2 p.m., until 4:30 p.m., supper at 6 p.m., lights out at 10 o'clock."

FIRST CANUCK TO MARRY.

LADIES' SODALITY IN THEATRICALS

The Ladies' Sodality of St. Peter's Cathedral presented a delightful playlet to a packed house last night in St. Alphonsus' Lyceum. It bore the delightful title, "My Aunt's Heiress," in two "flims." It proved to be a pleasant Cinderella story in which Miss Kathleen McCarthy "turned out" to be the real heiress to $100,000, and heir to Miss Mary Kelly, thereby defeating the machinations of Miss Veronica Carveth, who it likewise "turned out," was a mere pretender.

A very enjoyable musical programme was added to the pleasure of the evening. Selections were played by the trio, Miss L. Hurley piano, Mr. Chas. Seymour violin, and Mr. J. Minnicola cornet. Their numbers included a potfourri of patriotic airs. Vocal solos by Miss Mabel Mahoney, Mr. Geo. Daly and Mr. Minnicola were enjoyed. The audience sang "Tipperary" with Mr. Minnicola.

The cast of characters were:

CHURCH ASSOCIATION HELD FIRST MEETING

The first meeting of the Church Association of the All Saints' church was held last night in the Parish Hall. There were two hundred present and the indication was that the organization of the association is going to be amply justified by good results in making the congregation of the church feel on friendly terms with each other, and in cultivating to even a greater extent than in the past an "esprit de corps" among the church members.

A splendid social time was spent last evening and the meeting was a very enjoyable affair. A good programme was given and after the programme appetising refreshments were served.

One of the most enjoyable numbers was a recitation by little Miss Alice Dawson, who is only seven years of age. She captured the audience in her reading of "Papa's Letter," and was encored, reciting in a winning way, "Entertaining My Elder Sister's Sweetheart." Miss Dawson is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Dawson, Easton, Pa.

The programme was presented as follows:

Instrumental Duet — Mr. Hill and Miss Flowers.
Vocal Solo—Mr. Flowers.
Recitation—Miss Alice Dawson.
Instrumental Duet — The Misses Thompson.
Vocal Duet—Messrs. Chandler and Weller.

WOMEN'S ART ASSOCIATION.
There will be a meeting of the Women's Art Association in the Public Library to-night at 7:30 o'clock. The course of study for the year will be "The Cathedrals of Europe."

RESTAURANT IS NOT LEGALLY A PUBLIC PLACE

Important Decision by Magistrate Dumble Covers Legal Definition of a Public Place

CHARGES DISMISSED

Magistrate Dumble this morning ruled that in Peterborough a restaurant is not a public place within the meaning of local by-laws. A number of local young men were charged with gambling in a public place. The games with dice took place in a Chinese Cafe, and while admitting that they were gambling with dice for money the defence claimed that th restaurant was not a public place. The Magistrate sustained their contention, dismissing the cases against them all. Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for the defence. In his remarks the Magistrate commended the Proprietor for calling in the Police when the men refused to stop gambling.

The written judgment handed down by Magistrate Dumble, this morning, was as follows:

Rex vs. David Edwards.

This is a charge laid under By-law No. 25 of the City of Peterborough to prohibit gambling with dice in a public place, to wit, the Dominion Cafe. It is admitted that defendant did, against the will of the proprietor, gamble with dice, in the Cafe; but it is objected that the Cafe was not a public place within the meaning of the by-law.

The by-law in question, Sec. 25, prohibits such gambling at or upon any table or device or otherwise in any of the streets, lanes or public places of the Town. The next clause of the Act authorizes the Police to enter certain places where prohibited games are being played. But the clause making the offence can alone be looked at to find what makes the offence, and is clearly defined as gambling in a public place, a street, or lane, and the evidence shows that it took place in a restaurant, which though licensed as such, does not thereby become a public place within the meaning of the Act.

A street, square, park or place where the people have a right to go to without let or hindrance, is such a public place, but there are no judgments holding that a restaurant, hotel, or even a railway station, is a public place. Because people go to them freely is not sufficient to make them the people's, and take them out of the private control of the owners or proprietors.

This question was recently dealt with in the case of Rex vs. Cook, in the weekly notes of Nov. 25, 1912, where Mr. Justice Kelly delivered the judgment founded upon English cases, clearly deciding the meaning of the words, public place.

In Regina vs. Bell, 25 Ont. Rep. Page 272, it was held that a Custom house was not a public place within the meaning of a Toronto by-law, relative to public morals, on which the defendant was charged with having made use of profane swearing in a public place.

The charges against the defendants will be dismissed.

Dated November 10th, 1914.

The regular monthly meeting of the Peterborough Board of Health, which was to have been held this morning, did not materialize owing to the absence of some of the members. Dr. C. H. Arnys, chairman of the Board, turned up at the appointed hour. He states that there was nothing of an important nature to deal with.

AFTER THE BALL IS A REAL TREAT

"After the Ball," that fascinating detective photo drama, was given last night at the Grand Opera House, and an appreciative audience showed considerable interest in the unravelling of the excellent plot of the play. As a story alone the pictures are worth seeing, but besides that many thrilling features, including a dare-devil jump from a motor-cycle on to a fast travelling train, and a leap from a train into the river below, made the pictures the most wonderful in many ways that have ever been seen here. The plot is a thrilling one and the cast is a very strong one, making the whole feature a real treat in moving pictures.

War Cannot Slaughter MORE VICTIMS THAN PNEUMONIA.

Pneumonia is described as a preventible disease if taken in time.

Pneumonia is the scourge of the able-bodied men and women "a little run down perhaps" but strong in the belief that they can fight off a cold. Colds are not easily fought off in this northern climate.

On the first sign of a cough or cold, our advice to you is "GET RID OF IT."

The slight cold, the irritating cough, the tightness of the chest, if not attended to, will sooner or later develops into some serious lung or bronchial trouble.

GET A BOTTLE OF
DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP
and you will find after the first two or three doses have been taken the cough or cold will quickly disappear.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; the price, 25c and 50c.

Be sure you see that the name of The T. Milburn Co., Limited, appears on both the label and wrapper.

Mrs. Edward Hugo, Moose Jaw, Sask., writes: "My little girl, three years old, contracted a bad cold which settled on her lungs, and turned into pneumonia, and she was given up by our doctor. I decided to try Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and by the time she had taken three bottles she was well again. I shall always keep a bottle of "Dr. Wood's" in the house."

The Germans Alarmed By Russian Successes Have Asked For Peace

(ACCORDING TO ROME DESPATCH)

GERMANS HAVE ASKED RUSSIANS TO MAKE PEACE

LONDON, Wednesday, Nov. 11.— A Rome despatch to the Post says:

"Germany, alarmed at the Russian success, has made preliminary offers of peace to the Russian Government, which have been rejected."

VOLUNTEERS OF BERLIN PROVE GOOD FIGHTERS

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 10. — Reports from Belgium state that the Berlin volunteers have fought with contempt for death. Although Nieuport, Ramscapelle and Dixmunde have been evacuated, these volunteer corps have tried to retake them, relying on their own attacks, while the veterans fought at Ypres. Thus occurred the murderous collisions by the Nieuport bridge, Dixmude and Ramscapelle, of which the two latter places the German volunteers, aided by marines, occupied, only to evacuate an hour later, after an attack by the allies' cavalry. The Germans lost near Dixmunde, Nieuport and Ramscapelle many guns and prisoners and thousands of killed, thanks especially to the brilliant French and British reconnoissance and the devastating artillery, which rendered the German naval guns useless. A great German troops movement is in progress. Troops lately arrived at Bruges have been sent to the front between Ypres and Dixmunde.

Von Kluk Was Prodigal Of Human Life

According to Report

NEW YORK, Nov. 6.—The World publishes a despatch from London from a staff correspondent saying:

Some important points I learned when with the German armies on the French and Russian fighting lines, and which the censorship prohibited me from using can now be given.

Chief among these is the flat statement made to me by a member of the German General Staff that Gen. Von Kluk who commanded the extreme right, has been superseded. A part of his army, tthis staff officer told me, has been taken over by von Buelow and the balance is being used as a "part army." Von Kluk is understood to have incurred the Kaiser's displeasure by his disregard of life in handling his men on the first advence to Paris, though his masterly retreat from the Marne won him much praise.

Crown Prince Popular.

The German Crown Prince, commanding the Fifth Army, makes his personal headquarters in a chateau near Stenay, on the Meuse, eighteen miles north and west of Verdun and about forty-five miles east of Rheims. Against the latter he has been directing the operations as well as handling the actions to the north and east of Verdun in the Argonne forest. The Crown Prince's troops lie east and south of what may be called the German northern line, and they are being used rather as an investing and a holding force than as an offensive army. The Crown Prince is beloved by his men. His daring, inclined to recklessness, is held in check by the General Staff. His bold life is simple and unceremonious.

Verdun Attack Delayed.

The plan was to open a big gun fire against Verdun last Thursday. The failure to do so indicates that the Germans are experiencing trouble on their right wing. Austrian mortar batteries were being moved within the Verdun range when I left the front.

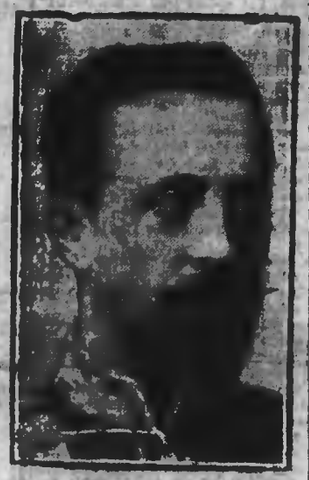
On the authority of Gen. Oberst von Strangs, Chitf of Staff, it can be said that no action has yet been taken against Toul, Nancy and on positions south of these points, including Belfort. The Germans have only a thin holding line in this region, and south of St. Mihiel their front runs to real German soil.

Six Austrian corps commanders and army leaders have been superseded by Germans. One Austrian commander in the field around Lemberg has been placed in an insane asylum near Vienna.

Moslems in West Africa Forward Expressions of Loyalty to Britain

Examiner Special:

LONDON, NOV. 11—Additional assurance of loyalty of the Mohammedan subjects of King George, despite Turkey's entrance into war, were received at the colonial office to-day. The Governor of Sierra Leone, British Possession on the West Coast of Africa, has transmitted to the colonial office letters from various Mohammedan Chieftains, all of whom declare the loyalty of their people. "We are incessantly praying that Allah grant victory to England" is the typical expression of Moslem leaders.



The Hero of the Hour.—Grand Duke Nicholas, Commander in Chief of the Russian forces, who has cleared Poland of Germans with surprising swiftness. A recent despatch says his popularity with the Polish people is such that they want him for their own King.

AUSTRIANS WITHDRAW TO PROTECT OWN FRONTIER

General Reports Indicate This Change in the Russian Front --May Play No Other Part in Campaign Against Russians Except Defend Own Territory.

LONDON, Nov. 10—Reports from many sources came to-night to confirm the news that the Germans are rushing every available corps from the Belgian front to strengthen the home defences of Posen and Silesia against the Russian menace, already heralded by Cossack raids at several points over the border. From Rome comes the statement that the Russians have captured many prisoners in the region of Kalisz, who were found to belong to the 11th corps of German cavalry known to have been operating in Flanders a week ago.

Confirmation of previous reports to the effect that the Austrian armies have been separated from the main German force by the sudden Russian movement towards Cracow, and indicates that the Austrians hereafter may play no part in the campaign more important than the safeguarding of the Hungarian frontier in the Carpathians, appears to be contained in the following significant despatch received from Vienna to-night:

"It was officially announced to-day that the situation on the north-eastern frontiers was unchanged. Later on another communication was issued stating that the war operations in Galicia would shortly be indefinitely suspended. For this reason the correspondents who are now there have been ordered to the south-east.

"This announcement is interpreted to mean that the Austrians have been defeated, and intend to withdraw to their lines of entrenchments, with the object of resisting a Russian invasion."

ENEMY STRONG BEFORE YPRES

Attempt to Take Villages at Bayonet Point and Attack in Force

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, Nov. 11—There is every indication from reports reaching the War Office that the German forces about Ypres have been heavily reinforced. The attack of the Germans, continues with unabated force, and the troops which have been on constant duty in the trenches in this region are believed to have been relieved from the second line, which is pressing forward with the greatest determination. The most desperate fighting is reported all along the line. The Germans are attempting to take small towns and villages at the point of the bayonet. The heavy artillery fire from both the Allied and German lines has become more violent.

GERMANS RUSH FORCES TO CHECK RUSSIAN ADVANCE

Thousands of German Families Have Packed Up and Fled Behind Posen Fortress---What They Believed Impossible Has Happened.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 10.—The Russian light columns which have crossed and dislocated the outer line of German strategic railways running around northern and central Poland, report feverish activity. They have been able to arrest German movements on the railways nearest the frontier, but farther back the German lines are crowded day and night by trains bringing troops and equipment, especially artillery, from East Prussia to positions behind Thorn and Posen.

EXODUS OF PEOPLE.

The excitement among the German railway staff has thrown the civilian population into a panic. Many thousands of German families have hastily packed their portable belongings and fled behind Posen fortress, fearing the Russian invaders may avenge German cruelties in Poland. Others are abandoning their homes and making for Breslau and Dresden. It is evident the German General Staff feels it has again been out-generalled. Their experts were convinced that when the Russians had repulsed the movement on Warsaw and the Vistula and had turned the Germans back as far as the frontier the real campaign of invasion would be conducted through East Prussia.

THE IMPOSSIBLE HAS TAKEN PLACE.

They considered it absolutely impossible for the Russians to bring a great combined army with impedimenta for a winter campaign across Poland in November. This has already been done, hence the Germans are now concentrating at high pressure all their available forces from fortresses, garrisons and reserves in Silesia, Saxony and Prussia.

INDIANS ARE HANDICAPPED BY LANGUAGE

Germans Use Every Trick in Hope of Luring Them into Ambushes —Natives Have More Than Made Good

WILD STORIES UNTRUE

LONDON, Nov. 10 — The Indian forces in France have made good, but have achieved none of the daring and extraordinary exploits attributed to them, according to a statement issued by the Official Press Bureau tonight, under date of November 10th, written by "an observer with the Indian corps."

Above all, the account emphasizes the difficulties under which the Indians are fighting by reason of their ignorance of the French, German and English languages. Repeatedly they have been subjected to tricks on the part of the Germans.

"The Germans are full of resource," says the account, "and it is one of their favourite plans to lure the allied troops on to attack them by various devices, of which an indicated intention of surrendering is the most common. If this deception is successful, a skilfully concealed machine gun turns a murderous fire upon those who have advanced either to attack or accept srrender.

An Audacious Effort.

"The ingenuity of the enemy cannot better be illustrated than by a well authenticated statement of what took place last night in a trench held by the Gurkha regiment. A figure, silhouetted by the monlight and wearing a complete Gurkha uniform, approached the end of the trench, and delivered the message: "The Gurkhas are to move further up the trench; another Gurkha contingent is advancing in support."

"Puzzled by this announcement, the officer in command replied: "Who are you? Where do you come from?' To which the only answer was: 'You are to move up and make room for other Gurkhas.'

"The English was good, but something excited the officer's suspicion. 'Answer and answer quickly,' he said: 'If you are a Gurkha, by what boat did you cross?'

"This question, under the circumstances, was no easy one to answer, and the German—for such he was—turned and fled. But he had not gone five yards before he fell, riddled with bullets.

In Strange Conditions.

"If the officer had been deceived the trench, of course, would have swarmed with Germans almost before the Gurkhas had made room for them It can readily be imagined that under such conditions the Indian troops engage the enemy in circumstances of special difficulty. They are in a strange country; their training and instincts have accustomed them to quite different conditions. It is easy to distinguish German and French soldiers in the daytime, but it is not easy in the dark.

"The Gurkhas understand no language but their own, and very few others understand that. Their stragglers are exposed to difficulties in the way of rejoining their units which it is almost impossible to exagerate, nor must it be forgotten that the intentions which the German Emperor expressed with reference to the whole forces under command of Field Marshal Sir John French embraced to an equal degree the army corps composed of our Indian fellow-subjects.

Hated by the Enemy.

"Letters found upon wounded men and prisoners made it clear that the German military authorities have specially charged the troops with the task of inflicting the severest possible punishment upon the forces whose civilization they deny and whose soldierly qualities they wish to disparage.

"Under all these circumstances, it the Indian troops have so finely fulfilled the high expectations which were formed of them. A word of caution, however, should be uttered with regard to the amazing adventures and exploits attributed to them, recommendations desired neither by the officers nor the men.

"It need hardly be said that the conduct and example of the British officers, who have undergone precisely the same hardships as the men, have been worthy of the highest traditions of th service. In loss of officers and men, Great Britain has paid, and is paying, and will continue to pay, a cruel and constant price for the liberties of Europe and her own existence as a world-wide power."

509,000 Germans In Partial List of Casualties

And This Does Not Cover the Entire Period of Conflict

Examiner Special:

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 11. — News despatches declare that the latest casualty lists published in Berlin give the names of 509,000 officers and men killed, wounded or missing. The list covers part of August, September and a few from October. It is thought that the total German casualties to date are at least a million men.

ANOTHER DEATH AMONG THE CANADIAN TROOPS

Montreal Man Found Dead in Secluded Portion of Salisbury Camp.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—Gunner Walter Pendleton, belonging to Montreal, but a member of the heavy battery artillery, has died at Salisbury Plains under tragic circumstances. His body was found in a secluded portion of the camp. How he came by his death will form the subject of an inquest.

Montreal, Nov. 10.—(Special.) — Gunner Walter Pendleton was a son of Walter Pendleton, 53 St. Cecile Street, Montreal. He was twenty-six years of age, a native of Montreal, and prior to enlisting was a waiter at a Cathedral Street restaurant. He was a member of St. Patrick's church. His enlistment as a gunner followed an application he made to the naval service at Halifax.

The Globe understands that there were no indications of foul play in regard to his death.

Turkey Cannot Stop Russians

Ottoman Empire Sacrificed to German Interests is Doomed

RESISTANCE SOON BROKEN

ROME, Nov. 10—Ifram Bey, head of the staff of Essad Pasha, the Albanian minister of war, who is here to negotiate for the landing of assistance by Italy to Albania, said to-day concerning the situation created by Turkey entering into the war:

"Turkey is finished. As a Mussulman I am sorry but in reality I know the Caucasus and am convinced that Turkey cannot oppose serious resistance to the Russians. At Erzerum, Turkey claims she has 300,000 men to resist the Russians, but her forces there are far below that number while Trebisond is in even a worse condition.

"Essad Pasha also thinks that a fight under these conditions is folly and that Turkey should have remained neutral, asking in exchange some compensation from the triple entente. Now she rushes toward ruin. When the Mussulmans know that the power of the Caliph has been sacrificed to German interests and a few politicians summary justice will follow, but it will be too late."

"DARKNESS AND DAWN".

By Geo. Allan England

"Beyond there, master! Beyond the river there be many moving creatures! Darts and arrows have begun to fall against the cliff. See, one has even come into the cave! What shall be done, master?"

Broad awake now, Allan ran to the door and peered out.

Daylight was fading. He must have slept an hour or two; it he seemed but a second. In the west the sun was burning its way toward the horizon, through a thick set of haze that cloaked the rim of the earth.

"Here, master! See!"

Stooping, the picked up a long, slight object and handed it to him.

"One of their poisoned darts, so help me!" he exclaimed. "Cast that into the fire, Gesafam. And have a care lest it wound you, for the slightest scratch is death!"

While she, wondering, obeyed, he hastily reconnoitered the situation.

He had felt positive the Horde, after his escape from it by devious and terrible ways, would track him down.

He had known the army of the hideous little beast-folk, that for a year now had been slowly gathering from north and east for one final assault, would eventually find Settlement Cliffs and there make still another attempt to crush him and his.

But, knowing all this, knowing even that the whole region beyond the river now swarmed with these ghastly monstrosities, the actuality appalled him.

Now that the attack was really at hand, he felt a strange and sudden sense of helplessness.

And with a bitter curse he shook his fist at the dark forest across the canyon where—even as he looked—he saw a movement of crouching, furtive things; he heard a dull thump-thump as of clubs beating hollow logs.

"You devils!" he execrated. "Oh, for a ton of Pulverite to drop among you!"

"Look, master, look! The bridge. The bridge!"

He turned quickly as old Gesafam pointed up-stream.

There, clearly outlined against the sky, he saw a dozen—a score of little, crouching figures emerge from the forest on the north bank, and at a clumsy run dodge along the swaying footpath high above the rapids.

CHAPTER XXVII.
WAR!

At sight of the advance-guard of the Horde now already loping, crouched and ugly, over the narrow bridge to Settlement Cliffs Allan's first impulse was one of absolute despair.

He had expected an attack ere night, but at least he had hoped an hour's respite to recover a little of his strength and to muster all the still valid men of the Folk for resistance. Now, however, he saw even this was to be denied him. For already the leaders of the Horde scouts had passed the centre of the bridge.

Three or four minutes more and they would be inside the palisade, upon the cliff!

"God! If they once get in there, we're gone!" cried Allan. "We're cut off from everything. Our animals will be slaughtered. The boy will die! They can bombard us with rocks from aloft. It means annihilation!"

Already he was running up the path toward the palisade. Not one second was to be lost. There was no time even to call a single man of the Folk to reinforce him. Single-handed and alone he must meet the invaders' first attack.

Panting, sweating, stumbling, he scrambled up the steep terrace. And as he ran his thoughts outdistanced him.

"Fool that I was to have left the bridge!" choked he. "My first act when I set foot on solid land should have been to cut the ropes and drop the whole thing into the rapids! I might have known this would happen—fool that I was!"

The safety, the life, of the whole colony, including his wife and son, now depended solely on his reaching the southern end of the bridge before the vanguard of the Horde.

With a heart-racking burst of energy he sprang to the defence, and as he ran he drew his hunting-knife.

Reeling with exhaustion, spent, winded, yet still in desperation, struggling onward, he won the top of the cliff, swung to the left along the path that led t the bridge, and—more dead than alive—rushed onward in a last, supreme effort.

Already he saw the Anthropoids were within a hundred feet of the abutment. He could plainly see their squat, hideous bodies, their hairy and pendent arms, and the ugly shuffle of their preposterous legs, as at their best speed they made for the cliff.

Three or four poisoned darts fell clicking on the stones about him. Howls and yells of rage burst from the file of beast-men.

One of the horrible creatures even—with apelike agility—sprang up into the guy ropes of the bridge, clung there, and discharged an arrow from its bamboo blow-gun, chattering with rage.

Stern, running but the faster, plugged him with a forty-four. The Anthropoid, still clinging, howled hideously, then all at once dropped off and vanished in the depths.

Full drive, Allan hurled himself toward the entrance of the bridge. It seemed to him the beasts were almost on him now.

Plainly he could hear the slavering click of their tushes and see the red, bleared winking of their deep-set eyes.

Now he was at the rope-anchorage, where the cables were lashed to two stout palms.

He emptied his automatic point-blank into the pack.

Pausing not to note effects, he slashed furiously at the left-hand rope.

One strand gave. It sprang apart and began untwisting. Again he hewed with mad rage.

"Crack."

The cable parted with a report like a pistol-shot. From the bridge a wild, hideous tumult of yells and shrieks arose. The whole fabric, now unsupported on one side, dropped awry. Covered from end to end with Anthropoids, it swayed heavily.

Had men been on it, all must have been flung into the rapids by the shock. But these beast-things, used to arboreal work, to scaling cliffs, to every kind of dangerous adventuring, nearly all succeeded in clinging.

Only three or four were shaken off, to catapult over and over down into the foaming lash of the river.

And still, now creeping with hideous agility along the racked and swinging bridge that hung by but a single rope, they continued to make way, howling and screaming like damned souls.

One gained the shore! At Allan it bounded, crouching, ferocious, deadly. He saw the tiny, venomous lance raised for the throw.

"Flick!"

He felt a twitch on his arm. Was he wounded? He knew not. Only he knew that with blind rage he had flung himself on the second rope, and now with demon-rage was hacking at it desperately.

The snapping whirl of the cable as it parted flung him backward.

He had an instant's vision of the whole bridge-structure crumpling. Then it vanished. From the depths rose the most awful acclaim, quickly smothered, that he had ever heard.

And as the bestial bodies went tumbling, rolling, fighting, down the rapids, he suddenly beheld the bridge footway hanging limp and swaying against the further cliff.

"Thank God! In time, in time!" he panted, staggering like a drunken man.

But all at once he beheld two of the Horde still there in front of him—the one that had flung the dart and another. They were advancing at a lope.

Allan turned and fled.

His ammunition was all spent, he knew that to face them was madness.

"I must load up again," thought he. "Then I'll make short work of them!"

Fortunately he could far outstrip them in flight. That, and that alone, had already saved him in the past week of horrible pursuit through the forests to northward. And quickly now he ran down the terrace again—down to the caves below. As he ran he shouted in Mexican:

"Out, my people! Out with you! Out to battle! Out to war!"

Half way down to Cliff Villa he met Frumuos toiling upward. Him he greeted and quickly informed of the situation.

"The bridge is down!" he panted. "I cut it! The further shore is swarming with enemies. Two have reached this side!"

"What is this, O Kromno?" asked the man anxiously, pointing at Allan's shoulder. "Have they wounded you?"

Allan looked and saw a poisoned dart hanging loosely in his left sleeve. As he moved he could feel the point rubbing against his naked skin.

"Merciful Heaven!" he exclaimed. "Has it scratched me?"

With infinite precautions he loosened and threw off his outer garment. He flung it, with the dart still adhering, down over the cliff.

"Look, Frumuos!" he commanded. "Search carefully and see if there be any scratch on the skin!"

The man obeyed, making a minute inspection through his mica eye-shields. Then he shook his head.

"No, Kromno," he answered. "I see nothing. But the arrow came near, near!"

Stern, tremendously relieved, gestured toward the caves.

"Go swiftly!" he commanded. "Bring up every man who still can fight. All must have full burdens of cartridges. Even though the bridge be down, the enemy will still attack!"

"But how, since the great river lies between?"

"They can climb down those cliffs and swim the river and scramble up this side as easily as we can walk on level ground. Go swiftly! There is no time to lose!"

"I go, master. But tell me, the two who have already reached this side—shall we not first slay them?"

Allan thought. For the first time he now realized clearly the terrible peril that lay in these two Anthropoids already inside the limits of the colony.

He peered up the pathway. No sign of them above. Their animal cunning had warned them not to descend to certain death.

Now Allan knew they were at liberty inside the palisades, waiting, watching, constitnting a deadly menace at every turn.

In any one of a thousand places they could lie ambushed, behind trees or bushes, or in the limbs aloft, and thence, unseen, they could discharge an indefinite number of darts.

It was now perilous in the extreme even to venture back to the palisade. Any moment might bring a flicking, stinging messenger of death. Those two, alone, might easily decimate the remaining men of the colony — and now each man was incalculably precious.

"Go, Frumuos." Allan again commanded. "For the moment we must leave those two up there. Go, muster all the fighting men and bring them up here along the terrace. I must think! Go!"

Suddenly, before the messenger had even time to disappear round the first bend in the path, Allan found his inspiration.

SUFFERED FROM BILIOUS HEADACHE.

At Times Thought She Would Go Mad.

Headaches are one of the most aggravating troubles a person can have. They are many and varying; but when the headache starts you may be sure that there is some other chief cause of this most painful difficulty. The stomach may go wrong, the bowels become constipated, the blood may not circulate properly, but the presence of the headache clearly shows that there is some other baneful disease which is liable to assert itself unless the cause of the headache is removed. Get rid of the headache and thus perhaps save yourself many years of trial and suffering.

Burdock Blood Bitters has, for the past forty years, been curing all kinds of headaches, and has also proved itself to be a remedy that cures where all others fail. It does this by removing the cause of the trouble.

Miss Mary A. Roberts, Hampton, N.B., writes: "For about two years I have suffered from bilious headache. At times I thought I would really go mad. Not long ago a friend advised me to try Burdock Blood Bitters which I did, and after taking three bottles I have never been troubled with any kind of a headache. I think that B.B.B. is one of the wonders of the world. I can safely recommend it to all who suffer from bilious headache."

Burdock Blood Bitters is the oldest and the best known blood medicine on the market to-day, and is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

ABOUT CONSUMPTION

Picture to yourself a young man who instead of feeling the throb of pulsing life in his veins is doomed to watch the passing hour with feelings of despair and gloom. His hours are numbered. He is another victim of the dread "white plague." Hope is dead. Nothing is worth while. Each hour weakens his hold on life.

Such was the condition of Mr. M. J. Hamilton, of 4 Tiverton Avenue, Toronto, before he heard of Copeland's medicine. He procured one bottle, then another and another until he had so far recovered as to be able to write as follows:

Mr. W. R. Copeland,
511 Pape Avenue, Toronto.

Dear Sir,—Your wonderful medicine is giving me back my health and strength. I thought it was all up with me, but now I am feeling fine. Am working hard every day and can eat anything, which was an impossibility a few months back. I will be pleased to tell anyone, troubled with lung trouble, what it has done for me.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) M. J. HAMILTON.
4 Tiverton Ave., Toronto.

To-day, life holds prospect to Mr. Hamilton. Like others in vigorous life, each hour has its fulfilment of conscious work, pleasure or rest. The difference was caused by a medicine—the medicine that he needed—the medicine that fought his disease and strengthened his vital powers.

He is still living in Toronto and for the good the medicine did him he welcomes the opportunity to tell others what "Copeland's Cure for Consumption" did for him.

Maybe you, or your child, relative or friend are not so far gone as Mr. Hamilton was. Still, there is weakness, distress or pain. Try this medicine as he did. It can do you no harm; it is more than likely that it will be found to do you a world of good. Try it.

Several letters have been received from people who have taken this medicine for bronchitis. Two of these cases resisted for over 30 years every effort of medical men and medicine to benefit them. "Copeland's Cure for Consumption" achieved complete victory.

If you suffer from this distressing ailment, send us your address and copies of these letters will be forwarded to you.

This medicine is procurable at drug stores for $1.00 a bottle, or it can be had, at the same price, in a plain wrapper, direct from the Copeland Medicine Company, Limited, 511 Pape Avenue, Toronto. 5-14

VICTORY FOR RUSSIANS WOULD CHANGE SITUATION

The great battle in South Poland is more important in its effect than anything that has happened in France, writes Hilliare Belloc, one of the foremost military writers in Europe.

If Germany were victorious in South Poland she could then maintain a merely defensive position against the Russian advance, and this would release the victorious forces which, with Germany's splendid railway communication, would in a very few days appear where they are so much needed in the western field, and particularly through the gate of St. Mihiel, kept open at great effort.

If the Russian victory in South Poland is as decisive as the Russian official reports say—and the German official report is silent as to what happened in South Poland — then no matter what happens in France, the menace overhanging Silesia will be of such weight that the Germans will certainly turn to a defensive in the west and will use every man they can spare for the defence of their eastern frontier.

The wealth, the mines, half the industrial life of Germany are there, in the upper valley of the Oder. In the lower valley lie the properties of the very class, the Prussian military caste, which is at the heart of this war.

Preparedness of Germans.

The extraordinary efficiency and preparedness of the German army is illustratd by the celerity with which the German general staff moved a great army eastward across Germany into Poland to stop the rout of Lemburg.

The Russian railways have a different gauge from the rest of Europe. The German invasion of Poland and Galicia was by two main lines of railway. Hundreds of trains were required. Arriving at the frontier of their own country, these German cars containing ammunition, heavy artillery, horses, and stores, were promptly lifted by machinery prepared in advance; turn the trucks and wheels that fitted the gauge of the Russian railways, and the movement of men to the battle lines continued almost without interruption.

Germany sent, according to the official reports, over 1,100,000 men across the frontier to stop the Russian advance. They not only stopped the advance, but they drove the Russian army back more than 75 miles before Russian reinforcements again turned the tide against the Germanic armies.

The Location of Tsing Tau—The map gives a good idea of the location of the strong fortress which was recently captured by the Japanese and British troops after a siege of a little over two months.

IN ONE MINUTE! CLOGGED NOSTRILS OPEN—COLDS AND CATARRH VANISH

Stops Nasty Discharge, Clears Stuffed Head, Heals Inflamed Air Passages and You Breathe Freely.

Try Ely's Cream Balm."

Get a small bottle anyway, just to try it—Apply a little in the nostrils and instantly your clogged nose and stopped-up air passages of the head will open; you will breathe freely; dullness and headache disappear. By morning; the catarrh, cold-in-head or catarrhal sore throat will be gone.

End such misery now! Get the small bottle of "Ely's Cream Balm" at any drug store. This sweet, fragrant balm dissolves by the heat of the nostrils; penetrates and heals the inflamed, swollen membranes which lines the nose, head and throat; clears the air passages; stops nasty discharges and a feeling of cleansing, soothing relief comes immediately.

Don't lay awake to-night struggling for breath, with head stuffed; nostrils closed, hawking and blowing. Catarrh or a cold, with its running nose, foul mucous dropping into the throat, and raw dryness is distressing but truly needless.

Put your faith—just once—in "Ely's Cream Balm" and your cold or catarrh will surely disappear.

GERMAN SECRET AGENTS WAGE A PROPAGANDA

(From the New York Herald)

In a strong effort to stem the tide of reproach against her in this country, Germany is waging one of the most extensive and elaborate propagandas ever attempted by any government. Realising that the moral support of the United States, next to victory, is the most desirable asset at stake in the present war, she is sparing no efforts to obtain it.

Thousands of secret agents are circulating everywhere in public and private gathering places, entering into arguments wherever possible to present the German side of the war in such a manner as to create sympathy. All of these men are highly educated and trained, many of them being German army officers unable to return to their country to fight, and they are acting under direct instructions from their government, through representatives here.

Nightly several of these agents are to be found in front of the Herald war bulletin board, always surrounded by interested groups of listeners, and always glibly reciting—from the German standpoint — the causes of the present war. They are thoroughly drilled in their subjects and during the last several nights, while a reporter has listened to them, it has been apparent that a man who has only the general information of affairs common to the well-informed has no chance in an argument with them.

The Herald bulletin board is only one of hundreds of places where representatives of the German government — well bred, plausible men — travel back and forth on the transcontinental trains between New York, Chicago, Omaha, Denver and far Western points, entering into arguments with passengers and striving to impress them with the German side of the controversy.

These men receive regular assignments from a government representative, and the propaganda work is carried on with rigorous system. Where possible the agent makes friendships that may become valuable through sales, letters or favours. In no case does the agent intimate that he is in any way connected with the German government, and in most cases the men are so perfect in the English language that their nationality is not discernible. Where their names might suggest too strong a flavour of the Teuton, it is sometimes changed.

Among the propagandists who are to be found every night in front of the Herald Building, surrounded by knots of interested listeners—for these men are interesting and present an exposition of their side of the controvery in a convincing manner—is one who is an officer in the German army. When the war began he was in this country and was unable to return home. As a result he was assigned by his government to take up this propaganda work. He draws his actual army pay for the service.

"We are everywhere," he said, in a moment of confidence. "Our men are in the hotels, the trains, in all the cities. Many of the mare German citizens who have come here from Canada or who were in this country when the war broke out. Others are German-Americans, who are identified with the German societies here. The German national spirit, you know, is a wonderful one, and all of us are willing to do everything for the Fatherland. We believe that, if in this country you understood the cause of this war, you would sympathize with us. But you are deceived, therefore my government has enlisted us to tell you the truth."

To tell that "truth" this man, who is a Bavarian, but who speaks English perfectly, with an English accent, which he acquired at Oxford, says that the German government is exerting every possible pressure within its resources. Through its channels of communication—and the German channels of secret communication in this country are said to be as perfect as they were in Europe—instructions on how to proceed in the propaganda are issued regularly.

Men are being sent wherever there are public gatherings. Carefully prepared answers to each new argument or charge against Germany and Austria-Hungary are hurried to them immediately after the new charge appears. Great business firms are finding that the long arm of Germany is reaching out and touching them through German-Americans here. Anti-German interests are being punished where possible by loss of business. The underground, labyrinthian system which is being perfected more day by day embraces with its tenacles every activity.

As the agent for the German propaganda said, his country believes that the people of the United States are prejudiced by falsehoods, and it is determined to kill that prejudice by "any means which justify the end".

NERVOUS DYSPEPSIA, GAS OR INDIGESTION

"Pape's Diapepsin" settles sour, upset stomachs in five minutes.

Time it! Pape's Diapepsin will digest anything you eat and overcome a sour, gassy or out-of-order stomach easily within five minutes.

If your meals don't fit comfortably, or what you eat lies like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heartburn, that is a sign of indigestion.

Get from your pharmacist a fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and take a dose just as soon as you can. There will be no sour risings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness or heavy feeling in the stomach, nausea, debilitating headaches, dizziness or intestinal griping. This will all go, and, besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach to poison your breath with nauseous odours.

Pape's Diapepsin is a certain cure for out-of-order stomachs, because it takes hold of your food and digests it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Relief in five minutes from all stomach misery is waiting for you at any drug store.

These large fifty cent cases contain enough "Pape's Diapepsin" to keep the entire family free from stomach disorders and indigestion for many months. It belongs in your home.

Ink can be removed from light coloured fabrics by washing with milk, then with turpentine, rolling up the cloth for half an hour and washing in water.

WHAT DYSPEPTICS SHOULD EAT

A PHYSICIAN'S ADVICE.

"Indigestion and practically all forms of stomach trouble are, nine times out of ten, due to acidity; therefore stomach sufferers should, whenever possible, avoid eating food that is acid in its nature, or which by chemical action in the stomach develops acidity. Unfortunately, such a rule eliminates most foods which are pleasant to the taste as well as those which are rich in blood, flesh and nerve building properties. This is the reason why dyspeptics and stomach sufferers are usually so thin, emaciated and looking as that vital energy which can only come from a well fed body. For the benefit of these sufferers who have been obliged to exclude from their diet all starchy, sweet or fatty food, and are trying to keep up a miserable existence on gluten products, I would suggest that you should try a meal of raw food or foods which you may like, in moderate amount, taking immediately afterwards a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia in a little hot or cold water. This will neutralize any acid which may be present, or which may be formed, and instead of the usual feeling of [illegible] and fullness, you will find that your food agrees with you perfectly. Bisurated magnesia is doubtless the best food corrective and antacid known. It has no direct action on the stomach; but by neutralizing the acidity of the food contents, and thus removing the source of the acid irritation which inflames the sensitive stomach lining, it does more than could possibly be done by any drug or medicine. As a physician, I believe in the use of medicine whenever necessary, but I must admit that I cannot see the sense of dosing an inflamed and irritated stomach with drugs instead of getting rid of the acid—the cause of all the trouble. Get a little bisurated magnesia from your druggist, eat what you want at your next meal, take some of the bisurated magnesia as directed above, and see if I'm not right."

THE FALLEN ENEMY.

Where once rose happy homes and gardens smiled,
Here in the harvest field the dead are piled.
Foes of but yesterday sleep side by side,
Death garners here the sheaves of War's red tide.
O ye who watch above the common bier,
E'en to the foe grudge not a pitying tear.

What though they wrought destruction on your land,
Yet censure not, but rather those who planned
War's awful drama at the Council Board,
And in a frenzied moment drew the sword
That deluged Europe with a sea of blood,
The guilt is their's, they stand accused of God.

Bear then, no thought of enmity 'gainst those
Who silent sleep in hated garb of foes,
They had no choice, nor have they ought to blame,
They did but fight because the order came.

Another conscience settled Wrong and Right,
But simple soldiers these, just made to fight.
For these dead brothers sleeping silent there,
One Requiescat do ye, Christ-like, spare.
—Rev. D. A. Casey, Cambpellford

A pretty Irish colleen in a Tipperary town,
Took a notion for to cross the briny sea.
So she bade good-bye to Ireland, packed her little Irish gown,
And went away as happy as could be.
As she had lots of money you may bet she spent the cash,
All the saffors on the steamer with her style fell on the mash,
And when upon the promenade they would see this Irish maid,
She would hear them singing this refrain—

Chorus—

Mary Gray, you're a lady
And we think you're fine,
Awful witty, sweet and pretty,
Sure you're just the girl for mine.
You're as dainty as a dairy,
Are there more girls like you Mary
Way down in Tipperary, Mary Grady?

2nd Verse—

It really was provoking, for whenever she went out,
All the jolly tars were tagging at her heels.
So she went and told the captain what the Jackies were about,
Said he, that is just the way a sailor feels,
For you must know my dear they don't often see a girl,
And when they do most naturally their brain gets in a whirl,
But you must never fear,
They just all love you my dear,
There they go a singing it again—
—By E. S. Hopwood.
(Sung to, any old tune will do.)

AUSTRIA PUNISHED

(From the Providence Journal.)

When Austria so arrogantly made her demands upon Servia, late in July, the world regarded her as a great Power wrongfully attempting to coerce a weaker nation. She was confident, of course, of her ability to compel Servia to her way of thinking, irrespective of the rights of the case. She thought that she could repeat the coup by which she obtained possession of Bosnia and Herzegovina a few years before.

Now she is stricken to the point of exhaustion. A correspondent at Rome sends a graphic description of the disaster that has befallen her. Vienna is literally a great hospital. Barracks, school houses, theatres, offices, the museum and the rotunda of the famous Prater Park are all in use for the care of the wounded. Cholera and dysentery, the former in a mild form, but the latter in a fatal form, have invaded the city. The public is beginning to understand the failure of the campaign. There are no evidences of "patriotic passion, sympathy or enthusiasm." The empire is on the ragged edge of a catastrophe. Its dissolution would be the natural outcome of its latest and most disastrous military experiment.

We don't git much time for hard thinkin',
We men.
An' wot's me an' my comp'ny ain't yet made out.
If this 'ere's the culture they're talkin' about.

Tho' we don't get no "specials" we've heard a Round dozen who tell the same tale,
How Germans will pillage
A poor little village,
An' quiet the natives by murder
Wholesale.
An' wot me an' my comp'ny ain't yet made out,
If this 'ere's the culture they're talkin' about.

They slash up the pictures with sabres,
Which seems a bit spiteful, an' odd.
Wi' search-lights they shows up
The churches they blows up
An' Bill when they've ended their labours,
Thanks God!

Good Roads for Telephone Talk

THE good roads movement has not been confined to the highways. The Bell Telephone System has covered the province with "good roads" for telephone talk, reaching nearly every nook and corner.

When, as at the present time, there is talk of hard times and poor business, these telephone good roads should not be overlooked. They are proving to be a big factor in getting business back to normal.

Are you using them? The long distance telephone, by cutting out travelling expense, saving time and labor and enabling you to keep in touch with rapidly changing markets and trade conditions, can keep things moving at greatly reduced cost and prove a real right arm to your business.

Prove it! Figure out how you can apply the long distance telephone to your business. Hundreds of business men are doing it with great success.

Bad Spells With the Heart

Mrs. A. D. Cameron, Birch Brook, Pictou county, N.S., writes:—"For two or three years I was in a run-down condition, very nervous, lost strength, and was drowsy and sleepy. Then I began to have bad spells with the heart, and cold feelings would creep over me until I felt like death and as if I were sinking away. I would smother, and my hands would become stiff and cold, and windows and doors would be thrown open to bring me back to life. A year ago I read about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and began its use, and can now say that I am practically cured. As I am still gaining strength I shall continue its use for a time. During my illness I had two different doctors, but as I could see little benefit I turned to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, with great advantage. I will gladly answer anyone who wishes to hear direct from me."

Weak Heart—Palpitation

Mr. Stephen J. Leard, North Tryon, P.E.I., writes:—"At seventy-five years of age my heart gave out and became very irregular and weak in action and would palpitate. My nerves also became weak, and I could do nothing but lie in bed in a languishing condition, losing strength and weight. In that condition I began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and am cured. Had I not obtained this treatment I would now be in the box with the roof over my nose. At eighty-one I have an energy which means go, and I am writing this letter so that old people like myself may prolong their health and strength by using this great medicine."

Blood Weak—Nerves Exhausted

Miss Edie Bancroft, Longwood, Ont., writes:—"A year ago I was very much run down in health. The blood seemed to be weak and the nerves very much exhausted. Having heard of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and of its success in curing cases similar to mine, I began to use it, and was very greatly benefitted by continuation of this treatment. Two of my sisters also used this medicine, and found it to be a splendid means of building up the system.

"We have also used Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine with good results. One of my brothers had pneumonia twice, and we always use this medicine for him, as we find that it breaks up a cold the quickest and best of anything we can get."

Stomach Trouble—Fainting Spells

Mrs. A. A. Currie, ladies' tailoress, Bideford, P.E.I., writes:—"I had stomach trouble and fainting spells, and the gas would form on my stomach, so that I would feel like smothering. Often I could not sleep at nights without being propped up in bed, as I couldn't get a breath. For about five years I was like that, and consulted four doctors, without being benefitted. By using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and Kidney-Liver Pills I have obtained the greatest benefits imaginable. No medicine I ever took did me so much good, and I want to recommend them."

Chorea—St. Vitus Dance

Mrs. Geo. Chisholm, R.R. No. 1, Grafton, Ont., writes:—"I have used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food for my little girl for what the doctors pronounced Chorea, a disease of the nerves. I consulted our family doctor, and he gave her a liquid medicine, but do what we would, we could not get her to swallow it. A neighbor advised the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and, being in pill form, she took it without any trouble. She was about seven years old, and got pale and run down. The muscles of the face were affected, and she became a pitiful sight. She seemed to improve right along under this treatment, and was entirely cured by using six boxes. She is nine years old now, and you cannot find a larger, healthier-looking child for her age. I shall always be grateful for what Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has done for us, and I can recommend it to all nervous people. You are at liberty to use this letter, so that others may benefit."

Old and Young Pay Tribute

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

From Ocean to Ocean Come Letters of Gratitude to Tell of the Benefits Derived From This Great Food Cure.

Cheering Messages to Nervous Sufferers

Throwing aside all prejudice, the real test of any medical treatment must after all be, "Will it Cure?" Apply this test to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and you find the answer on this page from men and women who have no other object in writing these letters than the benefitting of their fellow men and women.

From bitter experience they can sympathize with all who are run down in health, nervous, irritable and discouraged. They know how slow and tedious nervous diseases usually are, and how difficult it is to find a real cure. They are grateful for benefits received, and anxious that others may know about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, the great food cure.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is for sale at all dealers at 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

Chronic Indigestion Cured

Mrs. Herbert Arbuckle, Deschene, Que., writes:—"I had a bad attack of Chronic Indigestion after the birth of my baby, and though I went to three doctors they all failed to cure me. I read about a lady being cured by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and began its use. It was only a short time until the trouble was overcome, and I can eat anything I want now without ill effects. My weight now is 150 pounds, and I am writing this so other women may know of the Nerve Food and get well and strong.

"My brother had piles and was cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment."

Anaemia—Extreme Weakness

Mr. T. Hyndman, farmer, Rupert, Que., writes:—"I had been gradually failing in health for two years and tried many remedies. Among others I used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and found them doing me good. Some neighbors told me the doctors said they were dangerous, so I quit their use and went to the doctor. Under his treatment I got so weak I was unable to raise my head from the pillow, and he told me that I had anaemia of the blood and could never be better again, so I sent for another doctor, and he told me the same. I could not take their medicine and was continually vomiting, so I gave them up, and said, 'Kill or cure, I will again try Dr. Chase's medicines.'

"I used altogether fourteen boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and six boxes of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and now I can work from 6 o'clock in the morning until 7 at night, and I don't poke at it either. Any man that works a farm knows what kind of a job it is. I honestly believe that I owe my life to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and Pills, and I praise them everywhere I go. Many of the people here use them to keep the system in good condition and prevent disease."

Dizzy Spells—Peculiar Feelings

Mrs. T. F. Cullen, Fairview Farm, Shepard, Alta., writes:—"My nervous system was so run down and exhausted that terrible dizzy spells would come over me, and I would have most peculiar feelings. Everything appeared as if it was falling on me, and caused me to jump after taking a few steps. While in this frightful nervous condition I heard of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and began using it. This treatment built up my nervous system and completely cured me, and for this reason I am always glad to recommend it for the sake of those who suffer as I did."

Nerves Exhausted—Feared Future

Mrs. R. J. Billings, nurse, North Bay, Ont., writes:—"I am happy to be able to say that Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is fully worth all the praise given it. I have used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food for some time, and would not be without it in the house. I know that if it had not been for Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I would have been out of my mind. My nerves were so far gone that I had gloomy forebodings of the future, and feared the loss of reason. I feel fine now, and do not lose an opportunity of recommending this treatment to my patients."

Nervous Breakdown—Sleeplessness

Mr. R. B. Hillman, Purbrook, Muskoka, Ont., writes:—"About four years ago I was all run down and could not work, and as to writing a letter, I could not do it on account of my hand shaking so badly. My nerves were unstrung and I was troubled with a nervous breakdown. I could not sleep roundly and would start up so suddenly as to almost jump out of bed. My kidneys were bad, too, and I had awful pains in the back all day. I doctored with our family doctor, but he did not seem to know what I needed. I was recommended to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and could sleep well three nights after starting the use of the Nerve Food and Kidney-Liver Pills. I take great pleasure in recommending these medicines, as I have proved that they do all that is claimed for them."

HORRORS ATTEND MOVING WOUNDED MEN IN FRANCE

On the Rear of the Allies' Left, by Courier to London, October 19.—The day of the war correspondent is past, and any observant newsgetter, with a little "protection," is just as likely to see all that can be seen as the belligerent-clad gentleman who spends a hundred dollars a day upon an automobile in which he buzzes around the fringe of the scene of action at a tantalizing military zone distance of fifteen miles. If he is lucky he may hear the heavy guns booming in the distance, and even see a few puffs of smoke, representing bursting shells, out of which he sets to work to construct an admirable account of a great battle.

A vivid imagination, a skilful pen, more like a brush filled with lurid colours, and perhaps a regretful recollection of campaigns where he was allowed to ride far and free from front to front, are all that the war correspondent can offer his paper or the public.

As the storm rolls forward it is possible to follow in its track and reap the aftermath, but except from military writers, we shall probably never learn any connected story of the mighty struggle of the millions. In England the war is still little more than a sniffing romance with agony chapters, breaking off "to be continued in our next."

Wounded Exposed Four Days

The fearful horrors of the war can never be grasped by seeing the carefully attended wounded who come back to England and by hearing their tales, however, gruesome, while there is scarcely a day in any of the French towns near the armies that does not bring with it some live terror from the front. One example will suffice to point this truth. Several days ago the hospital corps and volunteers were notified that a convoy was expected toward midnight bringing the French and German wounded who had been abandoned by the Germans in their retreat. We had many trains of wounded before and the necessary arrangements were made as usual. But when this convoy arrived even the most hardened had to summon all their fortitude to the task of emptying the carriages.

When a man has a broken leg or arm or a bullet through his lungs the skilled ambulance staff soon has him comfortably placed; but here were human vestiges, so mangled that it was difficult to find a place to touch them without screams or moans. An insufferable charnel house smell pervaded the whole night air, for most of the wounded had lain four days and nights where they had fallen before they had been picked up, and had not yet had their wounds examined, much less dressed.

Germans Suffered Most

Under the burning sun and myriad flies, and under later rains, they had been left to suffer the torture of pain and hunger and thirst, until it was a marvel that they still breathed. The state of their wounds can be guessed, but will not bear description. It was three o'clock in the morning before they could be disposed off in the hospitals. Even twenty-four hours later not all of them had had a first dressing. It was the Germans who were in far the worst case, for the French fire seems far more destructive than the German, and when it does not kill instantly its ravages are horrible.

After four days it was decided to shift those men again, such of them as could be moved. The reason seemed extraordinary, for the authorities feared a mutiny, and had no troops to guard them properly.

That these poor wrecks should ever dream of rising appeared a fantastic idea, but some of them were morose, and half mad, and one or two, especially a sullen young officer, declared that they would not remain quietly in hospital. It must be the effect of a war fever that comes upon the maimed, for a batch of French wounded who had been transferred from Dieppe to Havre to make room had attempted to mutiny because they wished to return to Dieppe, where they had made friends, and had actually to be threatened with fixed bayonets. Though "official secrecy" had been observed the whole town in some mysterious manner gathered around the hospital to see the evacuation but were kept at a distance of about a hundred yards by a cordon of gendarmerie to avoid demonstrations of an unseemly nature.

To such a pitch have German atrocities enraged the French that they would be quite likely to wreak their spite upon even the wounded if the chance were given. In contrast with this popular spirit was the kindness of the French nurses and attendants who had been in actual contact with the prisoners.

The train that was to take them on was drawn up fifty yards from the hospital, and all the carriages and trucks were littered deeply with straw. The very worst cases were laid full length on the floors of the trucks. As they came out on stretchers several of them were holding the hands of the "ladies of France" who had been nursing them. Those who could totter along were also supported by having their arms around the necks of French railway employees or volunteers, and sometimes even of the nurses. It seemed hard to conceive there were units of the terrible German army, the nightmare of the world for forty years.

One young fellow kept a wistful watch at the window, and suddenly his face lightened up and he beckoned me to come near. "That little lady in black with the white coif—I want to see her." I fetched her, a buxom damsel who came up laughing, and jumped into the carriage. She could not speak a word of German, but kept shaking hands and patting the occupants on the head, with little interjections of "Tres-tiens! En voila de bons enfants! Bon voyage!" etc., and they would hardly let her leave. One who ought to have gone because he was not very badly hit, bid himself in a pantry until the train had started, and could not conceal his delight at being left.

Would not Surrender Dying.

The original order was that everybody was to be shifted, but the nurses absolutely refused to allow many of their charges to be removed. "They never ought to have been brought here, and the least that can be done is to let them die in peace," said one. This woman had charge of a wretched patient with a jagged wound in the head, and others. There were twelve cases of lockjaw, which appears to be almost confined to the German wounded.

French fire. It was terrible to hear a man call for the doctor, that his jaws and whole head were "growing stiff." They were probably almost the last words that he would utter.

One carriage in the train had "reserved" scrawled on the door in chalk. It was for the obstreperous officer. A short, bullet-headed, thick-set fellow, with close cropped hair and a sneering mouth, he marched contemptuously down the platform. A couple of reservists with fixed bayonets kept him company on the journey. This is the wood that lieutenants like Von Forstner are made of, and it is such as they who have brought everlasting infamy upon the German uniform.

In one of the next carriages were two well educated soldiers, one in spectacles, speaking French fairly, and keeping up a fire of question and answer with a few Frenchmen. Both of them were convinced that France had declared war and would suffer for it, and good humouredly retorted against the Kaiser and his false news. "We shall all be wiser in another month or so," they said.

See only Suffering Humanity

On one of the stretchers lay a fair-haired man with a more refined face, who also spoke French. His nurse insisted on him being made especially comfortable. I remarked that she appeared to have gained many future friends among the Germans. "What can one do, monsieur! They are men, and there are women they love, and who love them, and we who have husbands and brothers who are perhaps in German hospitals, come to feel for them when we are tending them night and day for four days. That is an attache of the embassy, and so grateful for the little that can be done for him. It is all very well to fight the German army, and crush their regiments, but when a soldier comes so wounded like some of these one soon forgets that he is a German. He is only a ship-wrecked splinter of humanity."

Another woman who was standing by said: "I never thought I should say a kind word for a German soldier yet just now I gave my handkerchief to a poor boy who was crying his eyes out because he thought that he was being taken away to be shot, and should never see his mother again. Nobody knew what was the matter with him until I had asked him and it made me cry too, but I had no handkerchief for myself then. I am going to leave the other hospital where I have been working and come here, where there is want of a little care and pity. Our own French soldiers are in Paradise compared with these miserable wretches."

HAD COLD IN THE CHEST.

"I am happy to tell you that I used Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, and was promptly cured of a very bad cold in the chest," writes Silas Gardiner, Lower South. Our [illegible] Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine to relieve and [illegible] and protections of [illegible]

WEATHER WILL BE SIMILAR TO LAST WINTER

"Vim," a well informed and interesting contributor to the Weekly Sun, writes:

"Since eighteen years of age I have been trying to discover the key to the laws of the weather. This I have not found, but I have found that at least in an ordinary life-time, not two years are exactly alike, and that in Ontario there is a drought period at some season in every year. The average rainfall (counting snow as rain) for the last thirty years was 29 1-2 inches. If there is lack of rain at one season, it is usually made up at another, either in the form of rain or snow.

The year 1912 (three years ago) is known as the wet year, yet we had a dry June, and the following winter but little snow fell. The season of 1909 was very wet. Winter set in the first week in November, and many roots were not harvested. The following winter was exceptionally mild.

I have observed that a hot and dry summer is generally followed by a severe winter; but should the fall be very wet, the winter will be marked by frequent changes in the weather. If the growing seasons are very wet and the fall disagreeable, the winter following will be mild. There are so many things that influence the weather, such as sun-spots, glacier movements, temperature of ocean currents, and wind cycles, that it is not possible to know definitely what the weather will be even a short period ahead.

It is believed by many that the moon influences the weather. Science has proved this belief to be unfounded. Observation, too, is against it, for instance, last spring the weather was very dry in our northern countries, while in the Erie counties the season was wet. Heavy snowfalls occur in Northern Ontario and the Maritime Provinces, while but little falls in the three Prairie Provinces. How can the same moon dominate such a wide difference in weather conditions? The terms "wet" and "dry" moons are meaningless. Her orbit is fixed, and she is too far removed from the earth to exert any appreciable influence.

The belief that our weather changes come from the West is only partly true. The coldest wave of last winter came from the region of Hudson Bay. Both heat and cold waves are caused by differences of air pressure and may last a few or many days. The winter of '13 and '13 was one of great severity in Ontario, while in England it was one of the mildest recorded, and flowers bloomed all winter outside.

I may venture a guess of coming winter's weather, I would say that it will be similar to the last winter, with probably more snow and more marked and sudden changes.

It is to be hoped that, whatever the weather is here, it will be mild where the war is raging. War entails much suffering even under the most favourable conditions. May He, who alone can rule the weather, be merciful to the thousands fighting for our freedom.

CHRISTIANIA IS A SPLENDID CAPITAL

No City in Europe, Not Even Excepting Paris, is Laid Out to Better Advantage

Christiania probably is the most tastefully laid out capital of any state in Europe, Paris itself not excepted, says the Manchester Guardian. It owes its foundation entirely to King Christian IV. of Denmark, from whom it takes its name, who, in or about the year 1623 decided to erect for himself a new capital on the opposite side of the river to Oslo.

The whole of the main streets of the city run at right angles and are extremely wide. Indeed, it would hardly be an exaggeration to call them squares rather than streets. For the most part the architecture is rather heavy in design but the clear air that comes from the fiords tends to give the whole place a tone of lightness that it would otherwise lack. The River Aker contains a wonderful series of waterfalls in the upper courses some little distance from the city, where practically the whole of the necessary power for the ever growing manufacturing quarter of the Norwegian capital is generated. This quarter is rather rigorously restricted to the suburb of Sagene, on the north side of the city, since town planning is something more than a mere name in Norway.

The royal palace, which was built by Christian IV., is a handsome building of rather unattractive architecture. The interior has been much improved since Norway became a separate kingdom and King Haakon took over the crown, and many of the rooms are distinctly English in their appearance. This is largely due to the taste of Queen Maude, who has equipped one or two of her private apartments as close replicas of the rooms at Sandringham and Marlborough House as possible. The university, which is one of the most notable of its kind in the whole northern Europe, though founded less than a century ago, now contains some fifteen hundred students, whose studies are modelled upon those in Oxford and Cambridge. Its library is remarkably complete, comprising some 400,000 volumes, but it has few literary treasures, save some old Norse manuscripts.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

The Russians, according to a despatch received at Copenhagen, have bombarded Kohlu and Sugiu on the coast of Asia Minor.

The military attaches of neutral countries have been authorized by the French Government to proceed for the theatre of war operations.

The Massey-Harris Company, which closed down the day after war was declared, throwing 1,200 men out of work at Brantford, will start again on a two-thirds staff.

Over fifty Italian reservists from Detroit and vicinity passed through Ontario yesterday to rejoin the colors in response to orders from the military authorities of Italy.

Impressive in its solemn simplicity was the funeral yesterday in Montreal of Prof. G. R. Mines, of McGill University, who died on Saturday while experimenting on himself.

Great Britain yesterday gave the United States official assurances that shipments of tobacco in neutral bottoms destined to any country in Europe would not be interfered with.

The sum of $10,850,000 was withdrawn from the sub-treasury at New York yesterday for shipment to Ottawa and other Canadian cities. All but $500,000 of the amount was in gold coin.

HAVE DARK HAIR AND LOOK YOUNG

Nobody Can Tell When You Darken Grey, Faded Hair With Sage Tea

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and abundant with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair fell out or took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, ready to use, for about 50 cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural colour and beauty to the hair and is splendid for dandruff, dry, itchy scalp and falling hair. A well known druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the grey hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural colour and becomes glossy, soft and abundant.

ECZEMA ONLY SKIN DEEP

A few skin troubles originate in the blood. But very few. Mr. Evans, ex-Commissioner of Health, and a famous writer on medical subjects, says:

"We shall begin to make headway with skin diseases when we learn two things. First, that skin disease does not come from impure blood; second, that so-called blood purifiers have no such action."

The skin can be cleared up, and the almost intolerable itching and burning stopped, by local treatment, applied directly to the parts affected, and give yourself a smooth, velvet complexion.

You can do it with the aid of the wonderful D. D. D. Prescription, a cooling, refreshing lotion—not a salve or grease. It soothes your tender skin, opens the pores, drives out the old impurities and gives you a skin like a baby—smooth and clear.

We sell D. D. D. on a positive no-pay guarantee.

You don't risk a cent. Don't suffer another day. Call at our store today. Ask also about D. D. D. Soap—best for tender skin.

It Was Not For Ransom, but For a Benefit to the Kidnaped

By MARTHA V. MONROE

Rudolf Kenyon at sixteen graduated from the high school of the town in which he lived. He was a bright boy and would have been glad to go to college, but his mother had done all she could for him, and it was time he began to do for her. Consequently he must go to work.

The graduating exercises were over, the pupils had been handed their diplomas, and Rudolf started for his home to tell his mother all about it. Leaving the main thoroughfare, he entered the quiet street in which he lived, having still half a dozen blocks to go to reach his home, when an automobile that was being driven in the direction he was walking flipped to the curb a few yards ahead of him, a man alighted, took him by the arm and forced him into the car. Rudolf was physically no match for the man and offered little resistance. Once in the car he was powerless to call assistance, for it was a closed vehicle, and his captor at once drew down the curtains.

That he was kidnaped to be held for ransom did not occur to the boy for several reasons. In the first place, the man who had taken him was a mild mannered person, with no resemblance to the class of common kidnapers. In the second place, kidnaping was associated in Rudolf's mind with little children, too young to serve as effective witnesses against their captors. Thirdly, the man told him in a reassuring voice that he would be at no discomfort whatever. As they drove along he asked Rudolf a few questions.

"Do you remember your father?"

"No; he died when I was a little child."

"Has your mother ever spoken to you of him?"

"I don't remember that she has."

"And you have never had the curiosity to ask about him?"

"Indeed, I have, but have not done so because to mention him always gives my mother pain."

The man paused in his questions and seemed to be thinking. Then he asked another:

"Have you ever gathered from your mother or any one else that your father while living acted in a reprehensible manner?"

"No one has ever talked to me about him. The impression that I have received from my mother is that she mourned him as any widow would mourn her husband."

This seemed to produce a decided effect on the man sitting beside Rudolf. Again there was a pause, at the end of which came another question.

"Then you have never heard your mother say that your father was a bad man?"

"Certainly not."

The man seemed to be profoundly moved. He attempted to take the boy's hand in his, but Rudolf drew away, and his captor did not renew the attempt. They were some time in the car, at the end of which they turned into the grounds of a handsome house, and the car drew up under a porte-cochere at the end of the porch. The man got out and beckoned Rudolf to follow him.

"Come into the house with me," he said to the boy. "I have something to tell you. If after you have had plenty of time to consider what I shall say to you you wish to go home you will be sent there."

This not only caused Rudolf to feel easy, but by this time his curiosity was excited to learn something about this man who had asked him questions about his father and had kidnaped him on the very day he had been graduated from the high school. On entering the house a maid appeared, and the man told her to show the boy to a room and he was to come down to luncheon in half an hour. The maid did as required, speaking kindly to her charge and showing him every attention. The time did not seem long before she informed him that luncheon was ready. On going down stairs he found his captor in the library. Rudolf, so far as he had noticed the man's appearance, had done so regarding him as an enemy. Now that this feeling had worn off he was surprised to see a gentleman who gave evidence of refinement. He led the boy into the dining room, luxuriously furnished, and a butler stood ready to serve the luncheon.

"I shall not eat anything," said Rudolf, "till I have had an opportunity to send my mother a message."

"That you may do. Has your mother a telephone?"

"No, but our next door neighbor has one, and we are permitted to use it."

"Show him the telephone booth," said the host to the butler.

Rudolf went to the booth, called for his mother and found her much worried at his failure to return to her after the school exercises. He gave her a brief account of what had happened, finding her an excellent listener, but when he asked her for his views as to who his captor might be and what were his intentions he found her uncommunicative. As soon as he told her he had been promised that after he had listened to what the stranger had to say and had time to consider it, he might go home she seemed much relieved and told him not to try to escape, but await further developments.

On leaving the telephone Rudolf found his captor-host waiting for him in the dining room, and the two sat down to such a luncheon as the boy had never indled before. While they were eating the gentleman talked, but not about what Rudolf wished to hear—an explanation of this strange captivity. He asked Rudolf what he proposed to do now that he had left school, and when Rudolf told him that he was going to hunt for a position in business the other shook his head.

"You will never succeed in business," he said.

"What do you say that?"

"By the shape of your head and the expression of your face I judge that you were born for an intellectual career. How would you like to go to college?"

"Oh, I should like that above all things. But I can't. Mother has done everything for me up to this time, and now that I am really a man I must begin the work of taking care of her."

The host seemed to reflect at this and remained quiet for a time. Then he continued:

"If certain arrangements can be made which I shall propose to you, will you go to college?"

This quite took Rudolf's breath away. For one year during which his mother was ill she had been obliged to put him in a store as errand boy. This had given the natural dislike there was in him for business an opportunity to crop out. The bare idea of going to college filled him with delight.

"Where will the money come from?" he asked.

"I will furnish that."

Rudolf, though intent upon knowing more, thrust back the next question that was on his tongue and applied himself to a delicacy which the butler served him.

When the luncheon was finished his host led him to the library, pointed to an easy chair, then, seating himself in another, said:

"Rudolf, your father is not dead; he is very much alive."

The boy started, then sat looking at the speaker, waiting hungrily for more.

"He came to America from England about twenty years ago. He was the son of a nobleman, and in that country they have what they call a law of entail, which settles the family estate on the oldest son. Your father was the second son. He came to America, met your mother, who was then a beautiful girl, fell in love with her and married her. After you were born his father in England sent for him to come back—without his wife—and a proposition would be made to him. He accepted the invitation. His father told him that his older brother had received an injury while hunting from which he would never recover. If your father would remain in England, divorce his American wife and marry among his peers in England he should be put in possession of the title and estates. Your father after much persuasion wrote your mother of this proposition. She consented to it and obtained a divorce on the ground of desertion. Your father married again, and his wife died childless a year ago.

"These are the bare facts. I shall neither try to excuse your father nor to condemn him. That I leave for your mother to do. I will say, however, that he condemns himself bitterly."

"Where is my father now?" asked Rudolf, wondering.

"Here; I am your father."

There was a pause, after which the boy asked why he had been kidnaped.

"I came to America to make amends for what I have done. Your mother can best be made to forgive me through the one she loves best—her son. I desired to tell you the story in my own way and send my supplications for forgiveness to her through you. Now you are free to go back to her this afternoon and ask her if she will receive a visit from me."

Rudolf sprang to his feet. "I will go now; I am sure she will do as I wish, and I wish that she shall forgive you."

The car was ordered, and the two went hand in hand to the porte-cochere. There Rudolf threw his arms about his father's neck, kissed him and was carried away.

When Rudolf reached home his mother asked him to give her a couple of hours of quiet thought in her room and then she would give him her decision. For awhile she found it hard to conquer rebellious feelings against the husband who had deserted her, but memories of her early happy married life softened her heart.

Rudolf went back with a favorable reply. He remained at the house his father had temporarily taken during his stay in America while his father went for an interview which the boy hoped and prayed might bring a family reunion. During the time that he was left alone he was treated with every attention by the servants, but so great was his impatience to learn what might be the result of the interview between his parents that he found no enjoyment in the luxury by which he was surrounded. On the third day after his father's departure the car pulled up under the porte-cochere. Rudolf ran out eagerly. His father alighted, then—heaven be praised—handed out his mother. Rudolf ran to her, and she caught him in her arms.

What further explanation the boy received was given by his mother. The pair had just been married a second time and were to live together. The husband and father was now Earl of Edgerton, and the son was heir to the title and estates.

Doctor Said She Had Bright's Disease.

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS CURED HER.

Bright's disease is a term applied to one of the most serious of all diseases of the kidneys, the symptoms of which are often of a severe character.

Severe pains in the back appear at first and are followed by disturbances of the urinary organs which show that the urine contains a large amount of albumen. Dropsy is also another forerunner of the dreaded Bright's disease. On the first sign of any kidney trouble you should at once put the kidneys right by the use of Doan's Kidney Pills. The pill that cures kidney troubles only.

Mrs. C. A. Heistand, Mooswa, Alta., writes: "Last May I was taken down sick. The doctor told me I had Bright's disease. My kidneys got so bad I could not rest day or night. The doctor's medicine did not give me any relief. I used four boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills, and they put me in good shape again."

Doan's Kidney Pills are the original kidney pill, so when you ask for "Doan's" do not accept any others with similar names.

Building Young Canadians to carry on the work of this growing commonwealth is the business of intelligent mothers who are willing to study the needs of the little ones entrusted to their care. You cannot build boys and girls out of school-books alone. The body is built out of nourishing foods and rational outdoor exercise. A daily diet of combined with proper exercise supplies all the body-building material needed by growing youngsters. The food to study on, to play on, to grow on, to work on.

For breakfast heat the Biscuit in oven to restore crispness and pour hot milk over it, adding a little cream. Salt or sweeten to suit the taste. Better than mushy porridges that are bolted down without chewing. A hot, nourishing breakfast for a chilly day. Deliciously nourishing for any meal with sliced bananas, baked apples or canned or preserved fruits of any kind.

FIGHTING IN GERMANY.

Allied Troops Have Invaded Empire at Three Points.

LONDON, Nov. 10—At three points in the area of hostilities, in Silesia, in East Prussia, and in Alsace, forces of the allies were on German soil yesterday, and for the first time since the outbreak of hostilities, conditions seemed to presage in the opinion of military observers, a reversal of the roles at present time Germany has been fighting, generally speaking, in the territory of her enemies, but now she would appear to be more or less seriously menaced from the east by the victorious armies of Grand Duke Nicholas, the Russian commander-in-chief in the field, the advance guards of which are less than 200 miles from Berlin.

It is true that there was a brief Russian invasion of East Prussia during the early stages of the war, while the French have for a long time held their position in Alsace, but the latest development in the Russian advance, if the interpretation placed on it in London is not all wrong, is the most important of the campaign up to the present time.

Executions In Constantinople.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—A large number of public executions have taken place in Constantinople in the past few days, the victims being principally those of opposite opinion to the Government. The police maintain the strictest watch and the expression of any idea favorable to peace or the allies is worth a man's life.

Radway's Ready Relief

E. L. Haddock of McGee, Mo., writes: "I had muscular rheumatism six weeks. Had three doctors, but did not get much relief. A friend insisted on me trying R. R. R., and sent me two bottles. In twenty minutes after the first application I could turn in bed with ease. Have used two bottles and am well."

Rheumatism
Apply the Relief externally to the part or parts affected, as briskly as circumstances will permit. Benefit will also be derived from Radway's Pills, their alterative action being chiefly suited to this disease. When the joints are swelled, stiff or contracted, the Relief, with sweet oil, is an admirable liniment.

BLUE PA DPNCEY BY FRENCH OFFICER

LONDON, Nov. 9.—The Mail to-day gives prominence to an estimate of a distinguished French officer, whose name, it says, cannot be divulged, but who is in a position to make such an estimate that the Germans will not be driven back over the Rhine until February, 1916, and that peace will not be concluded before 1917. The officer bases on this estimate a strong appeal to Englishmen not to refrain from joining the army on the idea that the war will soon end.

A Hard Meal To Digest

Is Quickly Digested by the Taking of a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet After It Is Over.

Corn on the cob is hard to digest, for some folk, but with a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet it readily is disposed of by the stomach and digestive apparatus.

THE ALLIES ARE GAINING ALONG THE COAST

RUSSIANS ARE ADVANCING ON CRACOW

ALLIES ADVANCING ALONG THE COAST GERMANS GAIN LITTLE IN THE SOUTH

Official Communique This Afternoon Shows That Dixmunde Which Has Repeatedly Changed Hands During the Last Few Weeks is Now Occupied by the Germans While the Allies Have Gained Ground Nearer the Coast

FIGHTING OF MOST VIOLENT NATURE

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, November 11. — Fighting on the battle line from Nieuport to the Lys, continues with the greatest intensity, but with varied fortunes for both the allies and the Germans, the official communique issued at 3 o'clock this afternoon declares. It adds that the French have reoccupied Lombaertzyde, but the Germans, however, now hold Dixmunde.

This would indicate an advance of the French lines northward along the coast, but a similar slight advance for the Germans to the south. Dixmunde has changed hands repeatedly during the fighting, marking the efforts of the Germans to pierce the allied lines and reach the coast.

NEW YORK, November 11. — The Herald says editorially: "If it is true, as cabled from Amsterdam that Germany has threatened to prevent the American Relief Committee from distributing food and other supplies to the suffering Belgians the defenders of 'kultur' in this country will have some more defending to do. Germany's attitude toward and actions in Belgium are a crime against civilization. Having conquered and over-run a country with which they had neither quarrel nor excuse of quarrel the Germans have stripped the country of not only its valuables but of its food supplies, and at this time when neutral nations are compelled in the interests of humanity to undertake the task of saving the Belgian people from starvation, the Germans continue their pillage. Now that to their vandalism they add the threat of preventing the distribution of supplies to the needy, the spectacle is one that not even the greatest admirer of German prowess can view with any feeling save disgust."

LOYAL ORDER OF MOOSE WILL OCCUPY SPLENDID NEW ROOMS

Opening of New Quarters in the Bank of Commerce Building Will be Held This Evening.

200 MEMBERS

To-night will see the opening of the new home of a new fraternity that has gained a strong foothold on the men of Peterborough—The Loyal Order of Moose. The new quarters are in the Bank of Commerce building on the third floor, and every effort is being made to have them in good condition in time for the meeting to-night so that the members cannot help but be pleased at the prospect of having the immediate future of the order in these rooms.

Mr. E. N. McWilliams is Dictator of the local branch of the Order, and Mr. G. N. Gordon is Past Dictator. The future of the Order in this city looks particularly bright, as already two hundred well-known men of the city have been initiated into membership. To-night the opening will take the form of a social evening, and it is expected that Supreme Dictator Hayde, of Toronto, will be present.

The rooms are most comfortably furnished, include facilities for pool, a reading room, and an inviting lounging room. The furniture is of substantial but splendid character, and every detail has been looked into to see that the rooms are homelike and picturesque.

REGULAR MONTHLY W.M.S. MEETING

An unusually large number attended the regular monthly meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of the George Street Methodist Church, yesterday afternoon, and the meeting was a splendid one in every way. Mrs. Kendry, President of the Society, presided, and final arrangements were made in connection with Miss Campbell's address to-day.

A vocal duet by Mrs. Wood and Mrs. Freeman constituted a very welcome musical contribution to the afternoon's programme. The duet was nicely rendered and well received. That the members of the Society are showing considerable interest in the work was shown by the fact that every woman on the "Watch Tower" reported briefly but comprehensively, regarding recent developments in the various mission fields.

A good report from five representatives of the Mission Study Class was also received, showing that that branch of the Association has also been active. Three new members were enrolled and every indication was that the Society is accomplishing much that is worthy in connection with their efforts to interest the women of the Church in suporting the mission work.

MORE BOYS FOR FRONT

Artillerymen and Signallers Left For Kingston To-day—Lakefield Sends Quota to 46th Regt.

RECRUITING TO-NIGHT

More Peterborough boys left for Kingston this morning to prepare themselves for service overseas. A party of eight artillerymen left at 8.10 a.m. to join the new batery being organized in Kingston, and two signallers also left to-day. Included in the party were Messrs. Robert Biggs, Fred Cole, Fred Reed and David Ivison.

Mr. George Perks left this morning for Kingston, where he will join the Fifth Field Company of Canadian Engineers, which is being organized as a university Corps.

His brother, Mr. Walter Perks, who enlisted in the Lakefield Company of the 46th Regiment was another of the party which left this morning. Among those from Lakefield were Messrs. Armsarong, Pemberthy and Webster.

Three more recruits were accepted by the 57th Regiment last night out of sixteen applicants, or a total of eight acceptable out of thirty-one applicants, since recruiting commenced on Monday night. So far no cyclists have been recruited. There were several volunteers for this branch last night, but thy failed in the medical examinations. A doctor will be at the Armouries again to-night at 8 o'clock to examine recruits.

Non-Jury Sittings

Opened This Afternoon

The non-jury sittings of the High Court opened this afternoon with Mr. Justice Kelly presiding. The first case called was that of the Bank of Ottawa versus R. R. Hall. The former was represented in court by Mr. G. M. Shipley, K.C., of Toronto, and Mr. G. W. Hatton, of Peterborough. Mr. G. H. Watson, of Toronto, and Mr. S. T. Medd, of this City, acted for Mr. R. R. Hall. The issue of the case concerned a promissory note for the amount of $10,000 that was given to the Bank of Ottawa by Mr. R. R. Hall in December, 1908. This was done at the request of the Bank of Ottawa, who, it is stated, asked the defendant if he would guarantee the indebtedness of the company that existed in December, 1908. The defendant refused, but finally agreed to guarantee a proportion of the indebtedness, which at that time was stated to be $220,000. On December 26, 1908, Mr. Hall handed Mr. Hollingshead, then manager of the Bank of Ottawa, a promissory note for $10,000, or one twenty-second part of the company's indebtedness.

Mr. Shipley submitted that the terms on which the bank held the note entitled them to retain the note as continuing security for any liabilities that might arise as events set up.

DEBT WAS PAID.

Counsel for defendant contended that the indebtedness was extinguished and that R. R. Hall was merely a guarantor until such time as the debt was paid. Mr. Watson submitted that the statement adduced from the bank showed that the existing debtedness was liquidated on July 19, 1909. The bank, so it is alleged, then assumed two positions in respect to the matter, viz., that the note was given by Mr. Hall in payment of shares subscribed for, and not paid for, and that it was given as security for whole account for past, present and future indebtedness, and therefore should be retained as continuing security.

Mr. R. R. Hall, examined by Mr. Watson, said that he was a shareholder in the Canadian Cordage Manufacturing Company, Limited. He ultimately became director and president of the company, which, on December 10th, 1910, went into liquidation. Mr. Hall related the circumstances which led up to the occasion when Mr. Hollingshead asked him if he would guarantee the indebtedness of the company.

The case is proceeding.

CHEESE BOARD CONTRIBUTES TO PATRIOTIC FUND

All the Factories Have Not Reported to Secretary But $991.32 Has Been Raised

LAST BOARD MEETING

The last meeting of the Cheese Board was held this morning with a good attendance of salesmen and buyers. 1,428 cheese were boarded, all of which were purchased by Mr. G. A. Gillespie at 14 11-16 cents.

The secretary, Mr. Hawthorne, read a report of the contributions of the various factories to the Patriotic Fund as a result of one day's make of cheese being donated for that purpose. All the factories have not yet made their returns, but so far $991.32 has been received, made up as follows:

Stoney Lake	$28.75
Myrtle	40.00
Warsaw	97.53
Fleetwood	78.62
Villiers	62.61
Westwood	95.00
Warminster	50.00
Missing Link	45.00
North Dummer	35.60
East Emily	60.00
Shearer	88.50
Keene	57.40
Trowern	67.35
Lang	87.07
Selwyn	71.24
Young's Point	32.25
Ormond	63.00
	$991.32

Ormond contributed $103 to the fund, but as a number of the patrons of this factory reside in Percy Township, which is in Northumberland, $40 was given to the fund of that county.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., drew the attention of the salesmen and urged their attendance to the annual district dairy meeting which is to be held at Westwood on Thursday, Nov. 19th.

Messrs. Warde and Cameron, instructors, were also present, and in a few remarks pointed out how important it was for dairymen to attend the meeting at Westwood.

A resolution of appreciation of the work of the instructors, Messrs. Warde and Cameron, and the secretary was instructed to forward a copy of it to Mr. G. G. Publow.

Votes of thanks were tendered the Bank of Montreal officials for the use of the board room, and also the officers for their efficient work.

TO-DAY'S BOARD.

The number of cheese boarded today was as follows: Keene 40, Warminster 86, Shearer 100, Selwyn 70, Villiers 70, Warsaw 115, Westwood 90, Dalsdale 96, Daisy D, 53, Myrtle 100, Ormond 120, Young's Point 35, Lang 75, Indian River 60, East Emily 58, Trewern 38, Norwood 105, Fleetwood 43, Killarney 20—total 1,428.

The Board then adjourned until next March, when the annual meeting will be held.

A Big Night To-night at Royal Theatre

Manager Clayton has secured for to-night and to-morrow the best programme ever offered in this City. Detective Finn of Scotland Yard, will headline the bill. Florence Lawrence, in "The Girl O' the Woods," is well worth the admission, alone. Screaming comedies have been booked for these two nights and the best of all is the "Talking Eagle." This attraction will be here for the balance of the week. Come where you get your money's worth and you will never be deceived. The admission for this extra programme will be—this reader—and 5 cents only. Be sure and cut this reader out and you will be admitted for 5 cents. To-night will be your last chance to see No. 1 series of Lucille Love.

THE WEATHER

The foretaste of winter which we experienced yesterday afternoon and evening, came on the same date as the first fall of snow last year. Four weeks of good weather (some of it of the nature of Indian summer) followed the first snowfall last fall, and it is probable that real winter weather is not yet in sight.

KHAKI CLAD SOLDIERS AT THE OPENING

Brilliant Uniforms of Peace Time Are Missing in the Ceremonies Preceding the New Session

KITCHENER IN PARADE

Special Cable:

LONDON, Nov. 11.—Despite the rich robes of the peers and peeresses and the gay uniforms of heralds and diplomats in the House of Lords, there were unmistakable signs of the grim struggle proceeding in Europe when Parliament reassembled to-day and was formally opened by King George. Full state marked the ceremony, but the brilliantly uniformed troops which usually line the route from Buckingham Palace to Westminster were missing, and for the first time in history khaki-clad soldiers participated in the state procession. In view of the German spy scare the usual perfunctory search of the vaults under Parliament for possible imitators of Guy Fawkes was to-day of an earnest and thorough nature. The picturesque yeomen of guard carried out their historic search, but Scotland Yard men had performed the task far more efficiently before their arrival. In the House and lobbies there was the unprecedented sight of legislators in khaki. Over one hundred members of Parliament, and as many peers have joined or were already members of the naval and military forces. About fifty obtained leave from their camps to attend to-day's ceremonies.

The brilliant headquarters staffs were also missing, most of the generals being at the front. The few officers who could be spared from the War Office wore khaki or undress uniforms. The King wore a field marshals' uniform. He appeared careworn, but cheerfully acknowledged the enthusiastic plaudits of the thousands lining the streets. The Prince of Wales, a slight figure in khaki, was on duty with the guard of honour outside the House of Lords. Lord Kitchener, Secretary for War, grim and alert as ever, found time to ride behind the King, "sacrificing his lunch time," as one of the staff remarked. The usual crowd of Londoners was reinforced by some thousands of French and Belgian refugees, and their shrill cries of "Vive le Roi," mingled with the roar of British cheering.

LONDON, Eng., Nov. 11.—With his empire engaged in the greatest struggle in its history, King George in his speech from the throne to-day, called upon Parliament for the enactment of measures that will enable the government to carry the war being waged upon the continent to a successful conclusion. The King impressed upon the Lords and Commons the serious business ahead of the empire, and declared that only war measures would be submitted during the present session. "The energies and sympathies of my subjects throughout the empire are concentrated upon the prosecution to a victorious issue of the war in which we are engaged," the King said. "We have summoned you because duty is paramount and it is of supreme importance that you take whatever steps are needed for its adequate discharge. Throughout the area of conflict our army and navy continue to maintain their glorious traditions. We watch their steadfastness and their valour with thankfulness and pride. Throughout the empire there is a fixed determination to secure at whatever sacrifice the triumph of our arms and the vindication of our cause." Extra war measures to the extent of a hundred million dollars are to be submitted.

RUSSIAN FORCES ARE MOVING ON

Are Preparing to Attack Cracow Now—Are Close to Stronghold and are in Possession of Main Line of Railway Making it Possible to Move Troops Rapidly

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, November 11. — The investment of Cracow will be the next decisive step in the eastern campaign. Russian troops have been officially reported at Miechlow, only 20 miles from Cracow. The main advance upon the fortress is proceeding along the railway from Ivangorod. The advance upon Cracow may be expected to be rapid. Miechlow is on the main railway from Ivangorod and speedy transportation of the troops, as well as guns, munitions and supplies will be possible.

LONDON, November 11—The Admiralty announces officially that Captain Karl Von Muller, Lieut. Prince Franz Josef of Hohenzollern, and 154 officers and men of the Emden, were rescued, and are now prisoners of war.

PHILADELPHIA, November 11.—Alderman R. A. Riggs, delegate from Winnipeg, Canada, electrified the American Federation of Labour, in congress here today in appealing for action that will reach the courts of Europe, and enable the workers of the world once more to enter into brotherly relations with each other. He said that through the present bloody war the spirit of brotherhood of the workers of the American continent is being endangered, but speaking for Canadian Unionism he would say that the workers of Canada would never consent or assist in war between the United States and Britain, resulting from secret diplomacy, or any other means, to fly at each others' throats or spill the blood of any other fellow workers on the continent.

Movement For Nations' Complete Disarmament, Compulsory Arbitration And International Police System

Meeting Will Be Held in City Council Chamber Thursday Night at 8 O'clock for All Sympathizers.

LIST OF SPEAKERS

The movement which has been on foot for the past few weeks in this city to take some action toward making it possible to use the present war to make another conflict impossible has taken definite form and all who are in sympathy with the movement are asked to attend the meeting in the City Council chamber Thursday night. The meeting will be held at eight o'clock sharp and His Worship Mayor Buller will preside. Among the speakers will be the Rev. Jas. Rollins, President of the local Ministerial Association, Rev. Father McColl, Canon Davidson, City Solicitor Gordon, J. J. Hartley, H. G. Walker and Ald. Johnston.

The meeting is the result of a petition bearing about seventy-five signatures, which was presented to the City Council at its last regular meeting, and a large attendance is looked for.

The petition that was presented to the Council two weeks ago was as follows:

Peterborough, Ont., Oct. 7th, 1914.

We respectfully request His Worship the Mayor to call a public meeting of citizens at an early date to consider and take action upon suggestions which would use the present great war to make another conflict impossible: D. N. Carmichael, J. Edgar, H. Rush, R. B. McGill, J. F. Linton, E. D. Hall, J. T. I. Halliday, A. N. Allison, H. P. Morgan, Roland Dunne, J. Crane, R. J. Todd, W. Harstone, W. H. Denham, T. H. G. Dunne, Adam Hall, N. Routly, W. E. Conway, J. Allen, T. W. Marks, B. McGill, S. C. Moore, W. C. Ackerman, T. E. Coulthard, G. R. Coleman, J. C. Shook, W. H. Moore, J. S. Bell, E. G. Patterson, D. Walker, J. J. Hastley, G. A. Smith, A. C. Herridge, G. A. Gillespie, F. W. Miller, C. R. Pennefather, C. Walker, P. Campbell, P. E. Rutherford, R. W. Travers, W. H. Hill, A. Weddell, V. J. McElderry, E. A. Peck, V. Eastwood, Ed. M. Elliott, L. H. Picard, Chas. H. J. Mitchell, G. W. Hatton, C. J. Carroll, J. A. Harper, W. W. Coulthard, C. Peters, J. T. Donoghue, C. Stewart Cameron, T. F. Matthews, Samuel Jordan, D. W. Dumble, Jno. Carlisle, Jos. Stewart, Jas. A. Hall, D. O'Connell, J. T. O'Connell, H. R. H. Kenner, W. F. Nelson, H. J. McCannan, F. C. Cubitt, Fred M. Dela Fosse, H. W. Morphet, W. G. Morrow, A. Mowat, E. C. S. Huycke, J. M. Miller, R. J. Soden.

The movement is widespread and is being fostered with the idea that if it gets universal support it may be possible to influence the governments interested to insert a clause in the peace terms providing for compulsory arbitration, for the absolute disarmament of the great Powers and the substitution of an international peace service.

THE PATRIOTIC FUND.

In the matter of waging war—contributing soldiers—Peterborough is doing her duty nobly—but in providing the sinews of war—contributing money in its interests, we are not doing quite so well.

We don't which is natural, because we are 3,000 instead of 30 miles from the scene of conflict, "get down to brass tacks," as they are doing in Great Britain.

We are, except a few wives and mothers, not directly affected by the war, and we go on peacefully with our daily duties and even our pleasures.

We owe this condition of peace and safety to those who are fighting for us, and we are in duty bound to do our share.

We don't realize this duty as they do in the Old Country. In London the newspapers have suspended the "social column." There is no more society in the trivial time-wasting sense. The women that flocked to "bridges," teas, receptions, crushes, etc., are all now busy at their knitting for the soldiers in the field.

We don't take the situation so seriously, nor realize it so fully. We are aiming at putting our patriotic fund at $20,000. We shall do this easily, if we take inspiration and zeal from Asquith's great speech at the Guild Hall banquet—

"That is a great task, worthy of a great nation. It means for its accomplishment that EVERY ONE AMONG US, OLD OR YOUNG, RICH OR POOR, BUSY OR LEISURE, LEARNED OR SIMPLE, SHOULD GIVE WHAT HE HAS AND DO WHAT HE CAN."

At the Lord Mayor's procession, a detachment from the Canadian forces was honoured by being made the special escort of the Lord Mayor's coach. Among these were probably some Peterborough boys. They will all be at the front soon, fighting our battles, and possibly some Peterborough wives will be widows and some mothers sonless. Shall we fail to do our share in looking after those left destitute through the war?

The war will likely be long, and though there may seem to be large funds collected at present, they won't last long, and their necessity will be perpetuated and intensified as we send more contingents to the front.

Thus the need of strengthening the Patriotic Fund. The feeling is that Peterborough owes $15,000 to the Patriotic Fund, and that it is our duty to bring it up to a higher figure.

Let the slogan be, and be acted upon—

$20,000 FOR THE PATRIOTIC FUND.

SOME LESSONS OF THE WAR.

This war has demonstrated many things and forced us to revise many opinions. It has shattered the general belief and fear of the invincibility and resistless power of the German war machine. It has broken down. We have had to revise, in a sense, the burden of Rule Britannia—"Britannia rules the waves." In one way Britannia does rule the waves. Her fleets keep the German fleets bottled, and useless in its home harbour; her fleets keep the seas paths of commercial shipping open to the Empire and all the world save Germany, Austria and Turkey, except for the depredation of some stray German cruisers; one of which has at last got its quietus.

The cruiser Emden, "the terror of the Pacific," whose buccaneering has been, in the language of a despatch, "a continual source of humiliation to the British Admiralty," is no more. Her destruction is not due altogether to Britannia ruling the waves. It fell to the lot of a Dominion cruiser, the Australian cruiser Sydney, to put an end to the terror of the seas, which had eluded the British cruisers for nearly three and a half months. That the Sydney cornered the Emden, may have been a piece of good luck, but that the Sydney sent the Emden to Davy Jones' locker was a piece of good fighting that any cruiser in the British navy might have been proud of.

This incident, to speak of it mildly, suggests a revision of other considerations. We were told in 1910 in Parliament and throughout the country, that a Dominion navy, like the existing Australian and proposed Canadian navy was a "Separatist" navy—a wedge that would split asunder British connection. This was a mistake. A navy like the Australian has a curious relation to the Empire, and partakes of the character of the bond between the Mother Country and the self-governing dominions expressed in the phrase—"daughter in my mother's house; mistress in my own." A navy like the Australian, under control of and maintained by that Dominion itself, is no more a "separatist" navy than the Australian or Canadian government under which the people govern themselves, is a separatist government. Such a navy or government is a magnificent contradiction in terms—free, yet bound, to the central power; independent, yet subject, to the central power, not by compulsion, but by community of interest and sentiment—at once a tangible and intangible entity, something unique in the political relations of the world. Britain does not consider the existing Australian navy or the proposed Canadian navy, as "separatist." In the impeccable and ever-reliable, statistical standard, Whittaker, the vessels of the Australian navy and the Canadian navy are classed with the vessels of the Royal Navy, with foot notes to identify them with the respective dominions. The dominion navies are not "separate," but one with the Royal navy—at the same time Dominion and British — truly imperial.

This war has also brought revision of opinion and attitude upon and towards the question of the Canadian naval policy. One party when it proposed, upon the mandate of an unanimous parliament, the organization of a Canadian navy, ignored the plea of another party for a contribution of money, in view of an emergency, that demanded the promptest kind of action. Both were right and both were wrong. There was an emergency as has since been made plain; but the plan of contribution proposed to meet it was not the right plan. If events have shown that there was an emergency, events have proven that the best way to meet it was the plan carried out by Australia. The provision of a home navy composed of battle cruisers, cruisers, destroyers and submarines.

In this war the Dreadnought has not yet figured actively; the work has been done by cruisers. That the cruiser's the thing, is shown by the fact that the present government, which has acted energetically in leasing Canada in the path of duty, wisely refitted the dismantled Niobe, still included in the British navy list, a proof that a Canadian navy like Australia's, consisting of the battle cruiser "Australia," the cruisers "Encounter," "Melbourne" and "Sydney," the destroyers, "Paramatta," "Warrego" and "Sydney," which won her spurs yesterday, would have been of more use to Canada and the Empire in this crisis, than half a dozen Dreadnoughts, gathering barnacles in home station waters.

The war has taught us this among many other things, including the lesson that our political and party squabbles, though honestly waged as to conviction and object, can well be subordinated to considerations of national and imperial interest. It shows us that both parties may be honest and sincere; that both may be partly right and partly wrong. This war and its lessons suggest the mollification of party strife, the enlargement of outlook, more patriotic cooperation, more mutual trust and mutual action when common interests are involved. For a generation perhaps, this war will sweeten and modify the bitterness of party relations in the old land, as it should do, and doubtless will do, in Canada. If the parties of Canada can unite and become as one man in the discharge of Canada's duty in relation to the war, there is no reason why their relations in the routine government of the country cannot be placed upon a higher plane.

THE HATRED OF ENGLAND.

People who had thought themselves safe from all dangers, in the midst of a world devoted to the cause of peace, now find that across a narrow strip of sea a great armed Power is gnashing its teeth in unrestrained Anglophobia, and desiring nothing so much as cut the throat of the British nation. From a day-to-day perusal of the German Press it is quite clear that German hatred for France and Russia is a faint and lukewarm sentiment compared with German hatred for England. We have spoilt their timetable; we have cut in before they were quite ready to tackle us; and therefore their hatred is two-fold. We have foiled, so far, their present plan; but above all, we are foiling their future plan, which was nothing less than to destroy and supersede the British Empire. Therefore if the Germans could they would work far more terrible havoc in England than they have wrought in poor, harmless, innocent Belgium. The British nation is waking up to the fact of this hatred which singes our cheek, like a blast from hell, across these narrow seas.—London Morning Post.

Why Armies Advance Slowly

The methods followed by the armies in France are not generally well understood from the published reports sent by inexperienced observers, who at best get but a fleeting glance of the firing line from a distance. Quite the contrary is the case of the "Letters from the Firing Line," by an aide-de-camp of the French army, which are appearing in the "Scientific American." In the special war issue of 7th November, this expert explains why the advance of a victorious army is so slow in these days of modern warfare, when the art of defence has ben so elaborately developed:

"A study of our trenches will show why the progress of the armies is so slow. They outline most of the trenches as they have been established by the enemy. The infantry when entering them are entering real fortresses. They are sheltered from view, from the shells, and from the rain.

"Neither our artillery nor our infantry can se the Germans encaved in them. To reach them it is necessary that our shells fall exactly in the trenches. The battle is no more a fight in the open; the offensive takes the character of a hunt; the danger everywhere comes from underground. Before fighting the enemy we must unearth him.

"Moreover, when we realize that the German artillery has also its fortified works; that everywhere it surrounds itself with wire netting in order to stop the assailants; that between the cannon mitrailleuses are concealed, the purpose of which is to act against our infantry; and that behind the field artillery is placed the heavy artillery, whose far-reaching shells are able to protect the retreat with a wall of fire, then we can understand the effort demanded of our troops to displace the German army from its positions and to drive it from the woods and the hills where it seemed to have taken root."

A HUGE CROP NEXT YEAR.

This year's acreage in wheat in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta was, in round figures, 10,500,000. An increase of at least a third is now to be regarded as certain for next year, which, at the average number of bushels per acre for the past decade, will mean a crop of something more than 350,000,000 bushels.— Manitoba Free Press.

TAKING THE GREED FROM THE TARIFF.

The American people never were so rich and prosperous as they are today. Taking the greed and graft out of the tariff and financial absolutism out of Wall Street has not necessarily closed a single factory. It has not necessarily deprived a single man of work. It has interfered with the business of no one whose trade has not been bottomed on extortion and plunder. We have not been flooded with "pauper goods" from abroad. We are distributed only as all civilization is disturbed. Such commercial and industrial difficulties as appear are due to war, and nothing but war. Plutocracy, showing some symptoms of recovery, cannot belie the facts. That the people who not long ago repudiated a party which sold tariff schedules for campaign contributions appreciate these truths is proved by the complexion of the new Congress.—New York World.

A NEW WISCONSIN IDEA.

Wisconsin comes forward with a new idea in dealing with prisoners held for minor offences. It originated in the desire that had found expression in some other States, Pennsylvania included, to avoid visiting the penalty upon the wife and family of an offender by depriving them of their breadwinner.

Under a new act in Wisconsin when a prisoner is sentenced for a minor infraction, instead of being committed to the workhouse or the rock pile while his family suffer for the necessities of life, he is compelled to continue at work on his usual job, if he has one, or if he has not, is put to work at some job outside found for him by the Sheriff, but is required to report at the prison for his meals and at night, while his earnings are turned over to the court and paid to his dependents during his term of imprisonment.

The innovation is said to be working successfully not only in avoiding suffering to families, but in reforming the offenders. It has been applied chiefly in cases of drunkenness, of non-support, and the familiar routine of police court cases. It has been indorsed by a president of the Wisconsin Police Chiefs' Association, and is at least worthy of consideration by those interested in improving the far from satisfactory methods of dealing with minor offenders, under which the heaviest punishment has fallen so often upon innocent victims.—Pittsburg Despatch.

BRITISH "JEALOUSY" AND GERMAN EXPANSION.

The particular significance of the order issued by the Legislative Council of Honk Kong that all Germans must close up their places of business and leave lies not so much in the act itself as in its revelation of the large part Germans have played in the commercial life of this British crown colony.

The German contention that Great Britain is responsible for precipitating the great conflict in Europe is built solely upon the assumption that the English are "jealous of German's commercial success." It has no other possible foundation; none other has been suggested.

Isn't it a rather peculiar brand of "jealousy" that throws open British colonies to Germans on a plane of absolute equality, thus giving every possible aid and comfort to their commerce?

This he British have done at Hong Kong, as in their other colonies. There are as many German business houses as English at Hong Kong. Even in the great financial institution of the Far East, the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank, there is a large German interest which has full representation in the directorate.

Germany has not lacked opportunities for commercial expansion. These have presented themselves in all corners of the earth and German merchants have taken full advantage of them.

German merchants are not crying for "expansion". This is the cry of German militarism asking more lands to conquer in the name of "kultur."—New York Herald.

BRAVO!

Kitchener sat in his London den,
Silent and grim and grey,
Making his plans with an iron pen,
Just in Kitchener's way.
And he saw where the clouds rose dark and dun,
And all that it meant he knew:
"We shall want every man who can shoulder a gun
To carry this thing right through!"

Bravo, Kitchener! say what you want,
No one shall say you nay!
And the world shall know, where our bugles blow,
We've a man at the head—to-day!

Jellicoe rides on the grey North Seas
Watching the enemy's lines,
Where their Lord High Admirals skulk at ease
Inside of their hellish mines.
They have drunk too deep to the boasted fight,
They have vowed too mad a vow!
What do they think—on the watch—to-night?
What toast are they drinking now?

Brave Jellicoe! Call them again,
And whenever they take the call,
Show them the way, give them their "Day!"
And settle it once for all!

And French is racing the enemy's front,
Stubbornly day by day,
Taking the odds and bearing the brunt,
Just in the Britisher's way.
And he hears the message that makes him glad,
Ring through the smoke and flame:
"Fight on, Tommy! Stick to them, lad!
Jack's at the same old game!"

Bravo, Tommy, stand as you've stood,
And, whether you win or fall,
Show them you fight as gentlemen should,
And die like gentlemen all!

So Kitchener plans in London Town,
French is standing at bay,
Jellicoe's ships ride up and down,
Holding the seas' highway.
And you that loaf where the skies are blue,
And play by a petticoat hem,
These are the men who are fighting for you!
What are you doing for them?

Bravo, then, for the men who fight!
To hell with the men who play!
It's a fight to the end for honour and friend,
It's a fight for our lives to-day!

Perry Worden.

GERMANS FOUND ANTWERP EMPTY WHEN THEY CAME

By Herbert Soley.

VLISSINGEN, Holland, Nov. 4.—For an hour the tall Belgian had been sitting by, listening to the conversation, but taking no part. Finally he spoke.

"I have seen two hells," said he; "a noisy hell and an empty hell. I do not know which is the worse."

Those sitting there nodded their heads.

"Those empty streets," said one, after a moment. "I shall not forget them. They were so unreal. Four hundred thousand had fled from them."

The men and women of the party were of that flood of refugees from captured Antwerp that has drowned Holland. All about them were other thousands, walking wearily along the road, sitting wearily on dikes, sleeping under hedges. Our refugees were in a waggon. It was as though they had been marooned on a tiny islet, just out of reach of the restless sea. We had been asking them to tell us of that last day in Antwerp. They shook their heads.

"Each of us saw so little," they explained. "It is as though a blind man asked you to describe the night sky to him. How would you tell him of the stars?"

At last one man spoke:

"I shall never forget the mad woman I saw running down the street," said he. "She was in her night dress. Her neck and arms were bare. Her long hair floated out behind her. Upon her shoulders she had strapped a soldier's knapsack. In one hand she waved a rifle, with bayonet fixed. As she ran she screamed."

A PITIFUL END.

The refugees were singularly uncommunicative. They wished to tell, but it was as though they had been silenced by the thundering guns. Only here and there an incident stood out.

"There was a girl upon the street," said another, after a time. "I stopped to look at her. Both legs had been broken by a shell, and there was a cut in her neck, and her head had been injured. A doctor had given her first aid. Do you know how morphine acts upon the wounded?"

The man at whom he was looking shook his head.

"It makes them restless," said he, simply. "Perhaps they do not suffer, but they throw themselves about. So it was with this girl. She was twisting about on the stones of the street, and her head was beating on the stones. She was only sixteen."

Some one asked what he did.

What could I do?" he asked, hopelessly. "I had a car, but it was full of other wounded, and this girl was dying. Her father and mother begged me to take her with me, but I could not. I told them it was better that she die than be awakened to agony. So at last they agreed with me and came away. She was left lying there."

The tall Belgian spoke again.

"I waited until the Boches came," said he. "I did not intend to run. I have never believed all these stories of outrage, and I was sure that the Germans were on their good behaviour. But I could not stand those empty streets."

His home is on the wide street down which the Germans came in their triumphal parade, every man of them spick and span, his buttons shining, his cape on at the regulation angle, his broad face shining. Each German was lustily bawling either "Die wacht am Rheim" or that other German hymn of which a free translation is "A mighty fortress is our God."

"They were too fat and young and strong," said he. "We have been lied to. I thought to see old men, or the landwehr and the landsturm—the men we have been told by our papers have been living on turnips and beet roots in the fields. But these were men of the first battle line. They frightened me."

Antwerp townsmen and women spend half their lives in the streets. Every other house is a cafe. The pavements are always thronged with gossipers and young people flirting.

"I sat in the corner window of my house," said he. "It is on the corner of two streets down which they marched. I could see for half a mile in either direction. There was not a man or a woman or a boy—not even a stray dog—upon those streets. And the Boches marched down them—singing. For five hours I watched them. Then I ran away. I was afraid."

"Did they offer you any harm?" He shook his head.

"I was afraid of the town," said he. "Did you ever see an empty town?"

IN THE DESERTED CITY.

If the stories of the Anversois are true, an unparalleled thing happened — the literal evacuation of a great city. The day after the Germans reached it they declare that not a living soul remained.

"I had been living at the Hotel St. Antoine," said one man. "I had taken refuge in the cellars — the walls are twelve feet thick, built by the monks of 500 years ago — but after a time one cannot stay in a cellar. It is black and very lonely. One feels it is better to die in the open. And my candles ran out."

So he went upon the street. This was on the night preceding the German entry, as I recall it. Except for the blue light shells bursting the town was absolutely dark. Overhead the sky was painted by the distant light of flames where suburbs of the town were burning. In spite of the bombardment, the city was wonderfully still.

"The big guns did not make a noise so much as they made a jar," said he. "The ground shook beneath one's feet, as though a trip hammer had fallen. Then one heard that terrible scream of the shell overhead."

More than anything else he wanted company. He was lonesome. In the cellars he had found a little kitten.

And at first he carried it with him. But the cat leaped out of his arms and ran back to her home.

"For the first time since I grew a beard," said he, "I felt like crying then. I wanted to take some one by the hand and be told that I was quite safe."

So he began a stumbling progress through the dark streets looking for a lighted window. Now and then he would hear the crash of masonry as a house front toppled into the street. He tripped upon loose stones and fallen timbers and fell headlong in holes the great shells had torn in the cobbled surface.

"I saw dark things lying on the street," said he. "I do not know what they were. I did not dare find out. I was alone."

It seemed to him that he went on in this fashion for hours.

"At last," said he, "I saw a feeble little gleam of light in a window. I was afraid at first. I thought it was a trap. The window was quite open, and through it I could see a candle standing on the table. The room seemed quite empty."

After a time he went in. There was an old woman sitting in that room, knitting. She had been sheltered from view from the street by an old-fashioned chest of drawers.

After they had become good friends he asked her why, on such a night as this, she sat in her house alone.

"How else should I sit," she asked. "All who knew me are dead. What does it matter whether I follow them to-night or six months from now?"

ANTWERP PEOPLE NOT RETURNING

Antwerp, Nov. 9, via London.—The population of Antwerp, which fled the city at the time of the German occupation, is still unwilling to return. The German demand for a war indemnity of $10,000,000 is frightening many of the people into staying away.

German troops have been almost invisible in Antwerp since Saturday, Nov. 7. The town hall has no military guard before it. Within the building the German administrators and officials of the Belgian Civil Government work peacefully under the same roof. The Antwerp Police Department is still under the command of its Belgian officers, but every policeman is obliged to salute all German officers who scrupulously return the salute.

One French and two Flemish newspapers have been allowed to re-appear in Antwerp. All stores are compelled to accept the German mark at the valuation of one franc twenty-five centimes. Refusal to accept this rate of exchange means the closing up of the store.

The immense quantities of flour and wheat of which the Germans became possessed when they occupied Antwerp are being moved by freight trains to Louvain. Here these provisions are prepared for the use of the army, and then sent to the German front in Flanders.

If this removal of food supplies continues long at its present rate, the people of Antwerp soon will face the same shortage in provisions which to-day is general in all other parts of Belgium.

PRESENTED LIBRARY TO CITY OF LOUVAIN

BORDEAUX, Nov. 9.—Henri Bergson, presiding at the Academic of Moral and Political Sciences, announced that Arthur Raffelovitch, Russian Privy Councillor and attache of the Russian Embassy in Paris, a correspondent of the Academy, has given his library, which he has been collecting for thirty years, to the library of the University of Louvain.

M. Bergson added that a committee is being formed to reconstitute the library's funds. It is known that the Germans removed the most precious manuscripts before burning the library, hence it is hoped that the treasures eventually will be restored to Louvain.

FRENCH AIRMEN VERY USEFUL

PARIS, Nov. 9.—Published reports that French aeroplanes are never seen above the French lines, while numerous machines of the enemy are constantly reconnoitering over the heads of the French soldiers, has brought forth a defensive official explanation of the operations of the French aviation service.

This report sets forth that French aviators are operating not only on the German lines, but considerably to the rear of them. The names of aviators are never mentioned officially, but their exploits have been none the less numerous and brilliant. Notebooks found on dead Germans, the statement sets forth, prove that the French aviation service is performing its duty. One instance of the effectiveness of the corps is found in the throwing of one bomb which killed 30 men and 50 horses of the enemy at a time when a certain detachment of cavalry was assembling. Numerous other instances of efficient work are given. In conclusion, the statement says that this new arm of the service has fulfilled successfully the promises made for it, but that it will never replace any weapon now in use.

LOYAL BOERS WIN AND LOSE

LONDON, Nov. 10. — Reuter's Cape Town correspondent, under date of Monday, gives the following official communication concerning the fighting in South Africa:

"An engagement between General Lammer's forces and Transvall rebels under General Christian Beyers occurred on the Vet River, southeast of Bloemhof, November 6.

"The rebels, well armed and led by Beyers, were entirely dispersed, losing 9 men killed, 11 men wounded, 864 prisoners, 300 rifles and 300 horses.

"The loyalists' casualties were three men killed and nine wounded."

"General Christian DeWet, the rebel leader," says Reuter's Pretoria correspondent, "has been in contact with and dispersed a small Government commando under General Cronje, a member of the Legislature, near Doornberg. In the course of the fighting General DeWet's son, Daniel, was killed.

"The Government is sending strong reinforcements to Cronje."

GERMAN VILLAINS POPULAR.

Up-to-date War Stories the Rage Among British Youngsters.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—German villains are now much in demand among youthful Britons, as a result of which the Deadwood Dick type of American literature which has been popular here for a long time, especially among messenger boys, has received a mortal blow. According to a well-known newsdealer in the Strand, it is now necessary to substitute German villains for the Indian, Portuguese and half-breed varieties, while the stories must entirely savor of war. The heroes are of the Allied forces, the principal roles being taken by British sailors and soldiers.

Many of these stories appear weekly, with the lots on the latest engagements. If one may judge by the heavy sales, the Germans are extremely popular villains.

THE RIGHT AND WRONG METHODS OF MARKETING EGGS.

An extremely interesting and attractive feature of the Demonstration Car, containing the Egg and Wool Exhibits of the Live Stock Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture, which was on exhibition at Peterborough recently was the educational display illustrating the Right and Wrong Methods of Marketing Eggs.

This display formed the larger part of the Egg Exhibit and was an object lesson that will not soon be forgotten by those who visited the car. It was arranged in two large, electrically lighted show cases. Each case contained a series of models together with appropriate backgrounds and descriptions illustrating in the on instance the careless methods too frequently followed in the handling of eggs on many Canadian farms, and in the other the results that may be obtained through the adoption of improved methods on the farm, in the country store, and in fact my all those engaged in the egg trade.

In each instance the course followed by the egg from the time it was laid until it reached the consumer, was mapped out. The cause of the many bad and stale eggs was evident when one noted the unsatisfactory conditions that prevailed on many farms, and in many country stores. It was pointed out that even the mongrel, non-descript poultry found on many farms, refused to use for the greater part of the year, the dirty, undesirable poultry houses provided for them. The eggs were gathered infrequently and from questionable places. They were held until it was convenient to carry them to market, and were usually traded on a flat-rate basis, for merchandise, at the country store where little or no attention was paid to quality. Here they were frequently held indefinitely, in anticipation of a rising market and often were shipped in damp and musty cases to the wholesale dealer, who candled and graded them. The result of the candling was indicated and it was evident that but a relatively small proportion of the eggs graded "select." The manner in which the retail grocer permitted eggs to deteriorate was also pointed out, and if by chance, a portion of the uncandled eggs went direct to the consumer the result was very evident.

The second series showed a flock of pure-bred poultry kept in a clean, well ventilated poultry house, provided with clean, dry nests from which the eggs were gathered frequently and regularly. The eggs were kept covered in a clean utensil in the coolest, driest place in the farm house and marketed at least once, better twice a week. In the country store they were bought on the basis of quality and packed in clean, dry cases and forwarded with the minimum of delay. The result of this careful management was apparent in the candling rooms of the wholesale warehouse where a decidedly large proportion of the eggs graded "select," and if by chance a portion of these eggs went direct to the consumer, the result was in marked contrast to that apparent in the previous instance.

The plans for this display were prepared by officers of the Poultry Division of the Live Stock Branch and the exhibit was in charge of Mr. W. A. Brown, Chief of the Division, Mr. W. H. Ault and Mr. J. R. Fee.

Another important feature of the exhibit was the Candling Demonstration given in a large booth erected in the end of the car. This phase of work was of particular interest to consumers, for the reason that but few persons appreciate the fact that the quality of an egg can be accurately determined without breaking the shell.

The candling of eggs is not a difficult process and the small amount of labour entailed in candling presents no valid reason why the consuming public should not candle their own eggs more frequently than they do, and thus safeguard themselves from many unpleasant occurrences at the breakfast table.

THE EASIEST WAY TO END DANDRUFF

Stop Falling Hair and Itching Scalp

There is one sure way that never fails to remove dandruff completely and that is to dissolve it. This destroys it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning most, if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy, every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

If you want to keep your hair looking rich, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for nothing destroys the hair so quickly. It not only starves the hair and make it fall out, but it makes it stringy, straggly, dull, dry, brittle and lifeless, and everybody notices it. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive, and four ounces is all you will need. This simple remedy has never been known to fail.

HERE'S A POSER

If you found a roll of bills in a shabby purse, showing that it probably represented the hard-earned wages of a working man, what would you do with it? Keep it, and so enrich yourself at the expense of some poor family's food and shelter? No, certainly not! Try to find the owner, and return it to him? Yes, every time!

There aren't many workmen losing money on the street nowadays, but there are more than you would suppose who are losing jobs, and jobs mean money, so it amounts to the same thing.

If it would give you real pleasure to hand a laborer back his lost money, it ought to be equally pleasing to be able to hand him back his job.

Simplest thing in the world to do! All that's necessary is to remember when you go into a shop to buy anything, that the article you pick out means somebody's job. If it's an imported article, well, that's a job for a fellow in some other country, but if it's "Made in Canada", it's a job for one of your fellow Canadian citizens, who for the time being, is a little down on his luck.

Take your handkerchief out right now, and tie a knot in it, just to remind you about

BRITISH PRISONERS FACE FIRE OF ALLIES

Two Motorcyclists, Captured by Germans, Are Forced to Enter Trenches

LONDON, Oct. 24.—No more dramatic adventure of the war perhaps has befallen any one than to the Hon. Geoffrey Pearson, son of Lord Cowdray, and Sergt.-Major Mackay, of the Army Motor Transport. Geoffrey Pearson is dead, and his body rests in the middle of a great plain, the battlefield of the Marne, surrounded by innumerable little crosses which mark the resting-places of many comrades, French and British.

It is Sergt. Mackay who tells the story.

"On the retreat from Mons Geoffrey Pearson and I were acting as motor cyclists, and were letting out our machines for all they were worth along a straight road, with open country on either side. Suddenly we seemed to ride into a perfect hailstorm of bullets. Ahead of us the road ran into a little wood.

"'Come on, Geoff! We'll ride for it!' I shouted, and we dashed through in safety, but hardly had we entered the wood than we rode into a group of German cavalry, scattered about on either side of the road. They immediately fired on us, and seeing the game was up we tumbled off our bikes, put up our hands, and surrendered.

"The Germans were wild with delight when they discovered we were British. They spat at, struck, and hustled us. They allowed us to mount our machines again, but plainly let us understand what should happen to us if we attempted to escape. We had no intention, however, of letting the German army have the use of our machines if we were to be prisoners. So we turned off the lubricating oil, with the result that after a little while our machines jammed and became useless. The Germans were very suspicious and asked us why, since we were motor cyclists, we could not repair our machines, but we replied that they were worn out by hard wear and could not be put in order again. So we left the machines by the roadside.

"The mounted Grenadiers (Grenadiere zu Pferd), into whose hands we had fallen, took us to their captain, who spoke English perfectly, and said with mock politeness: 'I regret, gentlemen, that since you are not officers, I cannot put you on parole.' As a matter of fact we were just as glad that he could not, as neither of us were reconciled to the idea of being locked up in a German prison for the rest of the war.

Starved the Prisoners.

"The Germans treated us shamefully. They gave us nothing to eat and taunted and jeered at us continually. The night we spent in the open, lying on the roadside without any covering betwen two men. The Germans made themselves comfortable enough, you may be sure. Then in the morning we were handed over to a regiment of infantry, the King of Spain's regiment of Prussian infantry, and the way those men treated us was a revelation of German brutality.

"They took a sheer delight in knocking two defenceless Britons about, prodding us with their bayonets, jabbing us with the butts of their rifles, and kicking and pushing us as we marched along with them. They ordered us to carry their packs. Thinking discretion the better part of valour, I took the one handed to me, but Geoffrey, like the high-spirited fellow he was, flatly refused, and got a smack across the head with the butt of a rifle.

"The Germans took us with them in their advance against the French, and made us get into the trenches with them. We were thrust into the line with the rest under a terrific fire from the French guns and infantry. The French shrapnel was awful. The Germans fell like flies, and their bodies began to pile up in the trenches.

"I had a good opportunity of seeing the German soldier under fire, and I must say he is plucky enough. He seems to be imbued with a sort of Oriental fanaticism, and goes about his duties stolidly, paying no heed to the bullets flying around.

"But Geoffrey and I were getting a bit tired of the gentle German. In the trenches we were constantly exposed to the risk of being killed by the French or British fire, so we thought we might take a chance of escape.

A Dash Under Fire.

"We decided to make a dash for it. The Germans were all very busy with the fight, and we managed to creep away unperceived out of the trench and through the long grass. There were some civilian prisoners with us in the trenches, and they were in the last stages of physical fear. I believe the poor beggars, fearing they might have to bear the consequences if we got clear away, drew the attention of the Germans to us. Anyway, we were not more than two or three hundred feet away when the Germans saw us and opened fire. By instinct, I suppose, I threw myself flat on my face and Geoffrey did the same. Seeing that we did not move, the Germans took no further notice of us, and I lay for about three hours without moving. Then I noted that the Germans had left their trenches, and I turned to Geoffrey, who, like myself, had never stirred. He was dead, shot through the head.

"I had to leave him where he lay and creep away for safety. Finding a loft in the village of Varreddes, I stole in there, and in the evening the Germans came back. Four of them installed themselves in the room below my loft, and for two days they remained there, while I was a prisoner in the bay above them. Hungry as I was I could not help laughing at them, that they should be there, all unconscious of the near proximity of their former prisoner.

"From the window of the loft I saw an old peasant with a cow, and that gave me an idea for escape. As soon as the Germans left the house, I stole out, got into a house next door, loaned myself a suit of peasant's clothes, and in order to complete my make-up, captured a calf. I led it right through the German lines into the French. None of the Germans took the least notice of me, but the French imagined I was a spy, until one of their officers, who spoke English well, recognized me, and passed me through to the British.

"I have got that peasant suit still, and mean to keep it as a souvenir of my experience.

"A week later I returned to Varreddes and found the body of poor Geoffrey Pearson lying where I had left it, and buried it there, with the assistance of some peasants, marking the grave with a cross, on which I cut the name and date, so that it may be found easily later on."

FIRST TO OBTAIN THE V. C.

Sergt.-Major White Repeats Bravery Shown in South Africa.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—Sergt.-Major White, of the Army Service Corps, is the first man to get the coveted Victoria Cross in the present war.

The gallant act for whiah this soldier was awarded the V.C. occurred at Le Cateau, where White, after his corps had been driven back by the German cavalrymen, returned in the face of a hail of bullets searching for his wounded captain. He was successful, and carried the officers to safety.

The Sergeant-Major was shot in both legs.

White won the Distinguished Conduct Medal in South Africa for carrying Lord Roberts' son, who was mortally wounded, from the danger zone beside Colenso, and who was awarded the Victoria Cross for his gallantry in saving the guns in that action.

The Victoria Cross is the most coveted decoration of the British soldier. It was instituted on 29th January, 1856, and consists of a bronze Maltese cross, bearing in the centre the Royal Crown surmounted by a lion, while on the scroll is the inscription, "For Valour." Less than 550 of these crosses have been awarded.

Messrs. John Strickland, of Bridgeburg, Ont., and Russell Wood, of Peterborough, passed through the village on Monday last on their way to visit Mr. R. C. Strickland, at Burleigh.

Mrs. G. R. Browning and Miss Margaret, are spending two weeks visiting friends in Peterborough and Havelock.

Mr. A. Miller, of Strassburg, Sask., is visiting at his home in the village.

Mrs. Fitzgerald, of St. Catharines, who has been spending the past three weeks in the village visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Crawford, returned home on Saturday.

Messrs. J. Perry, P. Taylor, P. Tyndall, G. R. Browning and Sherman Hill, left on Monday last for a hunt at Gull Lake.

Mr. Otter Stewart spent a few days last week in the village.

Mr. R. W. Allin, Educational Secretary of the Church of England in Canada, preached at both services at St. John Baptist Church on Sunday, and after evening service gave a lantern lecture on Canada, which was much enjoyed by the congregation. During his short stay Mr. Allin was the guest of Rev. and Mrs. H. A. Ben-Oliel at the rectory.

Miss D. Pemberthy and Mr. H. Pemberthy, who have been living in Mr. E. R. Tate's cottage for the past three years, left on Saturday last and will take up their residence in the village.

Mr. J. M. Bygott spent a few days last week in Toronto.

TO HELP THE PATRIOTIC FUND

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—To help the 'Patriotic Fund,' I offer immediate possession of 150,000 square feet of excellent garden land, consisting of 40 lots north of Chamberlain Street west to Western Avenue. Every lot is perfect and will yield a good return if properly cultivated. I offer this free of any rent for next season, and also for 1916 should the war still continue, with one condition only, "that it shall be kept clean," as I would wish to have the benefit derived from this go to the most deserving in city or suburbs, and to attain that object I would suggest placing it under the care of the Patriotic Association, and I would further suggest in the interests of the city that all owners of idle land in or about the city should follow my lead in this matter.

FIGHTING AT YPRES STILL GOES AHEAD

Successes Are Reported for the Allies in Belgium, Near Soissons and in Alsace.

GROUND IS GAINED

LONDON, Nov. 11.—France's campaign against the German has developed new success in the three principal scopes of conflict near Ypres, Belgium, north of Soissons, France, and in Alsace. In the Ypres region, the slow but steady advance of the allies was continued with hand-to-hand fighting of fierce character, the feature. In this district it is estimated that 600,000 troops are actively engaged, while each of the opposing armies has a reserve of approximately 150,000.

By seizing the fortified heights north of River Aisne and occupying Soupir, Chavonne and Vailly, the French have given the allied armies the key to the entire territory of the Aisne and now the retreat of the Germans from the angle between the Aisne and the Oise rivers is threatened.

Paris claims that the allies have maintained their positions between the Lys and Langemarck, at the same time making appreciable progress between the latter place and Dixmude.

Berlin claims to have inflicted a defeat on the Russians in East Prussia and reports the capture of 4,000 men and considerable munitions of war.

A despatch to the Centarl News from Amsterdam says:

"Trainload after trainload of German artillery are leaving the Lys Valley in the direction of Ghent.

"The German army headquarters has been transferred to Alost."

The town of Alost is 15 miles west of Brussels and 40 miles east of the fighting area around Dixmude.

According to the latest list of killed published in Vienna, the Hungarian aristocracy had a considerable loss in the battle around Lille, France, to which district they had been sent to aid the Germans. The lists show that 867 hussars belonging to noble families were killed.

Many despatches speak of the movement of German troops eastward from Belgium as forecasting the necessity of reinforcements along the eastern frontier, but neither the French nor German official statements yesterday afternoon indicated any slackening in the violence of the German attacks in West Flanders. In fact, the French statement says that between the sea and Armentieres the opposing forces were both acting on the offensive. As to the outcome of this double offensive, the rival contentions are absolutely contradictory, the Germans claiming slow progress near Ypres, and the French asserting that the Germans attack there was beaten back. In view of what seems to be a sustained and concerted German effort in this region, the reports of the German retirement are hardly borne out, although it is said they have moved their headquarters still farther east, this time from Ghent to Alost.

The situation along the battle line in France proper, from the standpoint of the allies, was summed up in a despatch from an "observer with the Indian corps," who says there has been no marked change anywhere, though he sees a gradual weakening of the German attacks.

The Turks Play Double

Grand Vizier Was Either Out-voted or He Deceived Britain

LONDON, Nov. 11. — The British Government issued last night another "white paper," reviewing the incidents which preceded the declaration of war against Turkey. It deals in the main with the Goeben and Breslau affair, and sets forth that the Grand Vizier all along was at least ostensibly against dragging Turkey into the conflict, but was either powerless to resist Enver Bey and his associates, or, while outwardly opposing them, was winking at the fast approaching crisis, while the Turkish and German preparations went forward.

The Grand Vizier, according to a despatch from the British Embassy at Constantinople, dated Aug. 16, admitted that Germany was doing her utmost to compromise the Turkish Government, but gave solemn assurance that Turkey's neutrality would be maintained. This assurance was frequently repeated, and so impressed the British Ambassador, Sir Louis Mallet, that he wrote to Sir Edward Grey that he was convinced of the Grand Vizier's sincerity.

GOT GUNS FROM JAPS.

French Government Has Use of 105-Millimetre Field Cannon.

PARIS, Nov. 10.—The French army now has the use of the 105-millimetre field guns built in France to re-arm the artillery forces of Japan. When the war began part of the guns had been delivered and another large consignment was on the ocean.

Japan was asked by France if she she might take the guns. The Japanese Government cabled promptly, placing the guns at the disposition of France, and announced that she was sending back those already delivered so that the French army might use them. The vessel conveying the last consignment had already reached Colombo when it was intercepted.

TO MEET INVADERS

Germans Rushing Troops to Try to Stop Advance of the Russian Road Roller

VANGUARD ACTIVE

LONDON, Nov. 11.—The following Russian official statement was issued yesterday in Petrograd:

"In Eastern Prussia the right wing of the enemy, who has been stubbornly resisting in the region of Lyck, has been driven back towards Masouria Lake.

"East of Neidenburg (24 miles south of Koenigsberg) near the Muschaken railroad station a Russian cavalry force defeated a German detachment which was protecting the railroad. The Russians captured a train and blew up the railroad bridges.

"On Nov. 8 Russian cavalry, meeting a cavalry division of the enemy, forced it to retire towards Kalisz.

"On the route leading to Cracow we have attained Miechow (a town 44 miles southwest of Kielce).

"In Galicia our troops have traversed the River Wisloka. They now occupy Rzeszow, Dynow and Lisko."

The Russian light columns which have crossed and dislocated the outer line of German strategic railways running around northern and central Poland, report feverish activity. They have been able to arrest German movements on the railways nearest the frontier, but farther back the German lines are crowded day and night by trains bringing troops and equipment, especially artillery, from East Prussia to positions behind Thorn and Posen.

The excitement among the German railway staff has thrown the civilian population into a panic. Many thousands of German families have hastily packed their portable belongings and fled behind Posen fortress, fearing the Russian invaders may avenge German cruelties in Poland. Others are abandoning their homes and making for Breslau and Dresden. It is evident the German General Staff feels it has again been outgeneralled. Their experts were convinced that when the Russians had repulsed the movement on Warsaw and the Vistula and had turned the Germans back as far as the frontier the real campaign of invasion would be conducted through East Prussia.

They considered it absolutely impossible for the Russians to bring a great combined army with impedimenta for a winter campaign across Poland in November. This has already been done, hence the Germans are now concentrating at high pressure all their available forces from fortresses, garrisons and reserves in Silesia, Saxony and Prussia.

The Austrian evacuation of the positions to the southeast of Lemberg, in South Galicia and in Bukowina is reported in Petrograd yesterday to be continuing. There are also indications here that the entire Austrian line from Stryi to Czernowitz is being gradually abandoned.

It is announced at Petrograd that the Emperor, while en route from Kholm to Siedlce, received a report from Gen. Avanoff, commander-in-chief of the army of the southwest. Gen. Avanoff with his staff was invited to the Imperial breakfast. At the station at Siedlce the Emperor received Gen. Rouzsky, commander-in-chief of the army of the northwest.

KING GEORGE PROUD OF ARMY

Sends Message of Congratulation to Troops in Field

LONDON, Nov. 11.—King George has sent the following communication to Sir John French, commander of the British expeditionary force on the continent:

"The splendid pluck, spirit and endurance shown by my troops in the desperate fighting which has continued so many days against vastly superior forces fills me with admiration. I am confident of the final result of their noble efforts under your able command."

Gen. French replied, thanking His Majesty for the message, which he said had been received with gratitude and pride by the army. He assured the King "of unalterable determination to uphold the highest traditions of Your Majesty's army, and carry the campaign through to a victorious conclusion."

COURT OF REVISION HEARS A NUMBER OF ASSESSMENT APPEALS

Retail Merchants Together With Corps of Lawyers Combine to Get Assessment in Business Section of City, Reduced—One Foot Seven Inches of Frontage Makes Difference of $2,900.

The Retail Merchants Association of Peterborough, under cover of legal battery, approached the Court of Revision yesterday, with a view of obtaining reductions on the assessments levied on the properties of merchants connected with the Association. Despite the weight of numbers, augmented by well-conducted sorties of an augmentative and apparently convincing character, the Court remained, not only obdurate, but impregnable to all attacks. In this they were backed up by City Solicitor G. N. Gordon, whose voluble use of technicalties and legal erudition, undermined the hopes of more than one sanguine appellant. It was a formidable looking aggregation of merchants and lawyers that faced the Court which was entrenched behind the barrier that divides the spectators' gallery from that portion of the Council Chamber wherein civic legislation is created.

Judgment Received.

The Court, which is composed of Messrs. W. F. Johnston, B. Morrow, and James Fnnie, called for the case of Mr. E. F. Mason. The latter was represented by Mr. E. H. D. Hall, who subjected Mr. Wm. Henry, assessor, to a pretty thorough examination, which, in part, was as follows:

"Do you assess for the whole or a percentage of the value of the property?"

"I assess the property for its actual value in both the residential and business sections of the City."

"If it can be shown that residential property has been assessed for less, in proportion than business property, what would you say."

"It can't be shown."

"I intend to show you," countered Mr. Hall.

"What do you think should be the gross return on rentals?"

"About ten per cent."

Mr. Hall contended that all properties should pay a just proportion of the taxes, and if it could be shown that some of the properties on George street were assessed in excess of the true value of the property, it could be within the jurisdiction of the Court to reduce the assessment. He volunteered to submit comparative valuations on both residential and business properties in order to determine whether the residential sections are assessed on the same basis. Mr. Johnston said that it would be sufficient to submit valuations on business properties.

Judgment in Mr. Mason's case was reserved until Friday next.

A Big Difference.

The Court next focused its attention on properties occupied by Oak Hall, Clothiers, and Mr. Moncur, druggist. The former assessment is credited to Sandford and Co.. The Sandford property is assessed for $9,900 and the Moncur property for $12,900 or a difference of $2,900. The Moncur frontage is one foot, seven inches more than that of Sandford.

"Why is there a difference of $2,900 for one foot, seven inches?" inquired Mr. Hall.

Mr. Henry — "Mr. Moncur has a stairway which he can use in renting the upstairs; besides, the land is worth a little more, as it approaches the corner."

"You mean that you assess the stairway for $2,000?"

"You know what I mean."

"You assess him $2,900 more because he rents the up-stairs?"

"Not because he does, but because he can."

"Why do you assess Mr. Moncur eighty dollars a foot more than Mr. Loch?"

"Because land values depreciate so rapidly between Brock and Hunter Streets."

Mr. Moncur, in his evidence to the Court, claimed that the stairway was a detriment. He received $240 in rent from the upstairs and $100 of this amount was put on the taxes. The stairway also reduced the width of the store.

Judgment in this case was also reserved.

Sale Price of Land.

To Mr. Corkery, who conducted the case for Sandford and Co., the Assessor admitted that one of the principles that guided him in making assessments, was the sale price of land in the immediate vicinity. The assessment value of the property approximated $440 a foot. Properties directly across the road approximated $275 a foot. In explanation of this difference, Mr. Henry stated that property on the east side of the street was not nearly so valuable as that on the west side. Besides, the merchants on the west side of George street, between Brock and Hunter streets, had the advantage of two frontages—Chambers street, at the rear and George street at the front.

This case, together with a number of others, will be dealt with on Friday next.

The Toronto Savings and Loan Company entered a blanket appeal, which was considered by the Court to be ineffective with the result that these appeals were thrown out.

SPECIAL ATTRACTION AT THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE

In the coming engagement of the Imperial Musical Comedy Co. at the Grand Opera House for one week, starting Monday evening, November 16th, the people of Peterborough will have a chance to see some of the bigest novelties of the present season, the management having secured Mr. Harry Feldman and Frank Christie to handle the comedy roles and have surrounded them with a splendid cast of principals and a large chorus of singing and dancing girls. As extra added attractions they have secured Bhyard and Geary, New York's foremost tango dancers, who will present each evening a selection of all the latest society dance crazes. Introducing on Monday night "The South American Maxie" and the hesitation waltz. In offering Mr. Nelson Adair the phenomenal double-voiced singer they have succeeded in giving the public one of the strongest features on the stage to-day, and in conjunction with a company of clever artists and a big beauty chorus in a repertoire of the late musical comedy successes they will no doubt be greeted by a capacity house on their opening in this City when they will present the big New York Musical Comedy success "The Girl Question" at popular prices, 10, 20 and 30c., and the boxes at 50 cents. Seats now on sale at the Opera House and going fast.

LETTER OF APPRECIATION

From Members of 57th Quota of the Second Canadian Contingent

"E" Company, No. 57,
21st Infantry Battalion.
Canadian Expeditionary Force,
Kingston, Ont., Nov. 6, 1914.

His Worship the Mayor, W. H. Buller, Esq., and Citizens of Peterborough—

We, the members of the 57th egiment of "E" Company, volunteers for the 21st Battalion of the Second Contingent, wish to take this opportunity to state our appreciation of the way in which the Peterborough citizens showed their patriotism and good fellowship towards us on our departure.

No words could properly express our thanks for the same. It has shown that the spirit of the citizens was quite in accord with our action, and has made the effect that we must and will do our best to uphold a good reputation and good results in our endeavour to stand by a right and just cause.

Our especial thanks are due to the speakers of Tuesday, November 3rd, at the Armouries, for their good advice and kind words; also to the ladies of the Patriotic Fund Committee, for their kindness in supplying the luncheon, and also the parcels containing hand-worked Balaclava caps and wristlets; also to the officers of the egimental Fund for their cers of the Regimental fund for their the luncheon supplied to us en route to Kingston.

Again thanking all concerned, we remain,

True to serve His Majesty,
King George V.

As representatives of the volunteers of the 57th Regiment of Peterborough.

Leonard Frazer,
Frank C. Roberts.

RELIGIOUS WORK OF THE Y.M.C.A.

Plans For the Season Have Been Decided Upon

It is the purpose of the Y.M.C.A. to emphasize religious work this season. Three meetings of the religious work committee with Dr. Moir as chairman have been held during the past few days to arrange the religious work programme for the season.

It is proposed to hold theatre meetings the first Sunday of each month, using the very best possible speakers and musical talent, believing that the Gordon meetings at the theatre have demonstrated that men appreciated such services.

A call is being issued for the Life Problem Club for the first meeting, to be held next Sunday afternoon, Nov. 15th, at 4.15 o'clock. Dr. A. Moir will address the young men, after which officers will be elected for the ensuing season. These meetings are open to all men and are not restricted to membership of the Club of the Y.M.C.A.

Monday evening at 6.30 o'clock every interested man is invited to attend a complimentary supper for the purpose of considering the organizing of a Bible Study Club. It is proposed that the club consist of three classes taking the graded work of the Y.M.C.A. National Council. Three quarters of an hour will be devoted to class each evening, fifteen minutes of this time being given to a popular address before the whole club, followed by the class study.

We trust that every man interested and who will attend the supper will notify the Y.M.C.A. office before 12 o'clock Monday that provision may be made for all those who are to be present.

Meetings and Bible study classes of the Association are not limited to the Y.M.C.A. members. A cordial invitation is given to all men to attend.

A PROPHET WITHOUT HONOUR.

Mrs. Flubdub—I'm afraid it's going to rain to-day.

Mr. Flubdub—Oh, I think not. I just saw the weather man going down the street with an umbrella.

Annual District Dairy Meeting

To Be Held Thursday, Nov. 19th at Westwood

The annual district dairy meeting of the County of Peterborough will be held in the village of Westwood on Thursday, November 19th, at two o'clock. Mr. George H. Barr, Chief of the Dairy Division, Ottawa, or Mr. H. W. Coleman, Superintendent of Cow Testing in Ontario, and either Mr. G. G. Publow, Chief Dairy Instructor, or Mr. L. A. Zufelt, Superintendent of the Dairy School, Kingston, will address the meeting. The district representative of the Ontario Department of Agriculture will also deliver an address. Mr. Warde, the local dairy instructor, will also be present and report upon his work during the season. Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., director of the district, will occupy the chair. At the close of the meeting a director will be nominated to represent the district for the ensuing year.

The great value of this meeting to the dairy farmer cannot be over-estimated, and every farmer and every farmer's son, who has the interest of his calling at heart, as well as his monetary success, should not fail to be present.

German Spy Pays Penalty

Karl Hans' Lody is Shot in the Tower of London

LONDON, Nov. 11. — Karl Hans Lody, German spy and pseudo-American, who recently was court-martialed in Middlesex Guild Hall and condemned to death, was shot in the Tower of London last Friday morning, it has been learned.

The statement concerning the execution is brief, saying, "Sentence was duly confirmed."

It is understood that Lody died bravely, refusing to the last to reveal the name of the superior officer from whom he received his instructions to spy on the British navy.

This was the first execution in the Tower of London since 1700. The scene of the execution was the tower barracks, not far from the spot where Anne Boleyn and other persons famous in English history were put to death.

Lody was about 38 years old.

For a while Lody stayed around Scotland and kept tabs on ship centres, accumulating a mass of details about armament and the location of British fighting vessels.

His former wife testified against him through the mails.

Charge Still More Serious

McGill Street Man Accused of Crime Punishable by Life Imprisonment and Lashes

Arrested on a charge that is punishable with life imprisonment with lashes, a McGill Street man came before Magistrate Dumble this morning, and after declining to plead or elect, was allowed his freedom on $4,000 bail. He is defended by Mr. G. N. Gordon, while Acting Crown Attorney Wearing conducted the prosecution.

The charge against the prisoner was at first that of the seduction of a girl under sixteen years of age, but this morning the charge was changed to a still more serious one, that of an offence against a girl under fourteen years of age.

Monday he was arraigned on the former charge, and was allowed out on bail. This morning the two sureties of $2,000 each were renewed and he was again given his freedom. The accused resides on McGill Street, and the young girl against whom the offence is alleged to have been committed also lives in the south of the City. The case was adjourned until next Tuesday.

A. O. U. W. HOLDS REGULAR MEETING

Peterborough Lodge, A. O. U. W., held their regular meeting last evening in their hall, (C.O.F. hall), Simcoe street. Five applications were presented for membership by Organiner A. Nicholls, of this City, who has recently been appointed Organizer for the district. After the initiation a very interesting address and talk was given by Bro. Bert Armstrong, Superintendent of the Organization Department, Toronto. A very enjoyable time was spent. An open meeting has been arranged for, November 24—their next regular meeting night. Bro. A. Nicholls is a resident of this City and has the good wishes of all the members in his new position.

FAMOUS LECTURE WAS HEARD HERE

Rev. Dr. Cleaver's Address on Jean Val Jean Given in Connection With Mark Street Anniversary Services

In the George Street church last night, in the neighbourhood of four hundred people heard Dr. Cleaver's famous address, "Jean Val Jean." The address was given under the auspices of the Mark Street Methodist church in connection with their anniversary services, and was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

In the audience last night were many who had heard Dr. Cleaver give the same address in St. Paul's church on former visits to this city, and it is said that their enjoyment of the lecture was even greater than that of those who were hearing it for the first time. The story is a powerful one and that the manner in which the eloquent Toronto pastor deals with the leading character of "Les Miserables," has impressed audiences in all parts of the Dominion. He has given the address hundreds of times, and as yet there seems to be no sign that it is losing its effectiveness with any kind of audience.

Two weeks ago last Sunday the anniversary of the Mark Street church was celebrated, but owing to Dr. Gordon's meetings it was decided not to hold any week-night observance of the occasion until after the Christian Citizenship campaign was concluded. The anniversary services were exceedingly successful and very encouraging to all who are interested in the progress of the church. The Rev. Dr. Cleaver who gave the address in the George Street church last night is pastor of the Central Methodist church, Toronto, and also occupied the pulpit in the George Street church on Sunday in connection with the missionary anniversary services.

IS ON THE SICK LIST

Mr. Arthur Kingdon, 513 Bolivar Street, is in receipt of a letter from Private Douglas Leal, of the First Canadian Contingent, which reads as follows:

Private Douglas Leal, "A" Company, 2nd Battalion, 1st Brigade, Bustard Camp, Salisbury Plains, England.

Dear Friend.—Just a line to let you know that I arrived in England safely. We were on the boat three weeks, and the passage was somewhat rough. Walter Packwood is on the sick list. It is a little wet here now, but not very cold. There are plenty of aeroplanes flying around the camp. We are anticipating three or four days' leave. This will enable me to visit Birmingham. Will close now as news is scarce.—Douglas Leal.

PRAISES FRENCH ARMY.

Bavarian Prince Admits Valour and Good Intentions.

BERLIN, Nov. 10.—Prince Francis of Bavaria, a young colonel of the German infantry, wounded early in October in the fighting in France, has given to a newspaper correspondent some of his impressions and reminiscences of the war.

His recognition of the valour of the enemy, his readiness to admit that cases of firing upon the Red Cross flags may have been without intent, and his statement that he had found no evidence of the use by the French of "dum-dum" bullets, set a high standard of tolerance in weighing the conduct of a foe.

Innoculation On Thursday

Peterboro' Boys at Kingston Will Have Sore Arms for a Day or Two

The Examiner has received the following interesting letter from one of the Peterborough contingent at Kingston:

The Peterborough boys with the 21st Battalion are getting down to business, and a great improvement after a week here, is noticeable. The officers of E Company are fine fellows, and Capt. Gray can walk. You can always tell who is leading the company when on the march. To-day we had squad drill. This morning and this afternoon we paraded to the Armouries for musketry instruction, which lasted four hours, and then Capt. Gray took us to all to the Y.M.C.A. for baths, which were greatly enjoyed by all. We get our boots, underwear and sweaters to-morrow. We have no drill for twenty-four hours before the typhoid innoculation, which takes place Thursday, or for twenty-four hours afterward. Innoculation is not compulsory, but anyone who objects will not be accepted for service overseas. I must say the meals are good and we cannot grumble at that, while the accommodation is great. They are certainly doing things in great form. Several of the boys have slight colds, but one expects that. It certainly shows great credit for Dr. Cameron to only have two men rejected here. As a matter of fact only one man was actually rejected. Two others had bad teeth, and would have been accepted if they got them treated. We took up a little subscription to help them get their dentistry done, but one of the two backed out. Another man whose medical papers had been misplaced refused to go before the doctors again and was sent home.

J. SMITH READY TO HELP FUND

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Though I am only a poor man I want to contribute as much as I can to the fund, and I read about the successful meeting. I hope to see the men now defending the King in uniform here, as we admire them very much, and would help to get money in. Our home boys are corkers.

Yours truly,
J. SMITH.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

The Board of Works Committee of the City Council will meet this evening at eight o'clock. It is some little time since the board met so it is likely there will be an accumulation of business embracing all lines of municipal construction and repair, from a manhole cover to the out-fall sewer.

The Outfall Sewer.

Seventeen men are engaged in the work of construction of the out-fall sewer. This is all that can be conveniently employed at the present time, although when the work is well under way a much larger gang will be engaged. The work at present consists of excavating and pipe laying.

Court of Revision.

The Court of Revision will meet again on Friday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, when arguments, pro and con, respecting reductions on assessments will be heard. It is understood that a number of merchants are contemplating an apepal to the County Judge, in case their appeals are refused by the Court of Revision.

Will Meet To-morrow.

The Grand Trunk Railway officials will meet the City officials and representatives of the Canadian. General Electric Company to-morrow, in connection with a lease that the Company is endeavouring to secure from the railway company, and in which the City is interested. The lease concerns a piece of unused railway track that the company purposes to use for testing electric locomotives.

Will be Painted.

The City Trust Commissioners have revoked their original intention of permitting the west side of the City Buildings to go unpainted, Mr. A. Kingdon has received instructions to continue the good work until the exterior of the building is enveloped in a brand new coat of paint.

An appeal has been entered against the assessment of the Armour property, East City. Mr. E. A. Peck, acting for the appellants, claims that under present conditions the property is unsaleable. Mr. Henry is of the opinion that the property could be sold if it were cut up into lots. The assessment in connection with the Oriental Hotel has been appealed against. Judgment in both cases has been reserved.

Because boring stumps preparatory to blasting is an arduous task an inventor has devised an auger driven by a portable gasoline engine.

PAVING IS FINISHED

Missing Link at Corner of Aylmer and Simcoe Streets Completed at 3:30 This Afternoon

The paving programme for this year, the contract for which was let this fall to Messrs. Foley and Gleason of Ottawa, was finished this afternoon at half-past three o'clock, when the last particle of cement was dusted over the joining link at the corner of Aylmer and Simcoe streets. Except for the repairing of that section between Murray and McDonnell streets on George street, the Company will now suspend operations until next year, when it is expected that a further paving of the streets of the City will be done. In fact the paving of Charlotte street to Park street, has already been provided for.

Lakefield Young Lady Graduates

Four nurses were graduated from the Aultman hospital training school, Canton, Ohio, at commencement exercises held in the nurses' home of the hospital this week. The commencement programme was in the nature of a reception which was attended by graduates, other nurses of the hospital, the medical staff and trustees of the hospital. Miss Alice Rutch Ricker, Miss Myrtle Veach, Miss Josephine Northey and Miss Caroline Upstrom were awarded diplomas and medals.

F. E. Case, president of the board, delivered the class address and presented the diplomas. Rev. W. O. Hawkins opened the exercises with prayer, while the benediction and a short address were made by Rev. A. W. Higby. Dr. G. A. Kelley also gave a short address. Mrs. T. K. Harris and Mrs. George Clark sang. Following the presentation of diplomas and medals, a luncheon was served.

Of the young laies mentioned above, Miss Ricker is of Canton, Miss Upstrom of Worcester, Mass., Miss Veach of Sudbury and Miss Josephine Northey of Lakefield.

THE SOLDIERS AND THEIR NEEDS

Complaints That Canadians Lack Comforts Seems Ill-Founded

At a time when contradictory rumours are continually circulated about everything connected with the war, it is a difficult matter to know precisely what is the truth, says the Toronto News. But a letter recently sent by a Canadian woman in England, declaring the Canadian contingent to be deplorably ill-equipped in the matter of clothing and knitted comforts, cannot but give the conviction that the writer must be overstating the case, and that she made an estimate of things before the soldiers' supplies had been unpacked.

Miss Plummer, who, with Miss Arnoldi, went with the Canadian contingent, and is carrying on, over there, some of the work of distributing parcels, etc., to the soldiers, has written to the press and to individuals throughout Canada, declaring that there is urgent need for thousands of garments for the Canadian soldiers at Salisbury. The letter declares that a sum of $50,000 is needed immediately for emergencies; that sleeping caps, socks innumerable, cholera belts, mufflers, flannel shirts, underwear, etc., must be sent to fill the crying need.

In the face of what one personally saw at Valcartier, it is difficult to think that such an appeal is necessary. There in the Ordnance Department one saw and felt a sample of each of the garments given to every soldier, a list of which is appended in a letter from the director of supplies for the Government. Even down there you met with those amongst the visitors who declared that sweaters were not being given. But, having actually seen them, there was no room for doubting.

Moreover, tons of knitted comforts were received at Valcartier from women all over the Dominion. One met with soldiers who laughed over half a dozen wristlets received by each from various sources.

It stands to reason that when Government provides a Balaclava cap, it is an absurdity for the call to come for women to send them. The same applies to underwear. Each man is given two complete sets of warm woollen garments. Each man receives three pairs of socks, two flannel shirts, and so on, to be replenished as becomes necessary.

We are all eager to give every ounce of help that is necessary, but it is a mistake to be carried away by remarks which one cannot help but feel must have been made without a thorough investigation.

The following letter received by the president at the Women's Patriotic League Headquarters, gives definite information.

In reply to your letter of November 2nd, I have to inform you that each man going overseas for duty is supplied, free of charge, with the following:

Two shirts
Two undershirts.
Two drawers.
Three pairs socks
One sweater jacket
One needle and thread holdall.
One pair gloves.

And the men in the field are kept provisioned with these at all times when appreciation is possible. Of course, in addition to the above mentioned articles, each man is fully provided with boots, overcoat, serge clothing and winter cap. Trusting that this is the information required by your association, I remain,

Yours truly,
(Signed) J. Lyons Biggar, Colonel.
Director of Supplies and Transport.

P.S.—By express this date we are sending one of each of the above mentioned articles.

Songsters Gave Fine Concert

HOW A TORPEDO IS LAUNCHED

The remarkable damage wrought by German automobile torpedoes on the British Navy has excited widespread interest in this silent destroyer. In a very complete article on the torpedo in warfare by a technical expert in the special war issue of the "Scientific American" of 7th November, the writer gives the following interesting description of the firing of this submarine foe:

"In the present stage of its development there are three methods by which the automobile torpedo is started on its destructive flight. First, it may be discharged through the side of a battleship or cruiser at a depth of from twelve to fifteen feet below the surface of the water from a tube contained within the hull of the vessel; second, it may be discharged from a launching tube mounted on the deck of a destroyer; and third, it may be discharged from the nose of a submarine.

"It is the secrecy and invisibility of torpedo attack which invests it with such deadly moral and physical effect, and for this reason submarine torpedo attack is far more effective, both in its ability to get home upon the enemy and in its disconcerting effect upon the morale, than when it is delivered from a battleship or a cruiser, or from the swift torpedo-boat or destroyer. Broadly speaking, the torpedo tube fitted in the larger ships can be brought into use only in the later phases of a hard-fought engagement, when the enemy's gunfire has been silenced or greatly rebadly cut up that they have lost their duced, and his ships have been so manoeuvring power, and it is possible for the enemy to draw in within easy torpedo range."

CYPRUS SATISFIED WITH BRITISH RULE

Moslems Give Assurances of Loyalty to British Government.

LONDON, Nov. 10—The Moslem leaders of Cyprus, annexed by Britain immediately after the declaration of war upon Turkey, have expressed their acceptance and satisfaction with the change in government.

In an official statement issued through the War Bureau this afternoon the British Government declares the Moslems of Cyprus gave assurances of their loyalty immediately following the issuance of the proclamation of annexation.

HUNGARIAN NOBILITY SUFFERS IN FIGHTING

PARIS, Nov. 10.—According to the latest list of killed published in Vienna, the Hungarian aristocracy has had a considerable loss in the battles around Lille, France, to which district they had been sent to aid the Germans. The lists show that 867 Hussars belonging to noble families were killed.

CALLING FOR HORSE RADISH.

British House Looking to Ontario for a Supply.

Mr. J. Lockie Wilson, superintendent of Agriculture, has received two inquiries from British firms in London, asking to be placed in touch with gardeners who will be able to furnish horse radish.

The supply of this radish has been cut off by the devastation of Belgium and the northern portion of France. Many other articles are open to Ontario vegetable growers.

NO CANADIAN LEAGUE IN 1915?

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 10 — To-day's sessions of the minor league organization, with the exception of the adoption of the resolution pledging adherence to organized ball, were routine in character.

The Canadian North-West League and the Canadian League have asked for permission to close their parks during 1915 on account of the European war and the general sentiment was in favour of granting their request. The matter will be decided to-morrow.

San Francisco has been agreed upon for next year's convention.

THE MEANING OF LUCASTAS

A literary member of the Board of Education, in answer to numerous queries, has contributed the following explanation to the word "Lucastas," which appeared in a supplied announcement of a meeting of the Women's War Fund Committee, in last evening's Examiner. It is as follows:

"'Lucasta' was the poetic name of Lucy Sacheveril, who was the lady love of Richard Lovelace. Sacheveril was a 'High Churchman' of no particular merit, who lived in the reign of William III. and Queen Anne. Lucastas are, therefore, followers, or adherents of a person who was known as nothing more than a 'blatherskite.'"

THE WORLD OF SPORT

Y. M. C. A. BOWLING LEAGUE UNDER WAY

The Y.M.C.A. City Bowling League has arranged the following schedule for the present week. The full schedule, together with the results of the games bowled this week, will be published on Monday:

Schedule for Week Nov. 9-14 Inc.

3-Men Teams.

Tuesday, Nov. 10.—Harriers vs. C.G.E. Eng. Dept. Umpire, Hardill.

Wednesday, Nov. 11—Belmont Club vs. Gladiators. Umpire, Bishop.

Thursday, Nov. 12—Beginners vs. C.G.E. Shop. Umpire, Cairns.

Friday, Nov. 13—Examiners vs. Unknowns.

Alleys will be ready 8 p.m. Games called not later than 8.10 p.m. A.B.C. rules to govern.

There was a great deal of interest manifested in the game last evening between the Harriers and the C.G.E., the game being won by the Engineers at a pretty good margin. There are one or two teams considering entering the League, so bowling should prove a very popular pastime with many business and professional men this season.

New pins and new balls have been ordered for the alleys, and it is proposed to keep the bowling equipment in the best possible condition.

ED. WALSH MAY LEAD WHITE SOX

CHICAGO, Nov. 10.—Ed. Walsh may be the next manager of the White Sox. This is not an announcement by President Comiskey, but a fan close to the old Roman gives it as his opinion that the next leader of the Southsiders will be the famous spit-ball pitcher, who is now a bench warmer for the team. It is not definite that Jimmy Callahan will remain at the head of the team next season, but rumours have been coming so thick there must be some truth to the Walsh boom.

It is known that Comiskey thinks the world of Walsh. He believes the veteran pitcher could inspire the team with the proper fighting spirit, which is something the club lacked woefully ever since Callahan took charge.

That Walsh is fitted for the job is certain, although there has been no indication in the past that the big pitcher had managerial ability. He always has shown a fighting spirit, and such is 75 per cent. of the make-up of a successful leader. Callahan has plenty of fight, but cannot instil it into his players.

WELSH HAD CLOSE CALL

"Freddy" Welsh, holder of the lightweight title, nearly had his laurels taken away from him at Milwaukee last night, by Charlie White, the Chicago whirlwind. The decision was a draw, but in the last two rounds White punished the champion severely, and had him cut and bleeding, while he was practically unmarked. Welsh had much the better of it in the early stages, jabbing his opponent all over the ring. His blows lacked force, and White opened up an old gash at the close of the eighth, which bled freely and blinded the champion so that he could not gauge distances properly and did a lot of wild swinging. Welsh weighed in at 141 pounds and White at 139. The last round saw White rushing. He drove Welsh into a corner, where he landed five times without a return, White again opened up the cut over Welsh's eye, and peppered him with rights and lefts to the head. Welsh swung wildly, with blood trickling into his eyes. He went into a clinch, and as they broke White put two lefts to Welsh's head and a right to his jaw. The last two rounds were White's all the way. White left the ring without a mark, while Welsh was bleeding profusely.

KELLY GOES TO LINCOLN

Pitcher Harry Scull, One Time Local Player Drafted by Pittsburg

Harry Scull, the young left hander whom Manager Curt Templin brought to Peterborough with his ill-fated White Caps in 1913, and who was canned without a trial, has been drafted by Pittsburg, who will hand the Middletown, N.Y., team $500 for the player.

According to the official list of drafted players announced by Secretary Farrell at the Omaha meeting, Catcher Kelly, of the Petes, has been drafted by the Lincoln, Nebraska, club of the Western League, who also got First Baseman Leoey Brashauer of London.

FOOTBALL COMMENT

Manchester City are still undefeated, the only team in Great Britain. How long will they keep it up?

The Arsenal again came a cropper on Saturday at Brum. This kind of business will not get them promotion.

Bristol City are ging strong, and are a good second to Huddersfield in the race for promotion.

The Celtics are only four points behind the Hearts now. The struggle will be a good one yet for the championship.

Huddersfield are the surprise of the season in the Second League, and will be a hard team to beat.

Notts County are finding the opposition in First League too strong and unless they show improved form they will have to go back to Second League football.

Manager Dainty's team, Ayr United, the most improved team in the Scottish League. They went to Falkirk on Saturday and returned with a point, a great performance.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Frederick Llewellyn Goss, inventor of the printing press which bears his name, died at his home in Chicago yesterday. He was born in Wales in 1847.

Word is to hand that Policeman John Cobden of the Brantford force, who went to the front as a British reservist, has been promoted for bravery in the field.

The London Daily Mail's correspondent at Copenhagen says he hears from Berlin that preparations are being made at Potsdam for Emperor William's return.

James B. Ashman, of London, Ont., a native of South Africa, is getting in touch with South Africans, Australians and New Zealanders throughout Ontario, with a view to organising a battery of artillery for service in France.

President Poincare yesterday telegraphed the Emperor of Japan his congratulations on the capture of Tsingtau, to which the Emperor replied thanking M. Poincare in the name of the Japanese army for his felicitations.

Andre Maginot, the French ex-assistant Secretary of War, who recently received the military medal for heroic conduct, has been dangerously wounded during an engagement near Verdun. He is a sergeant in the French territorial army.

A proclamation issued by the Germans at Brussels specifically threatens, according to a despatch to Reuter's Telegram Co. from Amsterdam, to stop the distribution of food by the American relief committee among the unemployed until the Belgians go to work.

Gunner Walter Pencleton, belonging to Montreal, but a member of the heavy battery artillery, has died at Salisbury Plains under tragic circumstances. His body was found in a secluded portion of the camp. How he came by his death will form the subject of an inquest.

FUGITIVES IN JAIL.

Four Central Prison Inmates Who Escaped Are Captured.

TORONTO, Nov. 11.—John Spence, D. McLoughlin, J. Mulhall and E. Schweirer, the four men who escaped from the Central Prison four weeks ago after murderously assaulting Guard Sangster, are, according to Provincial Bailiff John Ryan, in custody at Bracebridge, where they are to be tried for a robbery committed at Gull Lake.

Bailiff Ryan had occasion to visit the jail recently and identified the men. The authorities at the Central Prison have been notified. The men will be tried at Bracebridge and then brought to the Central Prison, where they will be dealt with for jail-breaking.

The escape at the prison on Oct. 14 was, according to the prison officials, engineered by Mulhall. He made his way to the guard's quarters by telling the guard that he intended to fix a pane of glass. Taken unawares the guard fell under a rain of blows from a piece of lead pipe.

AIRSHIP SIGHTED.

Dirigible Reported To Have Passed Over English Ports.

LONDON, Nov. 11.—A despatch to The Evening News from Dover says:

"As a result of a report that an airship had been sighted over Sheerness the searchlight corps was busy all night.

"Later the airship was reported over Harwich.

"Firing was heard on the eastern cliffs between two and 2.30 o'clock yesterday morning."

Danish Newspapers Stopped.

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 11. — Hejmdal, the Danish paper in Sleswig, has been stopped for five days by the German military censor, because it did not mention in its columns the birthday of the German Empress.

Another Danish paper published in a little town near the frontier, has been prohibited by the German military censor, for some unknown reason from passing the frontier.

The Norwegian paper Verdensgang, in an editorial proposes that the Nobel committee give this year's Nobel peace prize to the Belgian refugees.

Trade of Austria Suffers.

VIENNA, Nov. 10.—How severely the trade of Austria has been affected by the war is revealed in an official report of the Austrian Ministry of Commerce, a copy of which has just reached here from Vienna.

According to this document Austria's imports of September amounted to 111,000,000 crowns ($22,200,000), as compared to 200,000,000 crowns ($52,000,000) in September of 1913. The decrease in exports was much greater. They amounted in September of this year to only 61,000,000 crowns ($12,000,000), barely one-quarter of the total reached in September, 1913.

BRANTFORD TURKS ARE ROUNDED UP

And Thirty-Six of Them go on a Hunger Strike

BRANTFORD, Ont., Nov. 10.—Anonymous veiled threats received by city officials here were indirectly responsible for the arrest of 120 Turks here last night, for detention in a military area. The same threats were responsible for the placing of an armed guard on the new $250,000 Government building almost completed here, by P. H. Secord and Sons, the contractors.

Mayor J. H. Spence and Chief of Police Slemin had both received anonymous letters, giving the information that the Turks of the city were laying plans to blow up the new Government building.

Authorities Took No Chances.

These letters may or may not have had truth in them, but the authorities took no chances. The Dominion police at Ottawa were notified, and they issued an order for the arrest and detention of all Turks in this city.

Mayor Spence declined to talk on the situation, except to say that the authorities are perfectly justified in taking the steps that they have taken.

Move to Save Building.

P. H. Secord and Sons state that they had received an intimation from civic officials that the Turks were threatening to blow up the new postoffice, and though the building is practically complete, and they could not be held responsible for any damage done, they had no desire to see such a splendid building injured, and accordingly without waiting for red tape to get working, placed armed guards on the building to prevent any possible chance of any damage being done.

Turks Go on Hunger Strike.

This morning 36 of the Turks captured here last night went on a hunger strike, refusing to accept the Armenian bread offered to them.

The rest ate willingly. The Brant county jail now has a record number in it. The greatest previously was when 66 Fenian raiders were placed there for safe keeping after being captured by the Canadian troops.

ONLY MATTER OF TIME.

Karlsruhe's Officers Expect To Be Captured Pretty Soon.

EDINBURGH, Nov. 11.—An officer of the freight steamer Pruth, which was sunk by the German cruiser Karlsruhe off the coast of Brazil, has arrived here. He says the Karlsruhe is using an island called Recas Reef as a coaling and supply base and that there the Germans have a large quantity of coal and stores.

"Officers of the Karlsruhe told me," said this officer, "that they expected to be captured by the British fleet before long, but that meanwhile it was their painful duty to do as much damage as possible to the enemy's commerce.

"They were very polite and gave us twelve hours to leave our ships. Then they took off the provisions and the ship's papers and blew up the Pruth with dynamite. We were transferred to the Crefeld, which was one of five cargo boats accompanying the Karlsruhe, which she was using as scouts."

WINS VICTORIA CROSS.

Member of British Army Service Corps First Official Hero of War.

LONDON, Nov. 11. — Sergt.-Major White, of the Army Service Corps, is the first man to get the coveted Victoria Cross in the present war.

The gallant act for which this soldier was awarded the cross occurred at Locateau where White, after his corps had been driven back by German cavalrymen returned in the face of a hail of bullets searching for his wounded captain. He was successful and carried the officer to safety.

The sergeant-major was shot in both legs.

White won the distinguished conduct medal in South Africa for carrying Lord Robert's son, who was mortally wounded, from the danger zone before Colenso, and who was awarded the Victoria Cross for his gallantry in that action.

Russians Have New Guns.

LONDON, Nov. 11. — A despatch from Vienna says that preparations are being rushed for the second siege of Przemysl. It is reported that the Russians are equipped with new 8-inch French guns.

Earl Annesley Missing.

LONDON, Nov. 11.—Earl Annesley, who left England last Friday by aeroplane, has not since been heard from, and it is feared that he has been killed.

Mussulman Chiefs Loyal.

PARIS, Nov. 11. — A Havas despatch from Algiers says:

"The governor-general of the province daily is in receipt of communications from native Mussulman chiefs expressing loyalty to France. One of the communications says:

"Our devotion to the French cause is absolute. We are prepared to march against all the enemies of France, who also are our enemies."

German Consul Goes To Trial.

LONDON, Nov. 11. — The grand jury of the Durham Assizes has returned a true bill against Nicholas Ahlers, the German consul in Sunderland, on the charge of high treason. According to the indictment Mr. Ahlers was naturalized in 1905. After the declaration of war, he engaged in helping German reservists leave England for Germany.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Nov. 10.—Difficulty in finding enough vessels to provide a sufficient outlet for exports from gulf ports, had a depressing influence today on the wheat market here. Prices, while firm at the close, were 1c to 1⅛c under last night. Corn finished 1c to 1⅛c down, oats off ⅛c to ⅜c, and provisions varying from unchanged figures to a decline of 25½c.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

TORONTO, Nov. 10.—Quotations on the Board of Trade are as follows:

Manitoba wheat—Lake ports, new crop, No. 1 northern, $1.20; No. 2 northern, $1.23½; No. 3 northern, $1.17½.

Manitoba oats—Bay ports, old crop, No. 2 C.W., 45½c; No. 3 C.W., 44½c; new crop, No. 2 C.W., 41½c; No. 3 C.W., 38½c.

Ontario wheat—Car lots, $1.10 to $1.12, outside, according to freights.

Ontario oats—New, outside, 40c to 42c.

American corn—Track, shelled, No. 2 yellow, 86c, Toronto; Canadian corn, 85c, Toronto.

Buckwheat—No. 2, $1.25 to $1.30, car lots, outside, nominal.

Rye—No. 2, 85c to 86c, outside.

Barley—Good malting barley, outside, 60c to 70c; Manitoba barley, 55c to 57c, lake ports.

Rolled oats—Car bag of 90 lbs., $2.65 in smaller lots, $2.75 to $2.85; per barrel, $4.90, wholesale, Windsor to Montreal.

Bran—$20 to $22.

Mill feed—Car lots, per ton, bran, $22 to $24; shorts, $23 to $25; middlings, $27 to $29; good feed flour, $3.80 to $3.90.

Manitoba flour—First patents, $5.60 to $5.80; second patents, $5.10 in bags.

Cornmeal—Yellow, 90-pound sacks, $2.65 to $2.75.

Ontario flour—Winter, 90 per cent. patents, $4.80 to $4.70; Montreal or Toronto freights, in bulk, nominal.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Nov. 10.—Wheat opened ⅛c to ⅜c lower, oats unchanged to ⅛c down and flax is lower. An easier tone generally prevailed and Liverpool cables, which were ½d up from Saturday, and little or no influence. The continued heavy primary receipts in the States and more favorable news regarding the Argentine crop were the bearish factors.

Cash oats were quiet. Barley was in good demand at slightly higher prices.

Inspections Monday were 600 cars, as against 1267 last year, and in sight were 500 cars.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Nov. 10.—The demand from foreign buyers for Manitoba spring wheat this morning was good, and sales of 35 loads were made, but owing to the weaker feeling in the Winnipeg market, and the decline in prices of over 1c per bushel, late cables came weaker at a decline of 2d to 6d per quarter, which naturally tended to check any further business being done.

There was no change in the condition of the local market, the demand for all lines of coarse grains being still somewhat limited. There was some demand from foreign buyers for spring wheat flour today, and, as the prices bid for the lower grades were in line with millers' views, sales of several round lots were made, but the bids for export patent were 9d to 1s per barrel out of line.

The local trade continues quiet, but firm. Demand for millfeed continues good, and the market is more active, with a larger volume of business doing than for some time past.

The trade in butter is quiet, and principally of a local character. Cheese is firm. Eggs active and strong.

MINNEAPOLIS GRAIN MARKET.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 10.—Wheat—No. 1 hard, $1.19; No. 1 northern, $1.16½ to $1.17; No. 2 do., $1.11½ to $1.15; December, $1.14.

Corn—No. 2 yellow, 61c to 62c.

Oats—No. 3 white, 45½c to 45¼c.

Flour—Fancy patents, $5.90; first clears, $4.75; second clears, $3.70.

Bran—Unchanged.

DULUTH GRAIN MARKET.

DULUTH, Nov. 10.—Wheat—No. 1 hard, $1.18½; No. 1 northern, $1.17½; No. 2 do., $1.14½; December, $1.15½.

Stockers and Feeders.

Choice heavy feeders, 900 to 1000 lbs., sold at from $6.50 to $6.75; good feeders, 800 to 900 lbs., $6 to $6.25; medium quality steers, $5.25 to $5.50; stockers, $3.50 to $5, according to breeding and color.

Milkers and Springers.

A moderate supply of milkers and springers sold at a range of $40 to $100 each. The bulk of sales would be from $70 to $85.

Veal Calves.

Choice calves, $9 to $10; good calves, $8 to $9; medium, $6.50 to $7.50; common, $5 to $6, and inferior eastern grass calves at $3 to $4.50.

700 Civilians Killed in the City of Rheims

Bombardment Goes on Although There Are No French Troops There

PARIS, Nov. 10. —The City of Rheims itself still suffers considerably every day from bombardment by the Germans. Last Friday almost 250 shells fell into the city, though no French troops are stationed there. The ancient and beautiful cathedral into which entry is strictly forbidden seems, observers of the bombardment say, to be a point of the German gunners' aim. All the buildings around the edifice have suffered terribly, while the cathedral itself presents a shocking spectacle.

No French military station is anywhere near and there are no artillery batteries within miles of the city. The military Governor has informed the cathedral authorities that anyone ascending to the towers for any purpose whatever will be shot immediately, as he does not desire to give the Germans any excuse for training their guns on the building.

On the old forts around Rheims, now in French hands, nobody can show himself without drawing an immediate gunfire from the German position. German aeroplanes fly about constantly, and an exciting aerial chase is a daily occurrence.

Bombs Kill Civilians.

German airmen make frequent trips over Rheims, where they drop very destructive bombs on the chief commercial section of the city, thereby adding considerably to the number of casualties among a civil population, which is understood to have lost about 700 of its number in killed alone from the effects of the German bombardment. Some lives were lost by persons being suffocated as the result of the subsidence of houses when struck by shells.

Shelling Begins at Five.

Every evening about 5 o'clock the shelling of the city begins, and the people of the poorer quarters spend that portion of the day in the open fields on the side of the city away from the German positions. At other times of the day the people seem to go about their business as though nothing extraordinary was occurring.

An Off-hand Remark.

"I don't quite see the point of that remark of yours," said Mr. Skinner, the grocer, as he tied up the package of sugar.

"What remark was that?" asked the customer.

"You just remarked that some men had an off-hand way of doing things. And you wished I was one."

"Yes; I wished to remind you that your hand was on the sugar when you weighed it."

INDOOR BASEBALL.

All the ball players of No. 8 Company are requested to be at the Armouries to-night, at 8 o'clock, sharp, for their game with "E" Co.

RECEIPTS LIBERAL

UNION STOCK YARDS, Nov. 10.—Receipts were large for Tuesday: 86 cars, 1077 cattle 1116 hogs, 1151 sheep and lambs, 134 calves.

Cattle: Trade in cattle was slow, the best load that was on Monday's market being still unsold. Medium to good cattle sold at about steady prices, but the heavy steers, such as sold at $8, would not have brought more than $7.75.

Choice butchers' steers, $7.50 to $7.75.

Good butchers' steers, $7 to $7.25.

Medium butchers' steers, $6.50 to $6.75.

Common butchers' steers, $6 to $6.25.

Choice butchers' heifers, $7.25 to $7.50.

Common butchers' heifers, $6.50 to $6.75.

Choice cows, $6.50 to $6.75.

Good cows, $5.75 to $6.25.

Canners, $3.50 to $4.40.

Feeders and stockers: Stockers and feeders were slow sale at steady prices:

Choice steers, $6.50 to $6.75.

Medium steers, $6 to $6.25.

Stockers, $4 to $5.

Milkers and springers: Not many on sale; prices being steady at $50 to $100 each; bulk sold at $70 to $85 each.

Calves: The run was light and prices easier; not much demand for any but the choice, and they were easier as poultry is plentiful.

Choice veals $9 to $10; common, to good, $4 to $8.

Sheep and lambs: Receipts were moderate. Sheep sold at unchanged values, but lambs were about 15 to 25 cents per cwt. dearer.

Sheep, $5 to $6.

Culls and rams, $2.50 to $4.

Lambs, $7.50 to $8.25; culls, $5.50 to $6.

Hogs: Receipts were light and values were higher.

Never Questioned

Royal Baking Powder is absolutely pure and wholesome. It is made from highly refined, pure, cream of tartar, an ingredient of grapes. Not an atom of unwholesomeness goes into it; not an unwholesome influence comes from it. It perfectly leavens the food, makes it finer in appearance, more delicious to the taste, more healthful.

Its superiority in all the qualities that make the perfect baking powder is never questioned.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

THE SIKH AND GURKA SOLDIERS

(By Charles Johnston, in "Collers.")

They came asore at the port of Marseilles, where the blue Mediterranean sparkles in the sunlight, the wiry, bronzed Gurkhas of the Himalayan foothills, keen, wind-tanned warriors with gleaming dark eyes. With them were tall, broad-shouldered sikhs from the northern plain of the Indus, stalwart, eagle-eyed, trained in the tradition of victory; the sinewy Marathas from the mountains of Central India, born horse soldiers, whose raids were once the terror of the Ganges Valley; the splendid Rajputs of the western deserts, finest and handsomest of all the Indian races, the darker infantrymen of Bengal and Madras. Down the gangways from the huge steamships they marched, with the swing and rhythm of born soldiers, in their close-fitting uniforms of dust-coloured khaki, with a strip of distinctive colour in the tartans of each regiment.

"Is the war still going on?" they eagerly asked, "are we in time for the fighting?" For with these men war is a religion. "For a warrior," says their scripture, "nothing is better than a righteous war."

From the sunlight quays of Marseilles, where crowds of enthusiastic Frenchmen and Frenchwomen greeted them with cheers, strewing flowers over them and in their pathway, they marched, the Gurkhas and their companions through the wide, grey streets and out through the suburbs to the vineyards whene on a wide space of open land the ground was ready for their camp. Quickly their baggage waggons were ranged in lines, and, among the swarming dust-coloured figures, the white tents bean to rise like the streets of a city; the camp kitchens were lighted, their cheerful steam going up into the blue, and, amidst a murmur of strange tongues and exotic odors, the armies of India made their first home on the soil of France.

They know precisely what they are fighting for, these bronzed, dark-eyed warriors of India, no one better—the principle of honour, the principle of ordered liberty, the principle of human faith. They know just why the British Empire is in this conflict, the British Raj, of which they are so proud to form a part. How do they know the British Empire and the British? Because every race among them—the fathers and grandfathers of the men of every regiment—have fought against the armies of the British in India; and the races of East and West have learned to honour and love each other, as courageous, honourable, indomitable fighters.

All these warring tribes and nations, from the Gurkhas of the Himalayas to the Marathas of the Vindhya hills, from the religious warrior communities of the Sikhs to the Rajput clansmen of the great western desert, have ceased from their age-long wars among themselves, drawn together under the wide shield of Britannic peace.

COMPOSITION OF THE TZAR'S MAIN FORCE

Eight Armies Are Operating Along a Very Extended Front

LONDON, Nov. 10.—A special despatch from Petrograd furnishes the following information concerning the disposition of the Russian forces:

The Russian forces have been divided into eight different armies, each army having from 120,000 to 260,000 men, and these "first line" troops now invading Germany number about 1,50,000 men.

The first army is commanded by Gen. Rennenkampf. It surrounds the fortress of Kowno. It consists of the 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 20th Army Corps, which compose the military district of Wilna.

The second army is quartered near the fortress of Grodno, and is composed of the 6th Army Corps, of the 22nd, or Finland, Army Corps, and of the Siberian army. It is commanded by Gen. Skiginsky, who was formerly chief of the 21st Army Corps.

The third army is commanded by Gen. Mistchenko, who won for himself much fame in the Japanese War. It consists of troops belonging to the 5th 13th, 15th and 23rd Army Corps, together with three cavalry divisions, recruited from different corps. It directly faces the army of Gen. Hindenburg.

The fourth army is west of Warsaw, and consists of the best troops in Russia. It is commanded by Gen. Kilinsky, formerly Governor-General of Warsaw, whose chief of staff is Gen. Lecsicki, one of the most brilliant staff officers in Russia.

The fifth army, known as the Lublin Army, is under Gen. von Plehwe. It is composed of the Moscow Grenadier Corps and of the 8th, 16th and 18th Army Corps.

The sixth army was assigned to Cholm in Poland. It is formed out of the 17th, 19th, 24th and 25th Army Corps. Its chief is Gen. Ewerth, formerly commander of the military district of Irkutsk.

The seventh army, which tried to storm Przemysl in Galicia, is under the orders of the former Bulgarian general, Radko Dmitriew, and is composed of the 7th, 9th, 10th and 11th Army Corps.

The eighth army, commanded by Gen. Brousailow, who was in charge at Kieff, is quartered in Lemberg, and composed of the 12th and 21st Army Corps, reinforced by Siberian and Caucassian troops.

THE MILLION INCOME.

(From the Pittsburg Dispatch.)

The fact that not a single person in Great Britain confessed to an income of $1,000,000, while in the United States forty-four made returns showing that income of greater is held to be a remarkable contrast. On a five per cent. basis $20,000,000 is required to yield the million income and the indication of the returns that there are no such fortunes in Great Britain causes no slight surprise.

This, of course, is modified by the fact that most of the wealth of the British aristocracy is in land and under the English laws realty are not taxable as income. This lets landlords and other British landowners out of the computation, though the number of that class whose rentals exceed a million a year is undoubtedly quite small.

But there is still a large class whose reputation is that of much larger wealth. Is it true that the Rothschild fortune is so much less than it was famed to be? Are the incomes of the diamond kings of Kimberly and oil kings of Mexico all confined within the limits of a million? To the inquiry whether that class is poorer than our wealth or less honest there is no positive answer. But our suspicions are strongly that the plutocratic John Bull dodges his taxes a little more artful-

FRENCH WAR LOSSES ARE $6,000,000,000

PARIS, Nov. 10.—Six billion dollars represents the French losses in real estate, houses, furniture, workshops, mines, railroads, public roads and public monuments since the beginning of the war.

This estimate, the Temps says, was made by a prominent statistician.

RIGHT OF SEARCH LAW OF NATIONS

Belligerents Violate No Code When Their Warships Overhaul Merchantmen of Neutrals

In announcing that the right to search all merchant vessels on the high seas will not be opposed by this government, Acting Secretary of State Lansing makes no concession. The right of the naval officers of Great Britain or any other Power engaged in war to stop an American ship of commerce and examine its cargo, no matter what may be the nature or destination of the latter, is recognised by the law of nations. This right can be exercised, however, only by Powers actually engaged in hostilities with some other State. It is strictly a belligerent right.

Up to 1858 Great Britain claimed the "right to visit" in time of peace, in order to discover the real nationality of vessels suspected of being engaged in the slave trade; but this exception proved the rule — and for more than fifty years no Power has permitted its naval forces to intercept or molest the trading ships of another nationality on the high seas except in the exercise of its belligerent rights.

The so-called "right of search" which was the cause of the war of 1812 was a very different matter. The trouble began with the forcible search of the American corvette Chesapeake and the kidnapping of four of her seamen after she had surrendered.

This was in 1807, and, although the British government disavowed the act of Admiral Berkeley, by whose order the outrage was committed, the practice of boarding American war ships, under pretext of searching for deserters from the British navy, continued and ultimately brought on the conflict. The right of search does not extend to neutral war ships, but is confined to merchantmen. The search of a neutral man-of-war was regarded as a high-handed and lawless proceeding one hundred years ago, and would be a moral impossibility at the present day.

In exercising the right of search a belligerent is required to cause as little delay and inconvenience as possible. The ordinary procedure is to send an officer in uniform aboard the vessel to be searched, who questions the master and examines the ship's papers. If the examination reveals any circumstances of suspicion, but not otherwise, the officer is at liberty to summon his boat's crew to rummage among the cargo—and, if he is a good diplomat as well as a good naval officer he will not be too suspicious. The searchers are bound to be considerate and courteous, and to disturb the interior economy of the vessel searched as little as possible. As a rule, a proper clearance certificate and a manifest showing that the vessel carries nothing absolutely contraband and is bound for a neutral destination ought to give immunity.

The occasion for a statement from Acting Secretary Lansing merely confirmatory of a universally recognized belligerent right, was probably an order of the Treasury Department prohibiting collectors of ports from publishing or giving public information of the character or destination of outbound cargoes until thirty days after clearance of the vessels carrying the same. This deprives belligerent cruisers of one means of knowing whether or not vessels leaving our ports are carrying innocent merchandise or contraband, or are bound for a neutral or belligerent country. What information one department of the government will not let belligerents get by wireless another department encourages them to get by right of search. Thus we maintain our impartiality and an attitude of strict neutrality. But the belligerent cruisers would probably search anything afloat even if we regularly telegraphed to them the manifests of all ships leaving our shores.

BATHROOMS IN TRENCHES.

French Officers Rival British in Fondness for "Tub."

PARIS, Nov. 10.—Some amenities of trench life are described in the following letters from French officers:

"Thanks to the ingenuity of M.X. we are able to take a warm douche every day. A bathing establishment of the latest type has been fitted in the trenches. It is a big hole six yards in diameter, lined with glazed tiles picked up among the ruins of houses and covered in with sheet iron roofing, on top of which earth with growing corn has been laid.

"On the roof is an enormous bucket with four pipes communicating through the roof with our rooms. Underneath each is a bucket. Beside the bucket on the roof is a boiler in masonry to heat the water. It is ripping!

"All of the generals have been to see our bathroom. It took their breath away.

"We have gone better, and opened a hairdressing saloon in the trenches. The last word in luxury is revue and concert, with the assurance of good artistes. It is astonishing what a lot of talent is met with in a regiment.

"We have in my battalion Ernaldy (chief of Orchestra of Nantes). He is enlisted for the duration of the war. He is now a sub-lieutenant and commands a company. He shows marvellous dash. In the trenches he gets up concerts, singing the Marseillaise or the Soldier's Chorus from 'Faust' under the noses of the Germans in trenches only 300 yards away."

MAY BE SCARCITY OF MANY SEEDS

TORONTO, Nov. 10.—The European War has hit the Ontario vegetable growers as hard as anybody else. This was made apparent by some of the statements at the tenth annual convention in progress in the Railway Committee room of the Parliament Buildings, where President C. W. Baker delivered an interesting address. He pointed out the necessity of better facilities for the marketing of produce, and of more scientific methods of gardening in the future to meet the demands.

After stating that the association had responded readily to the call for support for the families of the soldiers at the front, Mr. Baker said: "Thes are strenuous times for the British Empire to which we are proud to belong, and you will agree with me when I say that as individuals and as an association we are prepared to do our part to crush this monster greed which seeks to enslave us. We can be counted on to keep the old flag flying."

European Seed.

Mr. J. Lockie Wilson, secretary-treasurer, in his address, drew attention to the effects of the European War on the seed supplies for Canada. "We depend particularly on the European growers for seed for sugar beets, marigolds, carrots, turnips, cauliflower, parsley, parsnips, radish, spinach, cabbage, rape, vetches, and bulbs and nursery stock.

Seed Imports.

"Last year," said Mr. Wilson, "the importations for the Dominion of beet and mangel seeds was 1,285,198 pounds, of which 456,21 came from France, and 448,021 pounds of carrot was obtained from France and 129,867 turnip seed from the same source, and 224,163 from Holland.

"The importations through the Toronto Customs alone were 4,661 pounds of radish, 1,864 of cabbage, 55 of cauliflower, 6,825 of beet, 980 carrot, and 1,202 pounds of celery, 1,900 of parsnip seed, the latter from Germany. The value of the beet and mangel seed imported into Canada from Europe was $386,559, of carrots about $16,000, of turnips $60,000."

Must Grow Our Own.

Mr. Wilson said it was anticipated that the reserve supplies in Canada were sufficient to provide for the requirements of the next spring, sufficient at anyrate to prevent a shortage. He urged that vegetable growers pay more attention to this phase of production and raise their own seed, which could be done here as well as any other place in the world.

Fierce Fighting For Possession of Dixmunde as the Key to the Port of Dunkirk

FORTY OF EMDEN'S CREW ESCAPED IN SCHOONER ARMED WITH 4 MAXIMS

Examiner Special:

Melbourne, Australia, Nov. 12—Forty men and three officers of the German Cruiser, Emden, which was destroyed by the Australian warship, Sydney, are still at large on the open sea. They escaped in a schooner commandeered at Cocos Island, having four maxims and supplies sufficient to last them two months on board. This was announced to day by the Minister of defence. The captain of the Sydney admitted that the party which had been landed by the Emden to destroy the wireless station had escaped. He added that, in addition to driving the Emden ashore, he had sunk the collier accompanying her.

FIERCE STRUGGLE NEAR DIXMUNDE

PARIS, Nov. 12—Terrific fighting along the Coast and through Dixmude to the Lys, continued to-day with the Germans endeavouring to drive the Allied forces from Lombaertzyde, north of Nieuport. The Allies still hold the district about Dixmude with the Germans endeavouring to continue their movement from the Town along the left bank of the Yser.

TURKISH TORPEDO BOAT CAUGHT

Special Cable:

LONDON, Nov. 12.—Censored despatches received here to-day from Athens, declare that the Turkish torpedo boat which escaped from the Dardanelles, has been caught off Tenedos.

INVASION OF EGYPT BY TURKS OFFICIALLY DENIED BY BRITAIN

LONDON, Nov. 11.—An official communication from British headquarters issued at Constantinople, transmitted by way of both Berlin and Amsterdam, is denied by the British Official Press Bureau. The communication read:

"It is officially announced here that the Turkish troops have occupied Fort Shefkzar at El-Arish, and have captured four field guns. El-Arish is on the Mediterranean near the boundary between Egypt and Palestine. It is also announced that in the Caucasus the Russians have been obliged to retreat to their second line of fortifications and that the Turks are meeting with success at all points."

The Press Bureau says with reference to this statement: "No engagement has occurred. Information deliberately spread abroad in Constantinople under German instructions."

It is announced that a British destroyer has captured two Turkish sailing ships near the Island of Tenedos.

The rioting which has continued intermittently for several days in Constantinople has broken out again with greater disorder, according to despatches from Athens. "The population of the Ottoman capital," continues the despatch, "becoming very much excited as a result of Turkish defeats on Sunday, visited their resentment on a number of German non-commissioned officers, whom they attacked."

Amnesty Offered Transvaal Rebels Who Surrender Before November 21

LONDON, Thursday, Nov. 12—It is officially announced at Pretoria that the rebels have been given until November 21 to surrender, according to a Reuter despath from that city. All so surrendering will not be criminally prosecuted, but allowed to return to their homes on condition that they take no further part in the rebellion.

The leaders of the rebellion and those who have acted contrary to the rules of civilized warfare are excluded from the amnesty. Those refusing to surrender will be dealt with according to the rigour of the law.

COMPLAINT TO U.S. OF BROKEN NEUTRALITY

South American Countries are Failing to Maintain Neutrality—President Wilson Called to Act.

BAR WIRELESS BASES

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11—Charges by Great Britain that certain South American countries are failing to maintain their neutrality have served to develop new responsibilities for the United States because of its observance of the Monroe Doctrine.

It became known to-day that the British Government, instead of directly bringing to the attention of the South American Governments concerned its neutrality charges, the suggestion was made that recognizing the peculiar position the United States occupies in regard to the foreign affairs of many Latin-American Governments it seemed fitting that the attention of the United States first should be called to the alleged violations of neutrality. Further, it was strongly hinted that the United States should take it upon itself to call the attention of the South American Governments to the alleged violations with a view to putting an end to them.

The inference seems to be plain that if the United States did not care to do this then the British Government would be forced to proceed in the matter, but the British suggested it would better suit the status of the United States, and thus avoid any possible irritation.

The Battle off Chile.

It is claimed by the British Government that the German squadron off the coast of Chile has had the use of wireless stations in Ecuador and Colombia, by means of [illegible] arrangements of the latter's ships and made arrangements regarding supplies. It is maintained by the British, and generally agreed to here unofficially, that the German commander, Admiral von Spee, never could have effected the concentration of his forces at sea off the Chilean coast at the exact moment for meeting the British squadron had he not been in communication with the shore by some means. Such communication with belligerent ships the United States regards as clearly in violation of neutrality, as it is demonstrated by the vigorous action of President Wilson in laying a drastic censorship on all radio stations within the jurisdiction of the United States. Though the question was a new one owing to the recent development of radio communication, the United States Government promptly took a firm stand in regard to it.

It is charged that coal and other supplies have been conveyed from South American ports to some island which the German squadron has made a base of operations. There are many fine harbours in the Galapagos Islands, but they are practically deserted and seldom visited by ships. For cruisers operating out of reach of any home port they would make an ideal emergency base in time of war.

Uncle Sam Embarrassed.

The British representations to the United States Government on this subject were unwelcome to the State Department, because of the number of embarrassing and delicate questions they raise. This Government would regret exceedingly being placed in a position where it would be compelled by the force of circumstances to take up with any South American Government a charge of violation of neutrality in favour of any of the European belligerents.

The raising of such a question would be embarrassing in relations with the South American Governments and also might cause some feelings in the countries which were said to profit by the alleged violation of neutrality. Finally, it would be an acceptance of a measure of responsibility for things in Latin-America which the United States Government does not desire.

Kaiser is Rushing Work of Defending Thorn in Anticipation of Siege

LONDON, Nov. 11.—The Germans are working with feverish haste to place the great barrier fortress of Thorn, the Kaiser's chief stronghold of West Prussia, in a state of defence against the invading Russians. The Army Messenger of Petrograd, a semi-official organ, announces that work is reported to be proceeding night and day on the Thorn fortifications. Thorn is just 205 miles east of Berlin. It lies on the right bank of the Vistula, about 10 miles north of the Poland frontier, and some 20 miles below Wloclawek, the last point in Russian territory to have been abandoned by the Germans in this region of the war theatre.

The Army Messenger also states that the Germans are constructing various kinds of barriers to impede the Russian advance at points further south out the long battle line, and especially in the region of Czenstochowa, Russian Poland. Czenstochowa is about 20 miles from the frontier of Silesia; and 100 miles southeast of Breslau. It is here that General von Hindenburg is said to have made his headquarters during the German retreat from Warsaw. Reports have been conflicting whether the city has since been reoccupied by the Russians, but whether or not it has been evacuated by the enemy, it is believed that his retirement has not carried him much further.

Marshal Law in Cracow.

Cracow has been emptied of its civilian population in anticipation of a siege, since the Russians are now within 20 miles of this ancient Polish city, now the most westerly fortress of Austrian Galicia, and one of the very few points in that province not yet overrun by the Russians.

Petrograd hears that martial law has been declared in Cracow. It is thought, however, that the defence will be a half-hearted affair, for the greater part of the Austrian army has withdrawn now in the direction of the Carpathians, where tactics of siege warfare are expected to be adopted during the winter. Austria has palpably grown weary of her unresisting punishment at the hands of the Russians, and her chief military activity is now on her other frontier against the Servians. In this theatre the Austrians seem lately to have been meeting with considerable success, as they have carried the war over the border and occupied some of the Servians' positions.

Fresh outbreaks of ill-feeling between the Austrian and German commanders are reposted to-night from Russian sources. It is even said that Gen. Danki has refused longer to co-operate with the Germans in the field. His chief cause of complaint is said to be that the German Crown Prince, who commanded the centre in the battle before Warsaw, withdrew his forces so precipitately as to leave the Austrians who were at the right before Ivangorod, and on the San River, exposed to the full fury of a Russian enveloping movement.

Germans Hold Dixmunde After Very Bloody Battle

Important Point in the Road to Dunkirk Has Recently Borne the Brunt of Invaders' Heavy Attacks.

LONDON, Nov. 11.—The Germans have resumed their attack on the allied line between the coast and the Lys River, and, while the French claim generally to have held their positions, the Germans have succeeded in capturing the town of Dixmunde, which has been the centre of some of the fiercest and most sanguinary fighting of the war. The country between Dixmunde and Yyres, where the belligerents have been engaged in violent attacks and counter-attacks for weeks past, and where the losses have been heavier even than those in the battle of the Yser, is again the scene of a battle which for fury has seldom, if ever, been equalled.

Behind Dixmunde is the direct road to Dunkirk, one of the French ports on which the Germans have set their hearts, and if they can break through here the allies will be compelled to fall back to new positions. The invaders have, therefore, been concentrating their forces at this point, and their success in taking Dixmunde, where they claim to have captured five hundred prisoners and positions to the west of Langemarck, where, according to the Berlin report, 2,000 prisoners fell into their hands, shows that the statements so freely made, that they have been sending troops from the west to Poland, are without foundation.

At other points along the battle-front in France the French official communication claims some successes for the allies, but the German Headquarters Staff declares that all attacks have been repulsed.

TSING-TAU WAS A MODEL OF GERMAN CULTURE IN FAR EAST

BERLIN, Nov. 11.Dr. Kaempf, president of the Reichstag, telegraphed to the Kaiser that the whole nation was impressed by the fall of Tsing-tau. The Kaiser replied: "Tsing-tau was a model establishment of German culture in the Far East. It had cost many years of labour. Its heroic example is a fresh and sublime example of that spirit of self-sacrifice to death which the German people and its army and navy so often have shown. The defensive war to-day they sustain against a world of hatred, envy and greed is a war which, God willing, will not be in vain."

"Sadness, but not unsteadiness," sums up the attitude of the German people toward the recent heavy losses. Some astonishment is expressed at the slowness of events, but confidence in the Emperor and the army is the dominant note of public feeling. No one doubts that sooner or later there will be a favourable issue.

The reason for this attitude lies in the fact that the operations are carried on outside German territory. Doubtless it will change completely once the allies are within the frontier.

OVATION FOR CANADIAN.

Londoners Shouldered and Cheered Him in Whitehall.

LONDON, Nov. 11. — When the Grenadiers' band, stationed in Whitehall to-day for the opening of Parliament, played "Land of Hope and Glory," crowds seized a member of the Canadian contingent, who was a spectator of the procession, raised him shoulder high, and gave three cheers for the embarrassed infantryman and the country he represented.

The London Scottish lined the route in Whitehall, coming in for a great demonstration.

Hon. George Perley officially attended the opening of Parliament to-day. High Commissioners for some time now have had the same status at state functions as ambassadors, and occupy similar places in the Lords and Commons. Needless to remark, there were some significant absentees among the ambassadors at to-day's ceremony.

Righteous Indignation.

RURAL TELEPHONES UNDER DISCUSSION

Number of Calls Determines the Cost—What About Reproductive Value—Standardization Suggested

TORONTO, Nov. 11.—"The number of calls per telephone determines the cost," said Dr. W. Doan, of Harriettsville, in delivering a short address this afternoon before the Independent Telephone Association. "The cost is, therefore, more in a larger place."

He cited a case where a company with 100 subscribers had an average of five calls a day, while another company with 400 subscribers averaged ten calls per 'phone a day.

"Get busy," he said, "and find out what the reproductive values are. Do you want to increase your rates? If so, make a study of the surroundings, and be thoroughly conversant with the financial conditions, and you will have no difficulty in getting the authority from the Ontario Railway Board to do it."

One delegate pointed out that when his company wished to increase their capital the Provincial Secretary inserted a clause limiting the dividend to 10 per cent.

"I believe that is the rule now," declared another delegate.

The sum put away for depreciation caused the members some worry. The Ontario Railway Board in application for raising of rates, stipulates that five per cent. of the value of the plant and equipment be put away yearly for depreciation.

Would Like To Know—

Mr. A. D. Bruce of Gormley said his company had to get more revenue but they didn't know whether to raise the rate from $12 to $15 or to invoke the toll system.

Mr. G. R. Tait, of Bridgeburg, said at one time he thought it was all Tommy rot to charge extra for a business 'phone, but he has since changed his mind.

"You need a little backbone to raise your rates," said Mr. Squires of Waterford. "If you are going to drive your business drive it and if not let your subscribers drive it."

One man said many talks "over the wire were nonsensical," but others took the view that they paid for it and were entitled to use it as they wished.

"Many of the men," said Mr. A. D. Gormley, "ring up each other just to ask if they are ploughing, while the women ask each other if they are housecleaning or sweeping. They have a right to do that, though."

"If you charged them for switching, it would make their talk valuable," remarked the former gentleman.

M. A. Denholm, of the Denholm Co., said it was a pity that all small companies had to apply to the Railway Board to raise the rates.

He suggested that the Railway Board standardize the rates according to the number of subscribers.

Grey horses are the longest lived and cream coloured ones the most effected by temperature changes.

LIGHT DEMAND FOR MANITOBA WHEAT

MONTREAL, Nov. 11.—Demand from over the cable for Manitoba wheat was lacking but local exporters were in the market and sales of 100,000 bushels of No. 3 were made at $1.16, and 50,000 No. 2 Northern $1.20 per bushel c.i.f. bay ports. There continues to be a good enquiry for ocean grain room, which is scarce, and the undertone to the market is strong.

A tramp vessel was engaged to carry a cargo of grain from here at 4s 9d per quarter, which is the highest rate paid for some time. The local market for coarse grains continues quiet with only a small volume of business doing. In spring wheat flour business is quite but the tone of the market is firm. Sales of a few small lots of export patent were made for shipment this month. The trade in mill feed is fairly active and the tone of the market is firm.

There was some improvement in the demand for butter to-day, but the market on the whole is quiet. Demand for cheese is good both from local buyers and for export account and sales of some round lots were made. The stock of cheese on spot is light and held in few hands.

The trade in eggs is active, there being a good demand for cold storage stock for export account.

ATTACKED AND KILLED BY A WOUNDED DEER

Special Cable:

LINDSAY, Nov. 11 — Wm. Hughie Jr., of Wilberforce, lost his life yesterday while on a hunting expedition with a friend at Buck Lake, five miles south of that village. A deer which he had wounded attacked him in the lake, upsetting his canoe and scrambling upon him while in the water. Nelson Cornell, who was in the woods near the lake, heard his shout for help, and hurrying to the lake, made heroic efforts to save the life of his companion. Not having another boat, he swam out, and finally succeeded in getting Hughie to shore alive, but he died shortly afterwards from the wounds inflicted by the deer and from exposure in the ice-cold water.

KEEP BEES AS A FAD NOT AS A BUSINESS.

President of Ontario Association Advises Youths to Invest Their Money Elsewhere.

TORONTO, Nov. 11—In his address to the members of the Ontario Beekeepers' Association in their opening session in the County Buildings yesterday, President J. L. Byers said that there had been a failure in the honey crop during the year, and he attributed it to the dry nature of the weather.

The failure had taught them that there were two sides to the business of beekeeping, and that failures were just as sure as bumper crops. Regarding inspection work he said it was becoming harder to get qualified bee-keepers to engage in the work, and as a result the work was being done by students from Guelph College. While he believed that students were efficient yet the rank and file did not have the same confidence as would men trained through practical experience in apiaries.

During 1914 1,300 apiaries had been inspected and 560 had been found infected with foul brood disease. The European disease was undoubtedly spreading, especially in Victoria County, and it seemed likely to spread over the entire Province.

W. D. Roadhouse, Deputy Minister of Agriculture, occupied the chair at the afternoon session, and he spoke briefly to the members on matters pertaining to their profession.

Discussing beekeeping as a business the President declared it was very foolish for any young man with money and looking for a means for profitable investment to enter on beekeeping. Taking everything into consideration he had no hesitation in advising a young man to go slow and combine his hobby with some other business.

Unreasonable Complaint.

Some women are always complaining. Just now in Jasper County a wife is suing a decree for divorce because her husband kept a shotgun for the express purpose of "killing her if necessary."

POTATO BUYERS' UNION TOO.

Beer Bottlers' Union Will Buy Tubers for Its Members.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., Nov. 11.—The Evansville Beer Bottlers' Union has decided to use its union funds to cut the high cost of living. The union has commissioned Fred Hohenberger, David Zeber, John Laegel, and Chester Bickel to buy six hundred bushels of potatoes. A union driver will get the potatoes from the car and deliver them among the members in sacks containing two or three bushels each.

They expect to get the potatoes at 45 cents a bushel, whereas the retail price is 60 cents a bushel here.

The union has 260 members, of whom about 150 have families. If the experiment proves successful other commodities will be bought by the carload and distributed among the members.

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Geo. Allan England

"Regular warfare will never do it!" he exclaimed decisively. "They have thousands where we have tens. Before we could pick them off with our firearms they'd have exhausted all our ammunition and have rushed us—and everything would be all over.

"No; there must be some quicker and more drastic way! Even dynamite or Pulverite could never reach them all, swarming over there through miles of forest. Only one thing can stand against them—fire!

"With fire we must sweep and purge the world, even though we destroy it! With fire we must sweep the world!"

CHAPTER XXVIII.

THE BESOM OF FLAME.

Stern was not long in carrying out his plan.

Even before Frumuos had returned, with the seventeen men still able to bear arms, he was at work.

In Cliff Villa he hastily lashed up half a dozen fireballs, of coarse cloth, thoroughly soaked them in oil, and, with a blazing torch, brought them out to the terrace. Old Gesafam, at his command, bolted the door behind him. At all hazards, Beta and the child must be protected from any possibility of peril.

"Here, Frumuos!" cried Stern.

"Yes, master?"

"Run quickly! Fetch the strongest bow in the colony and many arrows!"

"I go, master!"

Once more the man departed, running.

"God! If I only had my oxygen-containing bullets ready!" thought Stern, his mind reverting to an unfinished experiment down there in his laboratory in the Rapids powerhouse. "They would turn the trick, sure enough! They'd burst and rain fire everywhere. But they aren't ready yet; and even if they were, nobody could venture down there now!"

For already, plainly visible on the farther edge of the canyon, scores and hundreds of the hideous little beast-men were beginning to swarm. Their cries, despite the contrary stiff wind, carried across the river; and here and there a dart broke against the cliff.

Already a few of the Anthropoids were beginning to scramble down the opposite wall of stone.

"Men!" cried Allan commandingly, "not one of those creatures must ever reach this terrace! Take good aim. Waste no single shot. Every bullet must do its work!"

Choosing six of the best marksmen, he stationed them along the parapet with rifles. The firing began at once.

Irregularly the shots barked from the line of sharpshooters; and the little stabs of smoke, drifting out across the river, blent in a thin blue haze. Every moment or two, one of the Horde would writhe, scream, fall—or hang there twitching, to the cliff, with terrible, wild yells.

Stern greeted the return of Frumuos with eagerness.

"Here!" he exclaimed, scattering the arrows among half a dozen men. "Bind these fireballs fast to the arrow-heads!"

He dealt out cord. In a moment the task was done.

"Sivad!" he called a man by name. "You, the best bowman of all! Here quickly!"

Even as Sivad fitted the first arrow to the string, and Stern was about to apply the torch, a rattling crash from above caused all to cringe and leap aside.

Down, leaping, ricochetting, thundering, hurtled a great boulder, spurning the cliff-face with a tremendous uproar.

It struck the parapet like a thirteen-inch shell, smashed out two yards of wall, and vanished in the depths. And after it, sliding, rattling and bouncing down, followed a rain of pebbles, fragments and detritus.

"Those two above—they're attacking!" shouted Stern. "Quick—after them! You, you, you!"

He told off half a dozen men with rifles and revolvers.

"Quick, before they can hide! Look out for their darts! Kill! Kill!"

The detachment started up the path at a run, eager for the hunt.

Stern set the flaring torch to the first fireball. It burst into bright flame.

"Shoot, Sivad! Shoot!" he commanded. "Shoot high, shoot far. Plant your arrow there in the dry undergrowth where the wind whips the jungle! Shoot and fall not!"

The stout bowman drew his arrow to the head, back, back till the flame licked his left hand.

"Zing-g-g-g-g!"

The humming bowspring sang in harmony with the mooning arrow. A swift blue streak split the air, high above the river. In a quick trajectory it leaped.

It vanished in the wind-swept forest. Almost before it had disappeared, Sivad had snatched another flaming arrow and had planted it farther down stream.

One by one, till all were gone, the marksman sowed the seed of conflagration. And all the while, from the rifles along the parapet, death went spitting at the forefront of invasion.

Another boulder fell from aloft, this time working havoc: for as one of the riflemen sprang to dodge, it struck a shoulder of limestone, bounded, and took him fair on the back.

Sentry was smashed clean out; he and the stone, together, plumbed the depths.

But, as though to echo it, shots began to clatter up above. Then all at once they ceased; and a cheer floated away across the canyon.

"They're done, those two up there, damn them!" shouted Stern. "And look, men, look! The fire is—The woods begin to burn!"

True! Already in three places, coils of greasy smoke were beginning to writhe upward, as the resinous, dry undergrowth blossomed into red bouquets of flame.

Now another first burst out; then the two remaining ones. From six centres the conflagration was already swiftly spreading.

Smoke-clouds began to drift downwind; and from the forest depths arose not only harsh cries from the panic-stricken Horde, but also beast and bird-calls as the startled fauna sought to flee this new, red terror.

Shouts and cheers of triumph burst from the little band of defenders on the terrace as the sweeping wind, fanning the flame through the sun-dried underbrush, whirled it crackling aloft in a quick-leaping storm of fire.

But Stern was silent as he watched the fierce and sudden onset of the conflagration. Between narrowed lids, as though calculating a grave problem, he observed the crazed birds taking sudden flight, launching into air and whirling drunkenly hither and yon with harsh cries for their last brief bit of life.

He listened to the animal calls in the forest and to the strange crashings of the undergrowth as the creatures broke cover and in vain sought safety.

Mingled with these sounds were others—yells, shrieks, and gibberings—the tumult of the perishing Horde.

Swiftly the fire spread to right and left, even as it ate northward from the river.

The mass of Anthropoids inevitably found themselves trapped: their crouching, awkward figures could here or there be seen in some clear space, running wildly. Then, with a gust of flame, that space, too, vanished, and all was one red glare.

The riflemen, meanwhile, were steadily potting such of the little demons as still were crawling up or down the cliffside opposite. Surely, relentlessly, they shot the invaders down. And, even as Stern watched, the enemy melted and vanished before his eyes.

Allan was thinking.

"What may this not result in?" he wondered as he observed the swift and angry leap of the forest-fire to northward. "It may ravage thousands of square miles before rain puts an end to it. It may devastate the whole country. A change in the wind may even drive it back on us, across the river, sweeping all before it. This may mean ruin!"

He paused a moment, then said aloud:

"Ruin, perhaps. Yes; but the alternative was death! There was no other way!"

Now none of the attackers remained save a few feebly twitching, writhing bodies caught on some protuberance of rock. Here, there, one of these fell, and like the rest was borne away down stream.

Through the heated air already vibrated a strange roar as the forest-fire leaped up the opposite hillside in one clear lick of incandescence. This roar hummed through the heavens and trembled over the long reaches of the river.

The fire jumped a little valley and took the second hill, burning as clear as any furnace, with a swift onward, upward slant as the wind fanned it forward through the dry brush and among the crowded palms.

Now and then, with a muffled explosion, a sap-filled palm burst. Here, or yonder, some brighter flare showed where the fire had run at one clear leap right to the frodded top of a fern-tree.

Fire-brands and dry-kye, caught up by the swirl, spiralled through the thick air and fell far in advance of the main fire-army, each outpost colonizing into swift destruction.

Already the nearer portion of the opposite cliff-edge was barren and smoking, swept clean of life as a broom might sweep an ant-hill. Tourbillons of dense smoke obscured the sky.

The air flew thick with brands, live coals and flaring bits of bark, all whirling aloft on the breath of the fire-demon. Showers of burning jewels were sown broadcast by the resistless wind.

Stern, unspeakably saddened in spite of victory by this wholesale destruction of forest, fruit and game, turned away from the magnificent, the terrifying spectacle.

He left his riflemen staring at it, amazed and awed to silence by the splendour of the flame-tempest, which they watched through their eye-shields in absolute astonishment.

Back to Cliff Villa he returned, his step heavy and his heart like lead. In a few brief hours, how great, how terrible, how devastating the changes that had come upon Settlement Cliff!

Attack, destruction, pestilence and flame had all worked their will there; and many a dream, a plan, a hope now lay in ashes, even like those smouldering cinder-piles across the river—those pyres that marked the death-field of the hateful, venomous, inhuman Horde!

Numb with exhaustion and emotions, he staggered up the path, knocked, and was admitted to his home by the old nurse.

He heard the crying of his son, vigorously protesting against some infant grievance, and his tired heart yearned with strong father-love.

"A hard world, boy!" thought he. "A hard fight, all the way through. God grant, before you come to take the burden and the shock, I may have been able to lighten both for you!"

The old woman touched his arm.

"O, master! Is the fighting past?"

"It is past and done, Gesafam. That enemy, at least, will never come again! But tell me, what causes the boy to cry?"

"He is hungered, master. And I—I do not know the way to milk the strange animal!"

Despite his exhaustion, pain and dour forebodings, Allan had to smile a second.

That Racking Persistent Cough

Can Be Quickly Cured By

DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP

All obstinate coughs and colds yield quickly to the general action of "Dr. Wood's" for the simple reason that this valuable preparation combines all the lung healing virtues of the Norway pine tree with which is combined Wild Cherry Bark, and the soothing, healing and expectorant properties of other excellent herbs and barks. This makes it, without any chance of denial, the best cough medicine on the market to-day.

When you ask for "Dr. Wood's" see that it is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark, and that the name, The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont., appears on the wrapper. Price, 25c and 50c.

Mrs. H. C. Kingston, Moose Jaw, Sask., writes: "I wish to recommend Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup as being the best cough medicine on the market. A few months ago I took a severe cold which left me with a racking cough. After trying several cough remedies, with no result, I decided to get a bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and after taking the first two doses it began to effect a cure, and after continuing its use for a short time, I was entirely cured. I cannot say too much in its praise."

MRS. WINN'S ADVICE TO WOMEN

Take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and be Restored to Health.

Kansas City, Mo.—"The doctors told me I would never be a mother. Every month the pains were so bad that I could not bear my weight on one foot. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and had not finished the first bottle when I felt greatly relieved and I took it until it made me sound and well, and I now have two fine baby girls. I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound too highly for what it has done for me. I always speak a word in favor of your medicine to other women who suffer when I have an opportunity."—Mrs. H. T. Winn, 1225 Fremont Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

Read What Another Woman says:

Cumming, Ga.—"I tell some suffering woman every day of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it has done for me. I could not eat or sleep, had a bad stomach and was in misery all the time. I could not do my housework or walk any distance without suffering great pain. I tried doctors' medicines and different patent medicines but failed to get relief. My husband brought home your Vegetable Compound and in two weeks I could eat anything, could sleep like a healthy baby, and walk a long distance without feeling tired. I can highly recommend your Vegetable Compound to women who suffer as I did, and you are at liberty to use this letter."—Mrs. CHARLIE BAILEY, R. 3, Cumming, Ga.

Your skin is continually being rebuilt

Your skin like the rest of your body, is continually being rebuilt. Every day, in washing, you rub off dead skin. As this old skin dies, new forms. This is your opportunity—make this new skin just what you would love to have it by using the following treatment regularly.

How to keep your skin active

Wash your face with care and take plenty of time to do it. Lather freely with Woodbury's Facial Soap and rub in gently until the skin is softened and the pores open. After this, rinse in warm, then in very cold water. Whenever possible, rub your skin for a few minutes with a lump of ice.

Woodbury's Facial Soap is the work of an authority on the skin and its needs. This treatment with Woodbury's cleanses the pores, then closes them and brings the blood to the surface. You feel the difference the first time you use it—a promise of that lovelier complexion which the steady use of Woodbury's always brings.

Woodbury's Facial Soap costs 25c a cake. No one hesitates at the price after their first cake.

Gained 30 Lbs. in Few Weeks Never Felt So Well

Was Pale, Weak and Thin, and Had Nervous Headaches Before Using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

It is truly wonderful what Dr. Chase's Nerve Food does for women who are weak, weary and run down in health. Now, rich blood is what is needed in nearly all such cases, and because Dr. Chase's Nerve Food forms new blood it brings cure — not more relief, but actual cure—in the great majority of such ailments.

With an abundance of rich, red blood coursing through the veins the nerves are strengthened and vigor and vitality are carried to every organ of the human body.

With the nerves properly nourished headaches and neuralgic pains disappear, appetite improves, digestion is good, you sleep and rest well, and gain in strength and weight.

Mrs. H. Leich, Cannington Manor, Sask., writes:—"You will remember me writing you last spring. Well, I gave up my doctor and began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. This treatment cured me rapidly and I was soon myself again. I was pale, thin and weak, suffered from stomach troubles and liver complaint, and frequently had sick, nervous headaches. "I was surprised to find that in a few weeks' time I had gained 30 pounds in weight. I never felt so strong and well in all my life. Headaches never bother me any more, and I am grateful for the cure. If people would only give this medicine a fair trial they would certainly be cured."

Everywhere people are talking about this great food cure, which cures in Nature's way, by supplying the ingredients to form new blood, and so overcome weakness and disease by an abundance of vitality. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50c a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

GERMAN CRUISER GNEISENAU.—Which, with the aid of her sister ship, the Scharnhorst, did most to gain victory for the Germans in the naval engagement off Coronel recently. She is of 11,500 tons with a speed of 23½ knots, and carries eight 8.2 in. guns.

GERMANY HAS FOOD TO LAST FOR WHOLE YEAR

The fundamental question that faces the belligerents at the present time is that of food supplies, both for the men at the front and the non-combatants at home. It is especially important to know the extent of Germany's ability to feed her citizens without help from other nations, in order to make any intelligent estimate of the war's duration.

In a normal year, about one-third of the wheat consumed in Germany comes from outside sources. The imports in 1913 were over 60,000,000 bushels, while the production of this commodity was 160,000,000 bushels.

Imports of rye during the same period were 14,000,000 bushels, exports 7,000,000 bushels, and production was over 460,000,000 bushels.

Imports of barley were 146,000,000 bushels, exports were practically nil. Production was 165,000,000.

Imports of oats during 1913 were 30,000,000 bushels, which about equalled the amount exported and the production was over 65,000,000 bushels.

Imports of corn were about 37,000,000 and practically none was milled. Germany imported rice to the amount of nearly 25,000,000 bushels during 1913. Of potatoes, this country has an average crop of 50,000,000 tons, and is independent of other countries.

It is itself a sugar exporting country, and its salt supply is absolutely secure. As to meat, the position is more uncertain. In a census taken on 2nd June of this year, it was found that Germany possessed a stock of over 250,000,000 pigs. Against this the falling off of imports of some 130,000 from Russia is not of great importance. In normal times it is said that about 70 per cent. of the meat consumption in Germany consists of pork.

Germany Has Kept Her Head.

The land-owning classes have to a certain extent been a power behind the throne, and the government has therefore protected the interests of this landlord class by keeping a high protective tariff on grains and meats. This has had the effect of causing large supplies to be grown inside the country. Germany produces about 20,000,000 cattle. She also raises about 22,000,000 hogs. Thus Germany is pretty well supplied with meat at present, and she can probably go along for an indefinite time without any cattle or hog imports.

It is principally in the falling off of imports of grains, and possibly in the lack of hands to sow the fall crops that Germany will suffer, although the women can probably attend to the latter.

So it will be seen that Germany has been to a large extent dependent upon its imports of agricultural and other food products, and the outlook for this is extremely unfavourable while the war lasts.

Germany is practically surrounded by enemies. On the east is Russia, from which Germany has imported a considerable quantity of wheat, oats, barley, and corn. This source is absolutely shut off. She will, of course, be able to get a certain amount of these grains from Hungary.

The only other source of supply is from Scandinavia, across the Baltic Sea, or by way of Denmark. Just at present, Germany commands the Baltic Sea, and until the supremacy is determined by British fleet, she may continue to do a small business with Sweden and Norway, although the sympathies of thes two nations are inclined toward the Allies. The remainder of her imports in normal times is from South America, Canada, United States, and Australia. These routes are, of course, closed to Germany.

As soon as it appeared inevitable that there would be a war with Russia and France, there was a temporary food panic in Germany which commenced along the frontier and spread rapidly inward until it had reached all the large towns.

It was the usual case of the rich buying up as quickly and as much as possible of all available stores, and of the retail dealers reaping golden harvests.

Speculators Quickly Stopped.

This, however, was soon stopped. Prices were fixed for some of the primary necessities, the maximum price for rye flour, for wheat flour, and for salt being about the same as prevailing in the country.

Shops in which higher prices were demanded were closed at once, the goods being sold later under government supervision. Large sums were voted by most municipal councils to ensure the provision of food for the poorer inhabitants.

Reports have been received from Berlin saying that the crops are nearly all gathered and that Germany now has stocks of food to last for at least 18 months. This is, of course, likely to be exaggerated, and it seems as though the more recent estimates of one year are more liable to be correct.

With stocks on hand sufficient to last a year, any further replenishing is dependent either on next season's crop or an opening up of the ways of communication with the world's great grain fields. Germany's mainstay is rye, and the prospects for next year's crops depend greatly upon whether or not the great rye fields of Germany become the battle ground between the Germans and the Russians.

It is evident that, provided there is not invasion of German soil, Germany could support her population for a year or more, and perhaps indefinitely on the German raised grains, together with those imported from Austria Hungary.

Should she be besieged, the attention of all her non-fighting population would be turned to further experiments in intensive cultivation and stock raising.

There is doubtless enough wheat and rye in Germany to supply the whole population with bread for many months to come. Germany will also be able to exhange its large surplus of sugar, dye-stuffs, drugs, chemicals, potash, coal, etc., for other things which it will most need, with Denmark, Scandinavia, Holland, and Switzerland.

URIC ACID SUFFERING

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the tissues and bladder it forms stones. In the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Don't Merely "Stop" a Cough

Stop the Virus that Causes it and the Cough will Stop Itself

A cough is really one of your best friends. It warns us that there is inflammation or obstruction in the air passages. Therefore, when you get a bad cough don't pretend to check yourself with a lot of drugs that merely "stop" the cough temporarily by paralyzing the throat nerves. Treat the cause—heal the inflamed membranes. Here is a home-made remedy that gets right at the cause and will make an obstinate cough vanish more quickly than you ever thought possible.

Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth) in a 16-ounce bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. This gives you 16 ounces of the most pleasant and effective remedy you ever used, at a cost of only 54 cents. It is better to prepare. Full directions with Pinex.

It heals the inflamed membranes so gently and promptly that you wonder how it does it. Also loosens a dry, tickling or tight cough and stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of Norway pine extract, rich in creosote, and is famous the world over for its healing effect on the membranes.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and don't accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

HERO STUFF.

Men may die for their babes and wives,
Soldiers may bravely stand
At the cannon's mouth and lay down their lives
For their flag and their native land.

Anniversary of Methodist Church

Marked by Special Services and a Very Successful Fowl Supper

Examiner Special.

HASTINGS, Nov. 10.—Anniversary services were conducted in the Methodist church on Sunday last by Rev. C. W. Barrett of Hampton, a former pastor, preached two very able sermons to large and appreciative audiences. The music furnished by the choir was excellent, consisting of solos, duets and choruses.

On Monday evening the annual fowl supper was served in the Town Hall and sustained its former reputation in every respect the tables almost groaning beneath the load which they were forced to carry, not the least being the floral decorations, which called forth tributes of praise from every quarter. After ample justice had been done to the toothsome viands, the company repaired to the church, which was filled to its utmost capacity. The speaker of the evening was Rev. C. W. Barrett, who gave a concise account of his late trip to England. Excellent music was furnished by the Havelock choir who motored over for the evening. Selections worthy of mention were given by the different quartettes and were warmly encored. Recitations were given by Miss Lilly Carter and Miss B. McConnel, which were well given and as well appreciated. Rev. Dr. Mill, pastor of the Havelock church, was also present, and gave a spicy little address, as also Rev. Cottingham who was visiting in town. Altogether the proceedings of the evening were very harmonious and the committee in charge are to be congratulated on the success of the enterprise.

Mr. and Miss McMaster of Dummer, were in town on Monday.

Dr. and Mrs. Kindred of Havelock, attended the fowl dinner on Monday.

Rev. Anderson went to Hampton on Saturday to conduct the Sunday services in the absence of the pastor.

Quite a shipment of hogs left the G. T. R. station here on Thursday, the price paid being $6.75 per hundred.

Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Cook and family, of Sudbury, have been guests at the home of his sister, Mrs. (Rev.) Anderson. Dr. Cook has just returned from England, and is brim full of war news.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Redpath of Birdsall, are moving their household effects to Keene, where they intend to reside. Mr. and Mrs. Redpath have resided here for some years, and during this time have made for themselves a host of friends, who sincerely regret their removal, and who will follow them with best wishes for prosperity in their new home.

Miss Hawkins of Percy is the guest of Mrs. (Rev.) Anderson at the parsonage.

Mr. Jas. Stevenson shipped a carload of cattle on Saturday, via G. T. R. to Toronto.

We regret to learn that Mr. Jack Fleming is confined to his home, suffering from an affection of the lungs. His many friends wish for him a speedy recovery.

Miss Bessie Knox of Peterborough, is visiting her friend, Miss G. Howson.

Mr. Keith Waters took a trip to Havelock last week.

Mr. Sam Hatherley has purchased a motor car for use in his business.

Mr. W. Humphries took a trip to Campbellford on Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Bonney of Campbellford, spent Sunday in town.

Messrs. A. Humphries, L. Elmhirst and party have returned from a week's deer-hunting, proudly boasting five fine specimens of the sport.

Mr. Lloyd Hess of Peterborough, spent Sunday under the parental roof.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Longmuir of Percy, visited here on Sunday.

WHAT THIN FOLKS SHOULD DO TO GAIN WEIGHT

Physician's Advice for Thin, Undeveloped Men and Women

Thousands of people suffer from excessive thinness, weak hearts and feeble stomachs who, having tried advertised flesh-makers, foodfads, peroxol cultural exercises and rub-on creams, resign themselves to life-long skinniness and think nothing will make them fat. Yet their case is not hopeless. A remarkably discovered regenerative force which has grown after years of thinness, and is also unexcelled for repairing the waste of stomach or faulty digestion and for strengthening the nerves. This remarkable discovery is called Sargol. Its wonderful fat-producing properties of acknowledged merit have been combined in this peerless preparation, which is endorsed by eminent physicians and used by prominent people everywhere. It is absolutely harmless, inexpensive and efficient.

A month's systematic use of Sargol should produce flesh and strength by correcting faults of digestion and by supplying highly concentrated fats to the blood. Increased nourishment is obtained from the food eaten, and the additional fats that thin people need are provided. Leading druggists supply Sargol and any there is a large demand for it.

While this new preparation has given splendid results as a nerve-tonic and vitalizer, it should not be used by nervous people unless they wish to gain at least ten pounds of flesh.

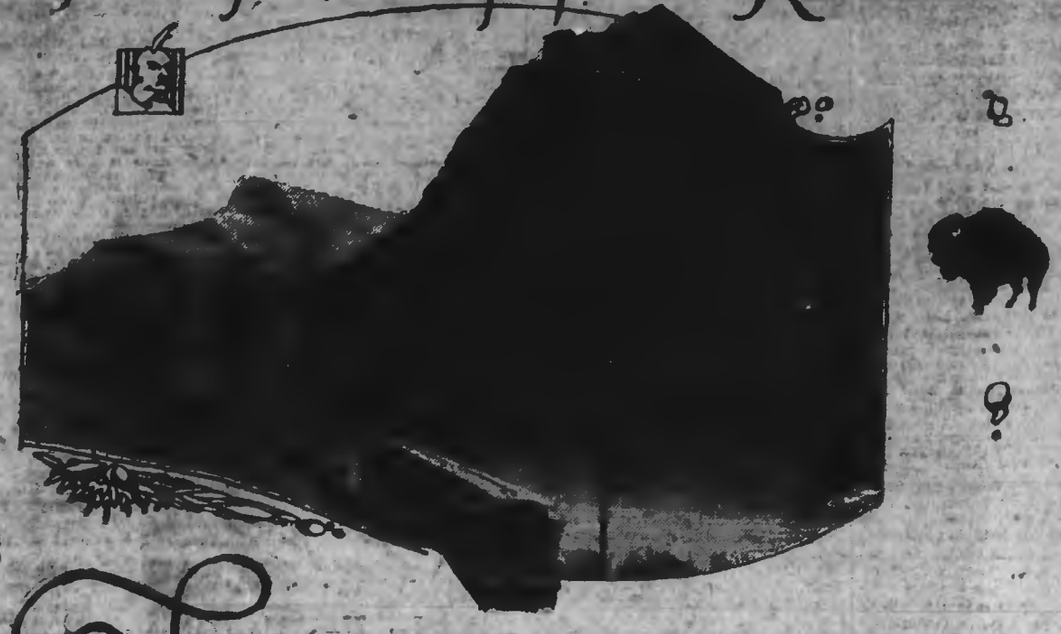
The Gateway of the Rockies



THIRTEEN years had passed since last I saw the gateway of the Rockies, and I was prepared to discover that my memory exaggerated its majesty. Always I had been chary about describing the place to those who had not in their travels passed that way; because, in describing it, it seemed to my own ears that surely I must be carried away somewhat the extreme dark before dawn, like a long luminous snake, to startle any nocturnal wolf that prowled along the banks back from the track. Slowly, with an excessive pallor, the day began outside the dew-drenched train that twined through the wild country of the foothills. That country stretches north and south for hundreds of miles, a broad ribband of wilderness along the eastern flank of the Rockies, where creeks gurgle and shout, day and night, through rolling hills, among which it is one of the easiest things imaginable for a man to be lost; a wild country, where cattle still graze; where coyotes howl, and the lone wolf begs; where bear delight in multitudinous berries or ravage the honeycombs of the wild bee; where deer step dainty-footed and shy, less often seen than the fresh prints of their cloven hoofs in the mud by the creek side; where rattlesnakes and ground owls and gophers lead their lives—whether of commensalism, or of bickering, observers are not yet certain; the camp of the watching naturalists is divided.

Into this wild country we rolled from the kaleidoscopic town of Calgary, where civilisation has come so quickly upon pagandom that, despite granite houses and concrete side-walks, the air of a frontier town still clings to it, and the sightseer in his motor car running into the environs may see a cow-man in sheepskin chaps and hear him "ki-yi-ing," or may encounter the descendants of the older inhabitants, riding lean ponies, looking broken and dirty, or clean and wild, according as to how they have taken the sudden smack of change.

The new day coming on the benchlands of Alberta seemed wistful, or pathetic. It was a young Canadian poet who found the spring so, and commented:

> The old, eternal Spring again
> Comes back the sad, eternal way.

It was light enough at Cochrane just to see the place as a wan arrangement of grey tones, the grass showing a suspicion of green, more imagined than visible. Cochrane, in that early light, looked more like a mirage than a "place." Its scattered handful of frame houses, hotels, livery stables, and the rolling bush-dotted hills enfolding it, all wet with dew, seemed like a faint-colored picture in a book seen through the tissue paper originally inserted to protect the page. The train stopped, and slid out again immediately with the advancing morning. But the day was far speedier. A creek, with which we kept erratic company for some miles now, was laughing and glowing, showing rich, subdued purples and blues. The tufts of sage brush assumed their own hue of green. The tree-stems by the creek banks and in the hollows glowed on their eastern sides more as if the morning drew a golden flare out of them than as if the sun was lighting them.

At Morley it was not bright enough to take a snap-shot photograph while the train stopped, paused a minute, and ran again; but the view there was photographed mentally—a strip of platform with a frame house on it; the name "Morley" painted on the gable; the station agent on the platform; a section gang standing by the track side, beside their pump car, waiting for the train to pass on and give them the track. They were armed with picks and shovels, and wore the disgusted look of people going forth, in clothes not yet warmed comfortably, to manual labor. A member of the Force, a young man in a red coat, striped blue trousers, jack boots, regulation cap, with a carbine on his arm, spurred and smart as a dragoon, stood upon the platform. On the other side of the track a large canvas tent was pitched in a green meadow, with other policemen around it, moving here, there. About a fire, the smoke of which rose near and thick, now hiding them, now revealing them—young men in military trousers and boots; flannel-shirt sleeves rolled up, braces looped about their hips in the manner of cavalrymen or grooms at work all the world over. They were camped in the broad end of a triangular tree-surrounded wedge of meadows. In the far corner several Indian tipis showed, with their blackened tops and protruding poles, some in the grass, some peeping between the trees. From the tipis rose up columns of smoke, grey smoke; for it was still early, and though the higher fire showed thin golden spires above their lower kindred, the deeps of the wood and the wood-whelmed meadow still held some of the uncertainty of night, like sleep heavy in the eyes of a new-wakened sluggard.

On we went, and I looked out to behold again the great gateway of the mountains. There were the rolling hills, the dingles, the twisting and leaping streams. Long scarfs of mist swept athwart the mountains, hiding the mountains. I looked at the mists, and wished they would dissolve before the day that had followed the train from Calgary, leapt upon it suddenly, rustled ahead, and which even now be stepping into the Pacific away beyond this balsam-scented province of ridges and valleys into which we were entering.

Then a brightness overhead, as of a flashing mirror, very high, made me look up, look deliberately up, as one looks for a soaring lark rather than for a crest of mountains.

"Look!" I cried.

"Oh!" said my fellow traveller, "Look!" and then was silent.

The mists did not hide the peaks. They were rolled merely along the beginning of the mountains; and high overhead, in dizzy space, as if hanging in that glittering blue cavity in which all the worlds tumble, was the ridge of the Rockies. The train dwindled to nothing—was like an ant in long grass. There, high, ever so high, quiet, stern, august, were the Rockies, hanging in space, and glittering as a chunk of galena, held in the hand, glitters in the sun. But that was like a tremendous wall of galena, a precipice of it. It was as if these clouds that coiled before us had been solidified in their higher parts, and had then been painted upon to represent the scene.

Memory had not exaggerated; I had under-rated, foolishly made sceptical of the rightness of the gift of God. The Rocky Mountains at dawn do not roar; they hang across the sky, glittering out at the plains. It is easy to understand how at this hour (even to-day when the white man is "rubber-necking" around) some old Indian may be seen to step out of his tipi and, drawing erect, hold up his two palms, raising his head, in salutation to the sun he once again it lights up the miracle of the world.—By Frederick Niven, author of "Hands Up."

German Barque, Under False Colours, Sails 150 Days Without Capture

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—After having roamed the seven seas for five months, during which at least ten British and French war vessels were spoken and so many sighted that count of the number was lost, the German four-masted barque Indra, weather-beaten from a succession of strong gales and with her crew on short rations, slipped into port yesterday, finishing what is the most remarkable voyage that has ever been known in local shipping circles.

When the Indra's rust-encrusted anchors were dropped at Quarantine, Captain Karstad did not mince his words in saying that he had completed the most arduous task that may ever befall his lot. Officers of British steamships lying in the lower bay rubbed their eyes in amazement when they saw the Indra coming up the Narrows with the tricolour of Germany flying jauntily from her rigging.

The Indra cleared from Taltal, Chili, with a cargo of 3,300 tons of nitrate on 11th June, when there was not a hint of the European struggle on the horizon. Ice fields and fierce gales were encountered in rounding the Horn. It was not until the Equator was reached on the east coast of South America that Captain Karlstad was informed that was was on, and then he was told it was between France and Germany.

Bound for Dunkirk, he decided to hoist the Swedish flag and attempt to reach a German port by way of the English Channel, trusting to luck and his ability as a linguist to get him through any tight situation. War vessels came within hailing distance but none sent a boarding crew until some of the British patrol fleet was sighted off the Scilly Isles, on the south coast of England.

When men from one of the British vessels came on board, Captain Karstad was told for the first time that practically all of Europe was plunged in the war. He treated the British officers to wine and cigars, and they went away without molesting the Indra.

Although short of rations, Captain Karstad resolved to head about and make for New York. He found he was surrounded by hostile war vessels. It got to be a pastime with the German captain to explain his identity and the Swedish flag was hoisted so many times on one day that he decided to save further trouble by letting it remain there. In the North Atlantic, British and French merchantmen were sighted continuously, as well as the war vessels patrolling the regular trade routes.

One of the remarkable phases of the Indra's wanderings was that not a German vessel was sighted during all of the one hundred and fifty days at sea. The light at Atlantic Highlands was sighted at eleven o'clock on Saturday night,, 7th November, and lying to until dawn, a tugboat sent a line to the barque and brought her into port. As soon as neutral waters were reached the Swedish flag was hauled down to be replaced by that of Germany.

The Indra carried a crew of thirty-three. Among them were several Americans, who had come aboard in Chili.

The vessel is valued at $25,000, and the cargo at upward of $100,000.

CLEANSES YOUR HAIR MAKES IT BEAUTIFUL

It Becomes thick, wavy, lustrous and all dandruff disappears

Surely try a "Danderine Hair Cleanse" if you wish to immediately double the beauty of your hair. Just moisten a cloth with Danderine and draw it carefully through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; this will cleanse the hair of dust, dirt or any excessive oil—in a few minutes you will be amazed. Your hair will be wavy, fluffy and abundant and possess an incomparable softness, lustre and luxuriance.

Besides beautifying the hair, one application of Danderine dissolves every particle of dandruff; invigorates the scalp, stopping itching and falling hair.

Danderine is to the hair what fresh showers of rain and sunshine are to vegetation. It goes right to the roots, invigorates and strengthens them. Its exhilarating, stimulating and life-producing properties cause the hair to grow long, strong and beautiful.

You can surely have pretty, soft, lustrous hair, and lots of it, if you will just get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store or toilet counter and try it as directed.

CALIBAN WITHIN YOU IS TO BE SCOURGED

Before a girl can be really godly, he must be manly; before a woman can be truly godly, she must be womanly. There can be no true goodness apart from real strength. Simperings, affectations, flatteries, insincerities and smiling hypocrisies—let these things be forever destroyed and banished from our minds. Evil is inherently weak, ineffectual, cowardly. Good is essentially strong, effective, courageous. In teaching men and women to be good, I teach them to be strong, free, self-reliant. They will greatly misunderstand men and the principles which I enunciate who imagine that because I teach gentleness and purity and patience, I teach the cultivation of effeminate weakness. It is only the manly man and the womanly woman that can properly understand those divine qualities, and none are better equipped to achieve the life triumphant than those who, along with active moral qualities, and a high sense of purity and honour, are also possessed of the strong animal nature of the normal man.

That animal force, which in various forms, surges within you, and which, in the hour of excitement carries you blindly away, causing you to forget your higher nature, and to forfeit your manly dignity and honour—that same force, controlled, mastered and rightly directed, will endow you with a divine strength by which you can achieve the highest, noblest, most blissful victories of true living.

The Caliban within you is to be scourged and disciplined into obedience. You are to be master of your heart, your mind, yourself. Man is only weak and abject when he gives up the reins of government to the lower, instead of directing the lower by the higher. Your passions are to be your servants and slaves, not your masters. See that you keep them in their places, duly controlled and commanded, and they shall render you faithful, strong and happy service.

You are not "vile." There is no part of your body or mind that is vile. Nature makes no mistakes. The [illegible] verse is framed on truth. [illegible] great, and is rightly direct them to wisdom, holiness, happiness, to properly direct them [illegible] and misery. A quiet, unobtrusive and unbending dignity is the chief work of a wise and perfect manhood. Honour others and respect yourself. Choose your path and walk it with a firm, unflinching step, but avoid a meddlesome interference with others. In the true man, opposing qualities are blended and harmonised: a yielding strength. He adopts himself gently and wisely to others, without sacrificing the steadfast principles upon which his manhood is built. To have that iron strength that can go calmly to death rather than yield one jot of truth, along with that tender sympathy that can shield the weak and mistaken enemy, is to be manly with a divine manhood.—James Allen, in his book "The Life Triumphant."

BIG WARS FROM SMALL BEGINNINGS

Many of the great wars of history have had their origin in trivial causes, observes the Los Angeles Times. It is related that an ambassador from Venice to Turkey appeared before the Grand Vizier for the purpose of ratifying a treaty of peace and amity between the Venetian Republic and the Sultan. The Venetian was asked by the Turk to ratify the treaty by swearing to it upon his beard and the beard of the prophet. The ambassador declined because, he said, the "Venetians wear no beards." The Grand Vizier sneeringly replied, "Nor do monkeys." Then the Venetian tore up the treaty and walked out of the conference room. A war followed, in which 130,000 Turks and 50,000 Christians fell.

A tarnished teapot caused a war in China in which 500,000 men were slain. A high dignitary of the empire owned a porcelain teapot of very great value which he carried on all his journeys. When he was travelling in North-western China his retinue was attacked by a band of robbers who found the teapot among their booty and, not appreciating its value, flung it to the ground and broke it. The Emperor resented the loss of his favourite by sending a punitive expedition into the country of the robbers. A war began which lasted for years and half a million soldiers were slain.

In Italy in the early part of the eleventh century a company of soldiers from Modena stole a bucket from a public well in Bologna. They refused to return it. The soldiers of the rival cities thereupon started a war which, before it ceased, devastated southern Europe.

It was an inconceivably tiny spark that in 1654 kindled a war between Sweden and Poland. The king of Sweden discovered that in a despatch his name and title were followed by only two et ceteras, whereas the name of the King of Poland had three. A declaration of war followed from the insulted Scandinavian monarch.

Just One Application and the Hairs Vanish

(Modes of To-day)

A harmless, but very effective, treatment is here given for the quick removal of hair growths. Mix enough powdered Delatone and water to cover the undesirable hairs, apply paste and after 2 or 3 minutes remove, wash the skin and the hairs have vanished. One application is sufficient, but to be certain of success, leave the delatone on the original spot.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Bowes Street House

How It Came by Its Repairs

By LENORE E. CRANEY
Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

While Gilder beat eagerly over the quarterly report his agent sat back and watched him uneasily.

He was a big man—this agent—faultlessly dressed and bearing an air of ease and conscious well being very soothing to the senses. Faultless, too, was his manner toward his employer—suave, deferent, but not too deferent.

Ah, that is a very great thing—to acquire a manner like that. If Gilder smiled, Burson radiated pleasure; if Gilder frowned, Burson breathed a deprecating regret, and yet he never roused the savage desire to kick that a more suppliant and cringing servant might have done.

For Burson respected himself, in a very modest and unobtrusive way, and thus begat respect in his betters. But for all that he often experienced troublesome days, and one glimpse at Mr. Gilder's lean face had conveyed clearly to Burson that this was going to be one of the most troublesome of them all.

"Ahem!" Gilder shot his spectacle case with a snap and glared at his agent. "I see profits far below normal again, sir. I notice in the Bowes street house alone the bill for plumbing is over $900 for the past year."

"I have been wanting to speak to you about the Bowes street place," began Burson, extracting a letter from the file at his elbow. "You see, Mr. Gilder, the Bowes street plumbing is in pretty bad condition; there's been quite a little agitation recently in some of the papers about an epidemic of typhoid down there, and this morning I got this letter from the head of the social settlement in the district."

"Let of nonsense," was Gilder's only comment as he tossed the letter down half read.

"But you see they threaten a health board investigation."

"You ought to know as well as anybody, Burson, how little we have to fear from the board of health."

"Yes, I know they have been very kind."

"The point is what are you going to do to bring up this credit balance? At the present rate of decline another year or two may see the balance on the other side altogether," said Gilder.

Burson faced himself for a battle, though his manner was as suave, as gracious as ever.

"I am sorry to say, Mr. Gilder, that I can't see any way to overcome the leak unless you are prepared to spend a large sum on new plumbing. In the Bowes street place alone a thousand dollars ought to be spent immediately. A great many of the tenements remain empty simply because they are not habitable, even for the sort of people who live in that section. We cannot reduce the rents without establishing a very bad precedent, and of course I could not put in any very extensive repairs without consulting you."

"Extensive repairs," ejaculated Gilder, now thoroughly aroused. "For heaven's sake, Burson, one would imagine you were letting on Fifth avenue instead of slum tenements! You are dealing with a class that has no business to expect luxuries. It's scum—plain scum, demanding new and up to date plumbing in its dens."

"Of course what you say is true," agreed Burson, "but times are changing everywhere, and I can assure you, sir, the people in the tenements now are not the sort we had there ten years ago. It grows increasingly difficult to deal with them, and in the Bowes street house especially we've had no end of trouble.

"One of my men was pitched down the steps only last week by a burly giant who declared he wouldn't pay his rent until the leak from the floor above was stopped. Of course we set him out, but it's had a very bad effect on the others, especially as the typhoid is very bad in the house, and the settlement workers have led them to believe it's entirely due to the pipes."

"More likely it's due to their own dirt and filth!" snapped Gilder, pacing wrathfully up and down. "But I look to you, Burson, to straighten this out. That's what I pay you for, and I expect you to do it."

"I have been doing my best. I intend to go down there myself this afternoon and look the house over. I am having a plumber meet me there to submit estimates."

At the word "estimates" a sudden gleam of suspicion lit in Gilder's eyes "Estimates—graft! Aha!"

"I think I'll just go down with you, Burson, and we'll look it over together."

Burson's dismay was evident.

"Oh, Mr. Gilder, I'm sure you wouldn't like that! You've no idea how filthy and vile the streets and people are down there. It wouldn't do at all to go in your car, in the present state of things, and I'm sure you wouldn't relish the ride on the street cars."

This served, of course, to fix the idea only the more firmly in Mr. Gilder's mind. He would certainly go; of that Burson might be certain.

Once having made the resolution he forged calmly ahead, but before he had traversed half the distance from the street car to the entrance to the seven slums houses he had begun to realize some of the difficulties of which this one had spoken. [illegible] and hot—the middle of September—and the smells were almost overpowering.

Hawkers with cups of lukewarm water, in which floated half cooked ears of green corn; others with slices of watermelon cut in the early morning and now covered with filth and flies, were everywhere in the dusty streets.

Added to these were the cries of the not distant elevated, the screaming of innumerable babies and the shrill whistles of gangs of [illegible], making a very inferno of noise and confusion. Gilder grew more furious into the comparative quiet of the Bowes street house.

Once inside, Burson took the lead and began at once the tour of inspection. The house had been designed for a far better class of tenant than now found a haven within its walls. It had originally two suits of apartments of five rooms each on either side of the narrow hall which bisected the house. But long ago these five rooms had been divided so that now they formed three suits each—two of two rooms and a single room.

The single rooms, dirty and dark as they were, found ready occupancy, for the rent was but half that of the two roomed suits. But, while nearly all of the single rooms were occupied, many of the two room suits were empty. Gilder's reduced dividends were explained.

They were making the last rounds on the top floor when they heard a voice far below hailing Mr. Burson. The strength and assurance of it spoke eloquently of a full dinner pail.

"Ah, that must be Manders, the plumber!" exclaimed Burson, hastening toward the dark and rickety stairway. "Pardon me one moment, Mr. Gilder. I'll bring him right up."

Left to himself, Gilder started slowly toward the narrow window at the far end of the hall. Suddenly a door was flung open halfway down the hall and the anxious face of one of the amateur nurses from the settlement peered out. At sight of Gilder her face cleared and she sprang forward.

"Oh, sir, I am so glad to see you! My patient is very sick—typhoid. I must have help. The doctor is somewhere in the building; probably with Casey's little girl on the first floor. Bring him as quick as you can." Then as she realized the blank look on Gilder's face anxiety again puckered her smooth brow.

"Oh, you don't think you can find him? What shall I do? I must—I know! You stay here very very quiet—he's delirious and [illegible] notice the change. Don't excite him whatever you do!" and before Gilder could voice his protest she had pushed him through the door and sped down the hall.

Nauseated and highly indignant, Gilder looked about him.

The work of the volunteers from the settlement was apparent here, for the room was far cleaner than any Gilder had seen in the house. The patient lay on one of the settlement hospital cots, which with a deal table and one chair formed the only furniture in the room.

Gilder was a stranger to sickrooms, and a vagrant curiosity stirred him as his glance rested on the form of the sick man. In the dim light his features were barely distinguishable—his thin frame twitched restlessly under the light sheet.

Gilder half turned to go when suddenly the man sat bolt upright and stretched out his arms in the piteous appeal of childhood.

"Daddy—daddy!" he wailed. "Take me up, daddy; I am tired of my bed."

An onlooker might have seen a curious change in Mr. Gilder during this scene. At the first word from the sick man's lips he had stopped, one foot extended toward the door.

The trembling of his form grew until it was like a palsy, and the muscles of his throat moved convulsively up and down. Little beads of perspiration that were not caused by the heat stood out upon his forehead—a great pitying wave in his eyes. Then he turned.

"Danny—Danny!" the whisper sounded loud and ringing in the little room. "Danny—it can't be you, Danny, boy—it can't be you! It's been a long time—you've changed, Danny. But your voice—it's just the same—just the same!"

When the nurse and doctor hurried into the room a few moments later a strange sight met their eyes. Mr. Gilder, the great Mr. Gilder, whose wealth and eccentricities furnished so much copy for the Sunday, supplements, was on his knees by the side of the tenement typhoid patient, and the face he turned toward them was tear stained and very old.

"Doctor—my son—he is very ill. My—you hear? The son of Hold—again so experts—can save the things to me—my poor Danny, come back to me like this! You think he will live—oh, I'm so glad—so glad!"

Some time later Burson, with his plumber in tow, appeared at the doorway, properly shocked at sight of his aristocratic patron in the midst of such surroundings, but his suspicions were piqued at the [illegible] words—the voice was so strangely gentle.

"Ah, Burson, I cannot go with you now. I have more important matters here. I have found my son—you, my son—lost these ten years. I shall not leave him—he needs me. You will have to look after the plumbing yourself. And Burson—we will put new pipes throughout the house—whatever is necessary for comfort and health. Never mind the expense. You see, Burson—my son is a tenant—that is, he was a tenant—in the Bowes street house."

Farm and Dairy Market Report

Toronto, Monday, Nov. 9.—The Grain Growers' Grain Company seem to gain when all others lose. At their annual meeting held Nov. 4 a net profit of $121,000 was declared on the year's operations, or approximately 10 per cent. A 10 per cent dividend was declared and the balance placed in the reserve fund. During the year the company handled 12,000,000 bushels of grain. The Manitoba Government elevators handled by the company showed a profit for the first time of over $4,000. Cheaper at a time when reports of failure are more common, the success of this farmers' [illegible] is heartening.

The market news of the week from a grain standpoint shows wheat, oats and corn on a stronger basis, with dairy produce and live stock holding their own.

WHEAT

The foreign wheat situation presents features that are satisfactory to the shipper. The advances that might have been expected, however, have been held down by the knowledge that sellers brought extraordinarily early in the season and that their future requirements may not be great. No. 1 Northern is now quoted at 91.28½; No. 2, 91.25½; new crop, to lose; Ontario wheat, $1.09 to $1.11.

COARSE GRAINS

Oats are in strongest demand of anything on the grain market. Corn has ground. Malting barley is moving slowly, owing, it is believed, to maltsters carrying over a supply of grain from last year. Quotations: Oats, C.W. No. 2, 61c; No. 3, 60c; extra, 62½c; feed, 61 1/2 to 61.55; rye, 85c to 86c; malting, 85c to 86c; feed, 65c to 66c; buckwheat, 65c to 70c. Montreal quotations apart Oats, C.W. No. 2, 62½c; extra No. 1 feed, 61½c; local white, 56c to 56½c; corn, 86c; barley, malting, 70c to 76c.

MILL FEEDS

Bran is quiet owing to mild weather, but with cold weather an advance is expected: Bran, $22 to $23; shorts, $25 to $27; middlings, $28 to $30; feed flour, $30 to $32. Montreal quotations: Bran, $22 to $23; shorts, $25 to $26; middlings, $28 to $30; feed flour, $32 to $35.

EGGS AND POULTRY

Eggs are in steady demand as the prices noted last week. Wholesalers sell to the trade as follows: New laid in cartons, 35c to 38c; selects, 32c to 35c; fresh gathered, 28c to 30c; storage, 25c to 26c. Montreal quotations are: Fresh, 32c to 33c; selected, 30c to 31c; No. 1 stock, 25c to 26c; No. 2 stock, 22c to 23c.

Poultry quotations: Live spring chickens, 18c to 19c; old fowl, 9c to 10c; ducks, 15c to 16c; geese, 9c to 9c; turkeys, 18c to 19c.

MISCELLANEOUS

No. 1 hay is firm here at $16 to $16.50 and down to $11 for No. 3; baled straw, $7 to $8. At Montreal No. 2 hay is $18 to $19.50. Potatoes here are 45c to 50c a bag for Ontario's; 60c for New Brunswick's and at Montreal 65c.

DAIRY PRODUCE

Were it not for the long season of reproduction ahead of us there would be a tendency toward lower quotations on butter. The supply is keeping up surprisingly well and there is but little opportunity for profitable outside shipment. Wholesale dealers in Toronto quote creamery prints at 32c to 33c; dairy prints, 30c to 31c and bakers, 25c to 26c. At Montreal wholesale dealers quote choicest creamery 32½c to 33c; seconds, 30½c to 32½c.

The cheese market is steady, although prices paid at country boards have showed a tendency to harden. The receipts in Montreal [illegible] a weaker sentiment as to the "fodder quality of the cheese. The make is practically completed, and prices are showing at a level that is satisfactory to the producer. Sales of finest Western are reported to have been made in Montreal at 15½c and finest Easterns, 15½c.

LIVE STOCK

After the low quotations that have been ruling on Toronto live stock markets, the week in the past week would seem to indicate a greatly improved demand. Advanced quotations on choice steers, heavy ones, are not due so much to a shrinkage marked off in their quality as to scarcity. The Buffalo market has been practically closed to quarantine and choice heavy steers were especially fitted for the United States trade have had to come this way. The maximum quotation had run as high as $8.25 in spite of all grades of cattle further the latter part of the week. There is a general belief that the market was undervalued elsewhere, even taking improved quality into consideration.

Quotations: Choice heavy steers, $7.75 to $8.10; handy cattle, $7.50 to $8; butcher steers, good, $7.30 to $7.75; cows, to good, $6.75 to $7.25; bulls, $5 to $7.10; feeders, $6 to $6.75; stockers, $5 to $6; canners, $4.50 to $5; butcher bulls, $6 to $7.25; good, $6.50 to $6.75; stockers, $4.50 to $5.50; lambs, $4.50 to $4.75; sheep, $4.50 to $5.25; choice milch cows continue in good demand at $60 to $100; cows, to good, $40 to $60; springers, $60 to $100. It is notable that the best animals are the ones easiest to dispose of. Calves range from $3 to $10.50.

Lambs are a trifle firmer, owing at $5 to $6. Other grades are steady. Light ewes, $4.25 to $5; heavy sheep and bucks, $4 to $5; culls, $3 to $4.

Hogs dropped below the $7 mark during the week, but are now again quoted $7 f.o.b.

BUTTER AND CHEESE

Napanee, Nov. 6.—Cheese boarded, 400 boxes; all sold at 14½c.

Ottawa, Nov. 6.—At the final meeting of the Ottawa Cheese Board 200 boxes colored cheese were sold at 14½c.

Cornwall, Nov. 6.—600 boxes cheese were boarded, all selling at 14½c. The sales for same week last year were 1,250 at 12½c and 12 12-16c.

Watertown, N.Y., Nov. 7.—Cheese sales: 1,600 boxes at 14c. The season ended 14-day.

London, Ont., Nov. 7.—Cheese offered, 1,320 boxes, of which 720 were sold at 14 12-16c.

Cowansville, Que., Nov. 7.—At the Dairy Board here to-day eight factories offered 721 packages of butter. All sold at 30½c.

Belleville Nov. 7.—Offerings, 1,400 white; sales, 900 at 14½c. Balance refused at 14 15-16c.

Victoriaville, Que., Nov. 7.—At the Cheese Board to-day 1,000 boxes sold at 14c.

The famous Victoria Falls of the Zambesi river in Rhodesia, it is estimated, could be made to yield 35,000,000 horse power, or just about the same amount as all of Europe's water courses.

LOSING HIS HAND

BY WHIZZING GERMAN BULLET

CONSIDERED A JOKE

PARIS, Nov. 6.—Dirty and unshaven and wearing a filthy uniform, Jean Briage, of the 72nd Infantry, sat perched in a little compartment of a train that was soon to start for Bordeaux and laughingly told me how he had his hand shot off by a German bullet. I liked him from the first for the way he acted and despite his dirty appearance I noticed when he laughed that his teeth were pearly white.

"It's over for me," said Jean, "back to my electric wiring in Bordeaux!" He used a French slang that showed he was fully city broke.

"Ever since I was a kid I've been waiting for this European war, and now it's come and gone for me. All my nights at the armory, all my two years in camp—pouf! All for this! Just a ride on a train, a hell of a slam bang of bullets for six hours, a few days of ducking around on farms and in forest and I'm done. I lifted up my hand to point out a German and—pouf!—my hand is gone."

I suppose the story of how a French soldier fights will be told in a million different ways before long; also the story of how he charges or retreats or dies. Jean had his story of battle to tell, without a boast. But the thing that hit me about Jean was how a French soldier goes home when he's through.

He smoked my English cigarettes and told me how he had always wanted to go to the United States. He said: "A man with one hand can't do much over there can he?"

It wasn't pathetic; it was only a joke with happy Jean. A Red Cross nurse handed in a bottle of water and Jean pulled a glass out of the knapsack which he had thrown on the car floor.

"What a dirty thing war is," he said. "Look at this filthy glass. Why, if my wife handed me a glass like that I'd raise fury. He drank and wiped his moustache with his one good hand.

"She doesn't allow any dirt around our house. No, sir! she's furious with me for letting my knapsack get so dirty. But a soldier can't keep clean. The finest soldier in the finest army in the world will look as dirty as an Apache Indian after a few days on the field."

He gave his knapsack a kick with a rough hobble-nailed shoe. She'll clean it up though and hang it up in the attic to save it for my son Jean who's only three now. I used to hear my grandfather tell about fighting with Napoleon. When my hair gets white I'll tell about fighting with—well, with France."

Then Jean studied and sighed. "No Napoleon this time."

"Have you ever been to Bordeaux?" he asked me. "No? Ah, the best city in France! Old buildings, sure; but some splendid new ones and I've put up electric wires in most of them."

More study; then he shrugged his shoulders. "They said they'd keep my job for me but I'll need two hands now."

I tried to turn the subject. We talked about football for a while; Jean belonged to a football team; his eyes lightened—and then his smile went. I could see what was happening to Jean. The "tumult and the shouting" was dying for him; "the captains and the kings" were departing and all the great war in Europe, with soldiers' camps under the autumn moon and marches and songs and shouting and shooting were dwindling dwindling away and shrivelling up into Jean's own little troubles which centred in that one stump of an arm. "Who'll rule Europe?" was the question Jean started out with some weeks ago, but the sentence was changing on the screen of his life with every mile he passed toward home and the letters were reading "what work can a one-armed man do for his wife and baby after the war is over?" I looked at Jean and his smile was gone. He perked up a bit and took a handful of buttons from his pocket. "From a German soldier's coat," he explained. "That's all I could get to bring home to them."

"You're bringing yourself home." "Yes, my wife will like that," he said sadly. But the emphasis on the word "wife" and you'll see how the iron of disappointment was burning Jean's soul.

Jean showed his white teeth but his eyes were sad as he said good-bye to me. The tears weren't far away, for he was really only a boy. I helped him get his shoulder pack into place and the last I saw of this little soldier, who had "fought for the Lilies of France" was a glimpse of his blue overcoat, his red breeches and his red topped cap being swallowed up in the rushing crowd. I wouldn't be surprised if Jean cried when his little French wife, who loved clean things, threw her arms about his dirty uniform that night. And, if he did cry I wouldn't be surprised if she thought that he was weeping because he was glad to get home. But I know better.

An Army Convoy for the Allied Armies.—Picture taken on the road to the firing line, along the Aisne. It is a common scene along the road leading to the battlefront. A constant stream of trucks supply and ammunition waggons and marching soldiers necessary to keep a million men in the field makes a very busy scene.

View of Life In Trenches

Battling Day After Day

Allied Soldiers Keep Grim Watch Behind Grass-grown Embankments---Forget Horrors in Sleep

PARIS, Nov. 10.—Perfect contentment and confidence prevail among the hundreds of thousands of British, French and Belgian troops engaged along the extended battle line from the North Sea to Switzerland in an endeavour to dislodge the invading army from its stronghold on French and Belgian territory, according to French officers arriving at the capital to-day from the front.

"Sitting Tight."

Apart from the fierce and sanguinary encounters from Lille and Arras to the seacoast, both armies, during the past week, have maintained their positions. The combatants sit steadfastly in their wet trenches, occasionally executing the only possible manoeuvre, a night attack. At any other time the slightest sign of life brings a hail of rifle bullets, for the infantry is always on the alert, and a helmet or a kepi showing above the earthworks is sure to be greeted with a salvo which often is fatal.

Weeds in the Earthworks.

The two armies have been so long dug in at the same spots that the upturned earth of the trenches is nearly everywhere covered with a short growth of grass or weeds. The reliefs are made in the dark hours of the long late autumn nights with as little noise as possible, and the sight of great masses of men marching along the country roads leading to the trenches lends a weird aspect to the neighbouring districts.

The men coming off duty are covered with mud and look almost dead-beat as they proceed to their places of repose; usually in the open under the trees of a forest or in a field.

Blessed Sleep.

There they lie down generally on waterproof sheets, and, covered by overcoats, fall at once into a dead sleep, with no thoughts of war or its hard work and horrors. Some of them are better off since their commanders have built straw thatched shelters for the men and horses, where they rest in almost perfect comfort.

Plenty of Food.

One thing this war has shown, military men say, is that the commissariat and ammunition supply services have made the carrying on of hostilities much more easy than it hitherto has been. Never on any occasion except in the case of an isolated detachment has the food supply been lacking, while fresh clothing is handed out quickly to men who, owing to a sudden attack, have been forced to abandon their kits.

To a spectator looking it over the present gigantic battlefield, every part of the countryside in the immediate vicinity of the actual battle line is described by army officers as presenting the appearance of complete desertion. So far as the eye can reach on both wings all is still.

Every minute or two the tearing sound of a great shell whizzing through the air is audible, and this is followed by a loud report. No smoke can be seen, and it is impossible to locate the position of a battery which in most cases is hidden by branches of trees.

Fate of German Spy.

In the central part of the battle line not far from Rheims a French battery was well hidden, and despite a close search of the German aeroplane, its position remained undiscovered for several days, then German shells began to drop around it, and shortly afterwards the major in command found that white lines had been hung out right behind his position to dry, but in reality it was placed there by a German spy to indicate to German airmen the exact emplacement of the French guns.

A supposedly unconcerned washerwoman was caught and was found to be a German officer. He suffered the usual fate of spies.

NO FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE IN CANADA YET

OTTAWA, Nov. 10.—The extension of the embargo against the importation of cattle, sheep, wool, and poultry from all of the United States because of the spread of the foot and mouth disease is much more drastic than the United States measure in effect against Canada. Our Government includes poultry and also hides and wool, as these might easily be the medium of conveying the infection into this country.

So far these has been no outbreak in this country, and this was pointed out to the United States authorities when the proposition came from them for the two countries to establish a mutual embargo to stamp out the disease.

In Thirteen States.

The prevalence of the disease in the United States — thirteen States being affected—and mostly along our border, made the Canadian embargo necessary for the protection of our live stock industry. The loss in the United States has been enormous; in one county alone in Michigan the slaughtered animals are valued at over one million dollars.

Enforcement of our embargo was hastened by the peculiar situation created under the American State jurisdiction. There States can declare an embargo against each other. Yesterday two carloads of poultry from Michigan to New York passed through Canada. The New York authorities having proclaimed an embargo against Michigan, although these consignments were from one point in the United States to another, they were refused admission. It took considerable pressure on the part of the Canadian authorities to have this admitted and rid Canada of this danger of infection.

Difficult Situation.

As much of our hide and wool supply comes from the United States, the situation created owing to our large contracts for army boots and blankets is one of the greatest difficulties. The Department of Agriculture will establish disinfecting stations at the border, so that this supply of hides and wool for army contracts will not be curtailed.

SOISSONS IS SUSPICIOUS OF EVERY STRANGER, AND HAS GOOD REASONS FOR ANXIETY

SOISSONS, Nov. 9.—Spies are an obsession in this town. Every stranger is nabbed the moment he enters the place on suspicion of being a German spy and taken before the authorities. Neighbours suspect each other. Women and even children are not immune.

And Soissons is not a bit different from scores of other towns and villages along the battle line and immediately back of it. Looking for spies is the chief occupation of the people left in the district.

While walking the streets here I was stopped at least twenty times in two hours, was detained for a few minutes twice by soldiers, and once was taken from my lunch to the city hall under escort of eight privates, a corporal, and a sergeant. Some one—I afterwards found out who it was and had my revenge, sinister though I'm afraid it was—had denounced me as a spy. The people are not to blame. For more than two weeks the Germans have been just outside the city, on the rock-quarry pitted, thickly wooded hills to the north. The French have been unable to dislodge them. In the town here the slightest movement of troops calls for a rain of shells, proving that there is not one but a company of spies very busily on the job.

Daily the telegraphic and telephonic communications are re-established between here and Paris and other points along the battle-line. Nightly communications are cut. Small wonder then that the harrassed people of this city are grimly hunting for spies; their humour may be described as nasty, and it will not go well with the informers if caught.

Walking through a narrow street back of the Cathedral, I looked up a blind alley and saw two youths dressed in a strange array. One of them wore the tunic and leggings of a British lancer, the shoes of a German private, the cap of a French light cavalryman. The other wore an ordinary tourist's cap, the overcoat of a British guardsman, the canvas trousers of the German fatigue, and German shoes. They hailed me in English, asking for a cigarette. Cigarettes are very scarce at the front. Even officers go days without them.

The youths claimed to be from Lancashire, England. They said they had been cut off from their regiments and captured by the Germans. They explained part of their attire. Both were 23 years old, they said, the slighter of the two men—the one wearing the Lancer's tunic—volunteering this information. He was extremely nervous and laughed now and then inordinately and in the catchy manner of the semi-hysterical. I at the time put down his mannerism as the result of privations.

An hour later while washing up for lunch a squad of troops pounded on the barred door of the little hotel. I, and my two companions, both newspaper men, were wanted. We would have to go with the soldiers to the outpost headquarters. It was clear that we were suspected, but after three-quarters of an hour we had fully satisfied the authorities of our identity, and were allowed to go, with apologies.

"But where are the two British soldiers?" the officer who had examined us asked. He was plainly puzzled.

After lunch we saw the two alleged British soldiers again. This time they openly accused us of being German spies. Both were very excited and talked less like Cockneys than they had that morning.

"You no Englishmen," the larger of the two declared, pointing his finger at the English-speaker of our party. "You German spy."

"Now are you an English soldier," replied the Englishman calmly. "Otherwise you would say, 'You are not an Englishman.' How is 'You a German spy' good English."

The repartee was hot between the two for two or three minutes with soldiers collecting about us all the time. The two self-styled British troopers were plainly more and more rattled, talking with more and more accent, it finally reaching the point where a French lieutenant who spoke some English was able to detect the error himself.

Under arrest, suspected strongly of being spies who had for several days betrayed the secrets of Soissons, the two youths were led away. We saw them no more. My impression is that they have both "passed by arms" by now. If so, it was because they feared our presence, and so tried hard to have us disposed of.

FOURTEEN STATES NOW DRY, ELEVEN GIVE WOMEN VOTE

Fourteen states now have laws prohibiting the sale of alcoholic beverages. The 14 include four states added to the "dry" list as the result of last Tuesday's election. On the face of the returns prohibition has just been adopted by Arizona, Washington, Oregon and Colorado.

The states which prohibit the sale of liquor are:

Arizona.
Colorado.
Georgia.
Kansas.
Maine.
Mississippi.
North Carolina.
North Dakota.
Oklahoma.
Oregon.
Tennessee.
Virginia.
Washington.
West Virginia.

Alabama at one time adopted a prohibition amendment, but later rescinded it. South Carolina also is largely prohibition under various acts. In addition a score of states have local option laws.

Not only did the men and women voters of California bury state-wide prohibition on Tuesday last by a majority that may reach close to two hundred thousand, but they adopted a referendum amendment prohibiting another vote on the question within a period of eight years. Ohio also defeated prohibition by a large majority.

Women Vote Now.

Women now have full suffrage in 11 states, according to the latest returns from last Tuesday's election in which they apparently won the vote in Nevada and Montana. National leaders here also claim Nebraska and South Dakota.

The 11 woman suffrage states are:

Wyoming.
Colorado.
Utah.
Washington.
Idaho.
California.
Oregon.
Kansas.
Arizona.
Nevada.
Montana.

In addition the women vote in the territory of Alaska and have practical suffrage in the following states:

Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Iowa, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, Michigan, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Ohio, South Dakota, Vermont, and Wisconsin.

"CASCARETS" RELIEVE SICK, SOUR STOMACH

Move Acids, Gases and Clogged Waste From Liver and Bowels

Get a 10-cent box now.

That awful sourness, belching of acid and foul gases; that pain in the pit of the stomach, the heartburn, nervousness, nausea, blooting after eating, dizziness and sick headache, means a disordered stomach, which can not be regulated until you remove the cause. It isn't your stomach's fault. Your stomach is as good as any.

Try Cascarets; they immediately cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested and fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the bowels. Then your stomach trouble is ended. A Cascaret to-night will straighten you out by morning—a 10-cent box from any drug store will keep your stomach sweet, liver and bowels regular for months. Don't forget the children—their little systems need a good, gentle cleansing, too.

SLAV SOLDIERS IN THE WEST.

Thousands Entering Fight With Germans on the Firing Line.

BERLIN, via Amsterdam, Nov 11.—Germany and Austria have effected an interchange of troops, as the result of which thousands of Slav soldiers from Hungary have been sent into the western theatre of war to fight against the Anglo-French Allies.

It was learned from an authentic source here to-day that both Slav infantry and cavalry as well as artillerymen, are supporting the Germans in the great battle in the north which is raging over West Flanders and North-eastern France.

In return the Kaiser has sent Teutonic troops to reinforce the Austro-Hungarian armies, had many of which are engaged in the southern theatre of hostilities against the Servians and Montenegrins.

This interchange was of benefit to Austria, because some of the Slavic soldiers had shown reluctance to bear arms against the Slavic soldiers in the Balkans and Servian armies.

GLASS OF SALTS CLEANS KIDNEYS

If Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers You, Drink Lots of Water

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get excited and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

MISS JULIA ARTHUR ON THE STAGE AGAIN.

Plays in "Mittendorf" in Boston to Raise Money for Sufferers in Europe.

BRITISH TROOPS REPULSE VIOLENT ATTACKS

ADVANCE OF RUSSIANS CONTINUES

THE LINE UNCHANGED SINCE TUESDAY NIGHT

Official Communique Says There Has Been Practically No Alterations After Most Violent Fighting With the British Troops in the Thickest of the Conflict.

PARIS, November 12. — The most violent action in the western theatre of war continues form the coast to the Lys. The official communique issued from the war office this afternoon stated that the front had remained practically unchanged since Tuesday evening. The action on the left wing continues to be violent, however, with alternate advances and withdrawals of the allied forces. The British forces are in the severest fighting.

LONDON, November 12. — In approaching within a mile of the British coast, off Deal, and sinking the gunboat Niger, the German submarine which accomplished the feat, passed directly through the deadly mine field recently laid for the protection of London and the Straits of Dover. It was this realization to-day which stirred the British Admiralty as it was again forced to consider means of meeting the German submarine menace. The success of the vessel which struck the Niger is a clear indication that the Germans have now found a path through the field of death laid by the British, and further attacks are possible.

LOWDON, November 12. — The British Admiralty now accepts that the cruisers Good Hope and Monmouth, were lost in the fight off the coast of Chile. In a statement issued to-day the Admiralty declares that in the absence of news to the contrary, it is assumed that they are lost.

LONDON, November 12. — In the lobbies of the House of Commons this afternoon there is an unconfirmed and unofficial rumour that three German cruisers have been sunk in the Pacific Ocean. The Admiralty have neither confirmed nor denied knowledge of it.

LONDON, November 12. — A plot to block the Suez Canal and prevent the passage of reinforcements from India and Australia was disclosed here to-day in a despatch from Alexandria, Egypt,, in which it was stated that Lieut. Mors, a German officer, had been convicted and sent to prison for life. A number of his associates have also been arrested. Mors was despatched to Egypt five years ago and succeeded in being appointed as a lieutenant in the Egyptian Gendarmeries. His real mission according to the Chronicle, was to foment local rebellion among the various nationalist princes, and get them to agree to assist him.

At his trial, according to the Chronicle, Mors confessed that he received $50,000 for work entrusted to him and he also gave a list of his associates.

OTTAWA, November 12. — General Sir Wm. Otter, to whom has been entrusted the duties of supervising the work of internment of hostile aliens, including Germans, Austrians and Turks, in the Dominion, is to-day in Ottawa.

Naturalized foreigners of hostile nationality, as well as those not naturalized, will be compelled to register. Even people of Canadian birth but German extraction may be under surveillance.

AMSTERDAM, November 12. — United States subjects arriving here to-day report seeing four immense German transports at Hamburg, laden with troops apparently intended for the invasion of England.

PARIS, November 12. — There has been no change in the positions held by the British army, which repulsed the attacks of the enemy, and particularly an offensive movement undertaken by a detachment of the Prussian guard.

WAS KILLED NEAR MIDLAND

Wilbert F. Succee, Formerly of Peterboro', Loses His Life in an Accident on the Grand Trunk.

FATHER LIVES HERE

Wilbert F. Succee, formerly of this city, and son of Mr. Joseph Succee, 169 Hunter Street east, was killed in an accident on the Grand Trunk railway near Midland last night. Deceased lived in Lindsay, but up till four years ago he resided in Peterborough, where he has a large number of friends.

It seems that last evening an eastbound freight train was leaving Midland a few minutes after seven o'clock. Those in charge of the train thought that it was going down the main line towards Lindsay, but by a mistake a switch had been left open and the train was in reality steaming down a siding. The result was that it ran foul of some coal cars standing on the siding, and Brakeman Succee, who was on the van, was instantly killed. As yet information as to the exact nature of the injuries which resulted in Mr. Succee's death is not available, but it is said that his body was not badly mutilated.

The late Mr. Succee was employed for the past four years with the Grand Trunk Railway and had the reputation of being a first class brakeman. He is survived by his father, three brothers, one sister, a sorrowing widow and one little child. The brothers are Cecil of Peterborough, William, Albert, in the west, and Melville of Ottawa.

The funeral arrangements have not yet been made.

PATRIOTIC CONTRIBUTIONS

Include 598 Barrels of Potatoes and 100,000 Bushels of Oats.

The patriotic contribution from Percy township, Northumberland County shipped by the Grand Trunk Railway from Hastings, filled four large cars, and consisted of 598 barrels of potatoes, 100,000 bushels of oats, 23 bushels of beans, five boxes of cheese, five barrels of green apples, and a quantity of clothing, the shipment representing a total value of $1700.

ROYAL THEATRE

Another Big Programme To-night

Have you seen the Talking Eagle, if not come to-night. Manager Clayton has secured another entire change for Friday and Saturday, and it will prove to be very interesting. The headlines will be "The Fortune Hunters," complete in 4,000 feet. Another screaming comedy bill has been booked for these two days. Don't fail to see Friday and Saturday's big show.

Any reader or ad. that you see about the Royal, all you have to do is to cut it out of the paper and you will be admitted for five cents. Next week the great English drama will be shown at the Royal, "Grip of Iron."

MANY RECRUITS HAVE PASSED

57th Regiment has Eleven More Men to Send to Kingston.

So far eleven new recruits have been accepted by the 57th Regiment for the 21st Battalion at Kingston, three more having been added to the list, last night. Thirty-five have volunteered, but twenty-four of these failed to pass the severe medical examination. There will be another chance for recruits to-night, at the Armouries. The present recruiting is to fill vacancies in the battalion at Kingston, and as orders may come at any time to stop enlisting, those who want to go should be on hand to-night. The 57th Regiment has already [illegible] more than its required quota to Kingston, but some of the other [illegible] were behind, while the transference of some of the men to the new battery left a shortage of some two hundred men, which the different centres in the Division are making up. So far for the second contingent the 57th Regiment has recruited 30 men. 15 more than were asked for; 282 men have been medically examined, 142 failing to pass.

MAYOR W. H. BULLER
Who will offer his services to the city for another year, if unopposed.

WILL COMMENCE DRILL TO-NIGHT

The Peterboro' Civilian Rifle Association may be Developed Into a Civic Regiment.

SOME RIFLE PRACTICE

All members of the Peterborough Civilian Rifle Association and all citizens interested in the movement are again reminded of the meeting and drill at the armouries this evening. The proposal now is to form the Association into a civic regiment, along the lines of the Home Guards of Toronto and this project will be discussed by the members, after which the first drill will be held. Capable instructors have promised their services and the members of the Rifle Association will have an opportunity of practising on the miniature rifle range. Altogether it will be a most interesting evening and every member should be on hand, while it is expected that there will be many new applications for membership. All British subjects over eighteen years of age will be welcomed and if the membership warrants the move and there is every reason to expect that it will, a regiment will be organized. In all events the members of the Association will have a course of drill and rifle shooting. To-night's meeting is called at 8 o'clock sharp at the armouries.

DEAD AS THE RESULT OF AN ACCIDENT

Former St. Andrew's Soloist Succumbs to the Effect of a Rifle Bullet.

HAD SISTER HERE

Mrs. C. T. Gibson, 304 Brock street, received a telegram this week, apprising her of the death of her sister, Mrs. C. Wilson of Manor, Sask., who died as a result of injuries she received when a twenty-two calibre rifle she was carrying discharged.

Mrs. Wilson will be remembered by numerous Peterborough people. She was formerly Miss Margaret Falconer, who, for a time, some years ago, was soloist at St. Andrew's Church this City.

Only on Saturday last Mrs. Gibson received a letter from another sister, Mrs. H. Robinson, of Carmen, Sask., telling of the accident to Mrs. Wilson. It seems that on October 20th Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, with Mr. Wilson's father, had been out for a day's shoot and, returning, were just entering the Bank of Hamilton of which Mr. Wilson, Jr., is the Manager, when the unfortunate affair occured. Mrs. Wilson was walking ahead of the others and was carrying, in addition to a number of parcels, a loaded 22 calibre rifle. It is thought the fire-arm hit against the door, causing it to go off, the bullet entering the fleshy part of Mrs. Wilson's thigh, and coming out at the inside of the leg falling on the sidewalk at her feet. Medical aid was quickly summoned and the injury attended to In a short time the wound healed, and nothing serious was anticipated. However, on Thursday, October 29th, severe pain set in, in the leg and the patient had to be removed to the hospital at Carmen, where Mrs. Wilson gradually grew worse until she passed away on Monday last.

The late Mrs. Wilson was the daughter of James Falconer of Belleville in which town she was born, and spent her girlhood days. She was a charming and accomplished lady, a vocalist of ability, whose loss will be a distinct one in the town where she had resided. Mrs. Wilson and two children visited here a little over a year ago. She leaves to mourn her loss a sorrowing husband and two little girls, as well as her father and three sisters. The sisters are Mrs. C. T. Gibson of this City, Mrs. C. Delisle of Belleville, and Mrs. H. Robinson of Carmen, Sask.

The funeral took place at Manor on Tuesday.

WELCOME HOME TO THE DEAN OF PATTERN MAKERS

Mr. Nihill Munroe, 320 George street, hasn't been a patten to pattern-makers for years for nothing. He has been foreman of the pattern-shop of the Canadian General Electric Company for an aggregation of fifteen years, and at that time most of the pattern-makers employed in our leading local industries, and many elsewhere, have learned this fine art under Mr. Munro; so that he has partly earned the title of the dean of pattern-makers.

Mr. Munro has been out of the City since last March, and his return, a few days ago, was celebrated by an enthusiastic welcome from about fifteen of the City pattern-makers, who made a surprise invasion of his home last night, armed, not only with cordial greetings, but with a musical programme and a complicated and complete commissariat of refreshments. After rather destructive discussion of the refreshments a happy time was spent in spinning yarns of old-time associates at "The Works," with song and other music sandwiched in, the following toast list was given, the responders' speeches all being tinged with the patriotic spirit:

"King and Country"—replied to by Mr. Wm. Hill.

"Army and Navy" — Mr. E. G. Hardy.

"Absent Brothers"—Mr. Percy Gilbert.

"Pattern Makers" — Mr. Nihill Munroe.

A little bird whispers that it is impossible to say who enjoyed the delightful evening most—Mr. Munro or his cordial guests.

JUDGMENT HAS BEEN RESERVED

In Case of Bank of Ottawa versus R. R. Hall.

The enlargement of the case of the Bank of Ottawa versus R. R. Hall, was heard this morning before Mr. Justice Kelly, at the non-jury sittings of the High Court. Judgment was reserved.

The point at issue concerned a promissory note for $10,000 that was given by Mr. R. R. Hall to the Bank of Ottawa as security for the indebtedness of the Canadian Cordage Co., which existed at the time the note passed into the hands of the Bank. The Bank entered an action to recover the amount of the note, upon the grounds that the note was given as continual security and figured in the assets of the Canadian Cordage Company, which eventually, went into liquidation and passed into the hands of the Bank of Ottawa.

The defence set up that the debt for which Mr. Hall acted as guarantor, was paid, and that the defendant was not liable because he only went surety for a debt then existing and, therefore could not be held liable for subsequent liabilities.

THE RUSSIANS ARE STILL PRESSING ON

Czar's Forces Are Making Progress Against The Germans While They Have Also Been Successful in Operations Against the Turks---Petrograd Statements.

PETROGRAD, November 12. — Still pressing forward against the German, Austrian and Turkish lines, the Russian armies are continuing their successful march, according to a formal statement to-day. An official report from the army of the Caucasus declares the Russians have occupied the entire valley of Alashkerts. An attempt of the Turks to turn the Russian flank has been defeated. There have been small skirmishes in the region of the River Tcharuk in the province of Batumi, on the east shore of the Black Sea, in which a number of Russian raiding parties have been successful.

"Our troops have approached the eastern outlets of the Mazour Lakes in East Prussia," the statement declares; "fighting in the Goldap, Mlawa and Soldau districts has been successful. The energetic advance in Galicia continues."

WASHINGTON, D.C., November 12. — The United States cruiser North Carolina, concerning which some wild rumours have been circulated recently, was reported to-day safe and sound at Beruit.

LONDON, November 12. — A news agency despatch received here from Petrograd declares that the cruiser Goeben was struck and seriously injured during the recent bombardment. A shell pierced the German cruiser, which is now part of the Turkish fleet, at the water line, the advice states.

PORTLAND, Eng., November 12. — Admiral Troubridge, who was in command to the British Mediterranean fleet at the time the German cruisers, Goeben and Breslau, escaped from Messina, was to-day acquitted by the court martial before which he was tried on the charges following the flight of the warships.

LONDON, November 12. — According to the Petrograd correspondent of the Daily News, General Dankl, with the remainder of the Austrian army is now moving due south across Galicia. General Dankl, the correspondent says, has refused further co-operation with General Von Hindenburg, of the German staff.

WILL GIVE $2500 TO THE FUND

If $47,500 Mark is Reached by the Campaign.

Speaking to the president of the Board of Trade, Mr. B. D. Hall, Mr. E. M. Waddell expressed the opinion that $20,000 was too small a sum for a city of Peterborough's population. He had been humiliated, he said in other cities when the question of patriotic funds were being discussed and when it was realised that Peterborough's contribution had been very small.

Mr. Waddell made the proposition that the sum to be aimed at should be made $50,000. In such a case he would offer to contribute the last $2,500 to the fund.

COUNTY TEACHERS' CONVENTION TO-DAY

The County Teachers were in session in the Normal school this morning and this afternoon. Several matters in connection with the welfare of the schools of the county were discussed. The teachers of the county were nearly all present.

MOOSE ENTER THEIR ROOMS

Informal but Auspicious Affair Last Night Marked the Opening of Their New Quarters in the Bank of Commerce Building.

The opening of the new rooms which will constitute the home of the Loyal Order of Moose in this City, was held last night and was certainly an auspicious occasion. Dictator McWilliams was in charge of the arrangements for the evening, which were of an informal but very pleasant character.

The pool tables were in commission during the evening and the Moose Band, which promises to be a very successful musical organization, was introduced as a feature for the entertainment of the members. The band acquitted itself very creditably last night and made a big hit not only with the members of the Order, but with a large number of people who heard some of their selections from the outside.

Major Buller was present and made a brief speech of congratulation. The latter last night would seem to indicate that the Moose Order is destined to be one of the many successful fraternal societies in Peterborough.

Plans are being made to have the officials from the different cities, towns, etc., come to visit and address the local branch the second week in December.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

THURSDAY, NOV. 12, 1914

BANZAI!

In this war of surprises—in inception and development—of course the unexpected happens as well as the expected. Nobody ever thought that a "tin pot" (for the Sydney that sank the Emden, was smaller and lighter armed than the "Niobe") "colonial" navy would turn the trick ahead of the crack cruisers of the Royal Navy proper. Few thought, though it might be expected, that the "Little Brown Man," Japan, would land the first decisive knock-out blow in the grim game of fisticuffs now going on. "Kultur" had to knuckle under to jiu-jitsu. The capture of Tsing-Tau and the blinding of the apple of the eye of the Kaiser, the annexation of Kiaou Chow, by the Japanese is the first really decisive event of the war. While this success was helped by the British, the brunt of the battle, and the bulk of the credit fall to Japan. Banzai! and bully for Japan! She has closed out her first contract, but she is still in the fight, and her fleet is doing service in policing the Pacific; and we shall be disappointed if she does not greatly help in rounding up some of the stray German cruisers, that are preying upon commerce and threatening the coasts of Canada.

'RAH FOR THE RIFLE ASSOCIATION.

The spirit of the Peterborough Rifle Association if given the simest effect, will make it a valuable factor in the improvement of the conditions of our civic life, even if it does not learn to shoot straight enough to hit the side of the Armouries at a hundred paces. There is a meeting for drill to-night under the competent instruction of Sergt. Dodd, who, though he is restrained from entering overseas service by a law that overrides martial law, is doing perhaps as useful service by licking our home guard into shape. It is understood that the idea of drill in connection with rifle shooting, which is by no means to be lost sight of, is the formation out of the membership of the association of a battalion—organized as a home guard. It is hoped that this idea will become an effect. Not only will such a body give us assurance of safety and be an expression of our spirit of self help and civic interest, but it will assure the benefits arising from a body of men representing our best citizenship being thrown into intimate intercourse and thus strengthening the ties that otherwise more loosely unites our people. This association will develop, besides a spirit of patriotism that will make the members a positive influence in the promotion of other objects cognate to, and arising out of, the idea of defence. Even if the battalion idea is not realized, the good influence of a body of men associated to learn the highest art of soldiery—shooting straight — will be of the greatest benefit to the community, as will any movement whose object is to close the ranks of citizenship, and give impulse to universal cooperation, whether in the civil or military arena.

REMEMBER THE BOYS ABROAD.

While we are putting our patriotic fund up to the $20,000 mark in the interest of the girls our boys left behind them, we should not forget the boys themselves. We should remember that our soldier boys have entered upon no light work, as they doubtless now begin to realize. The volunteering, the getting of "send-offs" at home and at Quebec, with the novelty of the sea voyage, with the excitement of landing in Britain, into the arms of the rejoicing people, with the march to camp, and the work of getting settled in their new quarters, the glamour of glory, the excitement of new scenes and experiences, will give place to rigid routine and hard work on Salisbury Plain. By this time the boys will be getting a little "home sick," a natural and a creditable thing; for the Peterborough boy that wouldn't regret home in the best city of the best country under the sun, would be an ingrate. A letter received this morning from a Peterborough officer now at Salisbury, acknowledging the receipt of a copy of The Daily Examiner, and expressing appreciation of the treat it was, shows how the readers of The Examiner may do a great kindness with small effort, and small expense, by sending their copy of the paper after it is read, to some one of the Peterborough boys at the front. If a hundred readers, would send once a week, a copy of The Daily Examiner to some member of the Peterborough contingent, the average receipt of Examiners by the boys would be at least one a day, and as they would be passed around, every Peterborough boy would thus hear from home every day. These papers would be welcome; they would be in one sense like a letter from home. They would give all the home news, and every recipient would see with the sharpened eye of home sickness, the family circle in the sitting room where the paper was read a few days before. They would also be cheered by the news they would get—that while they were in the ranks goose-stepping, marching, targetting, and preparing for the grim work of the fighting line, the people of Peterborough remembered them and were loyally addressing themselves to the duty of providing care for the dependents the soldier boys left behind them, by living up to the slogan—

$20,000 FOR THE PATRIOTIC FUND.

POOR PRUSSIAN "KULTUR."

Treitschke, the great national historian of the German Empire, has a high opinion of German civilization, and a correspondingly low estimate of the civilization of other countries, particularly of the United States. Speaking of the terrible consequences of emigration from Germany, this gentleman said at one time—

"Among Germans there is no longer any question that the civilization of mankind suffers every time a German is transformed into a Yankee."

This may be true if the transmogrified German retains under his civilized "Yankee" moral investiture the gentle characteristics of German "kultur," evidenced in a thousand beautifully brutal ways in this war. It is true that a Prussian transmuted into a civilized being in the form of a "Yankee" might be a disgrace to German civilization—he would not, if a soldier, be found with the severed hands of Belgian children in his pockets, when made a prisoner. He might not be "up to" the act of dropping bombs in peaceful villages and cities; making war on women and children; he might not be inspired by the "kultur" that wantonly destroys the noblest seats of religion and learning that the genius and art of man have conceived and made. He might not have welcomed with open arms, as an ally in the preservation and promotion of "kultur," the unspeakable Turk, who threatens the massacre, in Armenia, of three Christians for every Moslem killed in bombardments of seaside villages or towns. The Turk, according to intellectual German ideas of culture, is a splendid running mate for the Teuton. No doubt Treitschke would regard the transformation of a German into a Turk as an improvement of "the civilization of mankind." It is a shameful pity that the barbarous allies are engaged pretty successfully and with daily improved prospects of success, (and with the shameless sympathy of the "Yankees,") in putting an end to German "kultur," so literal a recrudescence of the culture of the Huns of history—of which the Kaiser, an embodiment of the Prussian spirit, is an avatar.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

Mr. Terrot Glover desires to purchase a quantity of plank from the city for the purpose of constructing a sidewalk into a house off Mark street. The matter has been left in the hands of City Engineer Parsons and Alderman Duncan with power to act.

Gas Mains.

The Peterborough Gas Company requested permission to construct gas mains on Weller street and Monaghan Road. The mains are to serve a couple of citizens who have applied for service. The request was granted.

"Not Sufficient Funds."

Mayor Buller, Chairman Alderman Duncan of the Board of Works, and City Engineer Parsons have been invited to attend the Good Roads Congress which is to be held in Chicago. "Look after your own roads," suggested Alderman Green. Mayor Buller was in favour of sending City Engineer Parsons, but realizing the financial stringency declined to take any action.

Will Erect Poles.

The Bell Telephone Company have been granted permission to erect a number of poles throughout the city for the purpose of extending their system.

Matter Was Shelved.

The application of a number of residents for a sewer on Rubidge street from 466 Rubidge street to Murray street was left over until spring. It being stated that the lateness of the season prevented further construction of sewers. The matter will be taken up in the early spring.

A STAGGERING BLOW TO GERMAN PRESTIGE

Admiral von Tirpitz, the German Naval Secretary, has suffered the greatest blow in his career by the capture of Kiaochau, for Kiaochu was his own particular dream, the first footprint of what was intended to be a great German advance in the Far East. No less interested and enthusiastic over the project was the Kaiser himself. Both must be profoundly depressed at the shattering blow which has been dealt to German prestige in the Far East.

Within the 200 square miles comprising the area of Kiaochau are valuable coal and iron mines, and these, added to certain mining and railway concessions in Shantung, made the whole place a rich prize for Germany. But the local riches are as nothing compared to what Kiaochau was intended to stand for. The city of Tsing-Tau was intended to be the great entrepot of a Germany commercially predominant in the Far East. Germany had poured out her wealth in prodigal manner to build up a dream-city that would strike all Asia dumb with admiration.

Formerly the bay was nothing but a great silt-choked expanse of sheltered water. Hundreds of millions of dollars have been spent in dredging it and making it navigable. Giant piers were built to accommodate a vast shipping planned for the future. A huge floating dry dock, large enough to receive the heaviest dreadnought ever launched was provided, and the efficiency of the dockyard was shown last year, when it took in hand, and carried through successfully a complete refit and reboilering of the armoured cruiser Scharnhorst, which has since given the British fleet such trouble.

Aloft on the rugged heights overlooking the town was built a Governer's residence intended to paralyze the Eastern mind with its magnificence and frowning grandeur. It was a grey granite castle, colossal in size and of most imposing design. In the town almost every house built for the white population was a mansion from a colonial point of view. Not one of them cost less than $10,000—and $10,000 is a substantial sum in China.

The administration building in the centre of the town, was an imposing edifice built, apparently, for all time, and across the other hills were other wonders—enormous stone barracks, capable of sheltering ten thousand troops and surrounded by finely-kept parade grounds; a huge Government hospital, worthy of any city; and more splendid homes of affluent citizens. The imports of Kiaochau amounted to $28,735,000 per annum, and the exports $20,073,750. This, however, was but a small fraction of the trade, for which Tsing-Tau was built, for official Germany dreamed of the city as a base from which to challenge and overcome British influence at Hongkong and French influence in Indo-China, and to conquer all the vast overseas trade of the Orient. And now Tsing-Tau has fallen. The great imperial dream has vanished like a pricked bubble. The prodigal expenditure of untold wealth has been in vain. Germany has been kicked off her only footing in Asia. Bitter must be her humiliation.—Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

How Our Good Yankee Cousins Give Credit to The "Colonials"

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—Under the heading of "The End of the Emden," the Herald's critic says:

It was a "colonial' that did it—the Sydney, a ship built by colonial money, manned by colonial forces, and officered as far as possible by colonials, educated in the Imperial service of Great Britain. Such was the ship which to date has struck the most important naval blow of the war for England. It is to this Australian colonial that every officer and man of the Imperial fleet must give the credit for the wind-up of the Emden.

From the standpoint of material the result was a logical one. The Emden was outgunned, and outbattered, from the start, and only criminally poor gunnery work on the part of the Sydney could ever have afforded the Emden a ghost of a chance. The real satisfaction which the British fleet can take is the knowledge that the Sydney has upheld the best traditions of that service in battery control.

Emden's One Chance.

It was a case of six-inch guns, using 100-pound projectiles, against 4.1-inch guns, firing 35-pound shells. There was one chance for the Emden, and one only, namely, to close to within effective 4.1-inch gun range. If she could reach that zone intact she would count normally on delivering in a given time a greater number of shots than the heavier six-inch pieces, for it must be borne in mind that the Krupp 4.1-inch naval guns use fixed ammunition, whereas the British are employing separate ammunition in their six-inch quick firers.

Five shots in the air at one time at maximum range can be gotten with the 4.1-inch guns. This will beat anything possible with a six-incher, and it must not be forgotten that a hits is a hit, and for all practical purposes, as between lightly armoured craft, a 35-pound projectile is capable of doing tremendous mischief.

How It Was Done.

But the Emden, apparently, never got within five-inch range and it may be put down to a certainty that the three six-inch guns in the Sydney's No. 1 battery must have smothered the German decks from aft to forward. For one can imagine the Sydney coming up from astern, with every pound of steam she could carry, closing in steadily foot by foot on the Emden and then cutting loose with the six-inch pivot on the top gallant forecastle deck, together with the two six-inchers emplaced on either side just at the break of the forecastle deck. That meant for a stern chase three 100-pound projectiles for each salvo, and these three six-inch guns would be reaching their mark long before the Emden could feel in with her light 4.1 inchers.

Battery Work Counted.

It is easy to understand how the Emden, finding herself being pounded to pieces by the Sidney, did what was the only thing to do—put her helm hard over and make a run in of it on the Sydney, in a desperate effort to make her light pieces felt, and it was probably at this stage of the action that superb battery work on board the Australian ship counted. Counted so far that the Emden was fairly smothered and with fire breaking out everywhere nothing remained but to head for the beach.

BRITAIN HOLDS THE LEAD IN NAVAL CONSTRUCTION

Mr. H. B. Ames, M.P., in his lecture on the British Navy, has been making the cheering announcement that during the present month twenty-two new warships that have been under construction will be put into commission in the British Navy. From an article by Mr. Archibald Hurd, in the London Daily Telegraph, we gleam some particulars of eighteen of these vessels.

There are to be four battleships of the Dreadnought type, ranging from 23,000 to 27,500 tons, with 13.5 inch guns, carrying a 1,400-lb. projectile. These are the most fearful engines of destruction yet devised, and outclass everything afloat. Then there is to be one battle cruiser of the Dreadnought type, of 28,000 tons, carrying twelve thirteen-inch guns and having a speed of not less than thirty knots. There are also to be three armoured cruisers of 3,750 tons each, with a speed of twenty-nine knots; two very large destroyers of 1,600 tons each, and thirty-one knots speed, and eight large destroyers of 1,200 tons each, with a speed of thirty-two knots.

The four Dreadnoughts are of the Queen Elizabeth type, and presumably, therefore, will have a speed of 25 knots. But the cruisers and destroyers, it will be noticed, have a speed ranging from 29 to 32 knots, which is higher than any vessel of the same class in the German Navy. The battle cruiser of the Dreadnought type will be more than equal in speed to the speediest battle cruisers of the German navy—those of the Goeben class—and will be far superior in gun power, since the heaviest guns on the latter type consist of ten 11-inch ones, while Britain's new cruiser will carry twelve 13-inch ones. Moreover all the new big ships being launched by Britain are protected against torpedo fire, and are constructed on a new principle that is believed renders them unsinkable.

As regards new ships in the German Navy, it is known that it takes about three years to build a battleship, two years to complete a cruiser, and at least one year to build a destroyer or submarine. Germany three years ago—that is in 1911-12—laid down four Dreadnoughts. Great Britain in that year laid down five, and by the purchase of the two Turkish Dreadnoughts, raised the number to seven. Two years ago Germany began to build two light cruisers, and Great Britain began to build eighteen destroyers. As Great Britain's shipbuilding resources for naval purposes are greater than those of any two other powers combined, it will be seen that in her sea campaign as on land, Time is fighting against Germany.—Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

SEARCHLIGHTS IN THE CANADIAN ROCKIES—THE SNOW CLAD PEAKS OF FAIRYLAND.

One of the strong attractions for tourists at Niagara Falls has been the use of searchlights which play their light upon the foaming waters. An interesting proposal has been made to use a similar scheme at Banff, the capital of the Canadian Rockies. There are enormous unused waterpowers in this district, and the proposal is to generate electricity from the mountain streams to supply electric searchlights on the snow-clad peaks which surround this tourist resort. If carried to completion this would undoubtedly create a veritable fairyland in the mountains which would draw tourists from all over the world.

NOTTINGHAM FOREST OBTAINS GOAL-KEEPER

Well Known French Footballer Killed at the Front---Players With the First Contingent

Nottingham Forest appears to have at last succeeded in obtaining a goal-keeper who will do their side some good. It will be remembered that Fiske was obtained for the position from Blackpool during the summer, but being a reservist he was called upon to join his regiment in August, and the younger Ironmonger, who has been played since the campaign opened, has scarcely fulfilled expectations.

Last week, therefore, J. Powell was obtained from Walsall. Previously he played with Burslem Port Vale, and he has had experience in Southern and Birmingham matches.

Another French footballer who has been killed at the front is Eugene Mees, the International Association player, who has played for his country in more representative matches than any other Frenchman. He was a member of the Red Star F. C. (Paris), and was always included in the inter-city Paris and London games.

James Smith and Albert Soar will stand as the two best outside-rights Fulham have ever had, says a writer in the "Cottager's Journal." Smith went to Fulham from Chorley, (Lancs.) at the latter end of season 1908-9, having previously played for Bury and Accrington Stanley. He has had some fine partners—Bobbie Dalrymple, Tim Coleman, and now Ronald Slade.

Sir William Clegg, brother of F. A. Chairman, speaking at Sheffield, said there was a good deal of controversy—amongst people who knew nothing whatever about the game—as to whether football should be played at this time. He thought it would have been a great mistake, and an injustice to the players and the thousands depending upon the game, to drop it, irrespective of contracts. One reason why they were going on was that they intended to honour their contracts, however much others disregarded "scraps of paper."

Football has been hard hit during the past week or two by the death of several leading men in the game. Last week-end the many friends of Mr. A. M. Ballantine, of the Third Lanark directorate, were surprised and grieved to hear of his demise. He had been out, and about only a few days previously, and although he had to take to his bed, serious consequences were not anticipated.

Among the Canadian contingent at present encamped upon Salisbury Plain is Cuthbert Lintott, younger brother of the English international, who, a few seasons ago, was one of the little band of amateurs connected with the Glossop club. For a long time he was a regular partner of Ivan Sharpe, now of Leeds City, in the reserve team.

Pte. A. Rawlings, the Northampton Town footballer, officially reported missing, and concerning whom there have been persistent rumours as to his death, has written to his wife informing her that he is a prisoner in Germany, and that he is all right.

Double Header in the "Y" Basket-ball League

Old Timers in Action

The Basket Ball League, at the local association for the Cressman Trophy, got off to a good start last night with a double header, the first game being Senior Business Men vs. St. Paul's, and the Dreadnots vs. the Cressmans.

It would seem as though the elixir of life had been found, as some of the old boys certainly bettered their youth last night, and if the residents of this City want to bring back their youth they should come and see the fellows they were in the habit of watching in the olden days toss the ball around in the same old fashion. Among the old timers are to be found Geo. Robertson, who captained and was the star player of the old Maple Leafs; Roy Best, Bill Richardson and Ross Dobbin, of the old Harrier team, who were the dread of all comers and the pride of the south end; the Cressman brothers, who played on the famous Brownie team that won the boys' championship of Canada along about '04. They are all back, and have still got the speed and staying power that make basket ball players, and they put up the article of ball that bring the crowds. Come in on Saturday night and see the Business vs. Senior Business Men and Pirates vs. Adelaide Club of George Street Church. Last night's games between the four teams were hotly contested, especially the one between the Dreadnots, captained by Walker Flowers and Cressmans. In this game it would be hard to pick any stars. Flowers and Fred. Cressman scored the most baskets; and were probably a little more aggressive, but great credit must be given all the players on each team. Flowers' team had never been together before as a team, while Cressmans have had some practice. However, on account of sickness, they had to use a man who had never been with them previously. The result was in doubt right up till the last minutes; in fact in the last three minutes of play the Dreadnots came from behind, and it looked as if they would win, but the Cressmans quintette got together and caged the necessary basket, the game ending 16-17 in favour of Cressmans. The game was exceptionally free from rough play, the referee only having to call three fouls during the whole game.

In the Senior Business Men-St. Paul game the Senior Men's experience told, but the youngsters made them work hard all the time, and St. Paul's played a very aggressive game. Neither of these teams had been together for practice but the brand of ball was exceptionally good considering the lack of practice. It would be hard to pick a star on either team, as they all played well. Geo. Robertson succeeded in scoring the most points for the Business Men. The honours were evenly divided between H. Taylor and D. Mulhern for St. Paul's. The final score was 13-4 in favour of the Business Men.

Don't forget the double header on Saturday night, the first game starting at 8 o'clock.

MIX-UP OVER DATES FOR RUGBY PLAY-OFF

Toronto Star: There is going to be one grand mix-up over dates for the play-off in the three Rugby Unions if they tie up, and there is every indication that three deadlocks will be the result of Saturday's games.

McGill and Varsity who have been postponed for Lansdowne Park, Ottawa, for November 21, have been rained down. The Ottawa Rugby Council have awarded the grounds to the Ottawa Rough Riders who will play Ottawa St. Patricks a city championship game. Eddie Livingstone of the T. R. and A. A. is after Varsity Stadium for November 21, and with Cricket grounds not available the Varsity directorate will not make any arrangements in case both teams select Hanlan for a play-off and decide to play for choice of grounds. The same thing applies to Rosedale field as far as T. R. and A. A. is concerned, for Argos and Tigers will do the "post-pack" for choice of field for their play-off, if Argos beat Montreal here Saturday. If Torontos, Argos, and Varsity all tie up their leagues, and all have to toss for choice of grounds for the play-off, there will be a fine muss, if all three win the toss. That is a remote contingency, but stranger things have happened. If one of the clubs loses the deciding game this Saturday or the toss-up, of course matters will be simplified, but still it is just as likely as not that there will be a double play-off here a week from Saturday. Something unexpected has got to happen Saturday to keep Toronto fans from getting a surfeit of Ruby this fall.

Varsity and McGill are the only two clubs who are talking of neutral

HOCKEY

DENNISON WITH T.R.C.

Fred Dennison, the former Peterborough hockey player, who has been travelling for a local firm during the past year, is slated for the Toronto Rowing Club senior O.H.A. team this winter.—Toronto Star.

IRVING BARNHARDT DEAD.

Irving Barnhardt, of Preston, one of the best known and most popular young sportsmen in Western Ontario, is dead, following a short illness. He was most prominent in connection with lacrosse and hockey, and managed the O. H. A. teams in the Springe Town in recent years. He was also one of the best hockey players ever turned out in Preston, for which team he played for several years. The late Mr. Barnhardt is survived by a wife and one son. He was a brother of Curtis Barnhardt, now of Bradford, who made such a favourable debut as a hockey referee last winter, and who was also a player of merit when with Preston and London.

MIDLAND, Nov. 11.—Although little has been done as yet in local hockey circles, a strong seven, it can be depended upon, will again represent Midland in the O. H. A. this winter. The loss of Eddie Gould, who is now in Brantford, and Ernie Lavigne, the speedy rover, who is now located in Montreal, will be felt. With "Hope" Armstrong to fill Gould's position on the defence, and Drury on the forward line, the team should not be materially weakened, however.

Captain Carr-Harris of the Imperial Army forces in South Africa, is reported missing. He was formerly Captain of the Intercollegiate football and hockey teams at Royal Military College, Kingston, and also played with the Goderich and Frontenac O.H.A. teams. He is in the Royal Engineers and has seen active service in India, China, on the Afghanistan frontier, and in South Africa.

Captain Carr-Harris played several times in Peterborough, once with the R. M. C. team and later with Goderich, when the Foxs beat the Sailors for the intermediate championship.

The Canadian League Will Likely Play

Association, However, Will Allow League to Retain Its Standing Should it Disband for 1915.

OMAHA, Nov. 11—A horizontal reduction of 20 per cent. in the salary limit of minor league clubs was the recommendation of the Committee on Constitutional Revision of the National Association. It was adopted, so far as it concerned Class A and Class B leagues. Leagues in Class AA were permitted to review their salary lists as fitted their convenience.

President Herrmann reviewed last season's financial results of the baseball business and declared that immediate and drastic action was necessary for the preservation of organized ball. "There must be a greater economy in the operation of the business department of the national sport," said Mr. Herrmann. "The time is past when 'angels' can be called upon to support the business."

It appeared probable that the make up of at least four leagues of the National Association of Professional Baseball Clubs would be changed next season. The Northern League has two changes in view — Winona and Winnipeg.

The Canadian League, which includes Erie, Pa., will probably not take advantage of an option they have of remaining out of the game next year. The League was given permission to retain its standing even though it finds it necessary to disband for 1915.

FREIGHT AND PASSENGER TRAFFIC BETWEEN RUSSIAN EMPIRE AND CANADA

In connection with its Round the World traffic the Canadian Pacific Railway has for a number of years had close relations with the Trans-Siberian Railway, and indeed has been the only railway on the North American Continent to take part in the International Round the World Railway Conference which in 1913 was held at Moscow and this year would have been held at Marseilles if the war had not broken out. It was on the proposal of the Canadian Pacific Railway that the Japanese State Railways and the Chinese Eastern Railway were elected members of this Conference at Moscow. The direct ocean link between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Trans-Siberian has hitherto been lacking, but the link may very soon be forged by the establishment of a direct service of the Russian Volunteer Fleet, a Russian Government service operating from Vladivostock in connection with the Trans-Siberian Railway.

The recent war has brought Russian and British Empire interests much closer together, and with considerable enterprise the Russian Government has arranged to send the Nijni Novgorod, a Volunteer Fleet Steamer, to Vancouver to see what business can be picked up. She will leave Vancouver on November 26th with several thousand tons of freight delivered to her by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Indeed, so promising is the business that a second vessel, the Kiev, is scheduled to arrive at Vancouver early next month leaving again for Russia on Christmas Day. This is evidently leading up to a possible monthly service between Canada and Russia, and though the Canadian Pacific Railway is at present only issuing through bills-of-lading for freight, there is no reason why a passenger business should not grow up also. As a matter of fact the Canadian Pacific Railway which handled the Novgorod at the Japanese ports on her Eastbound voyage booked several passengers for Vancouver. The displacement of this vessel is 5,265 tons.

There are many commodities which can profitably be exchanged between the two countries, for instance, grains, machinery, minerals, hides, furs, tea, cotton, tobacco, condensed milk, automobiles, apples, etc. The Russian Volunteer Fleet is an extensive and well managed organization consisting of fourten vessels totalling about 75,000 tons. It has an excellent service from Vladivostock to Tauruga and Shimonoseki — two Japanese ports. The steamers in its service were built mostly in Glasgow or Newcastle, the Novgorod coming from the yards of Armstrong, Mitchell & Co., of Newcastle, and the Kiev from those of J. & S. Thompson, of Glasgow.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Nov. 11.—Peace talk gave the wheat market today a sudden downward turn after an early advance due to act ve buying for export. The close was unsettled at a decline of 2-1c to 2-4c net. Corn finished 1-2c to 1-4c off, oats unchanged to a shade lower, and provisions 5c to 10c off to 15c above last night.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Nov. 11.—Trading on the wheat market was quiet and prices erratic and following the trend of American markets a good export trade is being transacted in the south, while well on in the day little or nothing in that line had been pulled off here. Some sales, however, were made last night. Winnipeg wheat opened unchanged to ¼c lower, and shortly after had advanced ¼c to ⅜c on the three months, easing off again previous to noon opening figures. Oats opened ⅛c to ¼c higher, and held fairly steady. Flax was weak, May opening ⅜c lower, recovering a cent later. Peace rumors had the effect of breaking prices considerably in the last hour of business. Even a little after noon there was a steady decline until nearing the close, when prices were erratic. Wheat closed ⅜c to 1c lower, oats ⅛c to ⅜c down and flax 1c lower.

The cash demand for wheat was quiet for all grades and offerings fair. Exporters were buying moderately.

Inspections on Tuesday totaled 433 cars, as against 1271 last year, and in eight were 466.

Deliveries thru the clearing house were: Wheat, 64,000 bushels; oats, 88,000 bushels; barley, 3000 bushels, and flax, 53,000 bushels.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Nov. 11.—Demand from over the dabbit for Manitoba wheat was lacking but local exporters were in the market and sales of 100,000 bushels of No. 3 were made at $1.16, and 50,000 No. 2 Northern $1.20 per bushel c.i.f. bay ports. There continues to be a good enquiry for ocean grain room, which is scarce, and the undertone to the market is strong.

A tramp vessel was engaged to carry a cargo of grain from here at 5s 6d per quarter, which is the highest rate paid this season to date.

There was some improvement in the demand for buttar today, but the market on the whole is quiet. Demand for cheese is good both from local buyers and for export account and sales of some round lots were made. The stock of cheese on spot is light and held in few hands.

The trade in eggs is active, there being a good demand for cold storage stock for export account.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, Nov. 11.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 837 cattle, 1149 hogs, and 33 calves.

Butchers' Cattle.

Choice steers sold at from $7.50 to $8; good butchers sold at $7 to $7.40; medium, $6.50 to $6.75; common, $6 to $6.25; light butchers' heifers, $6.50 to $6.75; choice cows, $6.50 to $6.75; good cows, $6 to $6.25; medium cows, $5.25 to $5.75; canners and cutters, $4.50 to $4.90; bulls, $4.50 to $6.50, and an odd bull of extra quality will sometimes bring $6.75 and $7.

Stockers and Feeders.

Choice heavy feeders, 900 to 1000 lbs., sold at from $6.50 to $6.75; good feeders, 800 to 900 lbs., $6 to $6.25; medium quality steers, $5.50 to $5.85; stockers, $5.50 to $6, according to breeding and color.

Milkers and Springers.

A moderate supply of milkers and springers sold at a range of $60 to $100 each. The bulk of sales would be from $70 to $85.

Veal Calves.

Choice calves, $9 to $10; good calves, $8 to $9; medium, $6.50 to $7.50; common, $5 to $6, and inferior eastern grass calves at $3 to $4.50.

Sheep and Lambs.

Sheep, light ewes, $6 to $6.75; heavy ewes, $5.50 to $6; culls and rams, $4.50 to $5; good to choice lambs, $7.75 to $8; good lambs, $7.40 to $7.60; heavy lambs, $4.75 to $7.25; culls, $5.50 to $6.

Hogs.

Selects, fed and watered, $7.75, and $7.25 f.o.b. cars, and $6 weighed off cars.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Nov. 11.—At the Canadian Pacific live stock market, the offerings today were 1200 cattle, 3000 sheep and lambs, 1000 hogs and 600 calves. There was no actual change in the condition of the market today, except that the feeling in it for good to choice sheep was firmer, owing to the very limited supply coming forward, in fact, many butchers who are in the habit of buying nothing but those grades of cattle stated that it was impossible to fill their wants and that they would have to buy dressed beef. A large proportion of the offerings consisted of common stock, for which the demand was slow, as buyers generally and ample supplies of such on hand, and consequently trade on the whole was quiet. A few good steers sold at $7 to $7.25 and fair quality at $6 to $6.50, while common brought $4.75 to $5.25 per 100 lbs. The demand for good butchers' cows was fair and sales were made at $6 to $6.25, and the lower grades from $5 to $5.75, and bulls at from $5 to $6.25 per 100 pounds.

The tone of the market for lambs and sheep was firm, under a good demand and the latter sold at the ruling

Russia's Captures.

PARIS, Nov. 12.—A Havas Agency despatch from Petrograd says:

"It is estimated here that during the recent fighting in east Prussia the Germans lost 70 per cent. of their officers. From Oct. 23 to Nov. 5, the total Russian captures amounted to 323 officers, 21,750 soldiers, 4 mortars, 52 cannon, 52 quick-firers and a large amount of munitions of war, including a quantity of provisions."

Canopus Not Sunk.

VALPARAISO, Chile, Nov. 12.—A rumor has been circulated here to the effect that the British battleship Canopus has been sunk off Coronel. This report is officially denied by the Chilean Admiralty.

King's Victor's Birthday.

ROME, Italy, Nov. 12.—This being the anniversary of the birth of King Victor Emmanuel, his Majesty, as usual, observed the occasion by a review of the troops.

Commodity Prices Are Easier Now

The Labour Department's index number, reviewing prices in October, shows a tendency to a lower level. When the war broke out the number rose almost at once from 135.5 to 140.7. It has now eased back to 139.0, or nearly two points. Compared with a year ago, however, it is nearly five points higher. The October relapse is chiefly accounted for by declines under the headings—grains and fodders, animals and meats, and fruits and vegetables. Among miscellaneous foods, cream of tartar and glucose fell, but sugar, molasses and honey advanced. Silk and jute lowered the average for textiles. Metals, coke, linseed oil, hops and rubber also developed weakness. On the other hand New Brunswick spruce deals, glass, starch and newsprint were higher.

The above refers to wholesale prices, of which 272 are included in the review. Retail prices in the several Canadian cities followed pretty generally in the wake of wholesale.

From the householders' standpoint the further advance of nearly one cent per lb. in sugar was the most unfavourable incident of the month. On the other hand, potatoes were unusually low in Eastern Canada, and meats went down in several places. Bread went up in four cities. Flour went up in three and down in three. Butter was unusually steady, though, it usually advances at this time of the year; the rise in September perhaps accounts for this. Milk came down in two places, which is unusual at this time of the year. Rents have been falling pretty generally for some months past.

Only one new strike occurred in the whole of Canada in October, that of the moulders, at Owen Sound, but five remained unsettled from September.

LONGEST STREET CAR SYSTEM

Kamloops, British Columbia, a small "city" of about six thousand people, proudly boasts that it possesses "the longest street car system in the world." The Canadian Pacific railway runs through the main street of the town, and as this famous road extends from the Pacific to the Atlantic, Kamloops may be said to have made out a fair case for its boast. It will only possess this distinction a few months longer, however, for the C.P.R. engineers are rapidly moving and tracking the line away from the main street, which is hardly an ideal track for a modern railroad.

SECRET ZEPPELIN RAID OF ENGLAND IS PLANNED

(By Karl H. Von. Wiegand).

LIEGE, Nov. 10.—That Germany is preparing an aerial attack or invasion of England with her fleet of Zeppelins, is the general expression among officers here, so far as I could get any of them to express an opinion. That same impression is in the public mind in Berlin and elsewhere.

"Where are all the Zeppelins and what are they doing?" I asked a member of the flying corps.

"Just wait and see," he replied. "England gave us a little surprise off Heligoland. We will give her a little surprise before long."

There appears to be but few Zeppelins with the armies in the field. It is dangerous to ask questions or seek information, but indications are, and I have been told from various sources, that the Zeppelins are being concentrated close to the North Sea. It is said that the completion of several new Zeppelins is being awaited.

Just how many Zeppelins Germany has, no one outside of the government knows. Before the war, the official record was less than 15. There are reasons for believing that Germany has more, in fact many more. The Zepelins and the 42 centimeter mortar are the two mysteries of the war so far. You can take your choice from the stories that are afloat about these two weapons. Among these are, that the manufactured parts of a large number of Zeppelins had been made at the Zeppelin works in Friedrichshafen and stored ready to be put together when the emergency arose. The Zeppelin works are said to be working day and night. Both in Berlin and here I have been told that Germany now has a fleet of 64 aerial cruisers. From other sources I was told that as soon as a fleet of 30 Zeppelins could be sent across the Channel, the aerial attack on England will begin.

That the Germans will make some daring coup with their aerial fleet and that in the near future, there is some reason for believing. It is quite possible that they are merely waiting for a suitable base. Antwerp, Ostend or Calais. The stories of the number of Zeppelins Germany now has, must be taken for what they are worth. Aside from the undoubted fact that Zeppelins are being turned out as fast as possible, no one knows anything about the size of the fleet, except, also government officials, and they won't tell.

In some quarters the opinion prevails that the English fleet will be attacked by the Zeppelin fleet or simultaneously by the Zeppelins and the German fleet. In other words, the big battle will be fought in the air, on the sea and under the sea, all at the same time.

Although it is somewhat early to draw conclusions, the Zeppelins have shown in Liege and Antwerp, that as a weapon of offence they far surpass the aeroplanes. This also has been stated to me by members of the flying corps, who have declared that the scouting and reconnoitering of the German "cavalry of the air" has contributed largely to the German successes, but that as offensive weapons the Zeppelins are far superior.

The German aeroplanes carry 12 one and four pound bombs hung in racks on the sides of the machine. The dropping of these bombs through the air, are a little propeller fans mounted almost arrows in the contact point or "primer" so that the bomb will explode upon hitting any object. Until the "primer" or "contact" is screwed in by the propeller, the bomb is "safe." A forced landing or smash-up of the aeroplane would not explode the bombs carried. The Zeppelin artillery, as explained to me, consists of bombs or shells from 24 to 36 inches in length and about 10 inches in diameter. They are filled with a high explosive. Dropped on the thintly protected deck of a battleship, it is said they would go through the ship. The American press, so far as I could judge from the first papers received in many weeks just before I left Berlin, had practically destroyed the entire German fleet of Zeppelins. It seems to have been a poor day when not more than one Zeppelin was shot down by the French and Belgians. It is quite possible that we are less informed in Germany, but there is every reason for doubting this wholesale destruction of the Zeppelins. So far as I have watched events, there is a possibility that two may have been destroyed, but there is no proof for it, and very little to base the supposition on. The government flatly denies that it has lost a single Zeppelin so far. It also denies the report of the loss of the Zeppelin which terrorised Antwerp. Members of the German flying corps who have been under fire many time in the war and with whom I have talked, say that there is little to fear from rifle fire and machine gun tie when flying at an altitude of not less than 4,000 feet. Sergt. Werner, the first pilot who flew over Paris, said he had 25 patches on the wings of his monoplane—scars of the enemies' bullets. He declared it had been his experience and that of other flyers that at an altitude of 4,000 feet a bullet has little or no force or impact left. As he put it, "You can almost catch them in your hand."

STEAM POWER FOR HAVELOCK

Low Water Causes Epidemic of Darkness.

HAVELOCK, Nov. 12.—Havelock Council, at their last session, ordered that the lighting system, which is furnished the Town by a private concern, be discontinued, owing to the poor service. Mr. Surtrees of the Engineering Department of the Hydro Power Commission, was in Town, and busily engaged in formulating data to present to the Council. Mr. Surtrees will submit an estimate of a new modern plant for the Village, an estimate of the present distribution plant, as it stands, and an estimate of the present plant put in modern shape.

More Light Soon.

Havelock's epidemic of darkness, due to lack of electric current owing to the low water in Round Lake, will soon be over, according to Manager Holdcroft who has decided to install the auxiliary steam plant at the power house. It is estimated that it will take at least ten or probably three weeks to get things into running order for the new plant.

GERMANY'S NAVAL LOSSES

The 16th annual Conference of the Archdeaconry of Peterborough will be held at Port Hope on the 16th, 17th, and 18th inst., when Rev. C. W. Holdsworth B.A. Havelock, Secretary of the Archdeaconry, will deliver an address on "The effect of rubrical lawlessness upon the life of the Church."

CHIEF KIDD IS ASKED TO REMAIN

Has Resigned Brampton Position In Order to Serve on Peterboro' Police Force.

BRAMPTON, Nov. 12.—A petition signed by a number of ratepayers, was presented to the Town Council, asking that the services of Chief Constable Kidd be retained by the Council, and that he be induced to withdraw the resignation submitted two weeks ago. A resolution from the Women's Institute, making the same request, was also received. Mr. Kidd had been receiving a salary of $800 per annum. There are twenty-three applications from persons willing to accept that, and some of them a smaller amount. The Council having accepted Mr. Kidd's resignation is not likely to reconsider the matter.

RUSSIAN STEAM ROLLER IS SWEEPING FORWARD

Full Import of Disaster to German Arms in Poland is Now Being Realized and It is Seen That the Kaiser's Troops are in Terrible State

LONDON, Nov. 12.—The following official announcement was received from Petrograd last night:

"In East Prussia our troops are approaching the eastern outlets of the region around Lake Masodrie.

"In the vicinity of Goldap, Mlawa and Soldau engagements have occurred, which have been in our favor.

"In Galicia we are continuing a vigorous offensive."

The Petrograd Messinger Armee prints a story to the effect that the Germans are constructing various kinds of barriers to impede the Russian advance, especially in the region of Czenstochowa (Russian Poland), and are working night and day on the fortifications at Thorn.

Martial law has been declared at Cracow and the civil population has evacuated the city.

The Germans, according to Petrograd despatches, have suffered a more serious defeat on the East Prussian border than the official statements have disclosed. Advices from the Russian capital yesterday stated that in the recent fighting there the Russians have captured more than 20,000 prisoners, together with quantities of guns and munitions.

The Russian advance in Poland, which has been at the rate of 14 miles daily, has astonished the military experts, and it is not surprising to hear that they are picking up many footsore and weary German stragglers. This advance of horse, foot and artillery has continued for 18 days.

In the face of the continued disasters, the Crown Prince has received supreme command of the eastern German armies, it is reported from several sources. The Kaiser is said to have presided at a war council when this step was decided upon. Gen. von Hindenberg, the leader who drove back the Czar's hosts in their first invasion, has been superseded, but continues in command of the left wing, while Gen. Auffenberg, the only Austrian officer of high rank who holds German confidence, is in charge of the right wing.

Military authorities here who have been inclined to look with some scepticism on the reports of overwhelming Russian victories and the precipitate flight of the Germans, are now beginning to credit the full import of recent despatches. A message received late last night by Petrograd says that the Germans are falling back as rapidly as their condition will permit from Radom along a line to Rabyeom and toward Kingutzka.

It is declared that the Kaiser's men are in a terrible state, many of them going without overcoats or shoes, the marches of the last fortnight having exhausted the supply. Some of these men are walking barefooted across plains covered with ice and snow, leaving a bloody trail behind them which stretches for miles in every direction. Nothing like the scenes which confront the Russians have been witnessed in Europe since Napoleon fell back from Moscow. It is a weird coincidence that just a hundred years have passed since then, and that again the rigorous Russian winter is taking heavy toll of an alien foe.

However, stubborn fighting is in prospect for the Czar's legions. The Germans are rushing men eastward from France, and preparations are under way to erect important fortifications at Mstow, where heavy artillery is being concentrated. The defenders' lines along the Warthe are steadily strengthening, and the fortresses in Posen, notably at Thorn, are ready to withstand siege.

It is believed that by this time the Russians are actually under the walls of Cracow. Last reports from that city report the inhabitants in flight, and a feverish state of excitement among non-combatants and military as the invaders come hurtling on.

MUST TENDER OVER AGAIN

Snow Contractors Add Riders to Their Tenders for Snow Removal

Moved by Alderman Green, seconded by Ald. McIntyre, that each applicant be advised that the city will receive new tenders for snow ploughing up till five o'clock on Wednesday next. Tenders must be made out in accordance with the specifications and must not be accompanied with a rider or other qualifications.

The foregoing resolution was adopted at last night's meeting of the Board of Works. That tenders will be called for a second time, is due to the fact that many of the tenderers refused to shovel snow. Others submitted two prices; one for removing the snow with the plough alone, and the other for supplementing the shovel whenever necessary. In all twenty-seven tenders were received covering each of the seven districts. Several of the tenderers were veterans in the work of keeping the sidewalks free from snow. Robert Nichals was credited with being one of the best men on the list, but like many others he made the mistake of specifying his refusal to use the shovel. Alderman Johnston and one or two others, were unwilling to sacrifice some of the snow contractors who were known for their good work, so it was decided to give the men a chance to tender again.

Former Milbrook Pastor Inducted

Rev. William Johnston Assumes Pastoral Charge at Ashburn and Utica

MILLBROOK, Nov. 11.—Rev. Wm. Johnston, formerly pastor of Millbrook Presbyterian church, was inducted into the pastoral charge, Ashburn and Utica, on October 21st. The Rev. Mr. Cameron of West Hill, Moderator, presided. The Rev. Mr. Gilroy, of Pickering, preached the sermon, emphasizing the importance of earnest co-operation with the pastor. The Moderator then put the usual questions which were suitably answered by the pastor elect, and inducted him into the pastoral charge, and the presbytery extended the right hand of fellowship, welcoming Mr. Johnston into the presbytery of Whitby. Rev. Mr. West, of Port Perry, addressed the newly inducted pastor, emphasizing the importance of preaching the Word, and said the pastor is God's interpreter of truth to the people. Rev. Mr. Hoig of Columbus, addressed the congregation as to their duties to pastor and church. After the pastor was introduced to the people by Mr. Hoig, the presbytery and congregation repaired to the school room where an excellent repast was served by the ladies of the congregation. Much joy is felt by the people of Ashburn and Utica upon securing such an able preacher as Mr. Johnston, and also upon having him and his estimable family come to reside in their midst.

British Gunboat Is Torpedoed

Niger is Latest Victim of German Submarine.

A MYSTERY SHIP

LONDON, Nov. 12. — The little British torpedo gunboat Niger, which was built twenty-two years ago and has been used as a tender, is the latest victim of a German submarine. She was torpedoed yesterday morning in the Downs north of the Straits of Dover, and foundered immediately. The officers and crew were saved.

The Admiralty, in announcing the loss of the ship, says:

"The Niger, Lieut.-Commander Arthur T. Muir, was torpedoed yesterday morning in the Downs. All the officers and twenty-seven of the crew were saved. Four men were injured. It is thought that there was no loss of life.

"The Niger has been employed in semi-combatant duties."

The Downs is the name of a roadstead in the English Channel off the southeast coast of Kent, between Ramsgate and Dover.

The Niger had 810 tons displacement and a speed of nineteen to twenty knots. Her armament consisted of two 4.7-inch quick-firers, five 3-pounders and several torpedo tubes. She was used only for purposes of patrol.

The Niger carried a complement of 85 men.

A great deal of comment is being made at Deal on the fact that a small cruiser flying the Dutch flag had been lying in close proximity to the Niger for the last two days, and only put to sea during the morning. In view of the disaster local mariners very much doubt whether this vessel was Dutch or was only flying the flag of that country. They think it quite probable that this vessel was covering the movements of the submarine. Neither Lloyds' agent nor anyone else locally had been able to ascertain the name of this mysterious warship.

RUSSIA GETS BIG GUNS

Japanese Government is Sending Artillery to Poland.

CHICAGO, Nov. 12.—A Daily News correspondent who has just arrived in London from Port Arthur, cables:

I obtained corroboration from two persons of an account given me of the passage of a quantity of Japanese heavy artillery, in charge of Japanese officers, over the Trans-Siberian Railway to Poland. Considerable secrecy was observed, at least two, and possibly more, long trains of Japanese guns have gone to the front.

One passenger train, consisting of half a mile of cars, left Dalny for the west, being hauled a considerable part by an antiquated locomotive. All the good locomotives in Siberia have been requisitioned for service in European Poland, and an extraordinary collection of Belgian, German, Russian and American locomotives is attempting to cope with the traffic.

Every bridge from Vladivostok to Petrograd is picketed by troops and tunnels are lined with sentries.

ADDRESS ON JAPAN

Returned Missionary Interested Union Meeting of Three Local Methodist Women's Missionary Auxiliaries

A PLEASANT PROGRAMME

A most interesting union meeting of the Women's Missionary Auxiliaries of the George Street, Charlotte Street and Mark Street Methodist Churches was held yesterday afternoon in the Sunday School room of the George Street Methodist Church. There was a very large attendance, all three auxiliaries being well represented. Rev. R. G. Peever occupied the chair, and Mrs. Kendry, President of the George Street Auxiliary, Mrs. Payne, President of the Mark Street Auxiliary, and Mrs. Parker, President of the Charlotte Street Auxiliary, occupied seats on the platform.

Bible reading by Mrs. Payne and a prayer by Mrs. Parker, opened the meeting.

Miss Richardson of the Charlotte Street Methodist Church was heard to advantage in a solo.

Miss E. Campbell, returned missionary from Japan, gave a splendid address. Miss Campbell was dressed in her Japanese costume, and looked the part of the dainty little Japanese lady.

She explained that the work of W.M.S. was carried on in seven different stations, but confined her remarks to the school life in the city where she lived.

The Japanese demand the higher education and schools have been opened and pronounced most successful, reaching the Japanese girls, and thereby getting into their homes.

When the missionary first goes to the foreign training school the first two years are given up entirely to the study of the language. The city of Karfu has a population of 53,000. In the school where Miss Campbell was principal there are 135 students on the roll, the school being built to accommodate 180. They are very cramped for class rooms, and are looking forward to the W.M.S. sending more money to enlarge the school.

The life of a Japanese school girl is very full. She rises in the morning at 5:45 o'clock; after dressing fifteen minutes are given to the quiet hour. After breakfast, which is at 7:30, classes open at 8 a.m., with prayer and continue until 12 a.m.

Writing is one of their important studies, it taking careful practise in making the Japanese characters. The morning classes are taught by native teachers. After dinner English is taught by the missionaries until 3:30. At that time the students clean and tidy up their class room. Supper is served at 5:30 and study from 6:30 to 9 p.m. On Sunday they attend church in the morning. After dinner they go to Sunday School. There are 17 other Sunday Schools in the city. This is one of the important forms of the work. The children very often become pupils of the school and join the church. After Sunday School they rest, and this is greatly enjoyed by the older students. The class meeting is a very interesting part of the work. The girls enjoy speaking. They enjoy studying the Bible, because it is so different from any book they have.

There are many factories in the city, malking silk being one of their chief industries, and some of these girls work from 12 to 16 hours a day. There are sleeping apartments in the factories and those who sleep all day, work all night, the beds being constantly in use. The missionaries are allowed to go to these girls for 10 minutes at the noon hour and tell them about Christ.

The temples and shrines in Japan are very beautiful, and many are seen worshipping there. The Japanese have a deep religious nature. They must pray for something, and often they do not know to whom they are praying. How necessary that the gospel be sent to them now.

Their houses have fine roofs, but no foundations, and so their lives may be designated. Their characters have no foundation. Without Christianity they cannot develop.

The dress of the women is very gay, neat and pretty. The older they grew the more modest becomes their garb. The women wear no hats or gloves. Their style of gowns do not change. Their house furnishings are very scanty, having no chairs, no tables, no beds.

Foreign ideas are taking hold of the country, but still they cling to their own way of living. They cannot afford to live like us. Taxes are tremendous and will be more on account of the present war.

The speaker was introduced by Mrs. Kendry.

Mrs. J. H. Renwick of George Street Choir, rendered a much-appreciated solo, and Mrs. Cruikshanks contributed a piano solo, while the offertory was being taken up.

At the conclusion of the programme refreshments were served and an enjoyable social hour spent.

Why They Smiled.

Enter with the open street cars the end seaters of peculiar traits. A little story apropos. The other day a man leaped on the running board of a car and said to a seated passenger: "I say, sir, you have the big seat."

"Oh, excuse me," was the quick reply, "I was not aware I had your seat. I yield it to you," and he slid along and made room. The new occupant of the "hog" seat flushed, and the passengers smiled audibly.

MORE LITERARY ILLUMINATION OF "LUCASTA"

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I fear that the "literary member of the Board of Education" (in query letter issue of last evening), erred in his choice of an encyclopaedia in "looking up" the meaning of the term "Lucastas," as used by the Secretary of the Women's War Fund Committee, in her notice of Monday evening. The following is the poem in full, written by Richard Lovelace (1618-1658), from which, without doubt, the term was derived.

A moment's perusal of it may prove interesting, and make clear the full significance of the allusion, as applied to the women of Peterborough.

TO LUCASTA, ON GOING TO THE WARS.

Tell me not, sweet, I am unkind,—
That from the nunnery
Of thy chaste breast and quiet mind
To war and arms I fly.

True, a new mistress now I chase,
The first foe in the field;
And with a strong faith embrace
A sword, a horse, a shield.

Yet this inconstancy is such
As you, too, shall adore;
I could not love thee, dear, so much,
Loved I not honour more.

WIDOWED BY WAR, BARONESS RETURNS TO CONVERSE HOME

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—The Baroness Antoinette Converse von Romberg, daughter of E. C. Converse, banker and steel magnate, whose husband, Baron Maxmillian von Romberg, was killed in battle near Belfort, on 22nd September, arrived from Liverpool on the Red Star liner Lapland. Her infant, Max von Romberg, who was named after his father, was with her.

The Baroness refused to discuss her husband's death except to say that he was a captain in the German army, and was killed in action at the head of his company. They were married in July, 1907. She was in mourning and went to her father's home in Greenwich, Conn.

Teachers' Institute In Session In The Public Library To-day

Two Papers Given Before Convention This Morning — Endorse Proposed Scheme of Teachers' Superannuation.

The Teachers' Institute, comprising the Public and Separate school teachers of the city, met in the Public Library this morning in their annual convention. Mr. L. J. Petit, President, occupied the chair and practically every teacher was present.

A nominating committee was appointed and will bring in its report to-morrow, and the question of school magazines was discussed, it being decided that three should be sent to each school in Peterborough. On the motion of Messrs. A. Mowat and W. H. Walkey, the convention decided to approve of the Government's proposed action in undertaking the establishment of a scheme of teacher's superannuation.

Mr. Colling.

At the meeting Mr. L. J. Colling gave an interesting paper on "Recreation and its Uses." He drew attention to the fact that systematic play co-related mental ability and physical training. In this connection he referred to the early training of the Greeks in olden times when their recreation was arranged in a manner that would accomplish the attainment of individual courage, the establishment of physical well being, the cultivation of beauty. According to Webster the proper definition of recreation was the training of the bodily organs and powers for the promotion of health and vigour. The teachers should recognize that they had a moral responsibility in the matter, and should endeavour to give the boy and girl the best, both on the playground and in the class.

Problems of Recreation.

Mr. Colling strongly advocated supervised playgrounds for the boys which would serve to keep them off the street and out of many kinds of mischief. Not only were more playgrounds necessary, but to be of any use they must be properly supervised. Then, too, it was advisable to keep too great a degree of the competitive spirit out of the sports. The games were spoiled and their value lost by introducing too much of the competitive idea. Another problem in connection with recreation was the proper selection of games. If possible, the speaker said that it would be beneficial to have sand piles for the younger scholars wherever feasible in connection with the school, as well as playing skits, wading pools, quoit for the older ones football organizations, baseball teams, volley ball, quoits, jumping standards and pole vaulting apparatus. For the girls he suggested ring games as well as tennis, croquet, etc. Every school, said Mr. Colling, should have a field day. For winter, inside recreation should be provided. Winter interesting school features, and matches in geography, arithmetic and spelling.

Committee Formed.

A committee was formed to look after the social and athletic activities of the various schools during the coming year. The committee is to consist of the Principal of the Collegiate Institute, the six Principals of the Public schools, the Principal of the Normal school, Sister Patricia, Miss O'Connell, Sister Demetrio, Sister Adel, Miss Ramsay, and one lady representative from each school.

Mr. G. M. Steer.

"Reading" was the subject of a comprehensive paper by Mr. G. M. Steer. In opening he emphasized the fact that the reading of books was of great value, and diverged into an interesting but brief summary of the history and development of reading. The pupils as a whole, he said, did not make use of their advantages to as full an extent as might be done.

In local reading the incompetence of the pupils was often due to three causes. They are: (1) The lack of teachers ability, (2) Presentation of the matter not adapted to the pupil, and (3) The presentation by unsatisfactory methods. James L. Hughes said "Boys and girls taught to read aloud and not silently is the cause of the difficulty." Silent reading meant the accurate, rapid and comprehensive meaning to be taken from the printed pages. Silent reading was the gaining of thought and oral reading was the expressing of thought.

The methods in the primary grades did not accomplish the best results. The results in the lower grades could be materially increased if the pupils would depend more on their own resources.

The Institute met again this afternoon, and to-night an open session will be held, when Dr. Pakenham, Dean of the Faculty of Education, Toronto University, will address the gathering.

NO TIME TO TALK PEACE AT PRESENT

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Sir,—According to your issue last evening there is to be a meeting called this evening in the Council Chamber at 8 o'clock. In my opinion it is a disgraceful and disloyal effort of those who signed the petition for the meeting to bind the hands of the Allies at a time when every effort is being made to prosecute the war. When Judge Huycke and E. A. Peck, ex-M.L.A., and other men like them can find nothing better to do than to start discussions that will show dissatisfaction with Britain's course in declaring war they ought to be called to account by every loyal man in the City. This is no time to talk peace. Great Britain has said so, and yet it will be known far and wide throughout Canada and England that Peterborough has started an agitation for peace, and is presuming to dictate terms. This will make Peterborough ridiculous and she will be considered disloyal and rightly so. A public meeting to help on the war, a just and noble war on the part of the Allies who declared war first and according to this meeting are to blame would be reasonable. Great Britain is one of these, but these men and those like them are setting an example of disloyalty and dissatisfaction that is disloyal and, in the opinion of many of your readers, wicked. This meeting should be called off and nothing like it allowed during war time, when men with heart and soul in the cause of Britain and liberty would rather die than do anything to tie her hands or give her enemies satisfaction.—I am, etc.,

ARTHUR KING.

TO SAVE TROUBLE!

Will the parents of the young girl who was seen taking a large doll from the corner of Water and London Streets yesterday afternoon, please return the same at once before some action is taken to recover it.

MADE IN GERMANY VERSES WERE NOT RELISHED

And United States Man Who Produced Them Nearly Got into Trouble.

The following episode took place at the "White House" to-day somewhere round 12:45 p.m.

Two groups of fellows were partaking of liquid refreshments. While all were "ill a good-humoured frame of mind, one of the number—a citizen of the Stars and Stripes country—pulled out a type-written paper. Calling the attention of all present he read it aloud, remarking that he thought it "real smart." The effusion in question was a poem, somewhat above the average, so far at least as composition went. Surprise was depicted on the fact of the listeners, inasmuch as each line ended with "Her Von Kluck."

The whole trend of the poem was a eulogy on General Von Kluck, who was placed on a pedestal, to the great disparagement of all the Allies' generals.

The men who were in the company—to their credit be it said, though not approving the sentiments, did not wish to offend him—kept up a running comment such as "you bet!" etc. (ironically).

One of the group—the majority were all well-known men in this city—called the reader on one side and told him he had made a grievous mistage in bringing such seditious stuff—made in Germany—into the loyal City of Peterborough. Finally the paper in question was demanded from the "Yank," a match was applied to it, and flames devoured the treasonable effusion, amid the remark "We don't stand for that sort of stuff in Canada."

The "Examiner" man learns that it was one of those pieces of propaganda, which are made in Germany, to try to set English-speaking people in a neighbouring and friendly country against our good old Motherland. As they would say in the Old Country "that sort of thing doesn't wash" here.

The Yank, finding himself in a rather tight corner, pacified those about him by "standing drinks round," and thus managed to save his skin, and then retired from a somewhat bad situation—in other words he "scooted."

DR. PAKENHAM TO ADDRESS THE MEETING

Public Invited to Hear Dean of the Faculty of Education in Collegiate To-Night.

To-night Dr. Pakenham, Dean of the Faculty of Education, will address an open meeting of the Teachers' Institute that will be held in the Assembly Hall of the Collegiate Institute. The public are cordially invited to be present to-night.

Bank Clearings Show Decrease

The bank clearings for the week ending to-day, representing the business of local banks, are $362,760. Last week the clearings were $431,852, so that the figures for this week show a decrease of $70,763. For this week last month the clearings were $419,965.

TRADE WAS MORE ACTIVE

Official Report of the Union Stock Yards.

UNION STOCK YARDS, Toronto, Nov. 11—Receipts were fairly large: 78 cars, 857 cattle, 1149 hogs, 2330 sheep and lambs, 83 calves.

Cattle: Trade was a little more active. Three choice steers, 1,100 lbs., each sold at 88; three loads of good butchers' steers sold at $7.56. These were the best prices made.

Choice butchers' steers, $7.75 to $8.
Good butchers' steers, $7 to $7.50.
Medium butchers' steers, $6.50 to $6.75.
Common butchers' steers, $5.75 to $6.25.
Choice butchers' heifers, $7 to $7.25.
Common butchers' heifers, $6.25 to $6.75.
Choice cows, $6.50 to $7.
Good cows, $6 to $6.25.
Canners, $3.50 to $4.50.

Feeders and stockers: Trade in feeders and stockers was about steady. Farmers were looking for a supply, but good quality steers are scarce, and common are plentiful.

Choice steers, $6.50 to $6.75.
Medium steers, $6 to $6.25.
Stockers, $3.50 to 5.

Milkers and Springers: Light supply sold at $60 to $90 each; bulk sold at $70 to $80 each.

Calves: Receipts light and trade dull with prices easy.

Choice Veals, $9 to $10; common to good, $4 to $8.

Sheep and lambs: Receipts being large, especially of lambs, prices for them were easier. Lambs were 10 to 15c per cwt. lower than on Tuesday and sheep were barely steady.

Sheep, $5 to $5.75.
Culls and rams, $2.50 to $4.
Lambs, choice ewes and wethers, $7.75 to $8.
Selected, fed and watered, $7.75 and $7.40 f.o.b. cars, and $8 weighed off cars.

The sale of rejected Army horses, at the Union Stock yards, to-day, was largely attended by representative buyers from country parts to secure horses for feeding this winter. Eighty-five horses were sold, the prices ranging from $40 to $145. These horses are all good and were rejected on account of differences in height and age. To-day there were a number of good mares sold at $80 a head.

The sales will continue to-morrow, at 10 o'clock, and will run daily until the horses are sold.

TO-NIGHT'S PEACE MEETING

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Sir,—A public meeting has been called for to-night at the Council Chamber. The object is to take advantage of present conditions (the horrors and disorganization caused by war) to foster a movement which would result in disarmament at the end of the war.

If we believe in the British position—that Britain is fighting militarism—then we must support such a movement as in full support of the British position and cold comfort to our enemies.

The voice of the people of any civilized land are against war, so why [illegible] for the few to support the many?

Arbitration and an International Police are but a natural sequence to disarmament.—Yours truly,

J. S.—Brit.

BETWEEN TWO FIRES

London Scottish Regiment Held Difficult Position All Night.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—The official press bureau issues descriptive account, which has been communicated by an eye-witness present with General Headquarters.

"On Saturday, Oct. 31," says the writer, "being ordered to take up a section of the firing line to support some of our cavalry, and having advanced to its position under heavy fire from the field guns, howitzers and machine guns, the battalion reached a point where further movement forward was impossible. There it maintained itself until dusk, when it proceeded to entrench.

"From 9 o'clock that night until 2 a.m. Sunday the Germans made numerous attacks on the Scottish line, all of which were repulsed by rifle fire. At 2 a.m. they made their great effort and assaulted the front and left of the position in great force. A considerable number succeeded by a detour in getting around the flank of the regiment. A large proportion of these were engaged by the companies in support and reserve, while others penetrated between the first and second lines of trenches and assailed our firing line in the rear.

"While the fighting with rifle and bayonet was going on, both in front and immediately behind the firing line, a reserve company still farther behind made repeated bayonet charges against the enemy who had got around and so prevented the entire envelopment of the battalion. Behind the firing line the scene of combat was lit by a blazing house, which the Germans had set alight.

"At dawn its was discovered that large numbers of the enemy had, according to custom, worked around both flanks with machine guns, and a retirement was carried out. This was effected under a cross-fire from machine guns and rifles.

"Naturally in an encounter of this nature the battalion suffered a heavy loss, but, though unable to maintain its position, it acquitted itself with gallantry and coolness in a situation of peculiar difficulty."

OFFICIALS IN CONFERENCE

Officials of the Grand Trunk Railway and representatives of the Canadian General Electric Company and the City are in conference this afternoon. The object of the meeting is to discuss the question of leasing a piece of unused railway track from the G. T. R., which the Canadian General Electric Company will use for the purpose of testing electric locomotives and such other rolling stock as they may construct.

RECEIVES $600 DAMAGES

LINDSAY, Nov. 12.— The case of Geo. Fisher vs. the Boving Co. for injuries received, which impaired the eyesight, which was to have been tried at the Fall Assizes yesterday, was settled amicably out of court, Fisher receiving $600 damages.

It appears that Fisher was foreman in the machine shop, when a piece of steel flew up from the anvil, striking a planer and hitting Fisher in the eye. The other eye had already been more or less impaired, and the injury recently received also impaired the sight.

Allies Check The Advance

From Dixmude Official Statement From War Office.

PARIS, Nov. 13.—The French War Office issued the following statement last night:

"The enemy has continued all day his effort of Tuesday, without accomplishing any new result. He has directed against Lombaertzyde a counter attack which has been repulsed, and has made vain attempts to debouch from Dixmude on the left bank of the Yser.

"There is nothing new to report from the rest of the front."

The afternoon bulletin said:

"On our left wing the battle was resumed yesterday from early dawn, with intensity particularly marked between Nieuport and the Lys. In a general way our front has been maintained in spite of the violence and strength of the German attacks directed against some of our points of support.

"To the north of Nieuport we have been able to reoccupy Lombaertzyde and to advance beyond that locality, but toward the end of the day the Germans succeeded in getting possession of Dixmude. However, we are still holding on to the outskirts of that village along the Nieuport Canal.

"At Ypres, which has been solidly occupied, the fight has been very hot. The British troops, who have been attacked at many points, have everywhere halted the enemy.

"Along the rest of the front the general situation continues unchanged, save for progress made by our forces north of Soissons and in the regions west of Vailly, on the right bank of the Aisne. With the exception of these two positions the state of the weather has permitted only local activity, which was everywhere in our favor. Especially at Coincourt (three kilometres north of the forest of Parroy), we have particularly scattered a detachment of the enemy's forces."

Who Wanted To Know?

Mother (sternly): Young man, I want to know just how serious are your intentions toward my daughter.

Daughter's Voice (somewhat agitated): Mamma, mamma! He's not the one!

DIXMUDE IS TAKEN

German's Make First Appreciable Gain in Ten Day's Battle

ELSEWHERE ALLIES BOLD

LONDON, Nov. 12. — After ten days of persistent and desperate battling, Dixmude has fallen into the hands of the Germans, the French still holding the western environs of the city and the approaches to the town on that side.

The railroad lines between Nieuport and Dunkirk centre in Dixmude, and Dunkirk is but a scant 25 miles away. This marks the first appreciable gains of the Kaiser's armies in the second drive to the French coast. It is one that cannot be over-estimated.

That the town fell only after a desperate resistance is indicated by all reports, but it was finally relinquished Tuesday evening.

British, French and Belgian forces participated in the fighting to save the point, but the allies were finally thrown back by sheer weight of men and metal. A tremendous artillery fire from hundreds of guns was concentrated on the town, and the German masses moved forward in a tidal wave that came steadily on despite all losses. Finally it swept over the outer earthworks, and the defeat of men drove back Dixmude's defenders.

It is cheering, however, to know that at Dixmude only has the last tremendous offensive of the invaders made an impression. Both east and west of that point the allied lines held steadily, and the British have distinguished themselves, especially around Ypres—the storm centre of the German assault.

The line of the canal from Dixmude to Ypres, except for a few rods on either side of Dixmude, and all of the roads in this zone are controlled by the allied troops. French and Belgian troops have retaken Lombaertzyde. This place has changed hands a number of times in the past three weeks. Further progress has been made along the channel in the direction of Ostend. Every effort of the Germans to take Ypres has been frustrated by British forces.

It is the opinion of both French and British military authorities that the Kaiser is bent on a herculean effort to reach the channel coast, or, at least, establish himself in positions which are impregnable in the west before turning back numbers of troops to meet the oncoming Russians.

The country between Dixmude and Ypres, where the belligerents have been engaged in violent attacks and counter attacks for weeks past, and where the losses have been heavier even than those in the battle of the Yser, is again the scene of a battle which for fury has seldom, if ever, been equaled.

At other points along the battle-front in France, the French official communication claims such successes for the allies, but the German headquarters staff declares that all attacks have been repulsed.

It is considered quite certain that with the enormous forces required for the effort to get through to the coast and to protect their own country from Russian invasion the Germans will not be able to throw any additional troops into the lines which stretch through northern France and along the Franco-German border.

On the other hand, the French, whose army is growing daily, might attempt an offensive against Lorraine or Alsace as a diversion, which would relieve the pressure in the west.

Mr. Culverwell's Gift To Fund

Port Hope Guide: Our generous townsman, Mr. J. A. Culverwell, has given a cash donation of one hundred dollars to the Patriotic Fund. To help along this same worthy object, Mr. Culverwell invited a large party to the Patriotic Concert last evening including the Clergy and their wives, ninety Boy Scouts, the Firemen and their wives, the young ladies of the Bell Telephone office and others. This numbered about one hundred and fifty and when it is considered that it is all for the same cause, the Patriotic Fund, Mr. Culverwell has nearly duplicated his previous subscription of one hundred dollars.

PAYMENT HAS BEEN WITHHELD

The Council is in receipt of a communication from Chipman and Power consulting engineers of Toronto, requesting payment of an account amounting to about seven hundred dollars. Payment has been withheld on the grounds that the work, which concerns the Romaine Street sewer project, was defective. The matter will be taken up at a meeting to be called later, when the City Solicitor will be invited to be present.

Mayor Buller For 1915

His Worship Mayor Buller has announced his intention of retaining the civic reins of government for another year providing he is unopposed. The Mayor feels that he is entitled to a second term, but is not disposed to oppose the election of any one desiring to enter the field. It is customary for a Mayor to serve the City for at least two consecutive years, and upon these grounds Mayor Buller will volunteer his services to the City for another year.

Many citizens have approached him with the suggestion that he remain in power for another year, as by that time the present unsettled state of affairs, brought about by the war, will have passed over.

LAKEFIELD BOYS OFF

Council of the Village Gave Each of Them $5

Lakefield, Nov. 11.— Five Lakefield boys left this morning on the 7.40 train for Kingston to prepare for overseas service. Those who left were Messrs. Wilbert Webster, Jr., Chas. Armstrong, Walter Perks, Joe Hill and H. Pemberthy.

The local regiment and the five who left this morning paraded to the station, headed by the Citizens' Band. The boys were met there by the members of the Council, and each was presented with five dollars, while Mr. Pemberthy received a wrist watch as a token of the esteem in which he was held by the members of the A.Y.P.A. Clu bof the Anglican church. A bundle of clothing was given to each by the Soldiers' Comfort Club of the village. A huge crow turned out to see the boys off and the train pulled out to the strains of "Auld Lang Syne."

SUBMARINE SINKS NIGER ALL OF CREW RESCUED

Obsolete British Torpedo Boat Destroyed in Downs—Four Men Injured.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—The little British torpedo boat Niger, which was built twenty-two years ago and has been used as a tender, is the latest victim of a German submarine. She was torpedoed yesterday morning in the Downs north of the Straits of Dover and foundered immediately. The officers and crew were saved.

The admiralty in announcing the loss of the ship says:

"The Niger, Lieut. Commander Arthur T. Muir, was torpedoed this morning, Nov. 11, in the Downs. All the officers and 77 of the crew were saved. Four men were injured. It is thought that there was no loss of life.

"The Niger has been employed in semi-combatant duties."

OFF TO CATCH GERMANS?

Japanese Warships Sail From Honolulu For Unknown Ports.

HONOLULU, Nov. 12.—The Japanese battleship Hizen and cruiser Asama, which entered this port Tuesday for coal and provisions, left here yesterday for an unknown destination.

Rumor has it in the Japanese colony that the warships will rendezvous with a Japanese fleet nearing the coast of Chile, where it is supposed to be seeking the German cruisers believed to be in that vicinity.

Two Japanese merchantmen now at Hilo are due to be in that vicinity, in view of the sinking of the Emden, and the known presence of the remainder of the German Pacific squadron off the coast of South America. It is not believed the Hizen and the Asama will be detailed to convey them.

British Cruisers In Port.

BUENOS AYRES, Nov. 12. — The British cruisers Carnarvon and Defence, accompanied by the transport Grama, have put into this port.

SERVIANS VICTORIOUS.

Austrian Attack Is Completely Defeated Near Semendria.

VALIEVO, Nov. 12. — The long-awaited Austrian invasion down the Morava Valley commenced Tuesday, when six battalions of infantry, with two Maxims, crossed the Danube into Servian territory near Semendria.

The passage was covered by the fire of Austrian batteries, posted on the left bank of the Danube and on the island of Semendria. The Servian outposts retired, and the invaders were unmolested until the Servian force opened a vigorous counter-attack. The combat ended with the complete defeat of the Austrians.

Many were killed and others drowned in endeavoring to swim the Danube. Two thousand prisoners, including a colonel and six other officers, were taken. The maxims were also captured.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Reports reaching Pekin from Harbin, Manchuria, set forth that Russia is transporting her European prisoners of war as far east as Vladivostok.

At Shannonville an evaporator, the property of William Elliott, was destroyed by fire yesterday. The building with machinery was valued at $3,000.

The ship Tofua, chartered by the American commission for relief in Belgium, landed 1,260 tons of food in Rotterdam yesterday. Three thousand tons of foodstuffs have been rushed inland.

Certain points in Friesland and Groningen provinces, in the Netherlands, along the Ems and the Frisian Islands, have been declared in a state of siege, in order to prevent illegal exportation.

The London members of the Catholic Benefit Society have decided to fight the recent rate increase in rates ordered by the executive of the order, and have engaged counsel to take the matter to the courts.

Another bomb outrage committed by Chinese revolutionaries occurred yesterday at Canton, outside the residence of Gen. Chi Kiang Lung, who is in charge of the Canton district. Thirteen persons lost their lives.

In addition to two British ships, Turkish officials have seized two Dutch vessels at Smyrna. The Dutch consul protested, but the Vali alleged that the ships carried merchandise belonging to enemies of Turkey.

REBELS ARE LOOTING.

Small Robbery and Vandalism Are Do Wet's Chief Operations.

JOHANNESBURG, Nov. 12.—The chief object of the rebels appears to be the looting and destroying of private and state property. Wherever adherents of the rebels herald their entry into villages by commandeering horses, carts, rifles and ammunition, looting the stores, plundering the storekeepers and peaceful farmers, and bringing the ordinary business of the towns and the farming operations of the northern Orange Free State to a standstill.

Gen. Christian De Wet, by the sinister use of the sjambok, has compelled many to join him.

The captured rebels to date are: Hertz commandos, 631; Beyers' followers, 931. Total, 1,562.

Although the country generally is exhibiting the greatest trouble for patience, everything points toward an immediate demonstration in force against De Wet.

FLOWER MEN IN SESSION.

Horticulturists From All Parts of Ontario Attend Convention.

vdrRf fiWFAo lx&m :n-m thmm

The annual convention of the Ontario Horticultural Society of Ontario opened a two-days' session in the Railway Committee Room of the Parliament Buildings, Toronto, on Wednesday, when a number of interesting matters were presented and discussed.

The report of the superintendent, J. Lockie Wilson, stated that during the past year 1,700 members had been added to the membership in nine societies. The competitions in the beautification of lawns, gardens, back yards, etc., had taken hold of the people in the cities where great interest was being taken in the work. The increases in order of precedence in these nine societies were:

St. Thomas 302, bringing the membership up to 1,100; Stratford comes next with an increase of 313 to its 600 members; St. Catharines, 270 increase; Windsor, 179; Brantford, 170; Walkerville, 120; Berlin, 100; Hamilton, 79; Winchester, 65.

The great growth in St. Thomas is attributed to its system of prizes, which are medals and other trophies.

The total receipts amounted to $947, for which there is a balance on hand of $168.

J. H. Bennett, president, in his address referred to the death of Sir James Whitney, and expressed the confidence of the society in the new Premier, Hon. W. H. Hearst.

Those present from Peterborough were Messrs. H. B. Cowan, Cecil Williamson, Walter Stocker, Harry Beal, and Frank Wise.

A MILD REQUEST.

"Excuse me, sir," said the strap-hanger, "but would you mind moving your partmanteau from the gangway? I really can hardly find room to stand."

"Move my portmanteau," gasped the stranger, "those, sir, are my feet."

"Is that so?" said Jenkins, "then perhaps you would pile them one above the other."

BIRTH.

AXFORD—On November 11, to Mr. and Mrs. D. N. Axford, 77½ Smith street, a daughter.

ALLIES REPORTED AT OSTEND

TURKEY DECLARES WAR ON ALL THE ALLIES

90,000 Is Estimate of German Losses During Week Around Nieuport

LONDON, Nov. 13.—With all the reports including the official statement of the War Bureau telling the desperate fighting in Belgium, it is believed here that the attempt of the Germans to hack their way to the coast is reaching a climax. Having advanced from Nieuport to Lombartzyde along the coast, the Allies continue to press their offensive in this section. News despatches received here from Rotterdam quote refugees as declaring they saw the Allied forces entering Ostend. No official confirmation has come from the War Office on this point.

Entire regiments of Germans attempting to storm the British positions in massed formation have been wiped out reports from the front declare. The casualties of the enemy during one week are placed as high as 90,000 in some reports, and it is declared the German force at the beginning of the drive toward the coast numbered half a million.

CLAIMS GERMAN COMMERCE IS NOT ENTIRELY CUT OFF

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—Germany is not cut off from the commercial world, Consul Seltzer of Breslau to-day reported to the State Department.

Transportation is practical and possible, he said, through ports of neighbouring neutral countries of Denmark and Netherlands. Although they are perhaps reduced in volume of output, owing partly to their interruption and partly to great domestic consumption, he said, it would be a grave error to consider German industries paralyzed.

RUSSIANS GET CONTROL OF IMPORTANT RAILWAY

LONDON, Nov. 12.—In the occupation of Johannisburg, announced today by the Russian general staff, the Czar's armies have secured another important point on the German railway line which runs through East Prussia, skirting the frontier of Russian Poland. With Lyck and Soldau already in his hands, this gives to General Rennenkamp practical control of this valuable railroad, as well as of several branch lines running into the interior. Indications are that the Russian offensive in this quarter is being vigorously pushed.

The central army, which drove the Germans back from the Vistula, has had only unimportant engagements, but it is known to be pushing forward to the borders of Posen and Silesia, which the Germans are crossing. The Russian left wing has followed the Kielce railway to the Austrian frontier, and is within a few miles of Cracow, the siege of which is imminent.

The southern army, under General Ruszky, is at Rzeszow, between Przemysl and Cracow, and its crossing of the San River in force compelled the Austrians. Another detachment continues the siege of Przemysl, while still another is operating against the Austrians who are holding the passage of the Carpathians.

The manner in which Grand Duke Nicholas, the Russian commander-in-chief, is wielding these armies and the mobility they are showing are the subject of admiration on the part of military men here.

ALLIES' LINE FORMS STOUT BARRIER ON ROAD TO COAST

PARIS, Nov. 13.—The Germans attempted on Wednesday night and yesterday to swarm across the River Yser and beat back the Allies from Nieuport to Ypres. They were repulsed to the right bank at every point except one, where betwen Dixmude and Ypres they held last night possibly 200 yards of the left bank.

The Government in its reports of the past two days' fighting frankly admits the success of the Germans in throwing a detachment across the Yser following their occupation of Dixmude, but plainly indicates that the allies have suffered no important reverse, and that the Allies' line bars the way to Dunkirk and Calais as determinedly as ever. The capture of Dixmude and the crossing of the Yser at one point appear to be merely new fluctuations of the battle. The Germans have crossed the Yser once before, only to be driven back, and both allies and Germans have held Dixmude more than once in the desperate conflict of the past four weeks.

Availed Them Nothing.

The essential points of the day's reports is that the Germans have not been able to profit by their slight advance at the points mentioned in Belgium, although they have attacked fiercely night and day. The Allies could not be dislodged from their stronghold at Ypres, and continue a resolute defence east of Armentieres. The Prussian Guard stacked the British trops and were repulsed. Southward along the west flank to the Oise the fighting has been less severe. It appears from the official reports that the Germans have centred their attack on the line of Dixmude-Ypres-Armentieres, evidently under pressure to reach the French Coast if possible at any cost.

ASQUITH WANTS AN ARMY OF 2,000,000

LONDON, Nov. 13.—It is reported in the parliamentary lobbies that Premier Asquith will on Tuesday ask Parliament's sanction for the raising of a million additional troops for the purposes of the war, thus bringing the total up to 2,650,000 men.

Much interest is shown in the financing of the war. It is understood that the Government intends to issue a war loan of $1,000,000,000 or more, probably at 4 per cent., and redeemable within ten years. It is estimated that Great Britain is spending $35,000,000 weekly on the war, and, in addition to the war loan, the Government may propose to raise a further $250,000,000 by increasing the income tax to half a crown in the pound. This would provide for the necessary expenditure till next March, the end of the financial year.

TURKS WERE ROUTED BY RUSSIANS

Attempted to Envelop Left Wing of Russian Army in the Caucasus But Were Routed With Cross-fire

COSSACKS CLEANED UP

LONDON, Nov. [illegible] announced successes on the part of the Russian army invading Turkey by way of Armenia, are reported in an official communication from the general staff of the army of the Caucasus received to-night from Petrograd. The statement says:

"The attacks of the Turks on our positions at Koprukoi on Wednesday were repulsed with great losses to the Turks. A Turkish column which attempted to turn our left wing was subjected to the cross fire of our artillery, and was simultaneously attacked by our infantry. The Turks fled into the mountains in complete disorder, pursued by our cavalry.

"Under the protection of the fortified positions of Ivangorod the Turks continue to concentrate troops at Erzerum. They are largely are receiving reinforcements by way of Trebisond (on the Black Sea.)

"On Monday the Russians were attacked and defeated in the Sarikamessour Pass on the road from Erzerum to Van. They retreated in disorder, leaving behind their dead and wounded."

Want More Troops.

Advices from Rome say the Ottoman army lacks 700 officers, and that the authorities in Berlin, requested to supply the deficiency, have replied that it will be impossible to send all Germans, but that Austrians also will be sent, and will travel individually to Turkey as civilians. An Englishman arriving from Constantinople, which he left November 1, says there are nearly 3,000 German officers in the Turkish naval service, and German clerks have been in charge of the telegraph and postal departments and the censorship for the last two months.

A despatch from Athens says that a Turkish torpedo boat, which ran the allied blockade of the Dardenelles has been captured off Tenedos, an island five miles from the north-west coast of Asia Minor. It is reported from Petrograd that the battle cruiser Goeben has been penetrated by a shell at her water line, and is seriously damaged.

Reports reaching the Russian capital from the Turkish border attach increasing importance to the part the Armenians are playing in the Russian-Turkish war. In several towns occupied by the Russians the Armenian students have shown themselves ready to join the invading army, and explained that they had prepared themselves for the Russian approach by constant drilling and by gathering arms secretly. All along the line of march, according to these despatches, the Armenian peasants are receiving the Russian troops with enthusiasm and giving them provisions freely.

An Armenian newspaper, referring to this crisis in the history of Armenia, publishes the following: "The long anticipated day of deliverance for the Turkish Armenians is at hand and the Armenians are prepared for any sacrifice made necessary by the performance of their manifest duty."

To-day's War Bulletins

HEAVY CASUALTIES.

LONDON, Friday, Nov. 13, 11 a.m. —Premier Asquith announced today that the British casualties to date total 57,000 killed, wounded and prisoners.

GALLANT FRENCHMAN DIED AS HE WISHED

Grandson of Famous Historian Killed on Field of Battle.

PARIS, Nov. 13.— Though he fell near the end of August, the death has only just been announced of Ernest Psichari, grandson of the French philologist and historian, Joseph E. Renan. He was a lieutenant of artillery and was killed during the retreat of the allies in Belgium while defending his guns against overwhelming numbers of the Germans.

It is recalled that one of his books, "Appel es Armes," ends with a sort of prayer that the author might die on the field of battle.

Defence of Ypres One of The Greatest Episodes In British Army's History

LONDON, Nov. 12.—The Official Press Bureau issued the following statement to-night:

"The operations during the last few days have consisted mainly of fighting to the north of the Lys, where the points of interest were at first on the line of Hollebeke, Wytschaete and Messines. There have also been severe encounters on the line from Zanvoorde to Frelinghein.

"The character of the fighting has been one of frequent and vigorous infantry attacks from the Germans, accompanied by heavy shell fire, alternating with equally vigorous counter-attacks, the general result being the maintenance of our line, not without considerable losses on our side, but with still heavier losses on the other. Six machine guns and over one hundred prisoners were taken by us on the 9th.

"The allies' strength has been constantly maintained by reinforcements. Latterly the stress has been in the neighbourhood of Gheluvelt, to the north of Ypres, and at Dixmunde.

"The German artillery fire was practically a continual bombardment, intended to pulverize the defence preparatory to the advance of the infantry. In the centre the struggle has been at Ypres, the defence of which will certainly be reckoned in history as one of the most striking episodes of the British army.

"For more than three weeks the position, which projects like a bastion into the enemy's lines, has been held under a rain of shells which has hardly ceased by day or night. During this time the enemy has poured successive waves of infantry against it, only to see them break to pieces, one after the other."

BOTHA'S ARMY MEETS REBELS AND DEFEATS DE WET'S FORCE

LONDON, Nov. 13.—An official despatch from Lieut.-Col. Dirk Vandeventer concerning the defeat November 9 of a force of Germans and Boer rebels at Zandfontein, near the southern border of the German South-west Africa, was received here to-day. According to the report, the Union forces inflicted a loss of 120 killed or wounded and captured 25 men. The Union loss was 13 men killed and 11 wounded.

"Our officers and men who were [illegible] with some bullets, and suffered frightful wounds."

The news was received from Pretoria to-day that the rebel general, Chris. Muller, was captured in a farmhouse, where he had hidden after being wounded. He is a prisoner in Pretoria.

An official Pretoria despatch received by Reuter's says that Gen. Louis Botha came into contact with the rebel General de Wet's commando 24 miles east of Winburg, Orange River Colony, after a forced night march. The rebels were severely defeated, 200 being taken prisoners.

KAISER CALLS FOR LAST DROP OF BLOOD IN HOUR OF TRIAL

LONDON, Nov. 13.—A characteristic order issued by Emperor William to his troops has been found upon a German soldier wounded in East Prussia. It is as follows:

"Dear faithful soldiers,—You have not forgotten the day when crafty, barbarous Russia, having secretly prepared to attack our fair and peaceful Fatherland, mobilized her troops and moved toward our frontier. That same day I, in fulfillment of my duty and prompted by the best interests of the country, decided, in conjunction with my Government, to defend our land to the last drop of our blod.

"With this defensive purpose I was compelled to move my valourous troops into France, which, as an ally of Russia, was preparing to strike a blow at us on our western frontier.

"Thanks to the valour of my heroes, France has been severely punished, and Belgium, which interfered with our attack, has been added to the glorious provinces of Germany. From the course of military events you know that the punitive expedition into Russia has also been a brilliant success.

"But, although we obtained due requital for the affronted patriotism of Germany, we must now turn to the new task of protecting our hearths, which moribund France and barbarous Russia are making ready to attack. Henceforward military operations will take another form, which will soon be intelligible to you, my dear, valiant soldiers.

"My heroes, that hour of trial has now come for you and for the whole of Germany. It is necessary to concentrate all our energies on the repulse of our enemies, for otherwise Germany will be transformed from a magnificent free country into an enslaved, degraded province of Russia and France.

"If Germany is dear to you, if your families are dear to you, if your culture, your faith, your nation, your Emperor are dear to you, you will offer the enemy worthy resistance.

"Not one step backward into our country; remember, behind us destruction is threatening, and it is only before us that our happiness lies.

"For your country, for glory, forward, my dear, my faithful friends."

SEMI-BRITISH DUKES ARE IN GERMAN LINES

LONDON, Nov. 13.—The status of the two semi-British Dukes who are now fighting in the German army against Britain, the Duke of Cumberland and the Duke of Albany, will be debated in the House of Commons to-morrow on a question to be put by Swift McNeill, Nationalist, who is anxious to know how Premier Asquith purposes to deal with them.

Mr. McNeill will urge that they be deprived of their British peerages and titles and their seats in the House of Lords.

Cousins of King George.

The Duke of Albany, who has also the title of Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gothe, is a first cousin of King George. He was born in 1884 and educated in Britain and Germany. He has a commission in one British and in several German regiments. His wife is a daughter of the Duke of Schleiswig-Holstein.

The Duke of Cumberland is a second cousin of the King. He was born in 1845, and is a general in the British and a colonel in the Austrian armies. He married a daughter of King Christian IX. of Denmark.

Favoured Treatment?

The matter of the more favoured treatment accorded influential Germans in Britain will be raised by Harry K. Newman, Unionist, who purposes to question Mr. McKenna as to why British naturalization was granted to Baron Bruno Schroeder, a banker, since the outbreak of the war.

BATH TRAIN FOR RUSSIANS.

LOSDON, Nov. 13.—A despatch from Petrograd to Reuter's says: "The Ministry of Ways and Communications is sending to the front a 'bath train,' made up of more than twenty cars, which will provide 2,000 baths daily. A tank car will furnish water. Another car will be provided for drying and disinfecting outer garments, with ample provision for clean underclothes."

TURKS DECLARE WAR ON THE ALLIES

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 13—Turkey has declared war upon all nations of the Triple Entente, according to a message received here from Constantinople via Berlin.

HIDES, SKINS, WOOLS, ETC.

Beef hides continue strong, says John Hallam, and in good demand, although the tanners are not disposed to buy at the late quotations except to supply the particular kinds of leather necessary for military supplies. City butcher hides, flat, 14 1-2c. per lb. Country hides, flat, cured, 16 to 17c. per lb. Part cured, 15 to 16c. per lb.

Calfskins— The market is firm and well sold up; receipts are coming to market in fair supply. City skins, green, flat, 16c.; country, cured, 17 to 18 1-2c.; part cured, 16 1-2c., according to condition and take-off; deacons or bob calf, 85c. to $1.20 each.

Horsehides are steady, but quiet. City take-off, 4.50 to $4.75; country take-off, No. 1, $4 to $4.50; No. 2, $3.50 to $3.50.

Sheepskins are strong, and are being absorbed at full quotations. City lamb skins, pelts or shearlings, 75c. to $1.25 each; country lamb skins or shearlings, 50c. to $1.10.

Wool is unchanged, very small supplies being in the dealers' hands. Washed combing fleece (coarse), 28 to 30c.; washed clothing fleece (fine), 30 to 31c.; washed rejections (burry, chaffy, etc.), 23 to 26c.; unwashed fleece combing (coarse), 19 to 20c.; unwashed fleece clothing (fine), 21 to 23c.

Rural Fashion Plates.

Farmers are getting so prosperous around Hazel it is difficult to distinguish them, so far as dress goes, from city men. Hill Olive, who has been "portering" for hotels here ever since the town started, walked up to a well-dressed stranger recently and asked him if he would like to go to the hotel, whereupon the man replied: "No, I'll just go home. I live right out here about a half mile."

MARMORA'S GIFT TO VOLUNTEERS

Presents to All and One Is Drowned —Two Army Commanders Chosen

BELLEVILLE, Nov. 13.— Fifteen more volunteers of the 49th Regiment, Hastings Rifles, left this city to-night for Kingston to join the second contingent. This makes 6 members of the regiment to volunteer, and the complement of 75 is expected to be reached in a day or two. Last evening fifteen volunteers were given a grand sendoff in the village of Marmora. Reeve W. R. Bidwell presided. Five dollars and a wrist watch were presented to each man. All are single except one, whose life has been insured for $1,000 by the village, which has also pledged itself to look after his wife and three children.

Lieut.-Col. W. G. Ketcheson addressed his men at the Armouries here, and congratulated them on the fine showing they had made for Marmora.

COMBING WON'T RID HAIR OF DANDRUFF

The Easiest and Best Way is to Dissolve It

The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

Do this to-night, and by morning most if not all of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy, every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop at once, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

If you want to preserve your hair, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for nothing destroys the hair more quickly. It not only starves the hair and makes it fall out, but it makes it stringy, straggly, dull, dry, brittle and lifeless, and everyone notices it. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and never fails to do the work.

OUR SERIAL STORY PAGE

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Geo. Allan England

"That's one thing you've got to learn, old mother!" he exclaimed. "I'll milk presently. But not just yet!"

For first of all he must see Beatrice again. The boy must cry a bit, till he had seen her!

To the bed he hastened, and beside it fell on his knees. His eager eyes devoured the girl's face; his trembling hand sought her brow.

Then a glad cry broke from his lips. Her face no longer burned with fever, and her pulse was slower now. A profuse and saving perspiration told him the crisis had been passed.

"Thank God! Thank God!" he breathed from his inmost soul. In his arms he caught her. He drew her to his breast.

And even in that hour of confusion and distress he knew the greatest joy of life was his.

CHAPTER XXIX.

ALLAN'S NARRATIVE.

The week that followed was one of terrible labour, vigil and responsibility for Stern. Not yet recovered from his wounds nor fully rested from his flight before the Horde—now forever happily wiped out — the man nevertheless plunged with untiring energy into the stupendous tasks before him.

He was at once the life, the brain, the inspiration of the colony. Without him all must have perished. In the hollow of his hand he held them, every one; and he alone it was who wrought some measure of reconstruction in the smitten settlement.

Once Beatrice was out of danger, he turned his attention to the others. He administered his treatment and regimen with a strong hand, and allowed no opposition. Under his direction a little cemetery grew in the palisade—a mournful sight for this early stage in the reconstruction of the world.

Here the Folk, according to their own custom, marked the graves with totem emblems as down in the Abyss, and at night they wailed and chanted there under the bright or misty moon; and day by day the number of graves increased till more than twenty crowned the cliff.

The two Anthropoids were not buried, however, but were thrown into the river from the place where they had been shot down while rolling rocks over the edge. The vanished in a tumbling, eddying swirl, misshapen and hideous to the last.

With his accustomed energy he set his men to work repairing the damage as well as possible, rearranging the living quarters, and bringing order out of chaos. Beta was now able to sit up a little. Allan decided she must have had a touch of brain-fever.

But in his thankfulness at her recovery he took no great thought as to the nature of the disease.

"Thank God, you're on the road to full recovery now, dear!" he said to her on the tenth day as they sat together in the sun before the home cave. "A mighty close call for you—and for the boy, too! Without that good old goat what mightn't have happened? She'll be a privileged character for life in these diggings."

Beta laughed, and with a thin hand stroked his hair as he bent over her.

"Do you remember those funny goat pictures Powers used to draw, a thousand years ago?" he asked. "Well he ought to be here now to make a sketch of you handing one to our kiddums? But—it was no joke, after all, was it? It was life and death for him!"

He kissed her tenderly, and for a while they said nothing. Then he asked:

"You're really feeling much—much better to-day?"

"Awfully much! Why, I'm nearly well again! In a day or two I'll be at work, just as though nothing had happened at all."

"No, no; you must rest a while. Just so you're better, that's enough for me."

Beatrice was really gaining fast. The fever had at least left her with an insatiable appetite.

Allan decided she was now well enough again to nurse the baby. So he and the famous goat were mutually spared many a mauvais quart d'heure.

Tallying up matters and things on the evening of the twelfth day, as they sat once more on the terrace in front of Cliff Villa, he inventoried the situation thus:

1—Twenty-six of the Folk are dead.
2—H'yemba is disposed of — praise be!
3—Forty still survive—twenty-eight men, nine women, three children. Of these forty, thirty-three are sound.
4—The Pauillac is lost.
5—The bridge is destroyed, and eight of the caves are gone.
6—The entire forest area to the northward, as far as the eye can reach, is totally devastated.
7—The Horde is wiped out.

"Some good items and some bad, you see, in this trial balance," he commented as he checked up the items. "It means a fresh start in some ways, and no end of work. But, after all, the damage isn't fatal, as it might easily have been. We're about a thousand times better off than there was any hope for."

"You haven't counted in your own wounds just healing, or the terrific time you had with the Horde," suggested Beatrice. "How in this world you ever got through I don't see."

"I don't either. It was a miracle, that's all. From the place where I descended for a little repair work, and where they suddenly attacked us, to the colony, can't be less than one hundred and fifty miles. And such hills, valleys, jungles! Perfectly unimaginable difficulties, Beta! Now that I look back on it myself, I don't see how I ever got here."

"They killed both the men you had with you?"

"Yes; but one of them not till the second day. You see, the carburetor got clogged and wouldn't spray properly. I realised I could never reach Settlement Cliffs without overhauling it. So I scouted for a likely place to land, far from any sign of the cursed signal-fires.

"Well, we hadn't been on the ground fifteen minutes before I'm blest if one of my men didn't hear the brushwood crackling to eastward.

"'O Kromno, master!' said he, clutching my arm, 'there come creatures—many creatures—through the forest! Let us go!'

"I listened and heard it, too; and somehow—subconsciously, I guess—I knew an advance-guard of the Horde was on us!

"It was night, of course. My searchlight was still burning, throwing a powerful white glare into the thicket about a quarter-mile away, beyond the sand-barren where I had taken earth. I turned it off, for I remembered how much better the Folk could see without artificial light in our night atmosphere.

"'Tell me, do you see anything?' I whispered.

"The other fellow pointed.

"'There, there!' he exclaimed. 'Little people! Many little people coming through the trees!'

"For a moment I was paralyzed. What to do? There was no time now for a getaway, even if the machine hadn't been out of order. My mind was in a whirl, a rout, an utter panic. I confess, Beatrice, for once I was scared absolutely blue—"

"No wonder! Who could have helped being?"

"Because you see, there was no way out. Lord knew how many of the little fiends were closing in on us; they might be on all sides. The country was much broken and absolutely new to me. I had no defences to fight from, and it was night. Could anything have been worse?"

"Go on, dear! What next?"

"Well, the Horde was coming on fast, and the darts beginning to patter in, so I saw we couldn't stay there. I had some vague idea of stratagem, I remember—some notion of leading the devils away on a long chase, outdistancing them and then swinging round to the machine again by daylight, and possibly fixing it up in time to skip out for home. But—"

"But it didn't work out that way?"

"Hardly! I emptied my automatics into the brown of the advancing pack, and then retreated, flanked by my two men. They were keen to fight, the Meracaans were—always ready for a mix—but I knew too much about the poisoned arrows to let 'em. We stumbled off through the woods at a good gait, crashing away like elephants, while always, apelike, creeping and hideous, the little hairy beast-people stole and slithered among the palms."

Beatrice shuddered.

"Heavens!" she exclaimed. "I—I'd have died of sheer fright!"

"I didn't feel like dying of fright, but I infernally near died of rage when in about five minutes I saw a flicker of flame through the jungle, and then a brighter glare."

"They burned the Pauillac?"

"I guess so. I never went back to see. They probably burned the planes and tried to batter up the rest of it with rocks and things. They wrecked it all right enough, I guess. That was for the attack we made on 'em from its safe elevation at the bungalow. Well—"

"What then?"

"I can hardly remember. We trekked south, as near as I could reckon it, or south by east, with New Hope River as our objective-joint. Oh, what's the use trying to tell it all? You know the jungle at night?"

"Wild beasts, you mean?"

"And snakes, Beta! Some sensation to step on a copperhead and then leap off just in time to miss the snap of the fangs, eh?"

"Oh, don't Allan! Don't!"

"All right; I'll skip that part. Anyhow, we hiked till daybreak, when my men began to complain of severe pain in the eyes. I had to stop and rig up some shields for them, and smear their hands and faces with mud to keep off the sun. Well, we managed to eat a little fruit and get a drink of water; but as for rest, there was none. For inside an hour, hanged if the darts didn't begin dropping again!"

"They'd come up with you!"

(To be continued.)

Was Troubled With Choking Spells and Shortness of Breath.

When the heart becomes affected, there ensues a feeling of a choking sensation, a shortness of breath, palpitation, throbbing, irregular beating, smothering sensation, and dizziness and a weak, sinking, all-gone feeling of oppression and anxiety.

Many men and women drag along with weary step, and become worn out and haggard, when otherwise they could be strong and healthy if they would only pay some attention to the first signs of heart or nerve trouble. On the first sign of the heart becoming weakened or the nerves unstrung Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills should be given a fair trial and you will find that they will soon correct both these organs.

Mr. James Leard, Tryon, P.E.I., writes: "Just a few lines to let you know what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have done for me. I had choking spells, and was troubled with weakness of the heart and shortness of breath. I tried three doctors but they all failed. A neighbor recommended me to try your pills, so I got a box and they helped me so much I have taken six boxes. I highly recommend them to all who are troubled with their heart and nerves. I was not able to do any work for over two years; now I can do quite a bit."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50 cents per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Was Troubled for Years With Kidney Disease

And This Treatment Cured Me—This Statement Endorsed By a Baptist Minister.

The great majority of people are familiar with the extraordinary curative powers of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. But for the benefit of those who are not we continue to publish from day to day reports from persons who have been actually cured.

MR. MOSHER.

The case described in this letter was an extreme one, and the writer was in a very low condition when he began the use of these pills. The cure was so marked that Mr. Mosher's pastor did not hesitate to vouch for his statement.

By their unique combined action on the liver, kidneys and bowels, Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills cure in complicated cases which defy the action of ordinary kidney medicines.

Mr. W. H. Mosher, Brockville, Ont., writes:—"I used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and firmly believe there is no medicine to equal them. I was troubled for years with kidney disease, and this treatment has cured me. When I began the use of these pills I could only walk from my bed to a chair. Now I can go to the field and work like any other man. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are an excellent medicine."

This statement is certified to by the Rev. E. H. Emett, Baptist minister of Brockville, Ont.

By awakening the action of liver, kidneys and bowels Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills cure Constipation, Headaches, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney Disease, Liver Complaint and Backache. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE

The epidemic of foot and mouth disease that has broken out in the United States has already spread to such an extent as to be recorded as the worst attack in the history of that country. The disease has been disporsed all the way from the corn belt states in the west to Massachusetts in the east. The stockyards at both Chicago and Buffalo have been closed for disinfection, and much of the prime finished Canadian cattle that have been going to the other side will have to be marketed at Toronto and Montreal.

An unfortunate feature of the outbreak is that it should have occurred at the time of the National Dairy Show in session at the Union Stockyards, Chicago. Already word has been received that two of the herds on exhibition will be slaughtered, but hope is expressed for the other animals on exhibition. It would be a hard blow to the pure-bred dairy cattle business of America were the cream of America's herds to be sacrificed to check the spread of the disease. The business suspended at the Chicago yards amounts to 100,000 head and $1,200,000 of trade daily.

The Man Who Calls Out Reinforcements to Hold Line at Points Attacked

DUNKIRK, October 28 (By mail to New York).—A man in pyjamas (at least he wears them most of the time, being too busy to dress) is running the thousand and one details of the French army. General Joffre is at the head and he handles the big questions, presses the buttons, so to speak, but General Bertholet, Chief of Staff, does the actual work. During the battle of the Aisne, Bertholet was the hardest worked man in the world.

Here's how General Joffre keeps track of his 200 mile battle line.

After several trips along the fringe of the war; after meeting thousands of soldiers on the same day, some going north, some going south, in what appeared to be a hopeless tangle; after seeing convoy after convoy of food and ammunition, miles long, going to and coming from the fighting zone; after glimpsing ambulance caravans and trains, batteries of artillery, regiments of cavalry, armies of infantry, aeroplane corps, dirigible outfits, corps of engineers, platoons of horses, pontoon sections and what not, all seemingly jumbled, coming from nowhere and going no place, it struck me forcibly that the modern fighting machine is the most complicated thing on earth.

I tried to imagine myself commanding all this; to grasp how a 200-mile line of this sort could be controlled and how it could possibly be kept from getting tangled up with itself and without interference by an enemy. My curiosity grew until I decided to find out how all this business is managed by one man.

In General Joffre's headquarters in a certain long room, hangs a special map, the scale of which is 1-100. It shows every road, canal, railway, bridle path, pig trail, bridge, clump of trees, hill, mountain, valley, river, creek, rill and swamp. This is part of the outfit. Another part is a wonderful collection of wax-headed pins of all colours and sizes. These represent army units of all sizes and all organizations.

Into the long room run many wires, both telephone and telegraph. Wireless apparatus is also in this room. The way it works seems wonderfully simple when it is explained.

The battle is about to commence. The troops have been distributed all along the 200-mile line. The Germans are facing them. A bell rings: "Hello! Yes! The Germans are attacking General Durand's division? They are in superior numbers? The general needs reinforcements? All right."

The staff officer who has taken this information over the 'phone hurries to where General Bertholet is sleeping. The general has just dozed off. This is the first step he has had in 36 hours, but General Bertholet is wide awake in an instant. He jumps to the floor still wearing his pyjamas, the only garment he has worn for several days. The staff officer reports.

In a twinkle General Bertholet, who knows his map as he does his own face, locates Durand's division. He knows that ten miles back of Durand's command are quartered a number of reserves under General Blanc, according to the pins. Bertholet also learns from the pins that a number of auto-busses are near to Blanc's soldiers.

"Order General Blanc," he commands, "to reinforce Durand at once with 10,000 men, four batteries of 75 millimeter artillery, ten machine guns and three squadrons of cavalry. Tell Blanc to transport his troops in the auto-busses.

Within two minutes General Blanc has received the order. Within five more he is executing it, and General Durand is informed help is coming to him.

Then General Bertholet takes another nap, if the battle will permit. If it doesn't he stays awake to direct men who are miles away from him."

PRZEMYSL IS PREPARED FOR LONG SIEGE

(By W. G. Shepherd.)

PRZEMYSL, (via Vienna, The Hague and London), Nov. 8.—(Delayed)—The Austrian line in this section of Galicia still holds. Standing like a rock as a part of the main defences of Emperor Franz Joseph is Przemysl, apparently impregnable. It will never be taken except after a terrific struggle and the sacrifice of thousands of lives.

Not only is Przemysl prepared for an extended siege but the Austrians on the front beyond are entrenched in the best possible positions. The booming of the Russian guns assailing these positions is heard constantly but there is not a single line wavering. Arriving at Przemysl I was escorted to the front beyond the city by an officer detailed from the staff. There I spent a day amid the incessant firing of the Austrian batteries. The terrible roar of the heavy guns never ceased for an instant.

At daybreak the Russians began shelling the Austrian defences. They rained steel upon the Austrians throughout the day but were answered shot for shot. A Russian shell burst near Archduke Leopold Salvator. It threw a shower of earth upon him, but he was uninjured and apparently not concerned in the least by the incident.

Reports that the morals of the Austrian army is broken and that its ranks are being thinned by the ravages of cholera are untrue. The men have been vaccinated to prevent an outbreak of this disease. Austrian correspondents submitted to the same treatment.

Everywhere the determination to hold Przemysl to the last man is evident. It does not seem that the powerful fortifications here can ever be taken, except after an extended siege. Baron Hoetzendorf, chief of staff of the Austrian army, received me at his headquarters and told me much of the Galician situation.

"We want Americans to know the truth of the Austrian situation," he said.

BRITISH DEMAND FOR POTATOES

J. E. Ray, Trade Commissioner, Birmingham, England

Canadian exporters of potatoes have expressed a desire to communicate with importers in the Birmingham district, and it may be well to state the condition of the British market generally at the present time. Authentic reports state that all home requirements will be met by the home supply until the end of the year. During the first half of the year 1915 there is certain to be a shortage, and Canadian firms who hold their stocks until February or March may expect to realise much higher prices than will be obtainable during the next three or four months.

Last year Great Britain's imports of potatoes were valued at £2,589,038, the purchases from Germany being £429,186; from France, £585,487; from the Netherlands, £531,061; and from Belgium, £180,366. It will thus be seen that the European war will compel Great Britain to import from other sources this season. Canada should obtain a large share of the trade.

The names and addresses of several firms open to consider quotations for deliveries in the early part of 1915 are on file at the Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa.

ABILITY AND WORK PUT ASQUITH ON TOP

Prime Minister Won Scholarships to Take Him Through College—Had No Prestige to Start With

The career of Premier Asquith has in each of its four epochs been marked by strength and success. Without the aid of wealth he won his way by scholarships to Oxford, where he proceeded from one academic triumph to another; he won his way into Parliament by his clearness in expounding his political principles; without influence he secured a commanding position at the English bar, and, having proved his strength and ability, he has now in foreign policy achieved a new fame.

His father died when he was a boy of ten, and, being only a small manufacturer, the means of the family were so limited that entrance at Oxford was only possible because he swept the board of prizes at the City of London school, and won not merely an open scholarship, but also a leaving exhibition. When he began at the bar he was unknown to the powerful solicitors upon whose favors the young barrister must depend, and he helped to maintain himself by contributing articles on economics to the Statist and other leading papers.

His rise at the bar was in no sense meteoric, but he did achieve a great triumph by his brilliant and overwhelming cross-examination of Mr. MacDonald, the manager of the London Times, in the historic case arising out of the Piggott forgeries. "You take him, Asquith; you will do it well enough," said Sir Charles Russell, who led for Parnell against the Times. He did it well enough, and Mr. MacDonald left the witness box so utterly discredited in journalistic circles that he had to resign his position.

PREMIER ASQUITH

Mr. Gladstone took to him from the beginning, and when he formed his last Government in 1892 took the young barrister from the back benches to a seat on the Treasury bench and made him a member of the Cabinet without any preliminary Ministerial training.

The Ministery which Mr. Asquith had resigned his practice at the bar to join was short-lived, and then he did something that is illustrative of the simplicity and manliness of his character. He resumed his law practice. It was entirely without precedent for a Cabinet Minister to do this, and particularly one who had held the high office of Home Secretary, during which he was called upon to make decisions over-riding the judges in cases where appeals were made for the exercise of the royal prerogative of mercy.

The matter was brought up in the House of Commons, and in a few straightforward sentences Asquith explained that his own private fortune was not sufficient provision for his family, and that in the circumstances he did not feel it to be derogatory either to his personal dignity or to the dignity of an ex-Secretary of State to resume his work. The fact that he had married but the year before one of the wealthiest heiresses in England made his statement the more revealing of his eternally upright character.

Tommy's Naval Honors

The bluejacket often takes part in land fighting, as witness the doughty deeds of the Naval Brigade in the Crimea, and, in more recent times, in Egypt and South Africa.

The amphibious Marine excepted, however, it is exceptional to find Tommy Atkins fighting at sea. Nevertheless, at least three British regiments bear naval battle honors. One is the 2nd Battalion the Welsh Regiment, which served Sir John Jervis at the naval battle off Cape St. Vincent, 1797. Lord Nelson christened the the "Old Agamemnons" after his own ship the Agamemnon, and the nickname stuck.

They are also known as the "Ups and Downs" from the fact that their regimental number "69" can be read either way up. The other naval honor bearing corps are Princess Charlotte of Wales' Royal Berkshire Regiment and the Rifle Brigade. Both were embarked at Yarmouth on the fleet under Sir Hyde Parker and Lord Nelson.

Bugler Boy and Hero

Mary

like all other young people, is crazy about dancing --and that is where the Victor-Victrola comes in just fine.

"I used to have lovely times at little informal dances at our friends' who have Victrolas, but when it came to inviting them to our house—well I was a little bit ashamed to do it.

"You see, our music couldn't even be compared with theirs, and besides, some one always had to miss dancing in order to play for us, so when father finally got the Victrola, we were all delighted.

"Now we have the latest dance music, played by the very same orchestras that are so popular with society. We know it is always just right for dancing, because Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle, who are the last word on the dance question, personally superintend the making of every Victor Dance Record.

SOME HOT SHOT

We all make mistakes, and occasionally it does us good to be told about them. The following paragraphs are from an address of Mr. G. G. Publow, Chief Dairy Instructor for Eastern Ontario, in which he talked in a heart-to-heart fashion with the Eastern Ontario dairymen who composed his audience.

"We need to wake up to the seriousness of the green cheese situation. In many factories that I have visited we could not find cheese over four or five days old. Such green cheese reaches Montreal in the very worst condition and age for trying. We tell the boys what is right, but they go away and do just exactly what they know, and what we tell them, is wrong. They complain about bad weights and rind going wrong, but these are defects due to green cheese.

"We cheese makers should have a little higher ideal for our occupation. If we don't get this ideal we won't work up. We should all be inspectors of our own work. Don't wait for the inspector to come around and find fault. Look for the faults yourself. If you hear of a neighboring maker who is doing better than your are, go and see why it is and then go home and imitate him."

A new subsection in the Dairy Industry Act deals with the weight of butter as put up in prints or blocks. This subsection reads as follows: "No person shall sell, offer, or have in his possession for sale, any butter moulded or cut into prints, blocks, squares or pats, unless such prints, blocks, squares or pats are of the full net weight of one-quarter pound, one-half pound, one pound or two pounds at the time they are moulded or cut. Nothing in this paragraph shall be held to apply to butter in rolls or lumps of indiscriminate weight as sold by farmers." —Farm and Dairy.

WOMAN NERVOUS, WEAK AND DIZZY

Could Not Do Housework for Family of Three. Vinol in a Short Time Made Her a Strong Well Woman.

Port Edward, N. Y.—"I was in a run-down condition, nervous, weak and dizzy, so that in doing the housework for my little family of three, I would be all exhausted. I tried cod liver oil emulsions and three or four other medicines without benefit. Finally a friend told me about Vinol and I tried it. Soon felt better and now it has built up my strength, I have no more nervous or dizzy spells, and can do all my housework without getting all tired out."—Mrs. ELMER GLIDDEN, Port Edward, N. Y.

Women are so active nowadays, and so much is expected of them, that they constantly overdo and suffer from headaches, backache, nervousness and kindred ills. Vinol is a most efficient strength creator for such women.

It is the medicinal elements of the cod's liver, aided by the blood making and strengthening properties of tonic iron which makes it so far superior to all other tonics.

If you are in this condition try Vinol on our guarantee to return your money if it fails.

VALUE OF HEN MANURE

A recent bulletin of the Maine Agricultural Experiment Station shows that the poultryman or farmer can materially add to the profits of his business by properly caring for the droppings of his fowl. For example it is shown that the droppings from 1,000 fowls if preserved without needless loss are worth at least $300 per annum, and this estimate is based on the assumption that less than half of the droppings, or only 30 pounds a hen a year, can be collected.

According to the Maine station the droppings should be collected daily, and mixed with substances which will (1) prevent loss of nitrogen, (2) add sufficient potash and phosphoric acid to make a better balanced fertilizer, and (3) improve the mechanical condition of the manure so that it can be applied to the land with a manure spreader.

This can be done as follows: To each 30 pounds of the manure add 10 pounds of sawdust, good dried loam, or peat, 16 pounds of acid phosphate, and eight pounds of kainit. Such a mixture will contain about 1.25 per cent. of nitrogen, 4.5 per cent. of phosphoric acid, and 2 per cent. of potash, which used at the rate of two tons per acre would furnish 50 pounds of nitrogen, 185 pounds of phosphoric acid, and 80 pounds of potash, and at the present price of fertilizing ingredients, is worth about $40 a ton. The mixture would furnish a well balanced stable fertilizer, which although not fine enough to work well in drills, can be successfully applied with a manure spreader. The treated manure should be well sheltered until time to apply to the land, that is, shortly after plowing.

MOTHER! IF CHILD'S TONGUE IS COATED

If cross, feverish, constipated, give "California Syrup of Figs."

A laxative to-day saves a sick child to-morrow. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels, which become clogged up with waste, liver gets sluggish; stomach sour.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, or your child is listless, cross, feverish, breath bad, restless, doesn't eat heartily, full of cold or has sore throat or any other children's ailment, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," then don't worry, because it is perfectly harmless, and in a few hours all this constipation poison, sour bile and fermenting waste will gently move out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. A thorough "inside cleansing" is oftimes all that is necessary. It should be the first treatment given in any sickness.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Look carefully and see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company."

OUR MOTHERS

Almost Jesus' last words were addressed to his mother. On the cross in the hour of His supreme physical and mental agony, He thought of her. From the cross, in that same hour, He said: "Woman, behold thy son." Then to the disciple, whom He loved, He also said: "Behold thy mother."

Our own beloved mothers, are we always as loving, as demonstrative, as thoughtful of them, as we ought to be?

How much of life's heart-sore comes from the fact that we do not express often enough the love we feel. Do not be ashamed now, right off, to go and tell mother or try to, how dear she is to you. If the words will not come, then write it and leave a little love-note, where she will be sure to find it. You have no idea how much good it will do her, what joy it will bring her, what cares it will lighten. Do not be ashamed also, to be demonstrative, to give her a loving hug and kiss; if not before others, then when you have her all to yourself. But, before others, it is a tribute she richly deserves. Do this, no matter whether you are in your "teens" or the "ty's," whether her hair has the hue of middle life or the silvery one of age. Then be as thoughtful of her as ever you can. Give her all the attention and pleasure possible. Treat her as the one nearest and dearest to your heart.

It is they that have made our homes the loveliest spot on earth, as they, the discouraged ones toil over the wash-tub, make and re-make dresses, trim hats out of nothing, strain every nerve to make ends meet, with eyes beautiful and with expression, which tells of a soul brave, cheery, gentle and loving, amid life's struggles; our mothers.—I. This Man "Al" Says Heart Was Cracked

JERSEY CITY, Nov. 11.—This isn't a story of a now more or less famous "busher," but is from the divorce court here. The plaintiff's name is "Al"—Albert Steinmitz. He has sued his wife, Lena, and in testifying to-day declared that one night when he and his wife and a man friend were out for an automobile ride he heard sounds which made him think "something was wrong with a rear tyre."

"I looked around," said Steinmitz, "and it was those two kissing."

After the couple separated in July Mrs. Steinmitz said her husband wrote her saying his "heart was cracked."

"I said to him," declared the wife, "Al, if you don't come back my heart will break; and remember, Al, a cracked heart can be mended, but there is no help for a heart which is broken."

Al had instance number two. He said that in 1913 they had a party to watch the eclipse of the room. His wife and a friend were in the back yard, he said.

"They weren't looking at the moon either," said the husband. "My wife called to me 'come on out, Al, look at the eclipse.' 'No, Lena,' I said, 'all I can see is my own eclipse.'"

BREATHE FREELY! OPEN NOSTRILS AND STUFFED HEAD—END CATARRH

Instant Relief When Nose and Head Are Clogged From a Cold. Stops Nasty Catarrhal Discharges. Dull Headache Vanishes.

Try "Ely's Cream Balm."

Get a small bottle anyway, just to try it—Apply a little in the nostrils and instantly your clogged nose and stopped-up air passages of the head will open; you will breathe freely; dullness and headache disappear. By morning! the catarrh, cold-in-head or catarrhal sore throat will be gone.

End such misery now! Get the small bottle of "Ely's Cream Balm" at any drug store. This sweet, fragrant balm dissolves by the heat of the nostrils; penetrates and heals the inflamed, swollen membranes which lines the nose, head and throat; clears the air passages; stops nasty discharges and a feeling of cleansing, soothing relief comes immediately.

Don't lay awake to-night, struggling for breath, with head stuffed; nostrils closed, hawking and blowing. Catarrh or a cold with it running nose, foul mucous dropping into the throat, and raw dryness is distressing but truly needless.

Put your faith — just once — in "Ely's Cream Balm" and your cold or catarrh will surely disappear.

TO INCREASE U.S. NAVY AS RESULT OF GREAT WAR

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11.—This great European war will cause a vast increase in the American navy during the next few years according to the belief in naval circles to-day.

On a reliable authority it is stated that Secretary of the Navy Daniels will recommend to Congress in December the construction of two battleships. The Secretary in his direct message will ask for only two battleships, but supplementing his recommendations will be the recommendations of the General Board, which will ask for four dreadnoughts and five scout cruisers.

The fate of such a programme before Congress will be controlled almost entirely by the war. If by the time Congress meets again the war is still raging, public sentiment may sanction such a ship policy.

But if there is a lull and peace plans appear possible, it may be impossible for the recommendation to be given serious consideration, especially the recommendations of both the Secretary and the General Board.

At the beginning of this month the Secretary discussed with the Board the naval programme for next year, the needs of the navy were gone over thoroughly. The cruisers were considered for use for such duty as were performed at Vera Cruz, as a poor policy and they declare it has had a "demoralizing" effect upon the navy.

It is pointed out the entire regular work of the Atlantic fleet has been interfered with and that the junior officers have had no opportunity to engage in battle target practice. It is stated also that the entire personnel of the fleet has been out of training.

Reports from Washington declare that the General Board will for the first time recommend the construction of submarines. The efficient work of U9, the German submarine which sank three British cruisers, is said to have made a profound impression upon the naval officials.

It is understood that the Democratic leaders in both the House and Senate have advised Secretary Daniels that it will be unwise for him to recommend the construction of more than two battleships. For this reason, the Secretary did not acept the full recommendations of the General Board and will not include them in the body of his message.

LOGICAL DYSPEPSIA TREATMENTS

IMPORTANCE OF ELIMINATING ACIDITY AND FOOD FERMENTATION.

During the past two or three years reports have frequently appeared in the press concerning the remarkable value of bisurated magnesia as an antacid; and its ability to promote normal, healthy digestion by preventing food fermentation and neutralizing dangerous stomach acid has often been demonstrated. Until recently druggists could supply bisurated magnesia in powder form only, from one to two teaspoonfuls of which, taken in a little water after meals, almost instantly stops all fermentation and neutralizes acid, but sufferers from stomach trouble will be glad to learn that, after a long series of experiments, a leading firm of manufacturing druggists has now succeeded in producing a 5 grain tablet which combines all the valuable antacid properties of the ordinary bisurated magnesia in a very convenient form. This pellet, which is called Bisurated Magnesia can now be found at druggists everywhere and many physicians are already prescribing them instead of the powder form.

Pope Will Seek Peace.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—Telegraphing from Copenhagen a correspondent of the Central News says:

"A despatch received here from Cologne affirms that the Pope shortly will endeavor to initiate negotiations for peace through the medium of a pastoral letter.

"The German view of this is that any such action by his holiness would raise the question of the Pope's temporal power and force Italy into taking an attitude against the proposal."

A WOMAN'S IDEAS

By E. L. McCauley

"Woman has not the business capacity of man."

How often we men have deluded ourselves and flattered our vanity with this comforting phrase. How often we hear the statement. And how unjust it is. It is my observation that half the farmers in the country would "go bust" if it were not for the economy and industry of their wives. We men lose much by not consulting our women folk more. What we get by slow and labored reasoning they come to quickly by intuition. They have moneymaking ideas from which we never profit because they are never asked nor encouraged to express themselves.

This philosophizing is the result of a visit that I paid recently to a neighboring farm. The farmer was comfortably well-to-do. He had inherited a good farm free from debt, and had added a little to his bank account each year. When turning the separator for his oldest daughter I found that if the proprietor was satisfied with things as they were his daughter certainly was not.

"If I had my way," said she, "we would soon do away with those scrub cows of ours and fill the stable up with about three times as many good dairy cows. We have been selling wheat off this farm until the soil won't produce good crops any more. Anyway, there's not much money in wheat. We can't expect to compete with the west."

Much more she said along the same line, and all good commonsense. Just the kind of advice that I had been looking for an opportunity to drop into my neighbor's ear for a long time. One remark in particular stays in my mind as it struck me at the time as being very much to the point. "A competence in farming," said this young lady, "is not made by toasting one's feet on the kitchen stove five months of the year. Some good cows would give us profitable work all winter."

This is only one case. There is no telling how many good ideas the mothers and daughters on every farm could express if they were given the opportunity.

Could Hardly Straighten Up For The Pain in Her Back.

Many women suffer from an excruciating pain in the back. They are not even able to look after the common duties of their housework, and cannot even walk at times.

The whole trouble is that the kidneys have become affected, and when the kidneys get "out of kilter" the whole system becomes deranged. On the first sign of a weak, lame, aching back you should not neglect it, for if you do, you may be sure that some serious kidney trouble will follow.

What you want is a kidney medicine, for kidneys only. This you will find in Doan's Kidney Pills. Doan's Kidney Pills know nothing but kidney disorders, because they're made for kidneys only.

Mrs. George Craigie, Rose Valley, P.E.I., writes: "I am writing to tell you what a wonderful cure Doan's Kidney Pills did for me. I was suffering with a lame back, and for several days I could hardly straighten up for the pain. I had used quite a lot of other kind of pills, but received no relief. Just then my sister told me about what "Doan's" had done for her, so I decided to try them. I used three boxes and I am completely cured. I do not hesitate to recommend them to all."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c a box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

Bathrooms In Trenches.

PARIS, Nov. 12. —The French have learned to outdo the enemy in the art of trench-making. An officer writes that not only have his men fitted a cooking range in their trenches, but have half a dozen bathrooms properly tiled, screened off and fitted with hot and cold water spray and shelter. Better still, is a regular system of drainage to be installed. Next to the baths is a shaving salon, and the soldiers are now at work upon a cafe concert hall, all underground, warmed and lighted, and something less than half a mile from the German lines.

LUCILLE LOVE THE GIRL of MYSTERY

CHAPTER III.

A Second Accusation.

GENERAL LOVE sat at his desk trying vainly to figure out what motive there could have been for his trusted aid's taking the desperate chance of which he had accused him.

But no matter in which direction he turned, the general was unable to see how the young officer could be honest. Where had he received the money so unexpectedly that led him to believe he might be married before his promotion was confirmed? And yet—always there was that "yet" to contend with. He knew the boy, knew him as well he had been willing to intrust his daughter's life to him, and he could not believe that Gibson was guilty of the charge.

He was roused from the reverie into which he had fallen by the entrance of his orderly, who told him of Lucille's flight to the Empress. Alarmed, the general sent for Harley.

Briefly Harley told of his trip to the Empress with Lucille, the earnestness of her pleadings, the final words that had won his consent.

"For the honor of the man I love."

Over and over again he repeated the words, trying to make something of them. Of course she meant Gibson, but what could she find out on the Empress relating to the robbery of the safe in this office? Puzzled he ordered his aid brought before him. There was a certain suspicion, an air of contempt in the very figure of Gibson that told the superior he was himself under another's suspicion. It was more than puzzling, more than baffling—that accusatory pair of frank gray eyes.

The Orderly Told Him of Lucille's Flight.

"Lieutenant," he began slowly, "I have tried to think of some solution to this affair that will not involve you. You must realise how greatly I desire this. But I have thought for hours and there seems no other explanation of the disappearance of the papers I turned over to you. Can you suggest some other person that might possibly have an interest in their disappearance?"

"I can, sir," steadily answered the aid, his eyes holding those of the older man. "I am not, however, insubordinate nor insolent to my superior officer."

The smoldering flame in General Love's eyes leaped high as he grasped the seriousness of the accusation. By an effort he mastered himself, forcing his voice to steadiness.

"Harley, the aviator, has just reported that Lucille came to him this evening and persuaded him to take her to the Empress. She evidently felt she possessed information that would clear you of this charge and that the Empress was carrying the guilty party. Can you tell me anything of such knowledge?"

Gibson stared incredulously at his superior. Could it be possible that this old man was willing to make his daughter a scapegoat for his crime? No, it was all too unbelievable. And yet the general must have sold the papers. He could see no other explanation. But what was this tale of landing aboard the Empress in an aeroplane? The orderly again entered, silently passing a Marconigram across the desk.

Gibson stared wonderingly at his chief, wondering at the purpling of his already florid face. Suddenly with a choking laugh the old man tossed the wireless to his aid, the last blow of Hugo Loubeque: "Not the aid. General Love sold me papers."

The lieutenant felt a warm throb of pity for the old man. The general straightened slowly, rising from his chair.

"Somewhere, somehow there is an explanation," he muttered. "And Lucille is all that stands between us and disgrace. You will come with me, lieutenant."

"Yes, sir. You have some idea"—

"To the provisional governor," curtly answered the old soldier, "until this charge can be sifted. Meanwhile, we will wait until there is word from Lucille in answer to the message I sent."

"A message? You did not mention that."

"Certainly I sent a message immediately Harley told his story. We can drop in there on the way to the governor's mansion."

Gibson nodded shortly. He was in a haze still, feeling that his suspicions of the old officer had been unfounded, knowing that some evil brain was conniving at their destruction.

Gibson did not notice the general's orderly hurrying toward them until the man halted in salute there on the parade grounds, the moon casting an eerie shadow across his olive khaki.

"Sir," he reported, "the operator has tried to reach the Empress, but there is no response. Her wireless must be disabled."

General Love stared at his aid. Fear gleamed in the eyes of both men, a mutual fear for a mutual object. Who was this unseen enemy who struck such fierce blows from out of the dark? And Lucille, sweetheart and daughter; Lucille, the pampered, dainty, fragile Lucille was undoubtedly near this one who even commanded the lightnings to do his will.

* * * * * * *

Curiously Hugo Loubeque watched the operator as he settled back in his chair, almost immediately receiving the flash that a message was on the way to him from some unseen, unknown source.

Came a long sliver of light that seemed to nudge the switchboard violently from its fastenings, a shaft that reached out and pierced him through and through, blinding him with its bursting light vapor. Then Loubeque felt himself falling, falling into a pit that seemed to have no bottom.

It was hours before he could piece together what had happened, how he chanced to be in bed, what the cause of the terrible throbbing pains upon his arms and torso was. Then the wonder of Lucille's being with him, ministering to him, drove every pain away and he watched her from under cover of his heavy lashes as she moved about the stateroom, quiet, cool, sympathetic.

He straightened in bed so abruptly as to bring a moan of anguish from his lips. In the lassitude induced by his burns and the shock of the wireless room explosion he had concentrated the forty years that were past into the living presence of the daughter of the woman he had loved at that time. And she was his enemy.

He must not show resentment of her kindly interest, must not betray the fact that he had papers for which she was looking. The coincidence of her tending him was too strange to be unpremeditated.

"You are very kind," he said. "There was an explosion in the wireless room, was there not?"

"You must not talk till the surgeon comes," she smiled. "I must obey orders, you know, because I am only a volunteer."

"A volunteer! You volunteered to help a stranger!"

"But you are not a stranger." She smiled curiously. "You know my name and that made me feel really acquainted when you were hurt." There was something penetrating in the eyes fastened upon his own, something guileful about the suggestive expression of her tense that put him instantly on guard.

Day followed day with ever his faculties fastened on the necessity for caution. A curious sort of friendship sprang up between them, a friendship partaking more of an armed neutrality without the formality of a flag of truce than anything else he could imagine.

With the alleviation of Hugo Loubeque's sufferings the old animosity and purpose flourished with redoubled vigor. This girl had undoubtedly sought the opportunity of nursing him that she might defeat his purpose. She was the daughter of the man he had spent his life in working out a complete degradation for. He must fight down the weakness which assailed him when her resemblance to the Lucille of forty years ago surged strong within him. He must fight against her as he would fight against any one else, as he had fought against the very world.

And Lucille felt the change, felt it and redoubled her effort to get the secret of the stolen papers. The spirit of the game was in her, and she yielded a grudging admiration for the cunning of the man who, even in his most acute suffering, managed to conceal everything from her. Even in delirium his powerful brain resisted her suggestions, her hints. And in one of her days of ministration to him she discovered the diary in which he had entered his strange worldwide actions.

The international spy was able to walk about his room now, his eyes showing the satisfaction he felt at thwarting her. They played chess together, dined together, with always the armed deference between them, a state of mind so obvious as to have been ludicrous had they not both been so conscious of it. Many times she thought the strain was more than she could bear, when she doubted the wisdom of this trip. And always would come morbid pictures of her sweetheart to sustain her in her determination to clear him of the charge under which he rested.

This story can be seen in Photo-Play at the Royal Theatre, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of each week.

NEW SCHEME TO TEACH APPRENTICES

Grand Trunk Railway Decides on a Correspondence Course.

A correspondence course is to be one of the novel advantages enjoyed by Grand Trunk apprentices for the first time this winter.

Mr. W. D. Robb, the General Superintendent of Motive Power, has some six hundred apprentices in his department of the railway's work, the young fellows being trained in the various locomotive shops of the company at Montreal, Stratford, Battle Creek and other points. The benefits of this training are such that boys are sent from all parts of the American Continent, and even from Europe to take their apprenticeship here. If they pass their entrance examination they are given a trial of from two to three months in the shops and if satisfactory are asked to sign indenture papers binding them for the period their trade calls for—Machinists for five years, Patternmakers and Boilermakers for four years.

During this apprenticeship the boy has to attend classes arranged by the company and is taught Mechanical Drawing and Practical Mechanics.

Examinations are held periodically to test the knowledge of the boys, and at the end of the term a final examination is arranged for the whole system, the marks being compiled and the station having the highest percentage receiving a cash prize donated by the company. Individual prizes are also given to the boys.

This year it has been decided to improve the opportunities of the apprentices at small stations where it has not been possible to keep instructors. Correspondence courses, mapped out along the most improved lines, have been adopted for this purpose, and the boys will be in touch in their theoretical studies with headquarters in Montreal. Text books have been compiled by the company, both in drawing and mechanics suitable to the requirements, and these have been made as practical as possible, so that the practical work may line up with the theory taught.

The quality of the work done by the apprentices was shown this fall when apprentices from the Stratford shops obtained one first and three seconds in Mechanical Drawing competitions at Canadian National Exhibition, at Toronto, while the Montreal boys took two first prizes.

BRITAIN TO EMPLOY BELGIAN REFUGEES

LONDON, Nov. 11.—Those in charge of the Belgian refugees in Britain at last have yielded to public opinion that some consideration should be given to employing these people, on the ground of unhappiness and degeneration which would follow complete idleness.

Hitherto the Belgian Relief Committee has resisted the idea of employing refugees on the ground that it would unsettle the labour market in Britain and that the Belgians might not be anxious to return to their own country and to take up the hardships of rebuilding an invaded territory if comfortably settled and employed.

Lady Lugard from the first was one member of the Belgian Relief Committee who favoured finding employment for the refugees, and she has been instrumental in organizing "The Belgian Employment and Repatriation Committee," which at present is working upon this problem in conjunction with a committee of the Government under the chairmanship of Sir Ernest Hatch.

An advisory committee, consisting entirely of Belgians, also is in process of formation. The object of these committees will be to place Belgian labour now resident in Britain in those trade which need workmen and workwomen, and to do this in such a manner that it will not arouse the jealousy of the British working people.

To this end a labour representative has a seat on the Government's committee which is looking into this question. It also is planned to employ as many Belgians as possible upon the land, as it is felt their traditional skill in intensive cultivation will be useful.

INQUIRIES FOR PRISONERS.

International Agency in Switzerland Has Received 165,000 Letters.

BERNE, Switzerland, Oct. 31, (via Paris.)—The International Agency for Prisoners of War is in receipt every day of about 10,000 letters making inquiry concerning prisoners, and of about 800 letters supplying information concerning soldiers in the hands of the enemy.

Since the opening of the war this office has received over 165,000 requests for information, especially about French prisoners in Germany and German prisoners in France.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

Perhaps this case may be similar to yours

J. Wesley Tillis of (Box 573,) Solano, Cal., writes:

Gentlemen:—"It gives me much pleasure to be able to send you a testimonial, if by its publication you think our case sufficient will do as much for him as they have for me. At the age of fourteen I was troubled a great deal with malaria and biliousness, accompanied with the worst sort of large boils. I was persuaded by my parents, who have always been strong believers in Dr. Pierce's remedies, to try the 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I took one bottle and the boils all disappeared, but I did not stop at one bottle, I took three and the malaria all left me and I have had no more boils to this day, thanks to the 'Golden Medical Discovery' for my relief.

"Following an operation for appendicitis two years ago I was troubled very much with constipation and I began trying Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets and they have left me of the troublesome pain and have added much to my strength, and I can say to the world that I owe my health to the advice I have obtained from 'The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser.'" U. S. COLLEGE PROFESSOR WAS KILLED IN FRANCE.

Paul Cret of Pennsylvania University Gave Life for Country.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Nov. 10—A professor of the University of Pennsylvania, universally beloved for his goodness, and internationally famed for his work as a designer, has sacrificed his life in the cause of the French arms, according to a despatch from Washington. Paul Cret, whose allegiance was to France, but whose great career was inseparably connected with Philadelphia, died in battle while serving as a French private, and his body was buried where it fell, the despatch said. The message came as a great blow to thousands here who knew Professor Cret.

No treatment is so thorough and effective as a cure for croup and bronchitis.

Constantinople Plot Fails.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Co. from Athens says:

"It is learned that a conspiracy has broken out at Constantinople against the Germans and young Turks. The chief conspirators were arrested and shot.

"The population of the Ottoman capital, becoming very excited as a result of the Turkish defeats on Sunday, visited resentment on a number of German non-commissioned officers, whom they attacked."

ARMENIANS ARE AGAINST TURKS

Great Russians as Deliverers and Pay Off a Few Old Scores—Students Had Drilled Secretly

PETROGRAD, Nov. 12.—Reports reaching the Russian capital from the Turkish border attach increasing importance to the part the Armenians are playing in the Russian-Turkish War.

In several towns occupied by the Russians, the Armenian students have shown themselves ready to join the invading army, and explained that they had prepared themselves for the Russian approach by constant drilling and by gathering arms secretly. All along the line of march the Armenian peasants are receiving the Russian troops with enthusiasm and giving them provisions freely.

Day of Deliverance.

An Armenian newspaper, referring to this crisis in the history of Armenia, publishes the following:

"The long anticipated day of deliverance for the Turkish Armenians is at hand, and the Armenians are prepared for any sacrifice made necessary b ythe performance of their manifest duty."

From this border country there has come to Petrograd further reports of armed conflicts arising from the refusal of Armenians to become Turkish conscripts and surrender their arms. It is now rumoured that the important city of Van is to-day besieged by Armenian guerilla bands in great force. In Feiwan, the number of bands is said to exceed 20,000, and they are reported to have defeated all the Turkish troops sent against them, causing the Turks heavy losses.

100 Miles from Budapest.

A wounded Russian cavalry officer who has returned to the capital from Lemberg, in describing the Russian march into Hungary over the Carpathian Mountains, said that the Russians, after penetrating to within 100 miles of Budapest, were forced to return to avoid being cut off by Hungarian troops which had made their way through the western mountain passes.

GERMANY SHORT OF LEAD.

Requisitions All That Can Be Taken From Pipes.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—A cable from London to the Tribune says: "Besides the shortage of anaesthetics already reported, there is a considerable lack of lead in Germany, according to Dr. E. K. Johnstone, of San Francisco, an officer in the U.S. Medical Reserve Corps, who has just returned from a long stay in Belgium. Incidentally, Dr. Johnstone pays a high tribute to the German Red Cross, which he has afforded opportunities of studying comprehensively.

"There is no doubt that supplies of lead are running low in Germany owing to the stoppage of the mines in Galicia and Silesia," said Dr. Johnstone. "A few days before I left Berlin a secret order was issued calling upon the music stores to turn over to the Government all lead in pianos and other musical instruments in which that metal is used. This demand, which, of course, is being rigorously enforced has aroused feelings of the deepest dejection in the music trade, which foresees an immediate ruin to itself.

"The shortage of anaesthetics is due chiefly, I think, to the German general staff's belief that it could readily replenish its supply from captured Belgian and French medical stores, and as Germany does not produce the basic ingredients of ether or chloroform, the Red Cross is in bad shape in this respect."

"IS THIS YOUR LUCKY DAY"?

GERMAN ARMY COOKS WEAR THE IRON CROSS

(By Herbert Corey.)

LONDON, Nov. 10. — There isn't anything heroic about a cook. One simply cannot imagine a cook, in a soiled apron and a mussed white cap, doing a deed of valour. When things go wrong one either apprehends a cook chasing a waiter with a bread knife or else giving way to tears. But the German army is full of cooks upon whose broad, fat breasts dangle the Iron Cross. And the Iron Cross is conferred for one thing only—for 100 per cent. courage.

"They've earned it," said the man who had seen them. "They are the bravest men in the kaiser's four millions. I've seen generals salute greasy, paunchy, sour-looking army cooks."

The cook's job is to feed the men of his company. Each German company is followed, or preceded, by a field kitchen on wheels. Sometimes the fires are kept going while the device trundles along. The cook stands on the footboard and thumps his bread. He is always the first man up in the morning and the last to sleep at night. He is held to the strictest accountability. The Teuton believes in plenty of food—of a sort. A well fed soldier will fight. A hungry one may not.

"When the company gets into camp at night," said the man who knows, "the cook is there before it, swearing at his fires and the second cook, and turning out quantities of a depressing looking veal stew, which is, nevertheless, very good to eat."

When that company goes into the trenches the cook stays behind. There is no place for a field kitchen in a four foot trench. But those men in the trench must be fed. The Teuton insists that all soldiers must be fed—but especially the men in the trench. The others may go hungry, but these must have tight belts. Upon their staying power may depend the safety of an army.

A Mark For Enemy's Bullets.

So, as the company cannot go to the cook, the cook goes to the company. When meal hour comes he puts a yoke on his shoulders and a cook's cap on his head and warms the second cook in rumbling Teutonic orations as to what will happen if he lets the fires go out, and puts a bucketful of that veal stew on either end of the yoke and goes to his men. Maybe the trench is under fire. Being a trench, it most probably is. No matter. His men are in that trench—potstausend—they must be fed.

Sometimes the second cook gets his step right there. Sometimes the apprentice cook — the dishwasher, the grub murderer, the university graduate who has just learned what to expect when Fahrenheit is applied to spuds—is summoned from his job of rustling firewood to pick up the cook's yoke and refill the spilled buckets and tramp steadily forward to the line. Sometimes the supply of assistant cooks, even, runs short. But the men in the trenches always get their food.

"That's why so many cooks in the German army have Iron Crosses dangling from their lumpish breasts," said the man who knows. No braver men ever lived. The man in the trench can duck his head and light his pipe and be relatively safe. No fat cook yolked to two buckets of veal stew can ever be safe as he marches down the trench under fire. But he always marches. His men are always fed, and they are fed on time. The hero of the German campaign is the fat cook of the field kitchen."

The man who knows really does know. He has been along the German battle line, under protection of a headquarters pass.

"I have heard stories of Germans being reduced to eating grass and beetroots and turnips," said he. "Maybe here and there a lost soldier may have eaten such ensilage. The German solier who stayed with his company didn't have to. Whatever may have gone wrong with the German strategy nothing whatever went wrong with the German commissary. The food is pretty rough food, from my point of view; it is sprinkled with large, furious sausage, and is built on a displeasing foundation of stew, but it is good, filling, sustaining food. And the soldier always gets it."

Even when the trains of wounded wheel their frightful way to the rear a commissariat provision has been made for them. The German theory is that a man who is able to eat at all can eat a sausage. So soldiers walk along the platform with their arms full of sausages. Other soldiers follow with buckets of water and long dippers.

"Each wounded man who can eat is given a sausage. If he cannot eat and may still get some comfort out of a sausage, he gets it—two feet long and as thick as your arm. I've seen dying men and dead with these great green sausages nestled in the crook of their arms."

It is this man's belief, based on what he has heard, that the commissariat of the allies has from time to time broken down, but that of the German never has.

"Generally speaking, I think the English soldier has been well fed," said he. "The English dependence is in bully beef, just as that of the Teuton is sausage. Wherever you come upon an abandoned camp ground of Tommy Atkins you find a deep stratum of empty cans. The French and Belgian neighbour is apt to feed well on English beef, also. Atkins is a generous and somewhat improvident beggar. The French plot-plou depends mostly on wine. Give him wine and bread and he will go through any hardship. His spirit improves if you add to that a little sugar."

But it is the Germans who is notably plumped with excellent food. He is an expert at living upon the countryside, too—although this man says he doesn't loot except by way of reprisal upon a hedge-firing countryside. He pays for what he gets very largely, even if that payment is wholly valueless bits of paper, certifying that a German soldier upon a certain day took the farmer's hog away.

BE PRETTY! TURN GREY HAIR DARK

Try Grandmother's Old Favourite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural colour and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or grey; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe for about 50 cents.

Don't stay grey! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the grey hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy.

MORE FAST CRUISERS.

Lesson Learned from the Career of the Emden.

LONDON, Nov. 11. — To-day's critics of incidents in the closing of the career of the Emden naturally endorse very cordially the congratulations already extended by the Admiralty to the Australian Government on the distinguished service rendered by their own battleship.

One exponent of naval strategy remarks that the Emden's career shows that our naval strength in the Pacific at the outbreak of the war was not what it ought to have been.

The Westminster Gazette says:—Clearly we must have more fast cruisers of the same type. The lesson will no doubt be remembered when we come to reconsider the problem of Dominion navies.

PRICES OF APPLES AT POINTS IN CANADA

Reports on Markets Received by Department of Agriculture

OTTAWA, Nov. 12.—Telegrams from our fruit inspectors to-day to the Fruit Branch, Department of Agriculture, are:

Calgary—Prices are about the same as those last quoted, but the market is not so brisk. Several cars of Ontario and Nova Scotia apples have been received by the Grain Growers' Association.

Regina—Wholesale prices are as follows: Spies, $4.25; Snows, $4.50; Kings, $4; other varieties, $3.50 to $3.75. These prices are for No. 1 fruit. British Columbia apples (boxes) $1.25 to $1.50 for No. 1 and $1 to $1.25 for No. 2. The market is a little lower and more active. Apples are arriving in good condition, and about 80 per cent. of the stock is No. 1.

Winnipeg—Wholesale prices: Spies, $4; Baldwins, $3.25 for No. 1 and $3 for No. 2; Ben Davis, $3.15; Russets, $3.50 for No. 1 and $3 for No. 2; Tolman Sweet, $3.25; Twenty Ounce, 3. Very few Snows are left on the market, and these are selling at $5 per barrel. Ontario apples in boxes—Snows, $1.60; King, $1.50; Spy, $1.40; Ben Davis and Greening, $1.15. Wholesalers do not intend storing many apples.

Trenton, Ont.—It is estimated that 76,000 barrels are stored in this district. Shipments are now principally to Ottawa and Montreal markets and to the Old Country. Prices are $1.75 to $1.50, f.o.b. About 15 per cent. of the crop has gone to waste.

Montreal.—Exports from the port of Montreal for the week ending November 7th are 8,970 barrels and 4,148 boxes. The bulk of the boxes was shipped to Liverpool and London, and the barrels to Liverpool and Manchester. The total shipments to date from Montreal are 128,261 barrels and 37,311 boxes. In 1913, when the crop was a comparable one, the exports up to the same date were 293,772 barrels and 44,911 boxes.

New Brunswick— The demand for apples, particularly from Nova Scotia, has fallen off during the past few days, as the stock sent here from that province is largely No. 2 and No. 3, and the consuming public do not want these grades. One lot of Gravensteins (No.'s 2 and 3) auctioned in St. John this morning (Wednesday) at $1 to $1.15 per barrel.

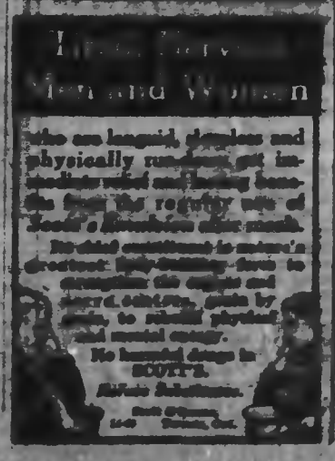
"BURNT AT STAKE," BOY DIES AFTER THREE-YEARS' PAIN.

Youths Repeat a Pioneer Moving Picture Scene with Fatal Effect.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Nov. 11.—After three years of suffering Orear Eversole, twelve, of this city, is dead as a result of injuries received at the hands of his playmates, who used him as the victim to be burned at the stake in the reproduction of a moving picture which they had witnessed.

The lad's companions represented themselves to be Indians, and young Eversole as a pioneer. He was tied to the stake in the old State House yard, leaves were piled around him, and set on fire. The youngsters danced a war dance while the flames crept close to young Eversole, and before he could be rescued he was badly burned.

His injuries caused blindness, and later he died [illegible]



GILLETT'S LYE

MISSING 22 YEARS—FOUND BY HANDWRITING.

Postmaster Identifies It by Address on Letter and Notifies Brother.

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 11.—Alexander B. Nevin, banker and first husband of Mrs. William Stanton of Pasadena, has been found after having been missing twenty-two years.

The postmaster at Sewickley, Pa., located him through a sample of handwriting. Nevin is now in Florida managing an estate. The postmaster's eye chanced to fall upon an address on a letter and noticed the handwriting was familiar. He thought it over for several hours and then remembered having seen Nevin's handwriting twenty-two years before and remembered it was the same. A brother of Nevin was then notified.

A Hard Meal To Digest

Is Quickly Digested by the Taking of a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet After It Is Over.

Corn on the cob is hard to digest, for some folk, but with a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet it readily is disposed of by the stomach and digestive apparatus.

Don't drug your stomach. Give it just what it needs at the very moment it needs it. Here is the way a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet acts:

He—"I can eat corn now and feel O.K. A Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet will quickly digest it."

One takes a tablet just after the meal is completed. It is taken into the mouth like food; is mixed with the saliva swallowed moist and partially dissolved. It goes into the stomach and is there mixed with the stomach juices which are composed of acids and alkalies.

A Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet reinforces these juices. It quickly digests the elements which such weakened juices cannot digest.

After a while the stomach passes the meal partially digested to the intestines, where it goes through another stage of digestion. Here, as in the stomach, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets strengthen the juices of digestion and complete the work of giving the body the benefit of the meal.

There is nothing harmful in these tablets. Only natural ingredients which the body lacks are supplied. In a short time the blood and digestive juices are given the power they lack. Man can digest any food without injury and the entire health of the body is increased. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold wherever drugs are sold, price 50 cents a box. Anyone wishing a free trial of these tablets please address F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich., and a small sample package will be mailed free.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

DAILY FASHION HINT.

Lady's Skirt.

This stylish pleated skirt has a plain three gore foundation to which a straight lower edge is attached. The pleated tunic opens in front and is fitted in at the top. One sees many more of these skirts in two materials than in one, but this is a matter of taste. Plain and striped goods and plain of two colors, perhaps serge and silk are liked.

The skirt pattern, No. 6,883, is cut in sizes 22 to 32 inches waist measure. Medium size requires for tunic 2¼ yards of 36 or 44 inch material; for lower section, ¾ yard of 27 or 44 inch and for underskirt 1⅝ yards of 36 inch lining.

This pattern can be obtained by sending 10 cents to the office of this paper.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

German Attacks Losing In Violence

THE ALLIES GAIN IN AISNE DISTRICT

ATTACKS ON ALLIES' LINES SLACKEN GERMANS FAIL TO GET THROUGH

Official Communique Shows That the Latest Attempt to Hack a Way to the Coast Has Not Proved Any More Successful Than Its Predecessors.

SNOW IN VOSGES DELAYS OPERATIONS

Examiner Special:

PARIS, November 13. — The force of the German drive in an attempt to break through the allies' lines and reach the coast cities of Dunkirk and Calais, is apparently spent for the time being at least. The official communique issued from the war office this afternoon declares that the violence of the fighting from the coast to the Lys River, through Dixmunde and Ypres, has diminished. All the attempts of the Germans to cross the Yser Canal have ben frustrated. The position about Ypres is unchanged, with the allies still holding their positions. The French have occupied Tracy Laval, the statement declares. Snow is now falling in the Vosges Heights and operations in that district have been hampered.

PARIS, November 13.—With the fighting from Ypres to the sea continuing without decisive gains for either the allies or the Germans, who are endeavouring to hammer their way to the coast, a distinct renewal of offensive tactics was evident to-day on the allied right along the Aisne.

The official communique reported a repulse of a counter attack launched by Germans upon the forces which have recaptured Chavonne and Soupir. This position, northeast of Soissons, is now occupied by fresh French troops, which replaced the British forces engaged in holding the Germans in check on the west. Fired by friendly rivalry to surpass the British in the operations in the Aisne district, the new French troops are gradually pressing forward. It is evident that both Germans and the allied forces in the west are becoming worn by the long struggle for the possession of a line to the coast. For the past week violent assaults by the Germans have been immediately followed by one or two days during which the power of the attack was greatly diminished.

BERLIN, via The Hague, November 13.—(Passed by the British Censor.)—A warning that circulators of false news which tends to alarm and make the public uneasy, will be imprisoned for one year, has been issued by the military authorities. The warning came from General Von Der Tann, at Munich. It followed the confiscation this week of Maximilian Harden's paper, "Kufunst." This publication was suppressed because of its criticism of Turkey's entrance into the war.

Russian pressure is now being felt along the entire frontier. The advance is being made with ever-increasing force. There is every indication that the renewed activity is in much greater strength now than the advance which was made soon after war was declared, and which was then repulsed.

OTTAWA, November 13.—A private letter received by an Ottawa family from a member of the Canadian contingent at Salisbury plains, describes in exceedingly circumstantial manner a startling incident in camp. During the first week at Salisbury Plains one of the sentries while on duty by the water tanks, challenged an individual who was lurking in the shadow of the structure. The sentry's challenge was answered by a shot, which entered the soldier's arm, but which did not prevent him from returning the fire. The intruder was shot dead. When the body of the man was examined there were found in his possession several vials containing cholera germs intended apparently to spread disease through the drinking water among the troops.

Ald. Duncan For Mayor

Has Declared His Intention of Contesting the Mayoralty

Despite Mayor Buller's pronouncement which was given to the public, yesterday, it would seem that fate has ordained a mayoralty contest for Peterborough. In conversation with the Examiner to-day, Ald. George Duncan stated that he would enter the mayoralty field.

For some weeks Ald. Duncan asserts that he has been led to believe that the Mayor would retire with the honours of one year spent in the "red plush chair," together with the appointment recently conferred on him by the Government, in the form of Collector for Inland Revenue.

Ald. Johnston's Position.

Ald. Johnston said that he would enter the field in event of the Mayor being opposed. He said that he had no desire to oppose Mayor Buller if it were possible for the latter to be returned by acclamation.

In view of Ald. Duncan's decision it is probable that Ald. Johnston will line up with the South Ward representative, making a three-cornered fight, should the Mayor remain to contest the field.

Ald. Johnston has repeatedly declared that he will not oppose Mayor Buller, or undertake anything that would interfere with the possibility of the Mayor being returned for a second term.

GLEN WARNER TO LEAVE CARLISLE

PITTSBURG, Pa., Nov. 12.—That the University of Pittsburg has obtained the signature of Glenn S. Warner to a contract calling for him to take charge of the Gold and Blue's football affairs for the next ten years, is the report that came out to-day from an apparently authoritative source. Official announcement of his signing is expected to be made soon by the university athletic authorities.

The contract, it was said, was signed yesterday. In obtaining Warner, Pittsburg scored a victory in a hot three cornered fight. Instead of having merely one rival to contend with in the University of Minnesota, Pittsburg was forced to bid against Cornell.

The salary agreed upon is said to be $7,000 annually. Warner's contract with Carlisle ends with the present season.

"I'LL MEET YOU IN BERLIN" SAYS GEN. HUGHES

21st Battalion, Which Includes the 57th Contingent, Reviewed at Kingston by Minister of Militia

NO DRESS PARADE

KINGSTON, Ont., Nov. 13 — In his parting message to the officers assembled at Cricket Field, this morning for a review of all the soldiers for overseas service, Major General Sam Hughes said: "I will meet you in Berlin, if I do not have the opportunity of coming to Kingston again before you leave for the front."

The Minister of Militia warned the officers that war time was no time for any dress parades. He said the wet fields at Salisbury Plains was one drawback, but to meet this he had ordered three-buckle overshoes for the Canadian contingents. He denounced the use of strong drink, saying: "I have been looking for a long time but never yet found a place a drunkard could fill.

Charged With Theft of Coat

William Graham of Toronto Said to Have Taken Raincoat From Cloak Room of Local Hotel

William Graham, said to hail from Toronto, came before Magistrate Dumble this morning charged with theft. Graham is alleged to have taken a rain coat, valued at $9.00, from Michael Perdue on Monday last. The raincoat was stolen from the cloak room of the King George Hotel, and its loss was at once reported to the police. The coat was rounded up in a local second hand store, and this led to the arrest of Graham, who is alleged to have stolen the coat and disposed of it to the second hand dealer.

This morning he pleaded "not guilty" to the charge and was remanded for a week. In the meantime his finger prints have been taken and his record will be investigated. Graham was arrested through the efforts of Detectives Newhall and Meagher.

TRAVELLER SAID TO BE MISSING

Lindsay Chief of Police Receives Strange Message

LINDSAY, Nov. 13—The Chief of Police received a message from a party in an eastern town last evening inquiring of the whereabouts of a commercial traveller named Mr. Homeworth, who, it was reported, had been killed in Lindsay. It was rumoured that the man had pro-German views and through giving expression to such feeling, met with disaster.

Chief Short has made full enquiries around town, but so far has failed to locate the man and no report of any killing has been heard of.

LONDON, November 12. — A despatch from Petrograd states that the Germans are now in retreat from Radom along a line to Rzeheyem and towards Kluguszko. The Germans present a miserable appearance. Some have neither shoes nor overcoats, and the prisoners report a deficiency in food and war supplies. Important engineering works are now going on in the Mstow region in preparation for the mounting of heavy German artillery for new defensive positions.

VALPARAISO, Chili, November 13. — The German cruisers, Leipsig and Dresden, are here to-day taking on coal and supplies. It is also reported that just outside the international three-mile limit two Japanese cruisers are waiting to give them battle. The Germans can only stay here 24 hours or be interned for the rest of the war.

150,000 CANADIANS WILL BE IN FIELD A YEAR FROM NOW

Dominion Will Do Its Share in Raising the Next Army of Million Men---Steady Stream of Reinforcements Are to Be Sent to the Front.

OTTAWA, November 13. — The announcement from London that Great Britain proposes to put an army of two million men in the field undoubtedly means that a correspondingly big effort must be made by Canada during the next year to maintain a steady and even increasing flow of Canadian fighting men towards the firing line in Europe. It is estimated that if the war is still in progress a year from now, Canada will have an army of approximately 150,000 men in the field. In government and military circles here it is stated to-day that Canada is prepared for an indefinite period to send forward men as fast as they can be armed and equipped and that it will not be a matter of one, two or three contingents but of sending forward a continuous stream of reinforcements so long as they are required to accomplish the decisive defeat of the legions of the Kaiser.

LONDON, November 13.—England was staggered to-day by an official announcement from Premier Asquith stating that the British casualties in the war to date are 57,000 killed, wounded and missing. With this toll paid in the fighting so far, more men are to be rushed to the front. A supplementary estimate from the war office to-day declared that with one million more men the total British strength of all ranks would be 2,186,400.

Recruiting has increased to a great extent during the last week. It is said that Premier Asquith will formally seek the sanction of Parliament for the raising of the one million additional troops.

The statement of the premier placing the casualties at approximately 57,000, was written in reply to inquiries from members of the House of Commons.

LONDON, November 13. — A special from Dunkirk states that a French torpedo boat sank a German submarine off Westende, Belgium. The submarine, it appears, was trying to torpedo a French warship, when the latter's commander caught sight of her periscope, put on full speed, and charged down on the enemy, which disappeared. A large quantity of oil then rose to the surface, marking the spot where the submarine sank.

Great Enthusiasm Shown at the Armouries Last Night When 132 Members Turned Out for the First Drill.

SOME GOOD SHOWING

One hundred and thirty-two citizens of all ranks of life attended the first drill of the Peterborough Civilian Rifle Association last night, and every man among them was bubbling over with enthusiasm over the organization and its possibilities. The proposal to organize into a regiment was enthusiastically received, not a dissenting voice being heard. The executive was empowered to appoint twelve leaders who will enroll companies of fifty each. Two companies will probably be enlisted at the Canadian General Electric Works, the Bankers will raise a company, the professional men another and so on until the regiment is completed. In fact, every present member of the Association is a recruiting sergeant, and if there are not at least 600 men on parade next Thursday night it will be surprising to every one who was at last night's meeting.

The members met in the recreation room of the Armouries at 8 o'clock with the captain of the Association, Mr. E. L. Goodwill in the chair. The captain explained the feeling of the executive after holding a meeting to discuss the subject in regard to the members of the Association taking a course of drill, as well as rifle shooting, and to forming a civic regiment along the lines of the Toronto Home Guards.

Lt.-Col. J. W. Miller enthusiastically endorsed the proposal. This was Canada's fight as well as Great Britain's. He did not like the way it was sometimes expressed that Canada was helping the Mother Country. Britain's war was Canada's war: "We are all Britons, every one of us," remarked the speaker amid applause. While the question of there being danger to Canada might be considered a remote one, there were the precedents of the Fenian Raid and the North-west Rebellion to show how quickly trouble came. Now was the time to prepare. Without the knowledge of drill movement and discipline, a body such as the Association would merely be a rabble. He advised them to learn to drill and to get out and show the public what they were doing.

Fire Chief Howard was heartily in favour of the proposal and promised to do everything in his power to help the movement along.

Chief of Police Thompson said that he was sure the men of his department would be glad to join the Association and learn to shoot with the rifle as well as with the revolver.

Mr. R. E. Layfield was delighted with the spirit shown and thought that if twelve good leaders were appointed there would be no difficulty in securing companies of fifty men each. He was confident that two companies could be formed at the Canadian General Electric Works.

Mr. W. H. Bradburn approved of the scheme. It was important to be prepared and every member would feel benefit from the drill.

Mr. W. H. Dunsford, manager of the local branch of the Bank of Commerce also expressed his approval. He would do everything possible to help the Association along as to secure a company among the local bankers.

On motion of Messrs. Layfield and Dunsford the executive was given power to appoint twelve leaders who are to secure companies of fifty men.

The members were then placed in charge of Col. Sergt. Dodds and marched to the drill hall of the Armouries. Here they were divided into two squads and had half an hour's drilling under Col. Sergts. Dodds and Waterman. The members picked up the drill quickly and surprised both instructors and spectators by the way in which they did the work, which must have been new to a large number. While drilling was going on several squads from the Association were detailed by Capt. Goodwill for rifle shooting in the miniature range in the basement. Here Quartermaster Sergt. Edwards was in charge, and assisted by Mr W. H. Merry, an ex-Bisley member of the Association, instructed the members in the use of the rifle. Some splendid shooting was done during the evening.

The Association will drill every Thursday night until further notice.

A TRAITOR IN COMMAND.

The British War Office is placing orders for military goods in Canada; and, per contra, according to a despatch from Ottawa, Hon. Robert Rogers—who is acting War Minister, during the absence of Col. the Hon. Major-Gen. Sam Hughes on furlough—is in New York placing orders for military goods for Canada. If this is true—it is sincerely hoped it isn't—Hon. Robert Rogers is playing as traitorous a part as any German spy, and more traitorous; for the spy is only trying to do his duty from his point of view and interest, while the Minister is knowingly and brazenly taking an action hostile to Canadian material—manufacturing—interests—and making a break in the unity of action that the welfare of Canada and of the Empire especially demand at this time. That is supposing the goods required can be by any possibility, by any strain of energy, and activity be produced or procured in Canada. With what force or success can the press and patriotic people generally appeal to Canadians to be loyal to their own country in their trading activities, if the trustees, pro tempore, of Canadian interests, set an evil example? A traitor in the ranks is bad enough, but a traitor in command is much worse, both in fact and example. In exact analysis every citizen, who fails to prefer the purchase of Canadian goods or to spend the money made in a city or town with his fellow money-maker in the town or city; who fails to act the part of a good neighbour; who disregards the golden rule, is a traitor, in the degre of his offence, to the best interests of the country, a traitor to the true spirit of patriotism which counsels us to direct all our actions to doing everything we do for the good of our country and our fellow citizens.

FOLLOW THE BRITISH WAY.

There are undoubtedly two kinds of patriotism—that may be differentiated as family patriotism and individual patriotism. That is, a man may be truly loyal to the Empire and at the same time be truly loyal to his native country, which is a part of it, and jealous of its good name and place of importance in the Empire. In another place in this issue is printed an incident showing why the East Indians are loyal to the Empire. The compositor in putting this paragraph into type illustrates a strong type of patriotism. It is to be noted that in the paragraph as printed, wherever the word "British" appears, it was "English" in the "copy" supplied the compositor, who is a Scotchman. It is a rule of printing offices that the compositor is to "follow copy," that is, set in type what is put before him, without correcting even palpable errors. In this case patriotism was stronger than rules. The Scotia printer did not wish to be an innocent party to leaving out Scotland as a part of the Empire, and giving even as great a country as England the monopoly of credit for what had been done and is represented by the British—English, Scotch and Irish—Empire. So he substituted "British" for the word "English" in a spirit of pardonable patriotism; he broke a routine rule to observe a higher rule. The use of the word English for British, is unquestionably a matter of habit, rather than of offensive or assertive intention, but like other undesirable habits; it had better be abandoned. This would be the British way, in an Empire whose boast is that all its people are on the one high plane of privilege and right. If the British way defers to the religious, if mistaken, prejudices of one element its population by guaranteeing, in the prosecution of war, the safety of Moslem shrines from desecration, surely it is not too much to ask that in speaking of the British Empire "English" and "British" should not be regarded as convertible terms. The three great races that compose the hub of the Empire — Great Britain and Ireland—have done more at home and the world over, to heighten civilization and uplift humanity than any other three races in history, and not even in name should distinction be made.

SHALL WE BE DISCOURAGED?

It sometimes seems as if there was reason to be down-hearted over the slow and sanguine progress of the war. Our armies on the battle front in France are having a terrible struggle, and the Prussian power in that region is proving a hard nut to crack. But there is no reason to be down-hearted as to the ultimate outcome, for the circumstances point to this outcome being the right outcome. We are kept pretty well in the dark, to the point of confusion, by the rather nebulous reports we receive from the battle front. But somebody knows, and that somebody is the British Government, with Kitchener on "sentry-go." No doubt he supplied the material, the inspiration for that part of Asquith's speech on the opening of Parliament, in which, in this regard he was merely Kitchener's mouthpiece. When Asquith tells us that, while the war might be a lengthy struggle, "IT WOULD NOT LAST AS LONG AS SOME PEOPLE ORIGINALLY PREDICTED," this solemn official declaration of belief indicates that those behind the screen of secrecy that shuts out the war situation from the public view, begin to see a break in the clouds. If Asquith, who knows, sees the beginning of the end, shall we who only grope, not have faith enough to hold up our heads in hope? True the fiercest struggle of the war is at this moment being waged in the north of France; but may not this send us for comfort to the proverb that makes the darkest hour, the hour before the dawn? If Asquith, who knows—much more than we do—sees signs of the dawn, can we not see it too? We need not be discouraged—"Behold the Lord thy God hath set the land before thee; go up and possess it * * * fear not, neither be discouraged."

"UNFORTUNATELY IN THE SAME PLANET."

London has not been exposed, and is not likely to be exposed, to the horrors of a barbarous war like some of the cities of our Allies. We are not called upon to make the sacrifices which they have no nobly made. But we are unfortunately not in a different planet from that which is infested by the German armies. Only a strip of water divides us from them; and even that cannot guard us from a stray and desperate raider of the air. There is, therefore, all the more reason why we should make the small sacrifices which will best protect us from such raiders and from the wanton and perfectly useless damage which they are likely to attempt against us. The German theory of war is that where you cannot win it is at least your duty to make a nuisance of yourself; and we cannot doubt that the Germans would like to disturb the peace of London if they could. — London Times.

THE MAORIS AND THE WAR.

The Maoris who have volunteered for the front are to go to the land of Egypt. No doubt they will relieve there troops more fitted for the rigours of a Continental winter. We have reached the time of the testing of prophecy; and that noted character known as Macaulay's New Zealander, with whom orators and writers have for so long plagued a patient public, is irresistibly brought to mind by this little contingent of 200 Maoris. The New Zealander is not, however, to take his stand on a broken arch of London Bridge and view the ruins of St. Paul's or marvel at the silence of the Sphinx. Count Edith D'Vere Smythe von Bernstorff may find some promising "copy" in the New Zealander and possibly he will construe the fact into a fulfillment of Macaulay's gloomy prophecy.—Melbourne Argus.

HERE'S THE WORLD'S RELIEF.

The German Ambassador at Washington has given his assurance that no matter how the war may end Germany will respect the Monroe Doctrine. Germany will if Germany must, and not otherwise. The German Ambassador at Brussels gave his assurance that the neutrality of Belgium would be respected, and twelve hours later Belgium was being invaded, and artillery, cavalry, commissariat, field hospitals, ready for a long campaign of conquest, were crushing their way across Belgium.—Toronto Star.

PETERBORO' AND THE FUND

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—While Peterborough has not done nearly as well as some other places in proportion to population, it must be remembered that the only war fund in Great Britain is the Prince of Wales war fund, and it takes charge of all cases of distress arising from the war. The fund amounts to $16,000,000. $16,000,000 for 45,000,000 people is $16,000 for 45,000 people, which would be about $7,000 for Peterborough. We must do justice to ourselves and in this light, all the circumstances considered, Canada is doing better than the Old Country. My authority for this statement is the fourth column of the Mail and Empire, which appears to speak authoritatively. It is gratifying to note that we are not so ungenerous after all, and while the number of rejected must draw the attention of all those concerned in the physical welfare of our young men to the serious number of our defectives, still the number volunteering has been quite large, although how we are going to raise the additional 50,000 men in Canada, which we have been called upon to raise, is a question.

R.

May it not be granted that when we make duty a matter of comparison, if not competition, we are bargaining with our own conscience? We cannot fairly compare Britain with Canada in the matter of ability to give, for Britain has to bear the burden of a great war, maintain a fleet of 600 ships of war in fighting condition, equip and maintain an army of 2 1-2 millions at home and abroad. She is caring for—feeding and shelteriens — 200,000 Belgian refugees and feeding mobs of prisoners. She is spending in proportion to population, ten dollars to one Canada is spending upon war, and the demands upon private generosity are infinitely greater than those made upon Canada. If "R" wants to institute a comparison in patriotic giving, let him take Canadian cities of virtually identical population and resources. Kingston, with the population of Peterborough, or slightly less, has contributed to the Patriotic Fund $82,000, about $2.60 per head. Peterborough has contributed about $5,000 or 25 cents per head of population.

If we reach $20,000 as aimed at now, we shall be giving $1 per head, or two and a half times less than Kingston. Is the recent patriotic fund spurt to end in a spurt, or are we in deference to our duty, and self respect, going in to realize the slogan.

$20,000 FOR THE PATRIOTIC FUND

How The "Silver Bullet" Helps The Succsss of Britain's Fighting Lines

Great Britain is showing the strength both of its resources and resourcefulness in carrying on the war. The delay during the first two weeks after the outbreak was caused more because the British Empire is a larger, more complex and more powerful machine to set going at full speed than is the German Empire. It is prepared to carry on that business until the world's belligerent menace is crushed. Aside from the actual scene of hostilities, striking demonstration is given of the power of commerce and capital as effective weapons. When the British government appointed a "sugar" commission, it obtained in a short time, temporary control of the raw cane sugar market. The general conclusion was that this action was taken to prevent speculators from raising prices to the detriment of consumers. The commission contracted for 900,000 tons of raw cane sugar at an average price of $100 per ton, representing a sum of $90,000,000.

Now it transpires that this action had far greater significance. The British government has prohibited the importation of sugar into the United Kingdom with the object of preventing German and Austrian sugar reaching there from neutral countries. The official memorandum explains—

"In ordinary circumstances such prohibition would be inconceivable, but large supplies secured by the sugar commission assure ample supplies for British consumption for many months. The price at which it has been bought permits of retail sale without loss at a rate below that now current, namely, 3 3-4 pence per pound for granulated sugar, and a reduction may be expected.

"In these circumstances the government has decided to prohibit for the time being the importation of sugar, with the object of defeating the German and Austrian efforts to turn their stocks into money. This measure was not adopted earlier, as the danger did not exist until recently, as the exportation of sugar from Germany and Austria was prohibited. The prohibition has been relaxed now that they found Great Britain has been able to make other provision. We has already rendered their prohibition useless. We shall now deprive them of any financial advantages from its removal."

That is but one of many assaults with the ammunition of commerce upon the enemy's defences. With the British navy patrolling the world's shipping lanes, Great Britain is able to enforce in practice the important plans devised in London.

As pointed out in these columns recently, the "silver bullet," so called by Mr. Lloyd George, is doing its work, too. Indeed, its success may compel a change of name to the "silver shell." To date, Great Britain has financed its own war operations with treasury bills. It has raised 375 million dollars in that way, in five issues of 75 millions each. All of them were oversubscribed. On its one-year bills it obtained money at exceptionally easy terms, namely, 3 1-2 per cent. From the total mentioned, the Imperial government loaned 50 millions to Belgium. The London market has responded freely to issues of 10 milllion of Indian bills, 10 million of French sterling treasury bills, and 3 milhon of Norwegian treasury bills. The Canadian finance minister, Hon. W. T. White, has arranged with the Imperial government and the Bank of England that the Bank shall advance to the Dominion government the funds required by Canada for naval and military purposes from time to time, as required. The Monetary Times learns on the best of authority that the arrangements so made are most favourable to Canada.

A message from London last week stated that in ordinary circumstances gold would now be going from Great Britain in large amounts to Egypt to finance the cotton crop. The financial dislocation has necessitated the issue of 25 million of Egyptian treasury bonds which will have the guarantee of the British government. A portion of the proceeds will provide a reserve for the emergency bank notes issued in Egypt. These emergency notes in Egypt will probably cure the native fellaheen of this Oriental propensity for hoarding gold, just in the same way as it is believed that the $5 notes in Great Britain may not go out of circulation now that the public has become accustomed to them.

The Russian Minister of Finance, also, has been authorized by Imperial decree to place short-term treasury bonds amounting to 60,000,000 on the English market, and the English market will show how friendly is the "silver bullet" to its allies.

Not a country in the world, other than Great Britain, could finance its own extensive war operations, those of its overseas empires, those of its allies, in addition to financing various important commercial transactions and using generally the "silver bullet" to clear the way for the ultimate victory of British arms.— Monetary Times.

INCENDIARISM SUS PETED

LINDSAY, Nov. 12.—What might have been a serious fire broke out last night in the Ingle Planing Mill, corner of Wellington and Cambridge streets, about 11 o'clock. Fire in some manner started in a large pile of shavings at the south end of the building and the reflection was quite noticeable. A young man passing by was surprised to see what looked like a huge fire on the first floor, and with all haste he dashed across to the residence of Mrs. Hutchinson, on the opposite northwest corner, and telephoned the alarm to fire hall headquarters.

The brigade responded in quick order, and on arrival it was found that both the main doors of the building were wide open, which would lead one to believe that some person had entered the building with incendiary motive, and left the doors open in order to create a draft, or that the workmen had left the doors open before leaving for home at six o'clock.

The firemen were just in time to prevent a conflagration, as the dry chips and shavings would soon have been consumed, along with the entire building. However, a couple of pails of water extinguished the fire.

KINGSTON, Nov. 13. — William Foster, of this city, was found lying unconscious upon the floor of his apartment with a gash on the side of the head which had produced concussion of the brain. He was removed to the hospital for an operation, and his condition is critical. No one appears to know how Foster came to be injured but some ugly rumors are afloat, which cannot be cleared up until he regains consciousness and makes a statement to the police. One story goes that the men got into an altercation with a German sympathizer over the war and was felled with a bottle.

WILL NOT SUPPORT PEACE MOVEMENT UNDER ANY CONDITIONS

Until Present Conflict Has Been Brought to a Successful Conclusion--Advocates of Peace Held Lively Meeting in Council Chamber Last Evening---Object of Meeting is to Secure Permanent Peace After Present War is Over.

SPEAKERS EXPRESS THEMSELVES FREELY

Thirty-three people attended the patriotic meeting that was held in the Council chamber last evening for the purpose of discussing ways and means of securing permanent world peace whether by abolition of armaments or other means considered necessary for the purpose. At times the meeting assumed a very war-like aspect, especially when one or two of the speakers undertook to charge Mayor Buller with having changed his views so that they would harmonize with the majority of those expressed at the meeting. Ald. Johnston came to his rescue by suggesting that the meeting adjourn rather than break up in disorder, after which the following resolution was adopted unanimously:

"That we declare our undeviating loyalty and support to Great Britain in the present conflict, which in our conviction must be carried through to a decided finish. That public opinion be aroused and educated to demand that at the conclusion of the war, steps be taken to secure permanent peace whether by abolition of armament or other means considered necessary for the purpose."

This resolution was moved by Rev. Canon Davidson and seconded by Rev. Father McColl.

The Home Guard.

Mayor Buller who presided said that the meeting was called at the instance of a number of citizens for the purpose of promoting permanent peace at the conclusion of the present war. He referred to his warlike ancestry, one of whom was wounded on Lord Nelson's ship and assured those present that he himself would become a member of the Home Guard now forming in the city.

Letters were read from Mr. D. O'Connell and Mr. R. J. Todd expressing their regret at being able to attend the meeting.

Rev. Mr. Rollins, who was the first speaker, dissipated any misconception that might have existed as to his attitude towards the meeting. "Our enemies have thrust the sword into our hands and let the war be prosecuted until we are in a position to dictate terms of peace, said Mr. Rollins. Then when we come to make terms of peace let us not be concerned with striking such a blow at the German nation that it will never have a chance to become a nation again, but let us strike a blow at an idea, the idea that disputes between civilised nations have to be settled by force of arms. We have left that idea behind as between individuals. Let us work to the end that it may be left behind as between nations. In taking this position we are only backing up the sentiments expressed by the biggest men in the Empire. These men have declared that this war would be unlike other wars. It will be war against war."

War Against Krupps.

Quoting from a communication that he had received in which the writer had stated 'that battleships were required to preserve trade and commerce. Mr. Rollins said that "the safety of trade and commerce would be better preserved if there was not a battleship afloat." He also referred to an editorial that appeared in a local evening contemporary, discouraging the inauguration of a "peace movement" at the present time; recalling also an editorial that appeared in the same paper some weeks ago, which tended to create the impression that the young men of this city "had fallen down" or were "unduly slow in responding to the call to arms." We exceeded the number required to make up the second contingent," said Mr. Rollins, "so another editorial had to be written." It is not wise to write letters and editorials until these events occur," observed the speaker. It is interesting to note that the writer of the editorials in question was present at the meeting, also two other representatives of the contemporary referred to. The former took exception to Mr. Rollins' references. This latter Mr. Rollins had left the meeting in order to attend a meeting of the Home Guard, of which Mr. Rollins is a member. He remarked that it was not the custom of editorial writers to tell ministers how to conduct the affairs of their respective churches, therefore it was not for Mr. Rollins to criticise the editorials in question. Continuing his speech, Mr. Rollins said: "We are here to use every ounce of influence in backing up this war until we are ready to dictate terms of peace. In this we are standing for the best interests of the Empire. This is going to be a war against Krupps and armour plate manufacturers not only in Germany but throughout the world. I am not ashamed to speak in behalf of compulsory arbitration. Compulsory arbitration is better than compulsory enlistment or conscription."

Was Impressed.

Rev. Father McColl, who was next called upon, said that he was impressed with the object of the meeting and that he concurred in what Mr. Rollins had stated. "There is not one of us who would not be willing to shed our last drop of blood in defence of the Empire," said the speaker. "We are fighting for liberty and for the benefit of the world at large. Peace is one of the highest aims of Great Britain. That you will learn by referring to the constitution. Great Britain never maintained a standing army. She is opposed to autocracy. It is true she has built up a large navy, but that is for the purpose of keeping the enemy away from her shores, and not to invade any country. Germany was ready for this war. Great Britain was not. She is not a military country. She wants peace, which proves conclusively that she is a nation of peace. The object of this meeting is to prevent further calamities of this nature. Peace associations have been in existence in Great Britain for some years. Connected with them are some of the most prominent men of the country. In promoting this movement it would seem that our aims should be to get in touch with men who can influence governments.

A Wrong Time.

Mr. C. Perkins Lloyd rose from his seat in the spectators' gallery to remark that England had a standing army, despite Father McColl's statement to the contrary. "I am proud to say that I am an old soldier and have offered my services in the present war, but was refused owing to a slight physical disability," said Mr. Lloyd "To say that this is a peace movement would tend to create the impression that we were disloyal. This is an inopportune time to call a meeting of this character. I think the construction that will probably be placed upon the remarks of the previous speakers might be misleading. I think that this peace movement has been inaugurated at the wrong time and I am glad it is not very largely attended. News of this meeting might find its way to the outside world and be misconstrued as an indication of disloyalty. I am sorry that you are presiding," said the speaker, addressing the Mayor.

The latter ventured to explain that the meeting was called at the instance of Mr. Bell with a view of bringing about permanent peace at the conclusion of the war.

Not Asking For Peace.

"This man is putting words in our mouths," said Father McColl. "We did not ask for peace with Germany. We started out by saying that we were not asking for peace with Germany until the present struggle was settled to the satisfaction of the allies. I admit that Great Britain has a small standing army."

"You can only get peace by asking peace of an enemy," countered Mr. Lloyd.

"We don't want anyone to misunderstand the position we are taking. I understand the purpose of this meeting, but I am afraid that other people will not."

"We are all patriots," declared Canon Davidson. "We have had an opportunity of expressing our patriotism and will have more in the future. While on one hand we are fighters in a good cause we also stand as Christians, and inconsistent as it may seem, by Christian principles. We are here to join forces and do what in us lies to bring about a result that will be fully in accord with Christian principles."

A Patriotic Meeting.

"This is a patriotic meeting and not a peace meeting," said Mr. H. G. Walker. "We are here to discuss patriotic purposes and not for peace. This is not a time of peace. Great Britain is in favour of peace, but not peace at any price. The German people are a peace loving people, but they have been dominated by militarism. Great armaments should be at the disposal of a tribunal delegated to police the world, just the same as police departments are commissioned to police the districts in which they are located."

Ald. Johnston.

Ald. Johnston would reverse the epigram, "In times of peace prepare for war" so as to read, "In times of war prepare for peace." He made a stirring declaration of loyalty. He was of the opinion that the meeting was being held at an inopportune time.

Mr. John Bentley was of the opinion that the meeting was called at the wrong time. He said that he had been connected with a peace organisation in the old land for upwards of twenty years and would be willing to assist in the inauguration of a similar movement here.

Not a Peace Meeting.

Mayor Buller in characterising the meeting as a patriotic meeting said that he would not have sat in the chair had the object of the meeting been for the purpose of promoting peace at the present time.

"After discovering the sentiment of the meeting you change your views," remarked Mr. W. S. Robinson. This remark precipitated a wordy war between the Mayor and Mr. Robinson. The Mayor denied that he had allowed himself to become a party to anything that savoured of a peace meeting. He had made that stipulation before consenting to attend the meeting. It was here that Ald. Johnston suggested that the meeting adjourn. Mr. Robinson was of the opinion that Mr. Bell should have had a series of resolutions prepared prior to the meeting, dealing with the aims and objects of the meeting so that there would be no misconception as to its nature.

Mr. J. J. Hartley made a brief patriotic speech after which Mr. J. S. Bell read a resolution which he had prepared, but for which was substituted the one given above.

NOTES ON THE MEETING.

Mr. Perkins Lloyd, in suggesting the possibility of German spies being present at the meeting, said that "German spies have been known to appear in clerical garb." This remark amused Rev. James Rollins, Rev. Canon Davidson, and Rev. Father McColl.

The Home Guard.

Several of those present left the meeting early in the evening in order to attend a meeting of the Home Guard, which held their first drill in the Armouries. It was the intention of Mayor Buller to join the citizen army, but was prevented owing to the extent of the meeting.

Left in Time.

Rev. James Rollins left the meeting in time to avoid the protestations of a representative of an evening contemporary, who complained of Mr. Rollins' criticism of a number of editorials that appeared in recent issues.

Would Not Interfere.

The meeting threatened to become noisy when the Mayor was accused of supporting a movement to bring about peace at the present time. He declared that he was heartily in accord with the present conflict, and would not interfere with any movement that would tend to hinder its prosecution.

Ald. Johnston saved the situation by suggesting that the meeting adjourn.

IF MEALS HIT BACK AND STOMACH SOURS

"Pape's Diapepsin" ends stomach misery, indigestion in five minutes.

If what you just ate is souring on your stomach or lies like a lump of lead, refusing to digest, or you belch gas and eructate sour, undigested food, or have a feeling of dizziness, heartburn, fullness, nausea, bad taste in mouth and stomach headache, you can get blessed relief in five minutes.

Ask your pharmacist to show you the formula, plainly printed on these fifty-cent cases of Pape's Diapepsin, then you will understand why dyspeptic troubles of all kinds must go, and why they relieve sour, out-of-order stomachs or indigestion in five minutes. "Pape's Diapepsin" is harmless; tastes like candy, though each dose will digest and prepare for assimilation into the blood all the food you eat; besides, it makes you go to the table with a healthy appetite; but what will please you most, is that you will feel that your stomach and intestines are clean and fresh, and you will not need to resort to laxatives or liver pills for biliousness or constipation.

This city will have many "Pape's Diapepsin" cranks, as some people will call them, but you will be enthusiastic about this splendid stomach preparation, too, if you ever take it for indigestion, gases, heartburn, sourness, dyspepsia, or any stomach misery.

Get some now, this minute, and rid yourself of stomach trouble and indigestion in five minutes.

First Military Camp Wedding, 'Made in Canada'

If "all the world loves a lover"; every woman loves a wedding. The following account of a military camp wedding, the first of its kind ever performed in Canada, will be read with interest by all the ladies.. The London Advertiser prints a photographic reproduction of the ceremony in connection with the following report:

About 1,000 people went to the barracks this morning to see a military wedding, in which the 1,100 soldiers of the 16th Battalion participated, when Rev. Arthur Carlisle, chaplain of the battalion, in his full Episcopal robes, married Miss Elizabeth Drouillard and Private Sidney Wetherell Bryant, of "D" Company.

Lieut.-Col. E. S. Wigle and his full provisional staff of officers, including many of the officers of the first militia division headquarters, were present at the ceremony. The soldiers were drawn up in an open square on the parade ground just outside the fence around the barrack's building. This arrangement was largely due to the fact that a moving picture man from Detroit had to have the sun at his back to get a good picture of the affair.

Bridegroom Comes First.

When all was in readiness the bridegroom was escorted from his position in the ranks to the centre of the open square by Private A. H. Jackson, of "C" Company, who acted as best man. When this position was taken before the moving picture camera, soldiers opened a lane to a door in the fence, and Captain Carlisle walked in alone to the bridegroom. Then followed a pause until the camera man put in a couple more miles of film and the bride entered on the arm of Captain Parkinson, quartermaster of the battalion, and assisted by Miss Cora Rush, the bridesmaid.

No part of the ceremony was lost by the camera man. Immediately in front of his camera were the contracting parties, while off to one side stood the officers, and near them the famous "harmonica" band of "D" and "C" Companies, which played "There's a Girl in the Heart of Maryland," when the bride appeared, and "Tipperary," when the ceremony was concluded, and the bridal party walked away.

No Detail Overlooked.

The boys of "D" and "C" Companies all of Windsor, under command of Captain A. B. Laing, left nothing undone to see that Private Sidney Wetherell Bryant did not forget the day of his wedding. Hardly had he reached the fence, through which he made his exit with his bride to reach the officers' mess, when a detail of men showered them with rice.

The boys also turned over to Captain Laing the sume of $47.62, which was given to the bride as the donation of the fellow soldiers of Private Bryant. Another gift from the battalion contained a cheque, but the amount of it was not given out.

Had to Sign for Bride.

As quartermaster of the battalion Captain Parkinson took a long blank form over to the bridegroom after the ceremony, and he was compelled to sign his name in large letters underneath a line which read:

"ISSUED, ONE BRIDE."

Private Bryant thought this might be carrying a joke too far, but Captain Parkinson declared that law was law, and as quartermaster of the battalion he gave away the bride, and was responsible to his superior officers for everything that he gave away. Therefore, if Private Bryant did not care about signing he, Captain Parkinson, would take the bride away again.

A Week's Honeymoon.

After the signing of the register, which followed the ceremony, the couple were dined in the officers' mess and later left for Windsor, where their romance started just three days before the Windsor boys came to this city. They will be away a week, that being the time of the leave of absence which was granted to the soldier bridegroom.

Sale of Home-made Candy and Cake

The Kitchener Red Cross Club is holding a sale of home-made candy and cakes on the market, in order to raise funds for their most praiseworthy work. The attention of the public is drawn to this sale and their co-operation is asked to make it a success.

The management of the Oriental Hotel has placed their tea-room at the disposal of the Daughters of the Empire, who intend holding an afternoon tea every day next week, in order to raise funds for patriotic purposes. Attractive menu cards have been issued and are being disposed of at twenty-five cents.

APPEAL IN CASE OF SHARPE VS. C. P. R.

Notice of appeal was served to-day in the case of Sharpe vs. the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. Roosevelt's Peace Plan

As Referred to by Rev. Canon Davidson

The appended article deals with Theodore Roosevelt's peace plan. It appeared in the London "Times" of October 19th and was referred to by Rev. Canon Davidson in the patriotic meeting that was held in the Council chamber last evening:

"The one permanent move for obtaining peace which has yet been suggested with any reasonable chance of attaining its object is by an agreement among the Great Powers by which each should pledge itself not only to abide by the decisions of a common tribunal, but to back with force the decision of that common tribunal.

"The great civilized nations of the world which possess force should combine by solemn agreement in a great world league for peace and righteousness. A Court should be created — a changed and amplified Hague Court would meet the requirements— composed of representatives of each nation, these representatives being sworn to act in each case as judges pure and simple, not in a representative capacity. The nations should agree on certain rights that should not be questioned, such as territorial integrity, the right to deal with their own domestic affairs, with such matters as whom they should and should not admit to residence and citizenship within their own borders.

"All should guarantee each of their number in possession of these rights. All should agree that other matters at issue between any of them or between any of them and any one of a number specified outside the civilized nations should be submitted to the Court as above constituted. They should, furthermore, agree not only to abide by the decision of the Court, but all to unite with military forces to enforce the decree. Under these circumstances it would be possible to agree on a limitation of armaments that would be real and effective."

Such is the scheme propounded by Mr. Roosevelt for the eventual peace of the world in the most interesting article he has yet written for the New York Times. He recognizes that the scheme is not perfect, that it would take time to educate the nations up to it, that it postulates reasonable good faith; but he believes that it would do more than any other plan yet broached.

LEASE THE POWER HOUSE

Mr. W. H. Denham Suggests a Rental of $25 Per Month

Mr. W. H. Denham, of the Peterborough Hydraulic Power Company, was present at last night's meeting of the Public Utilities Commission in regard to the leasing of the Murray street power house, and rental of space and for attendance at the London street power house. It was arranged that the chairman and Mr. Denham would interview the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission in regard to the Murray street power house. Mr. Denham suggested $25.00 a month rent for Murray street power house, and $25.00 per month for the rent of space and attendance at the London street power house.

The conference with the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission is slated for Monday.

Water Mains.

The Waterworks Superintendent was authorized to lay a pipe on Gilchrist street from Murray street to the creek providing he receives a petition properly signed representing a revenue equal to ten per cent. of the cost.

A letter was read from R. E. Layfield saying that he signed for water at 780 Water street and was given no bill. He asked to be allowed to pay the bill less the discount. It was resolved that Mr. Layfield's request be granted.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

NEW IDEA PATTERNS 10c

Dean of Faculty of Education Lays Heavy Responsibility On Schools of the Province

Dr. Pakenham Spoke to a Large Audience in the Assembly Hall of the Collegiate Institute Last Night on Problems of Ontario Education.

MUSICAL PROGRAMME

To the City and County Teachers' Institutes, and many visitors to the open meeting last night Dr. Pakenham delivered an instructive address on "Some Problems in Ontario Education." Mr. L. J. Petit, chairman of the Teachers' Institute, presided, and there were several hundred present, including, of course, the teachers from the City and county.

At the open meeting of this nature, said the chairman, one was always assured of a good programme and a very brief chairman's address, so except for taking that opportunity to welcome those of the audience who were not teachers, he did not intend to trespass on their time.

During the evening a splendid musical programme was given. A beautiful piano duet was rendered by Miss Ranney and Miss E. Morrow. A ladies' quartette, composed of Misses G. Garbutt, M. Armstrong, Jean Jackson and Miss Sardon rendered a splendid selection, and were forced to respond to an encore. Messrs Park Steer, Downey and Kerr, as a quartette, also gave a very acceptable selection. Their offering was warmly received and they also were called back by the applause.

One of the most enjoyable numbers of the evening was a boys' and girls' chorus from one of the classes in the Central School. They sang a three part song, "I'se Goin' Back to Dixie," and for an encore gave "Rule Britannia" in two parts. Their singing was a surprise and a treat, and was a good sample of the progress in vocalism that some of the classes in the local public schools are making.

DR. PAKENHAM.

In introducing Dr. Pakenham the chairman said that one day a woman accosted a young lad, apparently a stranger on the street, and asked him who he was. The little lad replied that he was her own boy. So it was in a measure with introducing Dr. Pakenham to a Peterborough audience.

In opening the speaker referred to the fact that he was an old Peterborough boy, and expressed his pleasure at speaking to an audience in this city. In turning to his subject he said that the problems which the authorities of Ontario education had to face had to be met in practically every country where any effort was being made to give the children an adequate education. He intended to present them but would not give a definite solution leaving them to be worked out by the teachers themselves. He had expected to speak to a gathering of teachers, but he hoped that his address would be interesting to all the remainder of the audience he invited to consider themselves teachers for the moment and "be happy for once."

The Americans as a rule claimed to have a better educational system than that of Ontario. They were as a matter of fact perhaps a little more extensively organised, having more teachers' institutes and other similar organizations, but they could lay little claim to having better teachers. The speaker had shown an American, familiar with the United States schools, through a Canadian school, and the visitor said: "But these are your high grade teachers. I would like to see the teachers of ordinary ability and training at work." The reply was "All our teachers are high grade teachers. They love teaching as a musician loves to play, as a painter loves to paint."

The race was not perfect. We were training forward to perfection. How are we to do our part in the schools? This was Dr. Pakenham's first problem.

The centralization of authority, said Dr. Pakenham, was becoming more and more evident. It was passing from the ratepayer and trustees to the Department of Education, the Minister of Education and the Government. Much progress had been made along this line in the last nine or ten years, but we had not made as great advance in this respect as in France, where the centralization of authority was still more evident. Australia had progressed to a greater degree than Ontario in these matters. In that Dominion the Department of Education chose the school sites, buildings, the teachers, and paid all salaries connected with the administration of education.

Shall centralization become a greater factor in Ontario education or remain for ever as it is at present? This was the second thought that Dr. Pakenham submitted for their consideration.

The speaker here referred to the problem of rural schools. The movement of people to the City had resulted in a measure in the inadequateness of the rural schools. The exodus to the cities had resulted in loss of interest by the ratepayers in the country, shrinkage in the salary offered for teachers and a decrease in the standard of equipment. Sixty schools lost sixty months on account of the changing of teachers. The movement from the country to city or town resulted in poorer rural schools, and the poorer rural schools augmented the movement from the country to the urban municipalities. Progress had been made in connection with the problem of rural schools, but it was as yet unsolved. The rural schools were not as good as the city schools, and while the Department was anxious to do more the teachers must help.

In comparing the country boy with the young lad of the town and city, Dr. Pakenham said that two things are responsible for the ultimate nature of the young man. Firstly, nature; secondly, man. Nature was preeminent in the country and man in the town. The latter influence, if exerted, unduly made the city boy lopsided in his attitude towards life. Too much of the "nature" influence on the country lad often resulted in stupidity where other things are concerned. The pressure of the city life often resulted in sharpness, fickleness, loss of repose, and dignity. The city life did more than shape the mind and character, it was responsible in many cases for the shape the body took.

Too much of the town was detrimental to the mind, character and body of the child. How could the teachers as a body, and individually combat the evil of these influences and use them to build up the three side of the pupils' nature.

When Rome became wifeless and childless, Rome failed and ceased to exist as a world power. So if the home-life failed the nation would not survive, but if the home was staple all would go well with the nation. If the present rate of increase in the number of divorces to the number of marriage is maintained in seventy-five years there will be one divorce to every two marriages. Immorality, desertion crime, drunkenness, cruelty, indifference and laziness were the causes of divorce. Divorces were more common among the wealthy and the poverty stricken classes than among the middle classes of this country. They were mostly arranged between the wife and husband of the town, of the childless home and among native born. Marriage was becoming too much of a commercial venture. Modern institutions were making the men and women practically equal as far as public rights were concerned. Life was more expensive and marriages consequently later in life. Divorces were increasing, and the Church and school must strive to restore the home to its old-fashioned station of dignity and influence.

What would the school do towards the solving of this problem?

In conclusion, Dr. Pakenham referred to the problem of the school and the war. In this national crisis the teachers must retain their presence of mind. When the public feeling was so intense it was necessary for the teachers to "keep their heads." The war material should be used judiciously and sanely in such subjects as geography, literature, and history. Secondly, the pupils should be trained to sift the evidence and pick out that which could be taken as fact and that which probably erred altogether or exaggerated in its message. In this connection Dr. Pakenham did not criticise the newspapers, who, he said, were bound to publish whatever news they received if they had no evidence that it was incorrect. And, lastly, the teachers should repress attacks upon certain of our foreigners whom we had invited to this country, and whose sons and daughters had grown up in our midst, observing to a great extent our customs and using our language. They should tell without exaggeration the causes of the war. But the teachers must do more than all this. They must make sacrifices, do without repairs that under other circumstances they would think necessary, and accept, if necessary, smaller salaries and less liberal grants. They must also organise for a contribution to the various patriotic funds.

ELLIOT'S

KAISER WARNS HIS SOLDIERS HOUR OF TRIAL HAS ARRIVED

Intimates That the Defence of Their Hearths Will Be Their Next Duty--Appeals to His Soldiers Who Are to Be Prepared for a New Phase.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—A characteristic order issued by Emperor William to his troops has been found upon a German soldier wounded in East Prussia. It is as follows:

"Dear faithful soldiers,—You have not forgotten the day when crafty, barbarous Russia, having secretly prepared to attack our fair and peaceful Fatherland, mobilized her troops and moved toward our frontier. That same day I, in fulfillment of my duty and prompted by the best interests of the country, decided, in conjunction with my Government, to defend our land to the last drop of our blood.

"With this defensive purpose I was compelled to move my valorous troops into France, which, as an ally of Russia, was preparing to strike a blow at us on our western frontier.

"Thanks to the valor of my heroes, France has been severely punished, and Belgium, which interfered with our attack, has been added to the glorious provinces of Germany. From the course of military events you know that the punitive expedition into Russia has also been a brilliant success.

"But, although we obtained due requital for the affronted patriotism of Germany, we must now turn to the new task of protecting our hearths, which moribund France and barbarous Russia are making ready to attack. Henceforward military operations will take another form, which will soon be intelligible to you, my dear, valiant soldiers.

"My heroes, that hour of trial has now come for you and for the whole of Germany. It is necessary to concentrate all our energies on the repulse of our enemies, for otherwise Germany will be transformed from a magnificent free country into an enslaved, degraded province of Russia and France.

"If Germany is dear to you, if your families are dear to you, if your culture, your faith, your nation, your Emperor are dear to you, you will offer the enemy worthy resistance.

"Not one step backward into our country; remember, behind us destruction is threatening, and it is only before us that our happiness lies.

"For your country, for glory, forward, my dear, my faithful friends."

Austria's Loss In Trade Mount Into The Millions

VENICE, via Paris, Nov. 10.—How severely the trade of Austria has been affected by the war is revealed in an official report of the Austrian Ministry of Commerce, a copy of which has just reached here from Vienna.

According to this document Austria's imports in September amounted to 111,000,000 crowns ($22,200,000), as compared to 260,000,000 crowns ($52,000,000) in September of 1913. The decrease in exports was much greater. They amounted in September of this year to only 61,000,000 crowns ($12,200,000), barely one-quarter of the total reached in September, 1913.

The greatest decreases on the export list were in wood and wooden wares, sugar, eggs, clothing, cotton and woollen goods and glassware. In imports the decreases were largest in coal, raw cotton, wool, yarns, copper and machinery.

During the first nine months of the year, making the comparison with 1913, imports decreased 120,000,000 crowns ($24,000,000) and exports 380,000,000 crowns ($76,000,000).

In the domestic trade between Austria and Hungary the imports from Hungary in September were only two-thirds and the exports to Hungary barely one-half those of September, 1913.

AUSTRIAN ARMY OF 200,000 REPORTED TO BE ENVELOPED

LONDON, Nov. 12.—It is reported to-night from Petrograd that an Austrian army retreating in Galicia has been caught between two Russian armies and must surrender or accept certain defeat in battle.

The supposition here is that the imperiled force is the command of Gen. Dankl, which retreated up the Vistula from Ivangorod and New Alexandra after the collapse of the Austro-Germaan invasion. Instead of co-operating with the Germans in a withdrawal to Cracow and Czenstochowa, the Austrians appear to have followed their own course in an attempt to withdraw rapidly across Western Galicia and escape through the passes of the Carpathians into Hungary.

The news is partial confirmation of the report transmitted by correspondents in Petrograd that there was a quarrel between Gen. Dankl and the German commander, Gen. von Hindenburg, due to the callousness of the Germans in forcing the Austrians to accept the perils and hardships of a rear guard, while the Germans themselves conserved men.

Apparently the Austrians made good their retreat southward across the upper Vistula, but were not swift enough to escape a turning movement by Russian cavalry which crossed the Vistula from Southwest Poland and swerved eastward while a supporting force followed the Austrians from the north.

In the absence of definite news, military critics assume that this Austrian army, supposed to number from 150,000 to 200,000, has been enveloped somewhere between the Vistula and the Carpathians at a point south of a line drawn between Tarnow and Rzeszow.

PROTECT SHEEP FROM DOGS

Simple But Effective Method of Protecting Sheep

A man of wide experience in sheep-raising has offered the following simple scheme to prevent loss through dogs chasing the flock. If a man has, say forty sheep, he should buy about two dozen small bells similar to a cow bell, but smaller, and tie these to the sheep. It is a peculiar thing that a dog will not bother a sheep if it has a bell on its neck, and this is the real solution of the problem. This man followed the above scheme and kept sheep a short distance from a city for twelve years and did not lose one. His neighbours would not follow the advice and three sheep were killed in one night on the next farm.

BEVERLEY ROBERTSON DIES UNEXPECTEDLY IN FAR AWAY CHENG-TU

A cablegram was received to-day by Mrs. J. B. Hunter, 566 Gilmour street, announcing the sad intelligence of the death of her grandson, Guy Beverley Robertson, oldest son of Prof. H. D. Robertson, of the Union University at Cheng-tu, in the West China Methodist mission field. The deceased child was a grand son of Mrs. James Stratton Ardyn, Gilmour street. The news of the death comes as great surprise and shock, as only a week ago Mrs. Hunter received a letter from her daughter, Mrs. Robertson, (Miss Vieva Hunter), stating that everybody was in the best of health. It will be remembered that Prof. and Mrs. Robertson and family spent a year on furlough in Peterborough, returning to the China missio field about a year ago. The departed Beverley will be remembered by the friends of the family as a bright, winsome, lovable little fellow. He was born in China five years ago. Mrs. Hunter and Mrs. Stratton and family will receive the warm sympathy of the entire comunity in their sudden and severe bereavement.

BACK HOME TO GERMANY GOES KAISER

Special Cable to The Examiner:

THE HAGUE, Nov. 13. — Kaiser Wilhelm has moved his headquarters from French territory and has established himself at Coblenz, well within the German frontier. It is stated that two Zeppelins, armed with machine guns, circle around town constantly day and night to avoid possi-

MR. BURNHAM IS UNDER FIRE

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Burnham, I observe, is still attacking Mr. Peck, as he has been doing for a considerable length of time. He complained bitterly, through the press, that Judge Huycke, Canon Davidson and Mr. Peck desired that after the war is over the policing by the Nations be undertaken by them to avoid the vast expenditure of money on armaments. Mr. Burnham unloads a whole lot of gush in his letter, and talks about academic discussions. This last kind of discussion is Mr. Burnham's second name.

The trouble is that the people will not go to a meeting called by Mr. Burnham, where he gets into the spotlight and proceeds to swell himself up. In other words they are sick of seeing and hearing Mr. Burnham praising himself. And if the people want to see the Patriotic Fund made a success they had better take him out, as there are scores of men who will not contribute a cent while he is airing his views on every occasion. He called a meeting at the Armouries and it was a rank failure. Rev. J. L. Gordon discussed the patriotic cause at a big meeting which he held and then Mr. Burnham was a "sorehead" and abused Dr. Gordon and the Laymen's Committee who had brought him here. He went to the Review and tried to have the Review attack this gentleman and, as Mr. Burnham was at one time Editor of the Review, and got them "in bad" in many quarters, the Review decided to leave it alone. Mr. Burnham attacked the Catholics at Downer's Corners, and said that they were not enlisting as they should, like other patriotic citizens, and that they were using this way to extend their influence. He called the Y.M.C.A. and the Committee in management down, and said that they [illegible] the Y.M.C.A. has already had thirty of its members enlist.

Which all goes to show that Mr. Burnham has got himself "in wrong" with so many people and societies that they will not have anything to do with him. When Mr. Burnham writes a letter to the press it has no more influence on the people's opinion than Mr. Bailey's letters.

Yours truly,

"H. M. S. Dreadnought."

RENT AS SAVINGS

The man who pays $15.00 a month, pays out $180.00 a year, and at the end of that time he has 12 receipts, and nothing more. Offer this same man a chance to live in a house and by a little effort, which is well worth while, pay $2 or $3 a month more, and have the whole thing used as a payment on the purchase of the house, and it puts him in a very different position.

For instance, he gets a house at $2,000, new and clean, and no money asked as a down payment. He pays, say, $18 a month, making $216 a year. That is only $36 a year more than he paid out as rent, and means only 70 cents a week, but here is what it does for him. Deducting the interest at 6 per cent. on $2,000, with rests made at six months' intervals, which would amount to $118.50, from the $216 paid in, it leaves a balance of $97.50 to deduct from the $2,000. This shows that at the end of one year the principal has been reduced to $1,902.50, and the man has actually saved and paid on his house, $97.50, nearly one hundred saved in one year.

Mr. Callander, at The Examiner Office, or by phone 874 at his home evenings, at 565 Weller Street, has two brand new houses, facing south, two lots from car line nice trees, light, water, rough plumbing all in, brick kitchen, back balcony, three bedrooms, two closets, etc., that he will let go on the above terms or possibly better, if desired, to two good careful men. Free use of nearby lot for garden, till sold. Save money this way quicker than any other, and own your own home.

Daniel McGinnis Was Acquitted

Lindsay Man Exonerated on Serious Charge

LINDSAY, Nov. 13.— The case of the King versus Daniel McGinnis was concluded, the jury bringing in a verdict of acquittal for the accused. The jury were only half an hour coming to this decision. His Lordship Chief Justice Meredith told Mr. McGinnis to stand up, and he then informed the accused that the jury had exonerated him of the charge of incest placed against him, and that he was now honourably acquitted, and could leave the court as a free and respected man.

Prisoner Congratulated.

McGinnis' lawyer, Mr. L. V. O'Connor, approached the dock where the prisoner was seated, when both engaged in a warm hand-shake, with congratulatory remarks passing between them for a few seconds. The friends of Mr. McGinnis rallied around him as he left the court room and were rejoiced over his freedom once more. The accused had been in the county jail since last July.

KITCHENER RED CROSS CLUB MET

The regular weekly meeting of the Kitchener Red Cross Club was held in the green room of the Y.W.C.A. on Tuesday evening. Five new members were added to the club. As was announced last week the club are having a sale of home-made cooking on the market to-morrow; bread, biscuits, cake, cookies and candy. Those who patronized the booth when the club was on the market before will remember to "come early," as the baking is first-class, and does not last long. Miss J. Currow will be in charge, assisted by Misses G. Davidson and A. Waddell.

ABOUT THE DEAD IN THE TRENCHES

LONDON, Nov. 12.—That picture of dead men erect in the trenches of France, rifles in hand, eyes open, limbs set as if in life, has been obliterated by the London Lancet. Correspondents at the front have sent in this narrative repeatedly, varying locality and details. Essentially, however, all accounts have been the same. Briefly, the victims have succumbed to a noxious gas given off by shells and have perished as they stood or sat after the manner of occupants of a castle in fairyland over which some evil spirit had cast a spell. But the Lancet says this cannot be so.

"That dead bodies can remain in the upright position without support from without is, of course, absurd," says the journal. "But it is interesting to mention that the favourite modern explosive is tri-nitrotolnol, and this gives off incidentally a large volume of carbon monoxide gas, which, when inspired, produces a healthy pink and lifelike appearance in the corpse. Imagination has probably filled in the picture as to these victims appearing to retain a living posture."

FOUR CHIMNEY FIRES

There were four chimney fires this afternoon and three of them were at the same time. The first was at 226 Lake Street, which was put out without damage. Then at two-forty o'clock three alarms came at one time. The hose waggon was sent to 1 Kirk Street from where an alarm had come in through a box, and two telephone calls were answered by sending the truck to 51 Crescent Street and the Chief's buggy with chemicals to 19 Park Street. It is very creditable that all fires were put out before they had done any appreciable damage.

About 72 per cent. of the cities and towns of Sweden are lighted by electricity produced by water power.

EVENTS OF THE YEAR

Have Been of Striking Interest

The year 1914 will likely be the most wonderful year for a long period. The sinking of the Empress of Ireland, the assassination of the Crown Prince of Austria and his wife, the European war, the opening of the Panama Canal, the death of Pope Piux X., are a few of the outstanding features. The huge failure of the Claffin Company the exposure of the Tartford Railway, the attack of the army worm are all of interest. Truly, there has been no lack of material for newspaper headlines.

OFFICERS OF THE TEACHERS' INSTITUTE ELECTED AT YESTERDAY'S MEETING

At yesterday afternoon's session of the Teachers' Institute the report of the nominating committee was brought in, and as a result of the action of the Institute upon their report, the following are the officers for the ensuing year:

President: Miss O'Connell.
Vice-President: Mr. Clarke.
Secretary: Mr Park.
Committee: Sister St. Paul, Mr. Hone, Miss Bristol, Miss Gordon, Mr. Yenney, and Miss Esme Tomlinson.

A FURTHER DONATION.

The matter of supporting the Patriotic Funds was discussed this morning, and after a brief consideration it was finally decided to give a sum of $100 for this purpose, $50 for the General Patriotic Fund and $50 for the Belgian Relief Fund. Considering the fact that the teachers as a whole have already contributed in the neighbourhood of $300, their action in voting a further contribution this morning leaves no doubt as to their intention to support the relief funds to the greatest possible extent.

TWO SPLENDID PAPERS.

At this morning's session, which was presided over by Mr. L. J. Petit, two splendid papers were given. The "Teaching of English Literature" was dealt with by Dr. Pakenham, Dean of the Faculty of Education, Toronto, and Mr. [illegible] gave a scholarly paper on the "Use of Books." Both were replete with suggestions and facts that will prove of value to the teachers present, and were listened to with great interest.

YESTERDAY AFTERNOON.

Miss M. J. V. Runnings, who was the Institute's delegate to the convention of the Ontario Educational, gave an exceedingly comprehensive report of the convention which was held in Toronto last Easter. At the convention speeches were given by the leading educationists of the Province, and a good summary of every address was included in Miss Runnings' report, which was a very thorough and capable one.

[illegible]ring yesterday afternoon's session $8.00 was voted for the current expenses of the E. O. A.

MISS KIRKWOOD.

"Primary Arithmetic" was the subject of Miss Kirkwood's paper. In it she dealt first with the elementary rules in using charts, and spoke of the different combinations of numbers. This point she illustrated in a graphic manner, and in connection with it emphasized the necessity of drilling on these. She demonstrated the use of drill cards, and showed that, without doubt, they can be made to be of very great service in the teaching of elementary arithmetic. The teaching of combinations of numbers above ve was more difficult than dealing with numbers under five, as it was harder for the pupils to visualize [illegible] from one to ten. The ability of the pupils could be tested by means of long questions, while the speed and accuracy depended largely upon the temperament of the pupils. Everything should be taught objectively if possible.

MR. DOWNEY.

Mr. Downey gave a paper on "Some Phases of Public School Arithmetic." There was no number without measurement and no measurement without number, he said. His paper was a plea for unity. There was a thread running through all the arithmetical processes by which they might be connected. The failure to recognise this fact often explained the distaste that some pupils had for that subject. Things should not be taught in an isolated way. Old matter must be re-adjusted so that the new can be learned, interpreted and assimilated. There should be a rational growth and logical development of the number. If this idea was properly carried out it would create a desire on the part of the pupil to explore the mathematical world.

MR. MOWAT.

School Inspector Mowat gave an interesting paper on the "Standards of Teaching." In opening he said that facts were not the end in teaching but efficiency. Thoughtful reviews should take the place of thoughtless drills. Examination tests were inadequate as they only tested the present information. In teaching there should be three standards: (1) The cultivation of aim, purpose and motive. He laid particular stress on purpose and said that proper motive created a desire to work. (2) The weighing of values. (3) Many failures were due to lack of system, an organization of material was necessary. (4) The pupils' initiative. The pupils should have self-confidence.

In concluding, Mr. Mowat gave a [illegible] of the Continuation [illegible] ers, and made certain recommendations that would result in a higher standard of results.

Lease of Testing Tank

The matter of leasing the old, disused Chemong Railway line from the Grand Trunk Railway so as to enable the Canadian General Electric Company to carry out their intention of manufacturing electric locomotives was discussed yesterday. The G.T.R. was represented by Mr. Logan, Vice-President, W. C. Chisholm, Solicitor, and Mr. E. Donald, Land Commissioner. The Canadian General Electric Company was represented by Mr. E. G. Patterson and K. H. D. Hall, and the City, by His Worship the Mayor and City Solicitor Gordon.

The terms of the lease were discussed and an agreement reached. This will be referred to Headquarters at Montreal for approval by the G. T. R. authorities.

ABOUT THAT SNOW PLOUGHING

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—In reference to last night's Council meeting, when the snow-ploughing tenders were discussed, would it be right to ask if Messrs. Duncan and Johnson got anything for their support of one man, and the knocking of another man who, neither of the Aldermen in question knew, o rever seen. Is it not a question of the man with the greatest amount of a certain colour of ribbon hanging on to his horse's bridle. For my part, I think there was no need of calling for new tenders. Why did they not give their pet the job and not go out of their way to knock another man. Too bad that neither of the Aldermen did not look over their pet's contract before it was sent in, and then there would be no need of calling for new tenders.

If their pet did finish snow-ploughing at half-past six, what about it? The contract calls for the snow to be cleared off from 6 o'cock until 9 o'clock, so if he was out before that hour, it was to his own advantage.

Hoping this will come to the notice of the gentlemen in question, and thanking you, Mr. Editor, for this space, I remain.

Yours truly,
"A Tenderer".

Dr. Clinton in City

Dr. George Clinton, district officer of health, was in the city yesterday. In company with Sanitary Inspector Spence, a short trip of inspection was made. The circumstances surrounding the diphtheria epidemic were also discussed and the action instituted by the local health authorities to suppress it approved of. Dr. Clinton advised the Inspector to take stringent measures with people who persist in violating the quarantine regulations. This may hasten a number of police court proceedings that are pending as a result of the action of a number of people who have permitted their children to run at large despite the fact that they were infected.

New Regulations.

Dr. Clinton also left a copy of the new regulations respecting the operations of slaughter houses. These regulations vary in a few respects, but in the main correspond to those previously in force. Slaughter houses must be kept scrupulously clean and in a sanitary condition. Special attention is paid to the disposal of offal and other refuse.

The gold industry of the Rand is estimated to be worth half a million dollars a day to South Africa.

SUGAR MARKET IS DECIDEDLY SHAKY

Drop in Prices Must Ultimately Come But May Not Be in Immediate Future

Following a drop in the sugar market, last week, another is looked for, but there seems to be no assurance whatever that the decline in price will be immediate or material. The sugar market at present might be described as being in a "wild" condition where the wisest predictions are apt to be far astray, and where a rise for the time being may be just as possible as a decrease in price. Raw sugar at present is selling at 4 1-4c., which, though slightly higher than a short time ago, when it went as low as 2.99, is a reasonably low figure. But the sugar that is being sold by the refineries now, was bought when the prices for raw sugar were very high. Consequently, as the price is completely controlled by the refineries the best authorities say there is no reason to look for a drop in prices just yet. The fact remains, however that raw sugar is being dumped on the New York market at comparatively low figure. The price of retail sugar has been higher in the United States than in Canada. The situation may be summed up in the statement that accurate predictions are impossible under the present conditions, and while a decline in price is looked for it may not come yet and conditions may even necessitate a temporary rise.

But at the Examiner this morning one of the best sugar authorities in the City said that by next February the wholesale price would have declined from the present altitude of $6.84 to around $5 or $5.25, which would be normal. What is going to happen on the sugar rialto in the meantime can be only a matter for conjecture and which events, themselves can only disclose.

Lakefield Girl Graduates

At the Aultman Hospital, Canton, Ohio, Miss Josephine Northey, of Lakefield, was one of four nurses who, at the commencement exercises of the hospital, were awarded diplomas and medals on the occasion of their graduating. A Canton exchange has the following report of the proceedings: Four nurses were graduated from the Aultman Hospital Training School at the commencement exercises held in the nurses' home of the hospital this week. The commencement programme was in the nature of a reception, which was attended by graduates, other nurses of the hospital, the medical staff and trustees of the hospital. Miss Alice Kutch Richer, Canton, O.; Miss Josephine Northey, Lakefield, Ont.; Miss Myrtle Veach, Sudbury, Ont.; and Miss Caroline Upstrom, Worchester, Mass., were awarded diplomas and medals.

ARE GRATEFUL FOR SYMPATHY

P. C. Reid, who was a schoolmate and chum of the late P. C. Wm. Paterson, is in receipt of a letter from the deceased's brother, Jas. Paterson, of James street, Alnwa, Scotland. The letter says: "It is with deep appreciation that I write this not on behalf of my parents and the rest of the family, to send our sincere thanks to you for the sympathetic letter you sent to us. We have to thank the Police Department, the Masonic brethren and the citizens generally."

Tinsley has only failed to score in one match for Middlesbrough this season.

One of the features of the season has been the revival in form shown by Harry Makepeace.

Glendenning (Bolton) and Torrence of Bradford City have yet to register their first goal for their respective teams.

Harry Low, of Sunderland, will not be able to play for some time yet. The twist he gave his knee at Blackburn is proving more serious than was thought at first.

Gillespie, the Sheffield United and Irish International forward, is still in the Royal Infirmary, Sunderland. The old Leeds City mans broken leg is mending satisfactorily.

Blackburn Rovers have scored 24 goals in league games this season, and curiously enough these are all claimed by the three inside forwards, namely, Shea 10, Dawson 7, and Latherton 7.

Manchester City's present record, although not to be despised, is nothing to crow over. They have done better. For instance, in 1908-9 they never lost a match between Oct. 1 and Dec. 26, playing 15 matches, of which they won 13 and drew 2.

There can be no doubt that McLean of the Wednesday, is the finest centre forward playing to-day. How much he has done for the Blades can only be realized when we compare their position this season against last, and yet they have practically the same team plus McLean.

Oscar Fox is in very fine just now for the Parsdere, and Sheffield directors are almost kicking themselves for letting him slip through their hands.

Things We Would Like to Know.

What Sheffield Wednesday will do with Brittleton when fit?

Will Manchester City beat Blackburn Rovers' record, staving off defeat until No. 14?

Why Lawrence, of Derby County, has asked to be put on the transfer list?

What Tom Watson of Liverpool is thinking of Gracie, who is one of the leading goal scorers in Scotland?

Whether Tom Maley is finished with his team-strengthening?

Why Maley is not getting his place in Burnley's league team?

Meredith's Appeal.

Billy Meredith has written a letter to the league committee regarding his suspension, but the latter informed the player that as the suspension by the club was a matter of discipline, of which the directors of the club were judges, they could not interfere.

Hoad, of Manchester City, is one of the most unfortunate footballers. No sooner is he reported fit than some other complaint lays him low. He was off for most of last season, and has already had a spell of idleness this season. He was in the team last week after an absence of a few weeks, but is likely to be off again for some time, as he has recently undergone an operation for appendicitis.

A well-known half-back of one of the prominent league clubs recently told an official of the club—one of the finest judges of players we have—that he never saw the man who could teach him anything at football. Well, well! This young man should see a doctor at once. He has got it very badly.

The Dunedin papers report that at a meeting of the Otago Rugby Union on August 17 one of the members of the Kaikoral team stated that he had been approached by an outsider, and offered $50 to play "stiff" in the match against University. The union decided to warn the person alleged to have made the offer from all the grounds under the union's jurisdiction.

News has reached Pontypool that Herbert, a well-known footballer, has died of wounds received in action. Herbert was in the Grenadier Guards.

The Sunderland unit of the Athletes' Volunteer Force has now a membership of over 300.

The professionals engaged by the Sunderland Club unanimously agreed to accept the scale reduction of their wages in accordance with the decision of the league.

The vacancy on the Rugby Union Committee caused by the death of Mr. S. H. Pearson, Cumberland, has been filled by the appointment of the old international forward, Mr. James Davidson of Cumberland.

At a meeting of the London Football Association professional clubs in London on Thursday it was unanimously decided that the collection for the Prince of Wales' Fund on all London club grounds, be entirely under the control of the respective club officials. The object of this action is to put a stop to irresponsible collectors who have at times put in an appearance on some of the London football grounds.

Word has been received from Singapore of the death of Mr. Thos. H. Adam. Deceased, prior to his departure from Birkenhead, played Rugby on several occasions for Cheshire County.

Ernest Crawford, who has been playing right back and goal for Cliftonville, has volunteered for Lord Kitchener's army, joining the Scottish Black Watch Territorials. This leaves Cliftonville in a quandry for a custodian, as Wood, their regular goal-keper, is nursing a broken collar-bone.

HOCKEY

Toronto Star:

Toronto is to have a new Senior O. H. A. team this season. It will be known as the Bankers, and is, as its name indicaters, a lusty child of the Bank Hockey League.

The question of a senior O. H. A. team has been earnestly discussed by several officers of the old league all summer, and the culmination arrived to-day with the decision of those behind it to formally organize a club and apply for ice at the Arena and a membership in the senior series of the O. H. A.

President L. T. H. Ardiel of the Bankers' League was inclined to be reticient upon the matter, but finally admitted that the Club was on the verge of formation. "The men associated with me in this matter have been H. G. Hamilton, Ken Crane, the ex-Stratford senior player, and G. E. Parks, the ex-Brampton junior player who was on the All-Star western team," said Ardiel to-day. "You can say that as far as we are concerned we are not going to seek to take players from other clubs. We will recruit from the banks as far as possible and wil malke no effort to take bank employees now playing with other senior teams from their clubs. We have seven god players in sight now, and we haven't even started to look them up."

With a view to strengthening the forward line, Barry have signed on Haggard, a centre forward from Bristol. Haggard is well-known at Barry, having played for the club two seasons ago. While at Barry he was given a trial with Cardiff City, and subsequently was signed by Bristol Rovers.

The Luton Town plyers have agreed to take a reduced wage for the time being. C. Buling, the centre half-back, who has played for Watford for three seasons, has been engaged.

The well-known Cambridge Blue, R. Sholey, who has been showing capital form for Brentford in the Second Division of the Southern League, has obtained a commission in the Army Service Corps, and is in training at Salisbury Plain.

CURLING

WINNIPEG, Nov. 12.—The Manitoba Curling Association is urging all affiliated clubs to hold patriotic bonspiels at the beginning of the season, the receipts from the entry fees to go to patriotic funds. It has been arranged that the Winnipeg bonspiel will commence on February 8th.

LINES ARE HOLDING

Every Attack on the Nieuport-Ypres Front is Beaten Off and Pick of Legions Fail

FIERCE ASSAULTS

LONDON, Nov. 13. — A critical stage in the battle in West Flanders has now been reached, and the next few days, if not hours, should produce something more decisive than has yet occurred.

The Germans have continued to attack with large forces at their command the British and French, who hold the line between Dixmude and Ypres, but with the exception of the capture of Dixmude, which occurred Tuesday, and some little progress around Ypres, they have not been able to make any material advance.

In fact, the French official report issued yesterday afternoon says that all the attacks have been repulsed. The Germans are no longer utilizing green troops in this region, but have brought up the pick of their army, including some Prussian Guards, who attempted an offensive movement against the British, but were defeated decisively.

Both sides express satisfaction with the progress of the battle, Berlin says that the attacks of the allies have been repulsed and that their own attack is making headway, while in London and in Paris it is felt that so long as the allies can hold the line of the canal from Nieuport to Ypres their position is a strong one.

In France, from the northwest to the southeast, there have been engagements of lesser importance in which, according to the French report, Gen. Joffre's armies have succeeded in gaining ground and strengthening their positions. The Germans continue to destroy bridges and railways in Belgium, but with what object remains a secret.

All bridges leading to Belgium have already been destroyed and barricades of tree trunks have been thrown up across the roads of the east Belgian frontier, to prevent the escape in Holland of deserters as well as to compel the Belgian peasants to remain in their country.

The correspondent of The Daily Express in Flanders is authority for the statement that there have been numerous instances of the Germans killing their prisoners.

The British troops at Ypres are ably supported by the Indian troops. A report is current that the Kaiser has ordered that all the Indians and other Moslem troops serving with the allies, when captured, shall be sent to Constantinople and made to serve in the Turkish army.

To relieve the enormous pressure on the allies along the Belgian frontier, the French, it is expected, may attempt an offensive movement against Lorraine or Alsace, their armies having been greatly strengthened. The German attack is expected to reach its maximum when they have brought up from Liege all their heavy siege guns, the transportation of which has been delayed by rains.

Considerable uneasiness is noticeable at the German headquarters at Ghent. It is reported that 100,000 troops have passed through the town. It is declared that they are on their way to Ypres, where the fighting is heaviest, but as they come from Bruges and Ostend it is considered more likely that they are bound for Brussels.

The Governor of Ghent was suspended Wednesday by Col. Montenfel. It is learned from a reliable source that the municipality of Ghent has been given notice that it had until noon yesterday to pay the Germans $50,000 as pay for the officers and men of the German forces stationed in that vicinity.

The Nieuwe Rotterdamsche states that the Germans have arrested five of the leading citizens of Lokeren, including the burgomaster, as the result of the alleged discovery of rifles belonging to the civic guard in the town hall.

The Belgian Minister of War has received information from Belgium that last week twenty-six trains filled with German cavalry passed through Brussels, coming from Ghent and going towards Germany.

AMMUNITION RUNS LOW

Germans Are Using Shells Manufactured in October

LONDON, Nov. 13.—The Times today has the following specials from its correspondent in the French and Belgian fighting zones:

North France.—According to German officers who have fallen into the hands of the allies, roughly 500,000 Germans were fighting against the allies at the beginning of the great battle on the Yser river. The enemy's casualties among officers themselves are put at 90,000, from which it may be assumed that actually their losses run well into six figures. In one case a regiment of infantry (marines), 1,800 strong, had only 30 men left when the great movement on Ypres was made. The losses among officers is extraordinary heavy. Five generals were killed.

I am informed by a British artillery officer, who has taken part in the fighting at Ypres, that he has seen a large number of German shells with the date of October, 1914, on the fuses. Only four out of five of these explode. Not only is there a scarcity in German heavy ammunition, but in small arms ammunition. Circulars recently found on dead Ge— an infantryman at Ypres call upon the soldiers to husband ammunition.

Between the Marne and the Aisne, the Battle of the Aisne, to give it its old name, has broken out again with something like its old ferocity. The three main areas of this eternal battle are, roughly: (1) the district between the Oise and Craonne; (2) the immediate neighborhood of Rheims; (3) the actual forest of the Argonne.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Nov. 12. — Allied peace rumors led to a fresh break today in the price of wheat the effect was not of a lasting sort, as European buying soon rallied the market. Closing quotations were steady at ½c to 5-8c above last night. Corn made a gain of ½c to 5-8c net, and oats of 5-8c to 7-8c. In provisions, the outcome varied from unchanged figures to a rise of 17½c.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Nov. 13.—Following the weak wheat markets of this side on Wednesday, Liverpool cables, while lower, were not as weak as expected, which was responsible for a steady opening here. The liquidation was resumed again, however, causing prices to decline sharply. About noon the decline from yesterday's close was ¾c to 1⅛c, but the tendency was for a reaction. July wheat was sold for the first time today at $1.04⅛. At the close wheat was unchanged to ⅛c higher from Wednesday; oats ⅛c lower to ¼c higher, and flax 1c to 1⅛c higher.

The cash demand was good for all grades of wheat, but few offerings were being placed on the market. Oats, barley and flax were quiet.

Inspections Wednesday were 566 cars, as against 1437 last year, and in sight were 400 cars.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Nov. 12.—On account of the decline in prices for wheat in Winnipeg yesterday, the foreign demand today was poor and cables were weaker at a decline of 6d to 1s per quarter, consequently, business was very quiet. Owing to the continued limited demand for cash on spot and the weaker feeling in the western market, prices declined 3-4c to 1c per bushel.

Demand for corn and barley is also limited, but prices show no change. There was a fair enquiry from foreign buyers for spring wheat flour, but as the prices bid for the higher grades were still 5d to 6d per sack below millers' views, the volume of business doing is small. The local trade is quiet.

Demand for millfeed is good, and millers in some cases have sold their complete output for November and have made some contracts for December delivery. Trade in butter was quiet and principally of a jobbing character. Demand for cheese is good and the market is firm. Eggs steady and slightly higher.

MINNEAPOLIS GRAIN MARKET.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 12.—Wheat—No. 1 hard, $1.18⅛; No. 1 northern, $1.18⅛ to $1.17⅛; No. 2 do., $1.11⅛ to $1.18⅛; Dec., $1.14.

Corn—No. 3 yellow, 68c to 65c.

Oats—No. 3 white, 45⅝c to 46c.

Flour—Unchanged.

DULUTH GRAIN MARKET.

DULUTH, Nov. 12.—Wheat—No. 1 hard, $1.18⅛; No. 2 northern, $1.17⅛; No. 3 do., $1.14⅛; Dec., $1.15⅛ to $1.15⅝.

CHEESE MARKETS.

BROCKVILLE, Ont., Nov. 12.—On today's cheese board the offerings were 701 boxes of colored and 855 boxes of white. The sales were 75 of white and 264 of colored at 14 12-16c, and bidding then fell back to 14⅝c, with no sales.

VANKLEEK HILL, Ont., Nov. 12.—There were 925 boxes of white and 200 boxes of colored cheese boarded and sold on the Vankleek Hill cheese board here today. The price offered was 14 11-16c, and both white and colored were sold at this figure.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, Nov. 12.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 657 cattle, 1482 hogs, 1527 sheep and lambs and 47 calves.

Butchers' Cattle.

Choice steers sold at from $7.50 to $8; good butchers sold at $7 to $7.40; medium, $6.50 to $6.75; common, $6 to $6.25; light butchers' heifers, $5.50 to $6.75; choice cows, $6.50 to $6.75; good cows, $6 to $6.25; medium cows, $5.25 to $5.75; canners and cutters, $3.50 to $4.50; bulls, $4.50 to $6.50, and an odd bull of extra quality will sometimes bring $6.75 and $7.

Stockers and Feeders.

Choice heavy feeders, 900 to 1050 lbs., sold at from $6.50 to $6.75; good feeders, 800 to 900 lbs., $6 to $6.35; medium quality steers, $5.25 to $5.50; stockers, $3.50 to $5, according to breeding and color.

Milkers and Springers.

Milkers and springers were selling at steady prices, that is, those of choice quality. Late or backward springers are not wanted. Prices ranged from $50 to $100, the bulk selling at $70 to $85.

Veal Calves.

Choice calves, $9 to $10; good calves, $8 to $9; medium, $6.50 to $7.50; common, $5 to $6, and inferior canners grass calves at $3 to $4.50.

Sheep and Lambs.

Sheep, light ewes, $5 to $5.75; heavy ewes, $3.50 to $4; culls and rams, $2.50 to $4; good to choice lambs, $7.75 to $8; good lambs, $7.60 to $7.60; heavy lambs, $6.75 to $7.25; culls, $5.50 to $6.

Hogs.

Selects, fed and watered, $8; and $8.25 weighed off cars; and $7.65 f.o.b. cars at country points.

Although more wool is used by manufacturers in the United Kingdom than in any other country, the United States is the greatest wool consuming country in the world.

RUSSIANS ARE NEAR CRACOW

Main Austrian Army is Cut Off —Crown Prince's Failures Have Made Him Unpopular

RUSSIAN SUCCESSES

LONDON, Nov. 13.—The Russian army, under Gen. Rennenkampff, is fighting its way into East Prussia and has taken Johannisburg, which is on the railway from Lyck to Soldau, both of which towns are already in Russian hands. This gives to Russia the control of an important railway line which skirts the frontier in German territory and has several branches running into the interior.

The central army, which drove the Germans back from the Vistuja, has had only unimportant engagements, but it is known to be pushing forward to the borders of Posen and Silesia, which the Germans are crossing.

The Russian left wing has followed the Kielce railway to the Austrian frontier, and is within a few miles of Cracow, the siege of which is imminent.

The southern army, under Gen. Rumsky, is at Rzeszow, between Przemysl and Cracow, and its crossing of the San river is being opposed by the Austrians. Another detachment continues the siege of Przemysl, while still another is operating against the Austrians who are holding the passage of the Carpathians.

Cossacks patrols are reported to be making raids even to the gates of Cracow, and news of the beginning of a battle at Cracow, Galicia, is momentarily expected.

The Germans have been digging trenches and erecting barbed wire entanglements along the whole of the Russian-German frontier with the object of impeding the progress of the Russian forces. It is understood, however, that their main plan is to retire on the fortresses of Koenigsberg, Loetsen, Grandens, Bromberg, Posen, Glogau, Breslau and Neisse.

The official report issued last night at Petrograd says:

In East Prussia on Nov. 11 an action developed in front of Stallupoenen, Krouglianken and the region of Soldau. Our troops occupied Johannisburg (a small town of East Prussia, 70 miles to the southwest of Gumbinnen).

Beyond the Vistula battles of a secondary importance occurred in the region of Kalisz (Russian Poland) and Neschava, where advance guards of the enemy sought to progress.

In the Carpathians, Austrian rear guards maintained at the crossings on the Upper San, in the region of Sanok, were attacked by our troops.

The siege of Przemysl, which was suspended during the period in which the Austro-German armies were on the offensive, has been re-established.

Austria's main army in Galicia in its retreat before the Russians has been surrounded and its escape across the Carpathian Mountains cut off, according to advices received by the Russian embassy at Rome. It is stated that the Austrians must accept the challenge of the Czar's forces for a decisive battle or surrender.

A Russian army marching toward Silesia has arrived at Mekhov, enveloping the right wing of the German army in retreat from Russian Poland.

A message from Bucharest, according to an Exchange Telegraph Co. despatch from Rome, says that two Austrian divisions have been annihilated along the River Pruth. While a small Russian force made a frontal attack, the main force invaded Buhowina from the south, cut off the Austrian retreat and delivered an attack from the rear.

From Petrograd comes a report that the Germans are preparing positions for a stand on a line running through Kielbutzko, Czenstochowa and Mstow. The troops are said to be in bad condition as to clothing and equipment, to withstand the rigors of a Russian winter, some of them not even having shoes, much less overcoats.

Petrograd despatches detailing the German retreat from the River Vistula say that the failure of the Crown Prince to hold the centre caused a falling back along the entire line. Despatches from German sources show that the Crown Prince's unpopularity is increasing since his failures in the west and the east. Although the Crown Prince has been placed in command of the eastern army, the actual work is being done by Gen. von Hindenberg.

A despatch to The London Daily News says that Gen. Dankl, with the remainder of the Austrian army, is moving south, across Galicia, and that he has refused further co-operation with Gen. von Hindenberg.

For metal workers there has been invented a combination shears and hammer, a spring forcing the jaws open after they have made a cut.

That it cannot be upset is the claim of the Ohio patentee of a new step ladder that has six legs.

The German beet crop this year is expected to produce not less than 1,700,000 tons of raw sugar.

RACE HORSE BATTLE VICTIM.

Lord Loris, Which Won Fortune in Purses, Killed at the Front.

PARIS, Oct. 31.—It is announced that James Hennessy's chestnut horse Lord Loris, which had captured many prize turf events and brought its owner a fortune in purses, was killed while serving at the front as an officer's mount.

The horse had been ridden by the jockey Alec Carter, who was recently killed in action while serving as a Captain of the French dragoons. The army, in requistioning the horse, paid his owner 4,000 francs ($800.)

Lord Loris's most recent turf achievement was the winning of the Grand Steeplechase de Paris, valued at $30,000, at the Auteuil course on June 21.

FRENCH TERRITORIALS EXPECT TO GO HOME SOON

NEW YORK, Nov. 13. — That division of the French forces known as the territorial army, composed of men above the age of thirty-five years, will be released from duty as soon as the Germans are forced from French soil. This information is contained in a letter received here yesterday from Clovis Miot, a commission merchant of Port au Prince, who at the outbreak of war went to France, where he had in his youth been educated in the cavalry schol at Samumur, and enlisted in the territorials.

"It has just been decided," writes Mr. Miot from Tarbes, in the Department of Hautes Pyrennes, "that men more than thirty-five years of age will not be called to the firing line. Again, we are so confident of success that as soon as the French territory is freed from the German army these men, forming the territorial army, will be released. It looks now as if that time will come very soon, and many of us, despite desire to get in the actual fighting, will be returned to our homes.

"In the meanwhile we are employed at many works. Among our principal duties is the keeping of prisoners. Thousands of prisoners are being cared for in Southern France, where I am located, while others, after being kept here for a short time, are sent to the prison camps in Algiers.

"Although military discipline prevails here, in the camps, we are happy, and many of us are able to have our families live in the vicinity, so that they may visit us. Mrs. Miot recently came here to Tarbes from Paris and the wives of many of the other men also are here, so you see our part of the war at least is not as bad as it might be. For all of that we would much rather be in action and under fire than do nothing, especially when we hear of the victories won by the Allies at the front."

Y. W. C. A. NOTES

"Breathes there a man with so soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said:
This is my own, my native land."

There is a deep joy in the sense of ownership — being a citizen of a mighty empire or being the resident in a city or town of which we are interested in development along all lines, civic and otherwise.

The Y. W. C. A., in Peterborough, was organized in 1901. Since that date it has grown steadily. The Association building, on the corner of Simcoe and Aylmer streets, is second to none in the Dominion — a building and organization of which the citizens of Peterborough should be intensely interested and greatly proud.

In order to appreciate, one must know about an organization or enterprise. To this end it has been firmly resolved in the hearts of the Girls' Auxiliary, members of the Y.W.C.A., that every one in the City should know more about its local Association —what it stands for in the way of development along religious, social, intellectual and physical lines. Composed of many departments, each with its own special duties, the Association is welded into a perfect whole, and thus the Y.W.C.A. stands for one great power for good, proving to the City the need of its existence, and worth to the girls of Peterborough.

It may be a long way to Tipperary but the girls have decided it is to be only a mile to the Association — a mile of shining pennies. This mile of pennies is going to give a great deal of joy; and do a great deal of good, along the lines of extensive work. Twelve pennies make a foot. How many feet will you give? will be the big question from Monday, Nov. 16th, to Saturday, Nov. 21st.

FEEDING THE SOLDIERS AT KINGSTON CAMP

Peterborough Boys Are Being Well Looked After

KINGSTON, Nov. 13.—The Army Service stores in Tete de Pont barracks look like a wholesale grocer's warehouse these days. There the provision supply department is located to feed the soldiers of the 21st battalion. The potatoe bins look as if they would hold a carload or so, while in the supply room even a casual glance shows that the sides of bacon, the huge bags of beans and peas, the boxes of butter, cheese, tea, coffee and jam and much else besides must be reckoned in tons. All the varied articles of the regulation army ration are there, placed so that each is readily available without loss of time.

The supplies are taken in the new motor-trucks to the half-battalion headquarters—at Artillery Park barracks and the Cereal Works.

In the kitchens in the Artillery Park barracks a number of large stoves have been installed and white-dressed cooks take care of the cooking part. The barracks are divided into two divisions. Two companies that occupy the west end of the west kitchen and the two using the east end, the east kitchen. The men march past an opening and taking their portions go to their tables. These tables are in the centre of each corridor and benches have been built around each. There are several tables in each of the four corriders. The self-serving idea lessens the help that would otherwise be required.

Two bowls are given to the men besides the granite plate, and the knife, fork and spoon. Both bowls are about the same size, but the smaller is really a cup, although it has no handle. The cereal works barracks have a similar system except that the men eat at the tables on the main floor, which is also their recreation room.

At a special time each day the quarter-masters of the two half-battalions hand in their requisitions. The amount of each article that they ask for is based on the parade state or the number of men who have turned out at the morning inspection. The quantities of each article issued are determined by a fixed scale per man. The regulation army ration per man is as follows:

Bread, 1 lb.; meat, 1 lb.; potatoes, 1 lb.; bacon, 2 oz.; beans, 2 oz.; jam 2 ounces; butter, 2 ounces; white sugar, 2 ounces; fresh vegetables, 2 ounces; cheese, 1 ounce; split peas, 1-2 ounce; pepper, 1-36 ounce. Many articles are done up in convenient parcels, such as sugar enough for 100 men, etc.

The men have all been completely supplied with two double pairs of heavy grey, army blankets each. The blankets are kept in the south-end of the Armouries in bales containing ten pairs.

A new automobile arrived on Wednesday for the use of the battalion. Another for general militia use is expected. The truck now in use is a great time-saver. Supplies of all kinds are rushed about without any waste of time.

Furious Attacks At Ypres Continue
WEATHER CAUSES MUCH SUFFERING

Russians Prepare To Strike German Positions Again

And Vast Possibilities Depend From the Outcome of Their Next Engagements--Are Wearing Down the Defences of East and West Prussia---Kaiser's Rear Guards Pushed Over Frontier.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—A general engagement, on which the fate of Germany's eastern frontier provinces may depend, is rapidly developing all along the extended line from Stalluponen to Cracow, where the advancing forces of the Czar have come into contact with the armies of the Kaiser, the latter evidently being determined at last to offer a stubborn resistance to the Russian progress. Already the whole eastern and southern border land of East Prussia is ringing with conflict, particularly in the region of the Mazur Lakes, where Slav and Teuton are struggling for the possession of passes, whose relinquishment by either army means serious defeat owing to the nature of the country.

The Germans failed in a vigorous offensive up the Vistula into Russian Poland from the stronghold of Thorn. According to to-day's official statement from Petrograd, the Germans sought to reach Wloclawek, 30 miles from Thorn, by a simultaneous advance on both sides of the river, but were repulsed by the Russians. The German force in this direction is said to have been strengthened by troops hurriedly transferred from Lyck, where no effort was made to check the Russian advance some days ago.

Of the fighting on the Posen and Silesia fronts the Russian general staff to-day merely says that "in the Czenstochowa region the Germans are moving gradually to the Silesian frontier." Unofficial reports passed by the censor and printed in the Petrograd newspapers, however, state that severe defeat has been inflicted on the Germans near Kalisz, and that the enemy has retreated into his own country after losing twelve heavy guns and leaving many dead on the field.

Retreat Checked.

Military observers say the Germans have apparently checked their retreat in Poland and by counter-attacks are endeavouring to create a diversion. They say, however, that the Russians are not to be turned from their plan, which is believed to be an attack on Danzig. They argue that the Germans will have to either allow East Prussia to be overrun the second time or bring up reinforcements, and that they can hardly weaken their army along the Polish frontier, for that would leave Posen and Silesia open to invasion. The allies naturally are hoping that an effort will be made to relieve East Prussia, and thus lead to the weakening of the German armies in Belgium and France.

Have An Advantage.

In any fighting in their own country the Germans will have the advantage over the Russians, as they have a net work of strategic railways to move their troops quickly, and, besides, they use motors to a larger extent than their opponents. Military men are watching the operations in this region with the deepest interest.

Transporting Troops.

"Throughout all Prussia railway passenger traffic has been suspended. The lines now are transporting troops only, apparently with a view to a new concentration which is said to have been decided upon by a recent council of the Austro-Germanic General Staffs at Cracow. This council is reported to have decided to change completely the plan of battle."

Rumours continue to circulate in financial circles that Austria-Hungary is anxious for peace and has already made private overtures as to peace terms.

DIXMUNDE RETAKEN BY ALLIES

Unofficial Report that the Enemy Has Been Driven From Position in Battle-Torn Town.

FRENCH MARINES' WORK

PARIS, Nov. 18.—A correspondent dating his despatch from the North of France says: "The Germans did not have much time in which to congratulate themselves on the seizure of the mass of ruins which was once the town of Dixmunde.

"After the Germans had taken the place they were sprayed with shrapnel and shattered with high explosive shells until they were threatened with extermination. Then the French marines made a bayonet charge, which was successful, and Dixmunde is again in possession of the allies. The northern section of the allies' line is still intact, but the position further to the south remains obscure. It seems that the Germans made a slight advance before Ypres, but it is doubtful if they hold the village of Saint Eloi, as they claimed in their official statement.

Insists Dixmunde Is Ours.

A correspondent of the Daily Mail in Northern France telegraphing Friday says:

"Our advance has been carried beyond the treacherous woods north of Ypres, and Dixmunde was retaken in the early morning hours of the day succeeding its capture. These two events mark a certain sway of the coast battle in our favour, but a tremendous artillery fire has been proceeding even over the ruins of Nieuport, where previously the situation was calm.

"There is no daily gauge of success or failure."

"The Germans at La Bassee, as at Antwerp, are trying to drive a wedge into the allies' line by heavy gunfire. It is known that German heavy guns are at Givenchy, from which place they are bombarding Bethune. In a month the Germans have gained a little more than three miles.

The Germans gained nothing by their ocupation of Dixmunde, according to the Dunkirk correspondent of the Amsterdam Tijd. The allies' lines are still intact and the weak points have been strengthened, he says.

"The German troops, after crossing the Yser to the right and to the left of Dixmunde, were repulsed," continues the correspondent, "and their line of communications with Dixmunde were endangered. The allies are now trying to prevent the Germans bringing heavy guns into the battle."

The Journal says Premier Viviani regards the return of the Government to Paris by the end of November as certain.

Parliament has been convoked for December 15.

Premier Viviani announced to-day that the Government is ready to permit theatres and music halls to open. The closing hour of restaurants has been changed from 8 to 10 p.m.

According to the Amsterdam Telegraaf, the Germans took very few prisoners at Dixmunde. Lombardzyde is still in the possession of the allies, whose patrols have approached Ostend.

Prussian Guard Shattered In An Attack On Ypres

Broke Through British Lines in Three Places, Then Were Repulsed, Leaving 700 Dead in One Place--Our Casualties Were Also Heavy---Stubborn Stand Against Big Odds.

LONDON, Nov. 13. — The Official Press Bureau issued the following communication at 11 o'clock to-night:

"A very severe attack against the portion of the line held by the First Army Corps before Ypres, was delivered on the 11th by a Prussian Guard Corps. The enemy made an especial effort on this occasion to break the line, which they hoped already had been weakened by attacks of infantry of the line. The facts briefly are as follows:

"Our troops were subjected to the heaviest bombardment that we have yet experienced, from dawn for three hours. This was at once followed by an assault in force, carried out by the first and fourth brigades (probably 12,000 men) of the Prussian Guard corps. It is understood that these picked troops had been brought up especially to act against us in order to force their way through at points where previous efforts made by the infantry of the line had failed.

"The attack was pressed with the greatest bravery and determination. Owing to the gallantry of our troops, and their splendid resistance against great odds, the attempt to penetrate to Ypres was repulsed, but the weight of the enemy's advance enabled them to break through our lines at three points. They were, however, hurled back and prevented from gaining further ground.

"An immense loss has been inflicted on the Germans, 700 of their dead having been found on the ground behind our front trenches alone. The casualties suffered by them in advancing up to our lines under direct and enfiladed fire must have been enormous. Our casualties also were heavy.

"The action of our troops on this as well as on previous occasions cannot be too praised too highly."

GERMANS RESUME THEIR ATTACK ON BRITISH POSITION AT YPRES

PARIS, Nov. 14.—Although the official communique of yesterday reported a slackening of the German attack upon the allied lines between Ypres, but the attempts to pierce thetion of the violent drive toward the coast was expected here to-day. Owing to the weather conditions, continued violent assaults are simply beyond human endurance. There must be periods of inaction. The suffering from cold and rain is acute in the allied trenches as well as among the Germans. The crack Prussian guard has undoubtedly been thrown back with terrific losses in one furious attack upon the British position about Ppres, but the attempts to pierce the allied line at this point are far from being abandoned. Terrific fighting commenced at dawn to-day.

NO CIVIC RECEPTION FOR CAPTAIN MULLER

LONDON, Nov. 18.—A storm of protest has been aroused in Melbourne by the suggestion that Captain Karl von Muller, commander of the German cruiser Emden, which was destroyed recently by the Australian cruiser Sydney, be given a public reception in recognition of his gallantry and courtesy, when he arrives in that city. This statement is made in a despatch from Reuter's Melbourne correspondent.

HARD FIGHTING AROUND LILLE

French Try Hard to Regain the Town—Reports Say Germans Are Becoming Demoralized

MANY PRISONERS TAKEN

CALAIS, Nov. 18.—What has been happening in Lille since the first days of October is a mystery. I have heard strange stories to the effect that, after occupying the town for a few days, the Germans retired toward the end of October and fortified themselves in positions on either side, where they are waiting for the French and British troops to dislodge them. This is now confirmed by stories of refugees from different towns, who say they had heard that the Germans had made only a short stay in Lille.

While the British and Belgian troops are given the special task of keeping the Germans from moving on Calais, the French are making serious efforts to recover Lille.

French Steadily Gaining.

The Germans held strong positions five miles from Bethune, whence a few days ago they sent a few shells into the town, but the French are making it every day more difficult for them to hold their ground.

All reports from the front state that the German troops are becoming demoralized, and desire nothing better than to throw down their arms without exposing themselves to being shot by their officers or by the troops behind them. Cases have been reported of their having been so worn out by hardships that frequently they refused to march when the order was given. An officer who has come from the region around Ypres says that corpses of German soldiers have been found tied to trees, where they had been shot for refusing to march. It is by where numbers alone that they are holding their ground in most places, and a slight advance is almost a miracle.

MONMOUTH'S CREW 700.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—It is officially announced that the British cruiser Monmouth, which was destroyed recently in the battle off Chile with German warships, carried forty-two officers and 666 men. Capt. Frank Brandt was in command of the Monmouth.

ONTARIO'S FALL WHEAT SURPASSES LAST YEAR BY SIXTEEN PER CENT

General Area of Dominion Has Increased the Planting by Over Nine Per Cent.

OTTAWA, Nov. 14.— The monthly crop report of the census and statistics office, issued to-day, deals with the area, yield and value of potato, root and fodder crops during the last season, with the area and condition of fall wheat sown for next year's crop, and with the progress of fall ploughing and summer fallowing.

Root and fodder crops in Canada, consisting of potatoes, turnips, mangolds, etc., hay and clover, alfalfa, fodder corn and sugar-beets, occupied this year a total area of 9,070,700 acres, as compared with 9,943,000 acres in 1913, and their estimated value is $226,668,000, as compared with $197,-986,000 in 1913.

The compilation of the results shows an area estimated in the five fall wheat provinces of 1,284,000 acres, compared with the area sown in 1913 of 1,184,800 acres, and the area harvested this year of 973,300 acres.

The acreage sown for 1915 represents a net increase over that sown for 1914 of 9.2 per cent. Last year the acreage sown was reported as 7.73 per cent. less than in 1912. The bulk of the fall wheat crop is grown in Ontario, where this year, the estimate is for 1,043,000 acres as compared with 898,000 acres sown in the fall of 1913. The increase under fall wheat for Ontario, therefore, is in the ratio of about

LOOKS FOR GLUT IN POULTRY MARKETS

Canadian Grocer Says American Embargo Will Disorganize Market

According to the Canadian Grocer, the action of the American Government in placing an embargo against Canadian poultry is likely to have the effect of glutting the market on this side of the line. A break-up of the weather at any time now is likely to result in heavy shipments, as the birds will come in from the fields and feed is very high. There is plenty of stuff in the country, although not much has been coming forward, and the result of a rush of sellers in the face of a poor demand would probably be the disorganization of the market.

Eggs continue to advance in price, with the export demand stronger than American surplus of over half a million cases should maintain the balance here to a large extent, it must also be remembered that the United States last year imported about half this amount, and, further, there is the uncertainty as to what may be the extent of the British demand. Butter and cheese markets are both quiet with little change in prices.

Making It Easy.

HELOISE ENQUIRES ABOUT TIPPERARY

(Pall Mall Gazette)

Heloise De Picardie—
"Englishman, Englishman, marching by the vine,
Singing such a merry song, and airy,
Tell me is this Picardy, sunny land of mine,
Half so much jolie as Tipperairee?"

M. Atkins De Londres—
"Wot oh!—Tipperary, Miss?—Honest, I dunno;
Only wot some lydy, name of Mary,
Lives there, and from Lunnon it's a stiffish bit to go,
That's all I can tell of Tipperary."

Heloise De Picardie—
"Highlander, Highlander, rollicking along,
How you sing so prettily, mon cher!
Tell me of the valley you are praising in your song,
Are the blossoms fair in Tipperairee?"

Corporal "Mac" De Glesga—
"Bonnie lass, bonnie lass, we be Scots nae braw,
Therefore we be canny men and wary,
Athlins we micht tell a lass of hoo the gowans graw,
Naethin' do we ken o' Tipperary."

Heloise De Picardie—
"Irishman, Irishman, sing to the breeze,
Warbling of your country and the fairy,
Waiting for her soldier in your Erin overseas,
Tell me of your love and Tipperairee."

Le Fusilier O'Hara—
"Bless yer soul, acushla! sure you've got me in a spell,
Askin' such a question for I've nary
Sweatheart—'less yerself 'll say the word—an' sad to tell,
I've niver set a fut in Tipperary."

$6,000,000 A DAY DURING NOVEMBER

BORDEAUX, France, Nov. 13.—The cost of the war to France for the month of November probably would be somewhat less than was the months of August, September and October.

A supplementary credit for extraordinary expenditures authorised today for November amounts to $182,-154,504, a daily average of a little above $6,000,000. The daily average for the first three months of the war was $7,000,000.

The navy receives an extraordinary credit of $855,000. The Government will disperse immediately $13,000,000 for repairs to the railroad system. These probably have been made necessary by the wear and tear due to the transportation of troops.

The sum of $1,314,000 has been set aside for the relief of the unemployed, while various smaller sums will be used to relieve the suffering in the departments of France, that at one time were invaded by the German troops, but which are now free of soldiers.

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Geo. Allan England

"Maybe. Or else it was another group of 'em. No telling. The whole country seemed to swarm with the devils. Anyhow, we had to mosey again. But—well—one of the darts got home on my best fighter. And—h-m!—he didn't last five minutes. He turned a kind of bluish-green, too. And swelled a good bit. I'll spare you the details, Beta. At any rate, we had to leave him. So there were only two of us, now, and God knew where home was, or how many thousand of the hairy devils were lying in ambush on the way. So then—"

"What did you do?" she asked, shuddering.

"We hiked, and kept on hiking! All day we beat and trampled through the forest, and toward night there was no more go in us. So we decided to make a stand. Pretty objects we were, too, torn and bruised, mired from swamps clear to our waists, and a mass of scratches and bruises! Well, we hadn't long to wait when the attack was on again.

"I gave my one remaining man the spare automatic, and showed him how to handle it; and for about an hour we stood off the devils. But they flanked us, and all at once my man grunted and pitched forward. I'm damned if they hadn't driven a spear clean through his lungs!

"After that, good God! it was just a man-hunt, endless and horrible, through trackless wilds, over hills and mountains, through valleys, across rivers. Heaven knows where! But I always tried to keep my wits and beat to southward, hoping, ever hoping I might reach the New Hope. Well—now and then I could get far enough ahead to snatch a bite or a drink. Twice I slept—twice, in about a week; think of that, will you? Once in a hollow tree, and once under a rock-ledge. Only a few hours in all. But it helped. Without that I couldn't have got through."

She took his hand, and kissed and caressed it.

"My Allan!" she whispered, while in her eyes the tears started hot. "You suffered all that just to come home again?"

"What else was there to do? The last few days I hardly knew anything at all. It was a daze, a dream, a nightmare. There was so much pain in every part that no one part could hurt very much. The bushes pretty nearly stripped every rag of clothes off me—and the skin, as well. My sandals went all to pieces. I lost my sense of direction a hundred times, and must have often doubled on my tracks. I ate and drank what I could get, like an animal. Once, in a period of lucidity, I remember finding a nest of fledgling birds. I crunched them down alive, pin-feathers and all! Well—"

"My boy! My poor, lost, tortured boy!"

"When they wounded me I never even knew. All I know is that the spear wasn't one of the poisoned ones. Otherwise—"

"There, there! Don't think about it any more, darling! Don't tell me any more. I know enough. It's too awful! Let's both try to forget!"

"I guess that's the best way, after all," he answered. "I found the river somehow, after a thousand or two eternities. Instinct must have guided me, for I turned up-stream in the right direction. And after that, all I remember is seeing the bridge across to Settlement Cliffs."

"And so you came home to us again, darling?"

"So I came home. Love led me, Beatrice. It was my chart and compass through the wilderness. Not even pain and hunger could confuse them. Nothing but death could ever blot them out!"

"And after all you'd been through, dear, you did what you did for us? Without resting. Without delay or respite?"

"That's life," he answered, simply. "That's the price of the new world. He who would build must suffer!"

Her arms embraced him, her breath was warm upon his face, and in the kiss that burned itself upon his eager lips he knew some measure of the sweetness of reward.

CHAPTER XXX.
INTO THE FIRE-SWEPT WILDERNESS.

Less than three weeks after the extermination of the Horde, Stern had already completed important measures looking toward the rehabilitation of the colony.

The damage had been largely repaired. Now only some half-dozen convalescent cases still remained on the sick-list. What the colony had lost in numbers it had gained in solidarity and a truer loyalty than ever before felt there.

All the survivors, now vastly more faithful to the common cause than in the beginning, showed an eager longing to lay hold of the impending problems with Stern, and to labour faithfully for the future of the great undertaking.

The fishing, hunting and domestication of wild animals all were resumed, and again the sound of hammers and anvils clanked through the caves.

Under Stern's direction, half a dozen men crossed the pools in boats, descended the north bank of the river, and got hold of the cut bridge cables.

Stern shot a thin line over to them by means of a bow and arrow. With this they pulled a stouter cord across, and finally a strong cable. All hands together soon brought the bridge once more up the cliff, where it was lashed to its old moorings.

Barring a few broken floor-planks, easily replaced, only slight damage had been done. One day's labour sufficed to put it in repair again.

The parapet was rebuilt and a wall constructed across the end of the broken terrace. Work was begun on new cave dwellings, with great care not to weaken the strata and so invite another disaster.

Stern, very wise by now in gauging the barbarian mentality, undertook no dire punishment of such as had been led away by H'yemba. But he gathered all the Folk together in the palisade, and there—close to the mutely eloquent object-lesson of the little cemetery—he made them a charweg, a talk in their own speech.

"My people!" cried he, erect and strong before them all, "listen now, for this thing ye must know!

"The evil of your hearts, thinking to prevail against me and the law, hath brought ye misery and death! Ye have rebelled against the law, and behold, many are now dead—innocent as well as guilty. The landslide smote ye, and enemies came—enemies far more terrible than the dreaded Lanskaarn ye fought in the Abyss! But a kaarn ye fought in the Abyss! But a battle and disaster. Only my hand alone saved ye—all who still live to breathe this upper air.

"Men! Ye beheld my doing with the earthquake and the Horde! Ye beheld, too, my answer to H'yemba, the evil man, the rebel and traitor. Him ye saw hurled, bleeding, from the parapet! That was my answer to his insolence! And if not he, then who can ever stand against me?"

He paused, and swept them with a glance, letting the lesson sink deep home. Before him their eyes were lowered; their heads bowed; and through them all ran murmurs of fear and supplication.

"My Folk! Rightly might I be angered with you, and require sacrifice and still more blood; but I am merciful. I shall not punish; I shall only teach, and guide, and help! For my heart is your heart, and ye are precious in my eyes.

"But, hark ye now, and think, and judge for yourselves! If any ever speak again of rebellion, or of treason, and seek to break the law, on his head shall be the blood of all. For surely woe shall come again on u— In your own behalf I warn you, and ye shall be the judges. Now answer me, O my Folk, what shall be done unto any who rebels?"

"He shall die!" boomed the voice of Zangaqua. The loyal fighter, now lean and gaunt with great labours, but still powerful, raised his corded hand on high. "Of a truth, that man shall die!"

"What death?" cried Stern.

"Even the death of H'yemba! Let him be cast from the parapet to death in the white rushing river far below!"

All echoed the cry: "Death to all traitors, from the rock!"

"So be it, then," Stern concluded. "Ye have spoken, and it shall be written as a law. From Execution Rock shall all conspirators be cast. Now go!"

He dismissed them. While they departed and filed down the terraces to their own homes, he stood there with folded arms, watching them very gravely. The last one vanished. He nodded.

"They'll do now!" said he to himself. "No more trouble from that source! Another milestone passed along the road of self-control, self-government and communal spirit. Ah, but the road's a long one yet—a long and hard and stony road to follow!"

Next day Stern began making his plans for the recovery of the lost aeroplane.

"This is by far the most important matter now before the colony," he told Beatrice, watching her nurse the boy as they sat by the fire, while outside the rain drummed over cliff and canyon, hill and plain. "Our very life depends on keeping a free means of communication open with the mother-country of the Folk, so to call it, and with the city-ruins that supply us with so many necessary articles. No other form of transportation will do. At all hazards we must have an aeroplane—one at least, more later, if possible."

"Of course," she answered; "but why not make one here? Down there in your workshop—"

"I haven't the equipment yet," he interrupted; "nor yet the necessary metal, the wire, a hundred things. All that will come in time when we get some mines to work and start a few blast-furnaces. But for the present, the best and quickest thing to do will be to look up the old machine again."

"But," she objected, terrified at thought of losing him again; "but I thought you said the Horde wrecked it!"

"So they did; but beasts like that probably couldn't destroy the vital mechanism beyond possibility of repair. That is, not unless they heaped a lot of wood all over it, and heated it white-hot, which I don't think they had intelligence enough to do. In any event, what's left will serve me as a model, for another machine. I really think I'll have to have a try for it."

"Oh, Allan! You aren't going to venture out into the wilderness again?"

"Why not, dearest? You must remember the forest is all burned now; perhaps for hundreds of miles. And the Horde, the one greatest peril that has dogged us ever since those days in the tower, has been swept out with the besom of flame!"

"Which has also surely destroyed the machine, even if they haven't!" she exclaimed, using every possible argument to discourage him.

CRITICAL TIME OF WOMAN'S LIFE

From 40 to 50 Years of Age. How It May Be Passed in Safety.

So. Wellington, B.C.—"For a year during the Change of Life I was all run down. I was really too weak to walk and was very despondent and thought I was going to die, but after taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier my health and strength returned. I am very thankful to you and praise your medicine. I have advised several women who suffered as I did to try your remedies. You may publish this if you wish."—Mrs. DAVID R. MORRIS, South Wellington, Vancouver Island, B. C.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. We know of no other medicine which has such a record of success as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. For more than 30 years it has been the standard remedy for woman's ills such as inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains and nervous prostration, and we believe it is unequalled for women during the period of change of life.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

A BATCH OF LETTERS FROM THE TRENCHES

A special correspondent of the London Star sends the following story of his talk with wounded soldiers at Paris:

One reservist was a cyclist. "I had my right hand loose on my handlebar," he said, "when I heard a shell burst 'smack.' I ducked my head and there came a whiz past my ear, and my first finger was clipped neatly. If I had been holding my handlebar properly my second finger would have gone too! I had been wounded in the leg, but I laid up a bit and had just resumed duty. I have been at it now for two months, and have had only two days' rest—one at ——, on the Meuse, and one at ——. It seems quite strange not to hear shells bursting and the rattle of the mitrailleuses and rifles. The small shells go off just like a sporting gun. The mitrailleuses hum like a motor, and the bullets keep buzzing like a swarm of bees. As the hours go on and you are still alive you grow indifferent to fire.

"When the enemy come close, though, it is different. We thought they did not like the bayonet, but it was a mistake. On one night they charged six times, twice right up to and once actually over our trenches, being mowed down like grass. They were on to my trench without it being possible to shoot them all. I jumped up and knocked two over point blank and bayoneted a third just in time. I have his boots and other odds and ends as keepsakes in my knapsack. I gave his revolver to my commanding officer. For three hundred yards in front of our trenches there must have been a heap two-deep most of the way, and about forty over our side of the first trench."

UNDERGROUND WARFARE.

M. Georges Berthoulat, in the "Liberte," gives some very striking impressions and observations made during a visit to the front where every morning the ambulances bring in those wounded the day before in the extraordinary subterranean warfare going on seven or eight miles off. In many places the opposing lines are not a hundred yards apart, and the burrowing French and Germans can hear each other speaking and the work of the picks and spades.

"The nights are spent in ambushing each other and charing in the dark, a terrible and gruesome business. In the daytime, as soon as a head is seen above ground, it is saluted by a shower of bullets, whilst the heavy artillery in the rear on both sides does its best to drop its shells into the entries of the adversaries' warrens. It is a new conception of war, which puts to flight all preconceived notions.

An officer related how the previous evening, whilst they were all at meal underground, a German shell found the entrance, killing two and wounding sixteen of the occupants, or almost the whole garrison of that particular burrow, except a cow which had been saved from a farm and kept below for its milk.

An officer who was present recounted the desperate fighting on the Carouie Plateau, where the slaughter was such that even to-day the aviators are obliged to fly over it at a great height to escape the pestilential odours from this human charnel house.

Amongst other anecdotes he told how after the furious struggle on 15th, 16th, and 17th September, when a regiment of infantry had to hold the hamlet of P—— under a continuous plunging fire from German guns posted on hills above, they were obliged to evacuate a large farm known as the Cholera Farm, leaving some of their wounded there. The lieutenant-colonel asked for volunteers to fetch these in, adding that there were a cart and horse ready. There were about 800 yards of open ground to be crossed under a fire of shot and shell. After a moment's silence a private, whose name, Expert, deserves to be mentioned, stepped out of the ranks, saluted, and said, "I will go."

REWARD AND PUNISHMENT.

For three days running, whilst the Cholera Farm was several times taken and retaken, Private Expert went all alone with his horse and little cart, picking up wounded and taking them to the ambulances, without a scratch, in spite of the avalanche of lead that he kept braving. On the third day, though, his horse was shot. Under the hot fire Expert unharnessed his dying animal and, placing himself in the shafts, began dragging the cart. On his way he met a vehicle belonging to another regiment, and quickly outstripping the horse to save his wounded. He brought them in, but with the consequence that he was sentenced to fifteen days' arrest for taking a horse without authority—and also awarded the military medal for valour. It is perhaps scarcely necessary to add that Expert did not "do" his fortnight, which was merely on record for form's sake.

Here is another story which appeals keenly to the French sense of humour. The —th Corps has a Roman Catholic chaplain, a colonial missionary, well known as the Pere Narp, and a Jewish Rabbi, Mr. G. R. Ginsburger. They are excellent friends, and are equally distinguished for the good they do. One evening they had stayed too late, tending the wounded and dying in the field, to be able to re-enter the cantonments. They found a deserted cottage with a truckle bed, and both threw themselves down upon it, the Pere Narp remarking with sly wit, "What a pity all the same, that there is not a photographer to take the Old and New Testaments as bedfellows!"

SOUTH AFRICA "EDEN BY COMPARISON."

(Letter from Sergt.-Major M. Attree, of the 18th Hussars, to his home at Hayward's Heath.)

The Germans must be a rotten crowd. The looting has been awful; beautiful homes smashed up and articles of clothing, household linen, pictures, and furniture smashed to atoms and trodden underfoot. They took away the wines, for on our advance up country the numerous German camps were strewn with bottles, articles of equipment, and other things too numerous to mention. They leave their killed by the side of the roads, and in the streets of villages—anywhere, in fact.

I have seen some awful sights. South Africa by comparison was Eden! The Germans are making a dead set at the British and are putting their best troops against them. They despised us as a negligible quantity, but they have got to know by now that they have to reckon with some of the best fighting troops in the world. We fight voluntarily, and not compulsorily.

MEAT CAUSE OF KIDNEY TROUBLE

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys If Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmasy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

COUNTRY WAS MADE TO LIVE IN.

(From the Breeders' Gazette.)

There is a great deal to country life—it means so much more than merely the fruits of the earth. But mind, the fruits of the earth are of importance. To grow bigger corn or finer grapes, to raise larger pigs and make better milk and cream and butter—all of these things are of high importance an really are at the base of any scheme of better living in the country. One must have the better crops, the better farm produce in order to make the farm pay, and thus to have the means for right country living. After all the country is more for living in than it is for mere money making in.

Life primarily is designed for what joy one can get from it. Happiness is the thing that we all crave, the thing that we all need. Hapiness best builds character. Happiness comes from several causes one a fine state of health. Happily the country affords the ideal lace for bodily health and vigour. Happiness comes from use of the body in vigorous and successful endeavour.

Here is where country life comes in strong; there is chance to develop the body perfectly in all manner of healthy work. And there is no need of overwork in the country. Happiness comes, too, from having an appreciative mind able to take in the beauty of the world and the delights of one's own environment. This appreciation comes from training largely. There are men who cannot see with any joy the most serene landscape.

Had Heart Trouble FOR YEARS.

Weighed 87 Lbs.
Now Weighs 138 Lbs.

Miss Beatrice Lougheed, Staples, Ont., writes: "I feel it my duty to tell you what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have done for me. I had heart trouble for quite a few years. I doctored for it, and altogether my bill amounted to $400, and still no cure. One day when very sick I was lying on a couch close to where some almanacs were hanging. I took one down, and was reading about what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills cured, and thought I would try them. I got six boxes to start with; have only taken three boxes and I never felt so well in my life as I do now. I only weighed 87 pounds when I started to take them, and now I weigh 138 pounds. I hope all poor sufferers will be benefitted by them as I have been."

Wherever there is any weakness of the heart, Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will strengthen it and build up a strong healthy system.

Price, 50 cents per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price, by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

CANADIANS ARE EAGER

Are Keen to Learn Because They Are Anxious to Get to the Front

BUSTARD CAMP, Salisbury Plains, Oct. 27.—We've settled down seriously to the routine of training camp life. We've left the elementary work which took such a large part of our time at Valcartier behind, and are busy with the more varied and interesting work of the advanced stages of the preparation for war game. And our keenness for work is whetted by news from the front, not more than five or six hours late, telling us what the men on the firing line, who were rookies like ourselves not so very long ago, are doing. The weather has come to our assistance, and three days with perhaps eight hours of sunlight altogether and only one shower have made taking cover a pleasant respite instead of a mud bath.

At ten minutes to nine every morning we're on parade with buttons polished and rifles as clean as oil and rags can make them. Ten minutes later all the formalities of parading have been gone through and we're out on the bare, grassy slope which does duty for a parade ground. We drill now on the "double company" system. Each company is 250 strong, and is divided into four platoons and 16 sections. A mounted captain on horseback is in command and four subalterns have charge of the platoons. Each platoon is made up of four sections, each under the charge of a non-commissioned officer. The smallest unit, the section, is half the size of the smallest unit under the old system of drill. The "double company" system of drill permits of much more flexibility of movement and greater certainty of control than was possible under the old system. And the drill, so far as the rank and file are concerned is so simple that we're fully as proficient in it already as the best militia regiments were in the other system.

Not Regarded as Automatons.

We're getting away from the parade ground idea of drill, where every movement was performed according to a certain fixed command, and where a misplaced word by the officer giving the command meant hopeless confusion. The new idea is to get the movement carried out by orthodox or unorthodox means. Major-General Alderson gave the officers a little talk to this effect some days ago, and the results are apparent already. The man in the ranks is no longer regarded as an automaton, moving to a stereotyped "open sesame," but as an intelligent human being. And the clerks and students and skilled mechanics and independent farmers who make up our ranks respond to this sort of treatment.

Yesterday afternoon, for example, when we were on our way back to camp after a route march, chaffing and singing as the custom is when we are "marching at ease," Major Higginbotham, in command of the battalion, suddenly called out, "Enemy's cavalry on the right." The words were hardly out of his mouth when every man in the battalion was running as fast as he could to take up the position in extended order which a flank attack demanded. In less than a minute everyone was flat on the ground, behind some sort of cover, blazing away at the imaginary enemy. The officers scarcely needed to give commands. Every man knew that his duty was to shake out into line, behind cover, and begin firing. We were absorbed in beating off this attack of the foe when another rapid alarm of, "Enemy's artillery to the left rear" came. On the instant two companies faced about and dashed forward to take a new position. A few of them got in advance of the rest of the firing line. They heard about it from their platoon officers and section commanders. "You'd have been shot by your own comrades" they were told. Mistakes like these, however, are more valuable than carrying out movements properly by accident. We learn more from them.

"Rosewood" For Delinquents.

After every parade every tent is the scent of a debate on the work that has just been gone through. "You kept crowding close to me all the time in that extended order work, you poor bonehead," says one private. "Yes, but Bill edged into me," is the excuse, "and——" "Do better next time," is the response, "or we'll lay the rosewood on you." The rosewood is a wooden slat, stained to represent rosewood, taken from one of the cabins of the Tunisian. It is used to correct the delinquencies of members of the "Order of the Rosewood" who are lax in their duties. And any member who has once experienced the regulation, six whacks from the "rosewood," usually is particularly careful to guard against a recurrence of the experience.

At all the parades particular attention is paid to getting from marching formation to extend order firing line formation in the minimum number of sections. This afternoon our platoon was a little slow in doubling out from columns of fours to an extended line with four paces between each man. "You'd all be dead or wounded if you did it that way in action," remarked our platoon commander. He made us do it over again. The second time we scraped most of the skin off our chests taking headlong dives at the ground. In ten seconds a compact group of 60 men had melted into the ground across a front of 180 yards. We repeated the movement several times to make sure that everyone knew his place. Work life that may be hard, but we like it because its what we'll have to do under fire some time. We have every incentive to take an absorbing interest in our work.

A CELEBRITY.

A palatial touring car had attracted the attention of a visitor to Boston and he asked his friend:

"Who is the man seated in that large car?"

The Bostonian glanced in the direction indicated and replied:

"That is the poet laureate of a well-known biscuit factory."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

Jesus and Peter. Mark xiv:27-31, 53-54, 66-72.

Golden Text—Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall. 1 Co. x-12.

1. Verses 27-28: How did Jesus know that all His disciples were going to forsake him that night? Was it divine or human knowledge?

2. Was the knowledge that they would forsake him that night absolute, or contingent? That is, could they by divine grace, through his warning, have stood courageously by their master, notwithstanding his prediction to the contrary? Why?

3. Verse 29 — Would it ever be right, or not, and why, for the best man living to feel positively that there are certain sin which he will never commit?

4. Was it right for Peter or not and why, to have felt as he did, that he would never betray his Master?

5. Verse 30—Since Jesus positively stated that Peter would deny him thrice that night, would it or not have been possible for Peter not to have done so Why?

6. Verse 31—It seems that Christ's statements about Peter's denial of him were warnings, but in what spirit did Peter take the warnings?

7. If Peter had not been so conceited, but had believed what Jesus said and had humbly comitted himself to God, what, if any difference, would there have been in his history? (See the case of God's statement concerning the destruction of Nineveh, Nine-Jonah iii).

8. What should be the attitude of every follower of Jesus concerning possible future sin?

9. Verses 53-54: Why did Jesus submit to be led away to the high priest when he could have freed himself and destroyed his enemies?

10. What influence did the warning of Jesus and His subsequent arrest have upon Peter?

11. Why did Peter follow Jesus afar off, instead of as near to Him as he could get?

12. What was the probable state of mind of Peter, "as he sat with the servants and warmed himself at the fire"?

13. Verses 66-68— Peter was now dejected, discouraged, and in doubt, concerning the mission of his Master; how much therefore, under the circumstances, was he to blame for his denial that he belonged to him?

14. Put a hundred present day good men in Peter's identical circumstances, and say what proportion of them would not have done practically as Peter did?

15. Do you think it possible, or not, that Peter prayed to God for help, and guidance when under this severe temptation to doubt? Give your reasons.

16. Verses 69-71: With his faith in his Master's messianic claims, shattered, and his utter dejection; with the devil bringing to bear on him all his influence, was Peter in a sane state of mind? Why?

17. Verse 72—If Peter had to pass through the same temptation to deny his Master, an hour later, or after he had remembered the words of Jesus, and had time to reflect, and come back to himself, what would have been the probable result?

Lesson for Sunday, Nov. 22, 1914. Jesus and Pilate. Matt. xxvii:1-11-31; Luke xxiii:1-25.

TIRED-OUT KIDNEYS

Kidney troubles are so frightfully common because the kidneys are so easily upset by overwork or excesses of eating and drinking. Cure is effected not by whipping them on to renewed effort, but by awakening the action of liver and bowels by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This rests the kidneys and makes them well. Backache and urinary disorders then disappear.

NO TRACE OF CRUISERS.

Both Monmouth and Good Hope Lost Says Admiralty.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—The Admiralty published the names of 52 officers and warrant officers who were aboard the British cruiser Good Hope, when it was sunk with the cruiser Monmouth by the German squadron off the coast of Chile. The names include that of Rear Admiral Sir Christopher Cradock, commander of the British ships.

The Monmouth had aboard 42 officers. The captain of the Good Hope was Philip Franklin. The captain of the Monmouth was Frank Brandt.

Earlier in the day the Admiralty announced that hope of the safety of the two cruisers had been abandoned.

The two hospital ships sent out by the Chilean Government to search the vicinity of the recent naval engagement between British and German cruisers have arrived in Coronel and report that they found no trace of any of the vessels which took part in the battle.

The British Admiralty, in its list of officers who perished in the sinking of the Good Hope, includes Midshipman Hathaway, Fredericton, N.B., and Midshipman Silver, Halifax, N. S.—two Canadians.

Radway's Ready Relief

Mrs. J. Westervelt of Paterson, N. J., writes: "I have a large family of small children, and it has saved me many a doctor's bill. For croup, sore throat it is a king over that. My little girl has sprained her ankle and in rubbing around has without any other doctor than Radway's Ready Relief."

CURES SORE THROAT

Apply the Relief to the throat and chest and the surface smarts and reddens. Give Radway's Pills in small doses as will freely move the bowels. For a sudden cold, take a large dose of Radway's Pills, and a teaspoonful of Relief with a teaspoonful of molasses, in a tumbler of hot water. Retire at once to bed. A profuse perspiration will break out, and in the morning the cold will be gone.

CRUDE THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITORIAL PEN

The Mothers in Sickness.

We think the most pathetic passage in the Bible is the description of the lad who went out to the harvest field of Shunen and got sunstruck—throwing his hand on his temples and crying out, "Oh, my head, my head!" and they said, "Carry him to his mother." And then the record is "He sat on her knees till noon and then died." It is an awful thing to be ill away from home in a strange hotel, once in a while men coming to look at you, holding their hands over their mouth for fear that they will catch the contagion. How roughly they turn you in bed! How loudly they talk! How you long for the ministries of home! We knew one such who went away from one of the brightest of homes for several weeks' business absence at the West. A telegram came at midnight that he was on his death bed, far away from home. By express train the wife and daughter went westward, but they went too late. He feared not to die, but he was in agony to live until his family got there. He tried to bribe the doctor to make him live a little while longer. He said, "I am willing to die but not alone." But the pulse fluttered, the eyes closed and the heart stopped. The express train met in the midnight—wife and daughters going westward—life? less remains of husband and father coming eastward. Oh, it was a sad, pitiful, overwhelming spectacle. When we are sick, we want to be sick at home. When the time comes for us to die, we want to die at home. The room may be humble and the faces that look into ours may be very plain, but who cares for that? Loving hands to bathe the temples. Loving voices to speak good cheer. Loving lips to read the comforting promises of Jesus.

Mutual Kindness.

Kindness, as well as politeness, may be rightfully named as the lubricators of society. As impoliteness, either in old or young persons, male or female, is sometimes painful and always unpleasant; so we may say of unkindness, that it is a sore spot, a friction, a dreadful fault, to ever be avoided. Kindness allays irritation, soothes trouble, helps the needy, encourages the dull and discouraged, sweetens the home, unifies the church and ennobles society. A kind word, is like apples of gold in pictures of silver. Many a hot temper has been cooled down by kind words. Many a threatened quarrel and fight has been settled in peace by kindness. Many a divided and distracted church, or other organization has quited down and reunited, by kind counsels, and kinds acts. Many an ugly faction has stinct at times superior to man's readitd a natural death by the kindly administration of kindness. Many a wretched and distracted home has been brought to conditions of peace and joy by the mellowing of influences of kind words and deeds. Hearts without number, burdened and aching from illtreatment have been relieved and blessed by kindness. Other hearts poisoned by jealousy and selfishness, passion and pride have been sweetened and purified, by the cultivation of kindly feelings and thoughts. Kindness, to be thorough and effective must be reciprocal as well as receivable.

Whoever would that all others should be kind to them, must themselves be kind to all others; on the principle that he that would have friends must show himself friendly. Kindliness may be misplaced sometimes; but that is the exception, and not the rule. They who cultivate and practice kindness feel a worldful better than those who indulge in bitterness and ill temper.

* * *

Parents should remember that every distressing, blood-curdling story told to a young child, every superstitious fear instilled into his young life, the mental attitude they bear towards him, the whole treatment they accord him, are making phonographic records in his nature which will be reproduced with scientific exactness in his future life.

* * *

Do you treat your child with as much respect as you treat friends? Example is stronger than precept, and if you treat him with respect he will respect himself. Do you provide amusements for your children at home? If not they will seek them elsewhere. Provide them with good literature, but be careful not to place within their reach the life history of an outlaw. Help your children with their games and their studies; be kind yet firm, and though your home has been a rude log cabin, the children will not stray from the place where love dwells.

Vigor of Mind and of Body

As Essential for Success in Everyday Life as for Glories on the Battlefield.

Brain power, as well as muscular strength, can only be maintained by a plentiful supply of pure, rich blood to rebuild the cells and tissues wasted by the activities of life the worries of business or household cares or the devastating effects of disease.

If you have got run down in health, so that you fail to obtain from the food you eat the necessary nourishment for blood and nerves, you can turn to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food with positive assurance that this food cure will help you back to health and vigor.

Neuralgia of the Heart.

Mr. James G. Clark, Fosterville, York county, N.B., writes:—"I have been a great sufferer from what the doctors said was neuralgia of the heart. The pain started in the back of the neck and worked down into the region of the heart. Though I had taken a lot of medicine of one kind and another, I could not get anything to help me until I used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

"When I began this treatment I could not rest in bed, except by sitting upright, on account of the dreadful pains about the heart and the quick, loud beating. The change which Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has made in my condition is wonderful. It has entirely overcome these symptoms, and is making me strong and well. If this statement will help to relieve the suffering of others, you are at liberty to use it."

Englishwoman's Letters to Friend in United States

Showing Vivid Glimpses of Home Life and How the War Has Touched It

(From a Young Englishwoman.)

The following is a batch of letters published in the Springfield Republican to friends in Boston. They indicate what the average Englishwoman of education is thinking and feeling:

Folkestone, Oct. 18.

. . . Well, so much seems to have happened in Europe, one might say in the whole world, since we met that I don't quite know where to begin. One wonders if life is ever going to be the same again, or will people soon forget these terrible lessons? . . . You would not know Folkestone, as it is just like a foreign town. Besides thousands of refugees, we have thousands of soldiers—about three or four times as many as in peace time—and we are to have a great many more, directly huts are built. It does seem extraordinary how Britain always makes her armies after a war has broken out!

Mother has been away this last fortnight with M. and I think she needed a change. Also I was glad she was not here, since the rush from Antwerp has been going on. Such heartrending scenes, and food at the harbour running out, as the authorities could hardly cope with the numbers. It was a sight to see all sorts of craft arriving from Ostend — pleasure steamers, trawlers, fishing smacks, yachts, and, they say, even rowing boats, but the last I cannot vouch for. Everyone had to send down sandwiches to feed these starving people. Besides all the refugees, there were hundreds of wounded Belgian soldiers. Late one evening the War Office commandeered the Metropole Hotel (turning the guests out!) and turned it quickly into a hospital for these Belgian soldiers.

The Lees were swarming with these wretched men; all with wounds, but not bad wounds; most of them seemed to be hit in the leg or arm. Their clothes were very quaint—some were hatless, others in civilian coats with uniform trousers! One man was actually out in a suit of pyjamas and a uniform cap! Lots of them have been distributed to different places now, I am glad to say. We are nearly as dark as London, as all the lights in the streets running up to the Lees have their seaside darkened; also the lights on the Lees themselves are very few and far between. People seem to think we are more likely to have aeroplanes with explosives here than Zeppelins.

If mother feels nervous, I shall want her to go away, but where to is the question, as London is no safer. Thank goodness, we hear today that four German destroyers have been sunk off the Dutch coast. One is becoming bloodthirsty, I believe, but one feels so sad about the Hawke. C. is pursuing German craft in the East; V. is bringing home 1,450 of the Australian contingent, and will be here soon, we trust. Then he has to join a naval ship, being R.N.R., and we are afraid it will mean the North Sea. I am afraid this has been an "all war letter," but we can think of nothing else. . . .

(From a Daughter of Mrs. Humphry Ward.)

—— October 11.

. . . Antwerp has fallen, and one feels almost stunned by the pitiless horror of it all. The newspapers are busily engaged in trying to make as little of it as possible, and they may for aught I know be right in thinking the capture of Antwerp cannot strategically have much effect in the long run; that one must be content to leave to the military experts and trust to their proving their contention to be a right one, but it is impossible not to believe that the fall of Antwerp must have a great effect upon Germany and the spirits of her people, and, unfortunately! upon the morale of her army! And the suffering of those inhabitants! And the plight of the refugees! I suppose to-day and every day there are pouring over fresh thousands to these shores. . . .

It is Friday, the 16th, now, and this anxious week drags on. I think the days from last Friday to Tuesday were about the blackest we have passed through yet. The fall of Antwerp in accomplishment seemd so much worse than it did when in anticipation. It dragged so many other things in its train. . . . And over and above all it entailed this agonised fleeing of thousands and thousands of miserable people, and the landing here of, I suppose, 60,000 or 70,000 more refugees these six days! And the influx is still coming on at the rate of 6,000 to 10,000 a day. The martyrdom of Belgium is more than one can bear to think of. How can they ever recover from it?

The resources of the Local Government Board are being taxed to the uttermost to provide for the refugees and the unofficial war refugees' committee which very pluckily, if somewhat chaotically, started the work, since taken over by the Government, still is entrusted with all the allocation of the people to the centres of private hospitality which have ben offered all over the country, and simply cannot cope fast enough now with this terrible influx. We have long ago given up the settlement to refugees, and have about 35 or 40 there. The hall looks like a cheerful hospital ward, rows of beds for the women and children, of the peasant or workman class, and plenty of screens. Their menkind sleep in a big room in the basement, and the kitchen down there is given up to them for preparing and eating their meals, and all is working very happily. Then on what is called the "private side," where the warden and residents live, a whole floor of six or seven nice rooms, holding two beds or more each, have been given up to the better class of refugees, and there we have now a pathetic mixed company.

Mother (Mrs. Humphry Ward) has given a great deal of personal care and attention to this matter for the last five weeks now, and has got up a little fund for defraying expenses of all this at the settlement. It was decided last week at the settlement council meeting to go on housing refugees indefinitely, the need for accommodation is so great. . . .

I promised A., who was at —— last Sunday week, worn out after ministering to everybody in her family, to let you know that she had lost her brother, Col. D—— B—— and her nephew ——, the son of the judge ——. Both died of wounds in France. The colonel died in the hospital at St. Nazaire of tetanus, after beginning to recover, and they brought his body back to Wales. The young nephew, alas! died sometime and somewhere after Mons, but when I last heard they did not know where. Both leave widows and children. It is only the same tale everywhere.

We all keep up our spirits, and I hear the military people are really perfectly satisfied. . . . A. (the brother of the writer) is in Egypt with his regiment, the Herts Yeomanry, the first Yeomanry ever sent abroad to relieve Regulars—a great honour. Goodness knows how long they may not be there, and of course at any time they may have trouble with the Turks. It is wonderful to think what real soldiers they will all become before the winter is done! . . .

(From the Wife of the Headmaster of Well-known Preparatory School.

Broadstairs, October 20.

. . . Your letter has been the greatest delight and comfort to me. I love to feel that you are in sympathy with us, and heaven knows we are in need of that just now! We have already lost five old and beloved boys. One little thing of 15, the only son of Lady M. a—(and she a widow), who was washed into the sea from the Abonkir, picked up, and placed on the Hogue, in bed with hot blankets and restoratives, and almost immediately that ship was also blown up!

Our son, J., wires that he is going to France direct from New York or Boston to join something or do something, if only to be a gravedigger! And M. (a maried son) now leaves for the front on the 28th, or 5th November. A. (another son) simply yearned to go, but parents and boys and very much valued friends persuaded him that his duty lay here with the futre army! And the King begged schoolmasters to go plodding on with the next generation. H. (still another son) can get passed by no doctor, owing to his heart, and he has been toiling for the Prince of Wales' Fund and Belgium. A. and all our masters are special constables guarding the Marconi and our North Foreland Lighthouse at night, and there are trenches and guns all along our dear cliffs. Ostend feels very near. We can see her lights at night, and hope the Germans will soon be "dug out" of her. All the towns are teeming with destitute Belgian refugees, with no money or homes to return to. We wonder always what Holland means to do. Great ships have been passing all to-day and one longs to ask them "Why?" and "Where?" and every paper is read with a tightening of the chest and a gasp of thankfulness if the honour list contains no familiar name.

7 p.m.—We hear Ostend has been retaken and hope it is true. We hear that all Belgian refugees must leave the east coast and go further inland, as nine have already been arrested as spies. (The Times of 23rd October stated: "Owing to the fear that German spies may make their way into the country disguised as Belgian refugees, Home Office instructions were received at Hull that no Belgian refugees were to be admitted anywhere on the east coast.") I love the cutting you sent—the sympathy of your great country is one of our greatest comforts. On Sunday Clara Butt and Kennerley Rumford arrived; we have their two little boys this term, and I heard the tiny one say before chapel, "Sing up, mummie; I want the boys to hear you." They made £1,300 for the Prince of Wales' Fund at one Albert Hall concert, and £600 at Brighton on Saturday. I told her how I envied her being able to sing for the nation, and she said, "Yes, it's grand!"

(From an Englishwoman, Whose Husband's Name is Well Known to Scholars.

London, October 21.

. . . You would hardly know London at night—it is so dark we can only just see our way about, and great searchlights up above are raking the sky. The streets swarm with Belgians, poor and not poor. Oh, that is an infamous story! But, do you know, the atmosphere that one regretted so in the Boer War is absent. One does not hear Germany denounced, nor are losses and victhe cause of despair and jubilation. A deep, earnest spirit seems to possess everybody, and the spiritual issue seems to be constantly before us. Life is simplified in fifty ways, and we all feel very close to each other. I am sorry for old people—a great many are dying. Mother is wonderful. You know what a pessivist she is—almost Tolstoyan. Well, she sees where honour called us, and that, as things were, there was only one answer. Have you read Treitsche's and Bernhardi's books? I did not know human beings thought such thoughts, far less printed and preached them!

Have you seen a little series of penny and twopenny pamphlets published by the Oxford University press? They are worth reading and clarify one's thoughts, and feed no evil passions. They are called Oxford pamphlets. . . .

CLEANING FURS.

Sable, squirrel, etc., may be cleaned by rubbing with warm bran, and ten brush to free the fur of bran. It is best to lay articles to be cleaned on a flat board or table. You can clean furs if you rub ermine and white fox with a soft piece of white flannel dipped in flour Rub against the grain, and continue rubbing until the fur is clean Shake out, and then rub off the remaining flour with a clean flannel A bath in hot cornmeal always makes fur shinging and fluffy.

Advice to Mothers.

Be careful that baby's ears are flat, not turned under, when his head rests on a pillow. Do not be in a hurry to get a child on its feet or over urge it to walk. Too much stress cannot be laid on this point, especially in case of boy baby. No grown lad thanks his mother for bowlegs. Give a baby a drink of water, pure cold water every day. Not too much, but some.

Never give babies anything ice cold, unless you want a case of indigestion, not even in summer.

Do not weight babies in unsuitable clothing. Keep a child sweet and clean and if it is well you will have no trouble or cause for complaint; amuse a baby; give it appropriate toys and let it learn to entertain it-

ST. VITUS DANCE

Another Severe Case Cured Through the Use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills

St. Vitus dance is a common form of nervous trouble, which affects not only young children but men and women as well. The only cure lies in plenty of pure blood, because good blood is the life food of the nerves. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure the most severe cases of St. Vitus dance, because they actually make the rich, red blood that feeds and restores the starving, shattered nerves. This has been proved in hundreds of cases, among them that of Mrs. John Duncan, London, Ont., who says: "About a year ago I found myself becoming very nervous. At the outset I did not pay much attention to it as I thought the trouble would pass away. In this I was disappointed, for I soon found myself rapidly growing worse. My right arm and leg began to jerk and twitch all the time, even when I was in bed, and I found great difficulty in walking or doing any work. Finally the trouble affected my speech and it was with difficulty I made myself understood. Of course I was doctoring for the trouble, but was not being helped, and finally the doctor wanted me to go to the hospital for treatment. This I did not care to do, and it was at this stage that I decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. By the time I had used four boxes I felt much better, and in a short time longer I was quite well and strong. My neighbours look upon my cure as quite wonderful, and indeed I think it is, and shall always be grateful for what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills did for me."

These Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or can be had by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. Brockville, Ont.

SCIENCE ASSISTS THE FIGHTERS OF TO-DAY

WHY AND HOW INVISIBLE BATTERIES FIGHT DEADLY DUELS IN WARFARE

In indirect firing the guns are sheltered behind a knoll or ridge, or, if necessary, sunk in pits. From any point of vantage, where he can best see, the battery commander directs the fire. It is not necessary that the gunners have more than the range, line of flight and direction of fire. The battery is completely concealed, just as the gunners cannot see the enemy. It is necessary, however, that some prominent object, to be used as an aiming point, come within range of their vision. The officer at the observation position can see the aiming point and the target and with a specially devised instrument extends imaginary lines from both objects to himself, measuring with mathematical precision the angle thus formed and of which he is the apex. The gunners aim at the aiming point and deflect their field pieces the number of degrees shown in the angle measurement, thus training directly upon the target which they cannot see. With the range properly gauged, the trajectory of the projectile carries it over the ridge directly to the target. Concealed, or masked batteries, because of the use of smokeless powder, can be located only with great difficulty, save from an aeroplane.

ALTHOUGH two most potent factors in the great conflict now raging between the armies of the Triple Entente and those of the Teutonic Alliance are generalship and the individual intelligence and faculty for initiative on the part of the rank and file of the opposing forces, military experts know that the European war will not be won and lost by these alone. That which looms large in the balance of events is the armaments and equipments of the armies engaged. Little, however, is left to judge between them, in comparison, for there is much that is closely guarded by the general staffs of all the countries engaged.

Concerning the field artillery branch of the heavy arms of the troops of the nations engaged, Great Britain's batteries are the heaviest, although the British guns in the field are only a small portion of the ordnance pitted against that of the German Empire. The calibre of the ordinary field weapons in use by the armies and the weight of the shrapnel projectiles fired by these guns are as follows:—

Great Britain	3.3	13.48 pounds
France	2.95	15.96 pounds
Germany	3.05	15 pounds
Russia	3	14.41 pounds
Belgium	2.95	14.3 pounds
Austria	3.01	14.72 pounds

In addition the various armies, particularly those of France and Germany, have guns of greater calibre concerning whose design little is known save by the general staffs and artillerists of those countries. Besides the regular field artillery batteries of Great Britain, there is the more mobile force of Royal Horse artillery equipped with guns of three-inch calibre.

Great Britain's guns are made in the State arsenals and by the Elswick Ordnance Company and [illegible] Maxim and Coventry Ordnance works. The guns of the German army, for the most part are made in the State arsenals, as are those of France in the French government works. Russia's guns are manufactured by Putilov and the Belgian guns by Krupp and Cockerill. Austria's are made by the State and by Skoda and Hartzell.

As was the case in South Africa and Manchuria, ordnance originally designed for other functions is now used in the field. These pieces embrace the functions of ordinary field pieces, although of much greater calibre. Howitzers and mortars are carried in the field armaments of the Powers engaged that can hurl projectiles varying in weight from 50 to 250 pounds. No boundary line can be assigned which will separate these field equipments from those of the light units of a siege train.

The British sixty-pounder gun has a calibre of five inches, its charge is nine and a half pounds of cordite and its shrapnel range is 10,000 yards, or about six miles.

The German ten centimetre gun has a calibre of four inches and has an effective shrapnel range of 5,750 yards, more than three miles. A common shell can be used up to more than six miles.

The French fifteen-centimetre howitzer is a very popular piece in the army of the republic. A few years ago 120 batteries were said to have been armed with it. The gun is a short piece, the shell weighs ninety-four pounds and it has an effective range of 7,000 yards. On war footing three ammunition wagons accompany each gun.

COMPARING HOWITZERS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND GERMANY

The Germans also possess a fifteen centimetre howitzer the rate of fire of which is two to three rounds a minute, the shell weighing eighty-seven and a half pounds. The British six-inch howitzer fires a projectile weighing 122 pounds and has an effective range of 7,000 yards.

The heaviest field equipment used by Germany, other than her siege artillery, is an 8.4 inch mortar which weighs 4.9 tons. It has to be fired from a special vehicle, and can be operated only from a platform. It requires four hours to bring it into action and the shell weighs 280 pounds and carries a heavy charge of high explosive.

Of siege ordnance the French 10.7 howitzer is probably the most formidable weapon, although it is believed that the Germans have siege pieces of greater calibre which were used against the Liege forts. At the mock siege of Langres in 1907 the French artillery transported this gun by special horse draught, as it was found too heavy for the type of siege railway made use of. This gun and its means of transportation have been considerably improved since then.

Field artillery is playing a part of the greatest importance in the present campaign. Sinister reports have arrived from all points in the theatre of operations telling of the immense carnage wrought by artillery fire. In the Franco-Prussian campaign of 1870 the French ordnance was completely outclassed by the German Krupp wedge-lock field guns. The mitrailleuse, a type of machine gun which the French General Staff believed to be superior to anything possessed by the Germans, proved a miserable failure.

While some of the finest field ordnance in the world is made by the firm of Schneider & Co., at Creusot, France, the idea that the French artillery batteries are equipped with pieces made familiar in the South African and Balkan campaigns is a mistaken one. The guns used in the French army are manufactured in the State arsenals and in no circumstances are they for sale.

The greatest secrecy prevails in the manufacture of this weapon, and the guns are never exposed when the regiments are on parade, the pieces being covered with tarpaulins. The manufacture of the guns is superintended by officers of the French army ordnance corps, and it is said that if any of the pieces are in danger of capture by the enemy a secret key can be removed which renders the guns absolutely useless.

The field artillery equipment of Great Britain has undergone a complete change since the close of the South African campaign. During several phases of that conflict it developed that the French guns used by the Boers easily outranged the standard field pieces of the British forces. These guns were popularly known as Creusots, and were manufactured by Schneider & Co., at Creusot, France.

In order to cope with this Boer superiority in artillery, it was necessary to send to the front naval guns taken from British war vessels. These were mounted on improvised gun carriages, and it was the presence of the naval guns in Ladysmith that enabled the garrison to overcome disparity in ordnance and hold out against the Boer investing force until relief came.

The long recoil system is employed in all the field guns used in the European armies. With this system the gun carriage is immovable, and the recoil is taken up in cylinders, either placed under the carriage or along the trail. The principle is the same in all services, although the mechanical arrangement may differ somewhat. The principle is to hold the gun carriage rigidly in position while the gun recoils on the carriage. The energy of the recoil is utilized to run the gun out after each discharge to its normal position on the carriage. The long recoil system was developed in France about sixteen years ago.

As has been demonstrated in the present campaign, the object of modern field artillery is effective fire with shrapnel. The three-inch shrapnel projectile in use in the United States army carries 264 bullets, and these bullets to be effective against men in the field must have tremendous striking energy. The jacket of the shrapnel projectile is thin and a small charge only is required to shatter this and release the bullets.

The explosion of the shell, however, does not impart to the bullets any increased impetus or velocity. The velocity of the bullets when scattered after the shattering of the shell is really the velocity of the shell proper. The design of the artillerist is to burst the shrapnel projectile over and short of the target, and it is especially effective against troops sheltered behind imperfect cover or in shallow intrenchments. When burst over earthworks the bullets will search out the troops in shelter. It is regarded as impossible for troops to advance any considerable distance in the open under shrapnel fire.

ORDINARY FRENCH SHRAPNEL EFFECTIVE AT THREE MILES

The ordinary field pieces of the French forces, it is said, have an effective shrapnel range of more than three miles. The French army field piece was developed by General Langlois. He as a practical artillerist worked with Colonel Dupont, an ordnance engineer officer, and these men evolved the field piece which is now in use with remarkable success in the French army. It is noteworthy that American machine tools are used in several of the French arsenals.

The French, British and Russian artillery resort to indirect fire. That is, in assuming a position from which to shell the enemy, the battery commanders shelter their guns behind a ridge or knoll, so that neither the guns nor their crews can be seen from the point of attack. The fire is directed by the battery commander, who takes up a position from any slight eminence from which he can directly see the target.

With a range determining instrument the officer at this observation point gives the range to the gunners, and at the same time some prominent point of the landscape, such as a tree, a post or a church spire is selected as an aiming point. It is necessary that this point be visible to the gunners as well as the commander of the observation position, who measures with mathematical accuracy the angle of imaginary lines extending from his position to the aiming point and the target.

With a similar apparatus on the gun, the gunner is thus enabled with reasonable certainty, when he receives from his commander the range and the deflection, to reach the target from his position of concealment. With the use of smokeless powder it would be practically impossible for an enemy to locate a battery properly intrenched and firing indirectly. The utilization of aeroplanes in warfare, however, has changed materially this phase of artillery operations.

Aeroplane squadrons are attached to each army corps of France, Great Britain and Germany, in the present field operations. The official reports of Field Marshal Sir John French, of the British expeditionary force with the allied army, have directed attention to the potency of this new arm of the service.

While aeroplanes have not revolutionized warfare altogether along the lines that some military experts expected, they have changed completely reconnaissance operations, so that an army to-day with the most efficient and complete aviation corps wields a tremendous advantage over a less fortunate adversary.

So far as artillery is concerned, the advantage of a well masked position is often reduced by aerial scouts, who are able to make accurate notes from a safe altitude. The location of an enemy's batteries can be transmitted to headquarters by radio from the air and the screened guns searched out by opposing artillery.

Without the use of aeroplanes, military experts assert, the campaign as it is being fought in the western theatre of operations could have been impossible. The vigilant aerial scouts follow the smallest move of the opposing forces, noting the withdrawal of forces here and the reinforcements at the lines there, so that the gigantic field operations have developed practically into a monster tragic game of chess, with the opposing generals pitting their wits, not the least of which are their aerial wits, against each other.

With the old fashioned method of artillery fire, in general use until quite recently and still in use by the armies of some of the nations involved in the present conflict, the cannoneers stood up behind their guns in the open. This is now changed, at least in the French and British services. Instead of the caissons being about fifteen feet in the rear of the guns when in action, they are wheeled abreast of the pieces. The gun is operated by two men, one training and firing, the other loading and ejecting the empty cartridge case.

The caisson or limber is up-ended so that the body rests almost perpendicular to the ground. When carried on the march the projectiles have their heads pointing downward, but when the limber is up-ended the projectiles lie parallel with the ground in position to be slid out of the limber and into the gun breach. The top of the caisson consists of two doors, which swing outward when it is up-ended and form wing protections for the men who serve the guns.

Kneeling behind the protecting bottom of the caisson when in action are three artillerymen, completely sheltered from rifle fire. Two of these men pass out the ammunition, while the third sets the shrapnel fuse to the required time. As a rule the time does not extend beyond twenty-two seconds.

It is necessary in obtaining the desired effect with shrapnel fire to explode the projectile at a point between 400 and 500 feet short of the object fired at. The bullets, spreading like the opening of a monstrous fan, are carried on to the object at the full remaining velocity of the shell. The dispersion of the bullets is regulated largely by the position of the bursting powder charge.

In some instances shrapnel projectiles are made with percussion fuses in addition to the time mechanism so as to insure the bursting of the shell when it strikes the ground.

In correcting the range after the first shot by direct fire the battery commander watches closely the bursting of the first shell. If it is too short, he buckets or forks the object fired at by an increased range, reaching the object on the third shot by taking a mean of the two ranges.

Concerning the effect of shrapnel fire, it has been stated by experts that, while an average taken shows that of every four men wounded by rifle or machine gun fire three recover, of every four men wounded by artillery fire three die.

EFFICIENCY OF THE RUSSIAN OFFICER

A WRITER in the Sphere calls attention to the great increase in the efficiency of Russian officers. "It must never be forgotten," he says, "that the ancient Russia which rose to greatness under Vladimir the Great and Yaroslav the Lawgiver and sent forth its hosts by land and sea to attack Constantinople, or the Bosphorus, lay much nearer the west than was the case in later years.

We are accustomed to think of Russia before the days of Peter the Great as a barbarous state shut off from Western Europe. As a fact, it is probable that in the eleventh and twelfth centuries Russia was at least on a level with Western nations in all essentials of civilization. It centred not in Moscow, which did not become prominent until 1147, but in sacred Kiev, on the Dnieper. The fatal practice adopted by the kinas great princes of the house of the Viking Rurik of dividing their dominions among their children led to a state of feudal demoralization similar to that which prevailed in Western Europe. Every appanage city became the seat of one of these Russian princes, whose interminable wars brought unhappy Russia to a sad condition of weakness and poverty, and favored the conquests of the Mongols when, under that unknown genius Subatai, they poured over Europe in 1238-1240.

One of the most important of these states was Halicia, the Galicia now being invaded by the Russians. It was cut off by the invaders from the rest Russia which was slowly and painfully forming around Moscow in the north-east.

Clude [illegible] on the west lay the warlike state of Poland, and when, in 1320, Yuri (George) Prince of Halicia, died Casimir the Great invaded and conquered it. From that day to this it has never joined the Russian Empire. Russia [illegible] in the course of ages, gathered [illegible] beneath her eagle banner all the provinces which obeyed Yaroslav the Great save Halicia. It is a Russian [illegible] inhabitants identified with the Main Russians on the other side of the border. Their language is the same. They are still largely Greek Catholics [illegible] though centuries of Polish and Austrian rule have been favorable [illegible] of the Roman Church.

In the terrible days of [illegible] under the Mongols, when the [illegible] lay [illegible] and was divided [illegible] warring appanages, the people had [illegible] centralizing Great Princes of Moscow a title of peculiar honor that of "land gatherer," that is "Land repairer."

CATARRH TRUTH

To Id Is a Simple Way

Without Apparatus, Inhalers, Salves, Lotions, Harmful Drugs, Smoke or Electricity

HEALS DAY AND NIGHT

It is a new way. It is something absolutely different. No lotions, sprays or sickly smelling salves or creams. No appliance, or any apparatus of any kind. Nothing to smoke or inhale. No steaming or rubbing or injections. No electricity or vibration or massage. No powder; no plasters; no keeping in the house. Nothing of that kind at all. Something new and different, something delightful and healthful, something instantly successful. You do not have to wait, and linger and pay out a lot of money. You can stop it over night—and I will gladly tell you how—FREE. I am not a doctor and this is not a so-called doctor's prescription—but I am cured and my friends are cured, and you can be cured. Your suffering will stop at once like magic.

I Am Free—You Can Be Free

My catarrh was filthy and loathsome. It made me ill. It dulled my mind. It undermined my health and was weakening my will. The hawking, coughing, spitting made me objectionable to all, and my foul breath and disgusting habits made even my loved ones avoid me secretly. My delight in life was dulled and my faculties impaired. I know that in time it would bring me to an untimely grave, because every moment of the day and night it was slowly yet surely sapping my vitality.

But I found a cure, and I am ready to tell you about it FREE. Write me promptly.

RISK JUST ONE CENT

Send no money. Just your name and address on a postal card. Say: "Dear Sam Katz: Please tell me how you cured your catarrh and how I can cure mine." That's all you need to say. I will understand, and I will write to you with complete information, FREE, at once. Do not delay. Send postal card or write me a letter to-day. Don't think of turning this page until you have asked for this wonderful treatment that can do for you what it has done for me.

Austrian General's Appeal.

VIENNA, Nov. 13.—(Via Paris.)—Gen. Potiorek, commander of the Austrian army operating against the Servians, has issued a general order to the 50th and 60th armies, fighting in Servia, to do their utmost to break the last resistance of their opponents and end the campaign before winter sets in with all the terrible sufferings which would follow.

Strange Disease Strikes Children.

PROVIDENCE, R.I., Nov. 13.—Fear that the foot and mouth disease had spread to human beings were expressed by Federal and state authorities to-day. Four children of a Providence man who owned infected cattle were found to have sore mouths. A boy of 14, who had taken care of the cows, had the most pronounced symptoms.

Fear of Zeppelins Gone London Wants More Light

LONDON, Nov. 12.—Among the great historic buildings which have been insured against possible damage from Zeppelin bombs is Westminster Abbey. Its insurance is not the result of a sudden decision. It has, in fact, been insured since almost the beginning of the scare.

The sum for which it is insured is $755,000, which does not, of course, pretend to cover the value of the Abbey, but only a rough estimate of the damage which a bomb might inflict.

But London is not in the least alarmed about a Zeppelin raid. Even the possible chance of Calais being taken by the Germans, and their threat to attack Britain by Zeppelins from there, combined with a bombardment by immense guns that can carry heavy shells twenty-seven miles, causes not the least perturbation. In fact, Londoners have begun to grumble about the darkened streets at night. At first they simply shrugged their shoulders, believing it was for the best. But when they discovered it was the city fathers and not the War Office who originated the idea, they commenced kicking. Since they have studied and talked over the pros and cons among themselves, while travelling home in the dark tramcars and busses, where they cannot read their evening papers, and the chances of a Zeppelin raid, they have come to the conclusion that it is nothing more than a piece of German bluff, which is unlikely ever to be attempted, or even if so, that it is foredoomed to failure.

Street Traffic More Deadly.

Mr. Edgar Wallace, the military correspondent who writes for the Birmingham Post and who is regarded as one of the leading experts now writing on the war, characterizes the German threats and preparations for the invasion of Britain by Zeppelin as "blatherskite."

"So far he has, to some extent," continues Mr. Wallace, "imposed upon us a respect for that clumsy engine of war, the Zeppelin, but I should imagine the sacrifice of life due to the deadly motor bus, as a result of darkening London streets, is infinitely greater than the Zeppelin is likely to impose upon the people of the Metropolis. If Zeppelins can work mischief they have had nearly three months in which to do it."

If Zeppelins are of any military use why, he asks, did Germany not give them a run when they started on their life and death struggle on the dunes about Dunkirk? That was the time of all times for a combined attack by the Zeppelin fleet upon the monitors shelling the German army and upon the defensive works before Lille."

At Mercy of Aviators.

"But," Mr. Wallace continues, "the Zeppelin will not be employed for a most excellent reason—that it is not a good machine in face of the aeroplane danger. Otherwise, if the German army wishes to test the value of thes monstrous gas bags, why do they not send their fleet over Paris? So far the only thing they have done has been to drop a bomb or two upon Antwerp, but they ventured this only because their Zeppelin base was close to the point of attack, and because they knew that Antwerp had very few aeroplanes.

"The Zeppelin is an old-fashioned affair, absolutely at the mercy of darting aviators, and would no more think of moving in an area which contained aeroplane bases than the commander of a German dreadnought would venture in a field of hostile submarines. Let us wait until the German army has established itself in Calais and until it has built its aeroplane sheds; let us wait till we see this gun with its twenty-seven mile range."

Mr. Wallace sarcastically remarks that a much more effective scheme for the Germans would be to mount a gun capable of delivering a shell 107 miles from the point of fire. By this method they could shell London from Calais without worrying about Zeppelins.

WHY THE INDIANS FIGHT IN FRANCE

The London Times prints this translation of an interview betwen the correspondent of the Secolo and one of the King's Indian soldiers now in France. The correspondent was curious to discover the temper of the Indian troops. "Are you glad," he asked, "to have come here to fight for a country which is not yours—France—at the bidding of another country—Britain — which dominates you"

The Indian looked at him with eyes full of wonder and indignation, and replied: "India is not oppressed by any one; she is a part, and not a small part, of a great Empire. Therefore the Indians are not slaves of this Empire, but subjects as are the English, the Scottish, and the Irish. The British Empire is menaced by a nation called Germany, and to defend itself it has appealed to all its subjects. If the Empire were menaced in India, the British soldiers would have gone there, but as it is menaced in Europe, we have come here." He adde in accents of profound pride, "We are British."

COURT DECIDES WHO RETAINS THE ENGAGEMENT GIFTS

What becomes of engagement presents when the tie is broken?

The question was before the Appellate Division at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, the other morning on an appeal by Miss Idessa Funk from the decision of the County Court of Waterloo directing her to return to Leslie Seiler several gifts made by him to her. Both young people live in Berlin.

The Appellate Division holds that the engagement was a conditional one upon the young man absolutely refraining from drinking. The Court holds that though there was a conflict of evidence as to whether this condition had been observed, the weight of the evidence was that the young lady had twice smelt liquor on his breath. The Court decided that any personal presents to the young lady the young man was not entitled to recover. On account of the breach of the conditions the engagement had fallen through.

As a result the young man will recover a $25 candelabra, which was bought for the prospective house of the couple, but the young lady keeps a $90 diamond ring and a $30 cut-glass set.

J. A. Scellen, for Miss Funk, objected that it was unreasonable for Seiler to have monopolised four of the best years of his client's life and to expect to get his presents back.

Chief Justice Meredith: "You forget that it is not all on her side. Some would have thought it her mission in life to reform him."

Mr. Scellen argued that gross manners could be set up as a defence to a breach of promise action, and could also be set up against the recovery of presents.

A. E. McBride, for Mr. Seiler, declared that for the two years of the engagement, and for a month thereafter, his client had not had a drink. He alleged that on the occasion after a trip to Brantford with a ball team when his fiancee had objected that she smelt liquor on his breath, that there had been some dispute about his not having taken her on that trip.

AN EASY WAY TO STOP HEAD NOISES

Good Advice For Those Who Fear Deafness

Men and women who are growing hard of hearing and who experience a stuffy feeling of pressure against their ear drums, accompanied by buzzing, rumbling sounds, as their head like water falling or steam escaping, will take prompt and effective measures to stop this trouble. Head noises are almost invariably the forerunners of complete or partial deafness and most deaf people suffer from them constantly. Sometimes these head noises become so distracting and nerve racking, with their never ceasing "hum," they drive the sufferer almost frantic and complete nervous breakdown and even violent insanity have been known to result.

Thanks to a remarkable scientific discovery made recently in England it is now possible to almost instantly lessen the severity of these headnoises and in a very short time to completely and permanently overcome them. With the disappearing of the head noises, the hearing also greatly improves and very frequently can be restored to normal. This English treatment is known as Parmint and can be easily and safely self administered at home. Leading druggists in Peterborough and vicinity now have it in stock. Get from your druggist 1 oz. Parmint (Double Strength) and mix it at home with ½ pint of hot water and 4 oz. of granulated sugar. Stir until dissolved and then take one tablespoonful four times a day until the noises disappear and hearing improves. Parmint is used double strength in this way not only to reduce by tonic action the inflammation and swelling in the Eustachian tube and thus to equalise the air pressure on the drum but to remove any excess of secretions in the middle ear and the results it gives are both remarkably quick and effective.

Important: In ordering Parmint always specify that you want double strength; your druggist has it or he can get it for you; if not, send 75c to the International Laboratories, 74 St. Antoine St., Montreal, P.Q., who make a specialty of it.

France Strips Gold Lace From Her Officers and Saves Lives

LONDON, Nov. 10.—It is a notable fact that the French armies are not losing nearly so many officers in proportion to the losses among the rank and file as they did at the beginning of the war. There are reasons.

For instance, during the fighting at Dinant, where the French troops were holding a line of hills, German officers, watching their enemy through field glasses, remarked that several French officers were wearing white gloves.

They gave instructions to their sharp-shooters, and three-quarters of the officers of this particular regiment fell. They were mostly young officers, just out of the military school at St. Cyr, and they had made a vow that they would wear white gloves in the first charge in which they took part.

General Joffre gave instructions that in future white gloves must not be worn.

The percentage of losses among French officers continued to be high, and it was discovered that in each German section two men were provided with field glasses and told to look out for officers, easily distinguishable by the gold stripes on their kepis and uniforms.

General Joffre issued further orders that in future officers would wear uniforms identical with the rank and file.

From that time onward there was a considerable decrease in the mortality among the commissioned ranks, but it was found that, whereas the privates had their kepis fully covered, there was a gap in the officers' kepis through which the number of their regiment and a part of the gold braid could be seen.

The latest orders of General Joffre are that in future the kepi cover of officers must be the same as that of the private soldier.

Bavarians Cut to Pieces at Dixmunde

PARIS, Nov. 12.—The Germans won Dixmude at a frightful cost, according to a wounded officer brought to Paris to-day.

"The German attack began Saturday morning," he said. "Monday evening, when I was wounded, the enemy were still fighting fiercely for possession of the town. The attack was fearfully violent and our losses were heavy, but the Germans again suffered wholesale slaughter. My brigade exterminated 3,000 in an hour.

Advanced Three Times.

"Here is one incident I witnessed: A Bavarian regiment advanced upon our trenches with standard displayed When 300 yards distant we blazed a terible fire into them. They retired, reformed and advanced again. We allowed them to come within 100 yards this time before raking them, again driving them back.

"A third time the regiment advanced, having lost two-thirds of its effectives. I shouted the order, "Let them come; cease fire'. Then, when they were 200 yards away, I gave the order to fire. Ten minutes later not a man was left standing of the entire regiment."

Near Fatality!

"An' ye were at MacDougall's last nicht—what kin' o' man is he?"

"Leeberal wi' his whusky—but the quality o' it's that indeeferent I verra near left some!"

Have You That TICKLING IN THE THROAT SENSATION?

This trouble is most distressing, and caused from a cold which has settled in the throat. How many people have lost a good night's sleep by that nasty, tickling, irritating sensation in the throat? The dry, hard cough keeps you awake, and when you get up in the morning you feel as if you had had no rest at all.

What you want to cure the cold is Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. This valuable preparation is composed of the most soothing and healing expectorant herbs and barks with which is combined the virtues of the world famous Norway pine tree.

Thousands of testimonials prove that what we claim is true. All we ask you is that when you ask for Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup see that you get "Dr. Wood's," and not some no-account substitute.

Mr. Charles St Chase, Shelburne, N.S., writes: "Coming to Nova Scotia from the State of Maine, I caught a severe cold which persisted for many weeks, and was accompanied by a bad cough and a constant throat irritation. After trying many remedies, a friend handed me part of a bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. It helped me so much I bought another bottle which completely cured the cough and allayed the irritation. It is certainly the best cough medicine I have ever tried."

The price of "Dr. Wood's" is 25c and 50c.

Powers Confer About Mongolia.

PEKIN, China, Nov. 13.—There is now in session at Kiakhta, Siberia, a conference concerning the present situation of Mongolia, at which the three interested powers are represented, each by a delegate. The Chinese delegate is said to be maintaining an uncompromising attitude.

There have been rumors in Pekin, emanating from German sources, that Chinese troops in Mongolia were moving toward the Russian border, and an effort has been made to connect this activity with the deadlock of the confrees. Enquiries, however, have brought denials from the Chinese authorities of this military activity, and the reports are elsewhere discredited.

CHAPTER IV.

"To the boats!"

IT was on the eighth day out that the spy suddenly sprang to his feet, darting swiftly to the door of the stateroom. She stared at him in astonishment, amazed at the change which had come over him.

His life must have made him more than unusually sensitive to impressions, for a full quarter hour elapsed after he had resumed his seat before a barely perceptible thudding sound came from beneath the deck.

Perhaps it may have been the premonition of the silent man, perhaps foreboding of disaster on her own part that took her to the deck. The captain had quit the bridge and stood at the door of the engine room, his face betraying the anxiety he tried to conceal from his passengers. Louder, louder grew the thudding sound, followed now by a retching like the ripping of a rotten cloth.

"A boiler in the engine room," Loubeque said quietly, when she returned to his suit.

She stared at the spy incredulously. Came another thought with that of helplessness, a thought of which she felt ashamed for the second. If worst came to the worst this man would attempt to save, to take with him his most priceless possession. If only she could find out where the stolen papers were concealed she would get them. It was not wrong to take advantage of the weakness of a physical invalid who possessed such giant mental strength.

Mingling with the horrid retching sound came a long hiss. The spy sprang to his feet again and opened the door. Passengers were rushing wildly about the decks, their faces betraying the abject terror they felt. At the rail stood the captain and second mate supervising the lowering of the lifeboats. A white faced steward banged against the door, thrusting his head inside.

"Fire," he whispered, then, as though ashamed for the fear which had robbed him of his voice. "It's fire—to the boats"—

Lucille turned away, a sickening feeling clutching at her heart. Fire! Fire out here on the broad ocean that never a sight of land since Manila! What could she do? She suddenly was conscious of Hugo Loubeque's swift motions. The spy darted across the room and drew from the top drawer of his desk a package of papers which he hurriedly replaced as she turned. There was something on his countenance which told her the truth, told her that he had revealed the secret of the stolen papers. He slapped the drawer shut, reassuming his aspect of indifference as he brushed her away from the door.

Quick as the spring of a cat she secured the papers while he stepped to the deck, apparently to study the situation. When he returned she was moving carelessly about the room, wearing so innocent an expression that he studied her suspiciously a second. Their eyes met, and he sprang to the desk, slapping open the drawer so violently its contents fell upon the floor. As he whirled upon her she saw in his face that the truce was at an end, that he knew of his loss and would stop at nothing to regain his secret.

Swiftly she sprang through the open door, losing herself in the mass of passengers huddled against the rail. Below them sounded that horrible hissing sound, the sound of unbridled fire.

Lucille felt an overmastering impulse within her to remain with this terror, anything save the great, threatening ocean that looked so monstrous now, waiting the tiny craft that creaked down from the davits. Then powerful arms were about her. She felt herself being lifted and hurtled forward, huddling down in the crowded boat that was being lowered to the waves.

A hand reached out and rested upon her shoulder. For a second she was unconscious of it, then something steadying, indomitable about the clutch of finger tips made her turn. Hugo Loubeque smiled into her eyes, smiled with the pitying expression of an invincible one who grieves for the weakling that dashes against him.

Her eyes upraised toward the boat, a mass of whitish smoke now through which leaped playful reddish flames. Now and then a figure would dart toward the rail and lunge overboard, the bodies striking the water in great circles that lost themselves in one another. And for a second the thought came to her that even that inferno of a ship was preferable to this man beside her.

"Well played, Miss Love," the spy murmured silkily. "But I fear you must return the"—

A piercing shriek made him turn swiftly, a shriek that lost itself in the heavy crunching of wooden oars against wood. Came a horrid bumping that seemed more like the crunching of a wild beast upon bones than anything she had ever heard. Heat, intense, steaming, beat upon her cheeks. She looked up and only the dark hulk of the Empress loomed above her, only a lurid flame illumined the heavens.

She was conscious of her heavy clothing, sodden now with water; was conscious of the lack of support. Something long and wooden tilted against her, and instinctively her fingers clutched the oar which had floated out to her from their boat, which had been tossed and crushed against the burning liner's side. Again she looked up. And within her soul flickered the spark of combat which youth will not allow to die.

Consciousness lapsed slightly and was followed by a state of dull apathy. Some instinct held Lucille's arms upon the oar that had floated to her when the lifeboat smashed itself against the side of the burning Empress.

Mountains of waves sifted along her path, bearing her gently to their crests and passing her through the trough of sea to the next wave in line. From watching the myriad stars blazing in the heavens she became interested in trifles, never thinking of the precious papers she had rescued at so great effort from the international spy, forgetting even the ones at Manila on whose behalf she had taken such risks to get them back. Came a long interval of restfulness where everything grew dim and indistinct, and the water in which she was being tossed about seemed like a festering mother upon which, in perfect confidence, she could rest her weary head and sleep.

Little needles continually pricking at her flesh brought her from slumber so abruptly she straightened bolt upright, staring about her incredulously. Every nerve and sinew of her body ached terribly, cramping her so she could barely look about the long expanse of beach that seemed to stretch interminably in every direction. Behind her she finally managed to clear her eyes enough to make out a luxurious vegetation, obviously tropical.

Safety meant little to her. Her brain was in such a state that the providential escape seemed natural. That she was alone upon an island in the Pacific mattered. Again she closed her eyes and gave herself over to the drowsiness which lasted until nightfall.

Securely hidden by the thick vegetation, she settled down, taking a firm grip on herself and trying to reassemble the things that had happened to her in such fashion that she might know what was best to be done. And always primarily did her thoughts revert to the papers concealed in the bosom of her dress, the papers and the man who sought them.

The papers. Undoubtedly there was something in them which would allow the clew. She stared at the oiled hat thoughtfully, fighting down the instinct which repelled her touching the secrets of another.

The bulky envelope from Washington to her father which the butler had stolen from the safe was still unbroken. She placed the packet to one side, knowing that if the spy did not care to investigate the contents there could be nothing in them which would assist her. The diary she investigated next.

Thoughtfully Lucille sat there, the diary in her lap, the picture of her mother in her hands. She knew the life of Hugo Loubeque now, knew the dominating hatred of his life, the love of his life, the gigantic efforts of the man, involving nations and humanity, the thousand tentacles of the man, stretching to every quarter of the globe.

But as she looked at the faded picture the spy had cherished through all the years tears of pity filmed her eyes, pity for the man who could allow love to associate itself inseparably with hatred. She realized now that destiny itself was fighting in her behalf; that, giant intellect though he was, Hugo Loubeque had more than herself to contend with because of the unnatural baseness of his motives.

But it was a fight, would be a fight to the bitter end. She must find out where she was, what nature of place this might be, what chance for rescue there was. She must get back to Manila, for the papers were no better than rags here. She must start immediately.

A long shadow suddenly reached out before her. Motionless she stood and stared at it. From another direction came the cracking report of a broken twig. In every direction, as though the sound had been a signal, shadows flitted. The sounds were louder now, more frequent. Then, with a rush, Lucille saw the shadows resolve themselves into figures of men.

She had but time to make out their brown color, fear blinding her. She closed her eyes fearfully, knowing she was surrounded. A hand touched her forearm timidly. Something in the touch was reassuring. She looked about upon a solid ring of scantily clad natives, who stared at her in bewildered amazement. Again the hand touched her arm.

The native stood beside her, evidently much bolder than his fellows. Lucille could scarcely repress a smile as she caught the incredulity on the man's face as he looked at his hand, evidently expecting the white of her flesh to rub off. They had never before seen a white woman. And the girl was thinking how she might use this thing which must appear a miracle to them.

Lucille stayed close to the chief; the one who had touched her arm.

An old man he was from the heavy wrinkles that crisscrossed his face, but his torso was magnificently muscular, his carriage that of a man to whom obedience always comes. There was something very splendid about his steady black eyes—narrowed a bit as though to hint of Mongolian origin—about the thin nostrilled nose, the full lips.

FELL IN A FAINT

Mrs. Edwin Martin, Avon's Cliff, Que writes: "Before using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was in a terrible condition. Dizzy spells would come over me and I would fall to the floor. I could not sweep without fainting. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has so built up my system that I can wash and do my housework. Your medicine cured me when doctors had failed."

ABOUT CONSUMPTION

Throughout the world, consumption claims more victims than any other disease. It takes toll of every age in life, more often than not of the fairest and best. Efforts are being made to stamp it out in every quarter of the civilized world. It is in our city, it is in every city. Each year its grim harvest is reaped. What can be done, is being done. Here and there, success is achieved. One case, right in Toronto, that was given up by the doctors as hopeless cheated the grave of its victim. This case is of interest to everybody, especially so for the reason that all hope of recovery was abandoned at the time Mr. Copeland began his treatment. The doctors had given the patient only 8 to 10 days to live, yet he was pulled through by the power and merits of Mr. Copeland's medicine. This was in March, 1911, and the patient, Mr. David Warnock, is TO-DAY in the city of Toronto ALIVE and WELL. We publish here his own testimony, and he is, moreover, willing to state the facts of his condition at that time and of his recovery to anyone suffering from consumption.

Mr. W. R. Copeland:

Dear Sir,—Now that I am well and strong again, I write to state that the fact I am alive to-day witnesses to the merit of your medicine.

My doctor, a specialist, said that I had the worst kind of consumption and that it was impossible for me to live. He gave me only eight to ten days before the disease would terminate fatally. He also said that it was no use in treating me, as I was too far gone.

I was left to die, but a friend of mine told me about your medicine and procured me a bottle. Without much hope, I tried it. It did wonders. First the weakening perspiration stopped and the food I took stayed in the stomach. After a second bottle, I commenced to regain my appetite and was up in a few days of the time that the doctor said I should die. Five weeks later I was at work and have been working ever since.

I wish everyone could know the weight of your medicine, especially those afflicted with consumption as I was, for I undoubtedly owe my life to its use. I will at all times cheerfully answer any correspondence, and you are at liberty to publish this letter if you think it will help to recommend your medicine to others.

I remain, gratefully yours,
DAVID WARNOCK,
Street Car Conductor,
382 Withrow Ave., Toronto.

Not only has this medicine proved remarkably beneficial in cases of consumption and weak lungs, but it has also conquered stubborn cases of chronic bronchitis that withstood for over 30 years all that medical men could do for them. Letters received bearing out this statement are from well-known persons living in Toronto and copies of same will gladly be sent on request.

This medicine is known as "Copeland's Cure for Consumption," and is procurable at drug stores at $1.00 a bottle or direct in a plain wrapper from Copeland Medicine Company, Limited, 311 Pape Avenue, Toronto. 6-14

MIKADO GIVES $25,000 TO CHRISTIAN HOSPITAL

TOKIO, Nov. 10.—Emperor Yoshihito has donated 50,000 yen ($25,000) toward the foundation of St. Luke's International Hospital at Tokio, which will be conducted under the auspices of the Episcopal Church Mission, represented by Dr. Rudolph Teusler.

The announcement of the imperial gift to a Christian institution, which is without precedent here, was made by Count Okuma, the Japanese Premier, at a luncheon attended by fifty of the most prominent persons in Tokio. The British Ambassador, Sir William Conyngham Greene, sent a letter, and the American Ambassador Mr. George W. Guthrie, delivered a speech.

The substantial Imperial support, it is stated here, assures the success of the undertaking, which will cost about a half million dollars.

It is intended to make the hospital the most elaborate in the Far East and it will mark a distinct advance in medical research work here.

Count Okuma, in making the announcement of the Emperor's gift, said that the Emperor was personally desirous of solidifying the international understanding and spoke in praise of the United States and the labours for peace of President Wilson and Secretary Bryan.

Since the fall of Tsingtau the question of Japan sending an army to Europe has begun to attract increasing attention. The idea finds considerable support in military circles where it is believed such a move would be welcomed by France.

Met Sweetheart of Youth When Both Are Seized As Spies

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—To be arrested as a spy and when brought before the military authorities for examination to find among his fellow prisoners the sweetheart of his boyhood days was the experience which befell Henry C. Hoynemann, architect, of San Francisco, who was a passenger on board the Rochambeau, which arrived from Havre.

Accompanying Mr. Heynemann was the girl, now his wife, who formerly was Miss Florence Lacea, of San Francisco. They attended the same grade schools in the Western city, but drifted apart in later years and were unaware of each other's whereabouts until they met in the improvised court room of the German military authorities in a small Belgian city. Both, together with about twenty more, were taken on suspicion of being spies.

They quickly established their identity as American citizens and upon being released they hastened to Paris, where they were married. Mrs. Heynemann had been abroad five years studying music in Milan and Berlin. They will make their home in San Francisco.

When The Flying Death Descended Upon The Last Stronghold Of The Belgians

VIVID DESCRIPTION OF ANTWERP'S SIEGE AND COOL DEFENCE

British Marines Held Their Ground Under Heavy Fire and Against Hopeless Odd---A Dismal Picture of the Roads Crowded With Fleeing Citizens, a Flight Unequalled in Modern Times--Heroism of Nurses Under Fire.

That afternoon I walked uptown through the shuttered, silent streets—silent but for that incessant rumbling in the south-east and the occasional flight of some military automobile—to two of the hospitals. In one, a British hospital on the Boulevard Leopold, the doctor in charge was absent for the moment, and there was no one to answer my offer of occasional help if an outsider could be of use. As I sat waiting a tall, brisk Englishwoman, in nurse's uniform, came up and asked what I wanted. I told her.

"Oh," she said, and in her crisp English voice, without further ado, "will you help me with a leg?"

She led the way into her ward, and there we contrived between us to bandage and slip a board and pillow under a fractured thigh. Between whispers of "Courage! Courage!" to the Belgian soldier, she said that she was the wife of a British general and had two sons in the Army, and a third—"Poor boy!" she murmured, more to him than to me—on one of the ships in the North Sea. I arranged to come back next morning to help with the lifting, and went on to another hospital in the Rue Nerviens, to find that little English lady who crossed with us in the Ostend boat in August on the way to her sister's hospital in Antwerp.

Here in the quiet wards she had been working while the Germans swept down on Paris and were rolled back again, and while the little nation which she and her sister loved so well was being clubbed to its knees. Louvain, Liege, Malines, Namur—chapters in all the long, pitiless story were lying there in the narrow iron beds. There were men with faces chewed by shrapnel, men burned in the explosion of the powder magazine at Fort Waelhem, when the attack on Antwerp began—dragged out from the underground passage in which the garrison had sought momentary refuge and where most of them were killed, burned, and blackened. One strong, good-looking young fellow, able to eat and live apparently, was shot through the temples and blind in both eyes. It was the hour for carrying those well enough to stand it out into the court and giving them their afternoon's airing and smoke. One had lost an arm, another, a whimsical young Belgian, had only the stump of a left leg. When we started to lift him back into his bed, he said he had a better way than that. So he put his arms around my neck and showed me how to take him by the back and the well leg.

"Bon!" he said, and again "Bon!" when I let him down, and then reaching out and patting me on the back, "Bon!" he smiled again.

The General Flight from Antwerp Begins.

In the dark shadow of the tall old houses a few people came out and stood there watching silently and, as one felt, in a sort of despair. All night long men were marching by—and in London they were still reading that it was but a "demonstration" the Germans were engaged in—down the quay and across the pontoon bridge—the only way over the Scheldt—over to the Tete de Flandre and the road to Ghent. They were strung along the street next morning, boots mud-covered, mud-stained, entrenching shovels hanging to their belts, faces unshaven for weeks just as they had come from the trenches; yet still patient and cheerful, with that unshakable Flemish good cheer. Perhaps, after all, it was not a retreat; they might be swinging round to the south and St. Nicholas to attack the German flank. . . .

But before they had crossed, another army, a civilian army, flowed down on and over the quay. For a week people had been leaving Antwerp, now the general flight began. From villages to the east and south-east from the city itself, people came pouring down. In waggons drawn by huge Belgian draught horses, in carts pulled by the captivating Belgian work dogs, panting mightily and digging their paws into the slippery cobbles; on foot, leading little children and carrying babies and dolls and canaries and great bundles of clothes and household things wrapped in sheets, they surged toward that one narrow bridge and the crowded ferryboats. I saw one old an Indian squaw with work in the woman, grey-haired and tanned like fields, yet with a fine, well-made face, pushing a groaning whelbarrow. A strap went from the handles over her shoulders, and, stopping now and then to ask the news, she would slip off this harness, gossip for a time, then push on again. That afternoon under my window there was a tall waggon, a sort of hay waggon, in which there were twenty-two little tow-headed children, none more than eight or ten, and several almost babies in arms. By the side of the waggon a man, evidently father of some of them, stood buttering the end of a huge round loaf of bread and cutting off slice after slice, which the older children broke and distributed to the little ones. Two cows were tied to the back of the waggon and the man's wife squatted there milking them. All along the quay and in the streets leading into it were people like this—harmless, helpless, hard-working people, going they knew not where. The entrance to the bridge was soon choked. One went away and returned an hour later and found the same people waiting almost in the same spot, and, with that wonderful calm and patience of theirs, feeding their children or giving a little of their precious hay to the horses, quietly waiting their turn while the cannon which had driven them from their homes kept on thundering behind them.

The Flying Death Appears.

It was almost exactly midnight that I found myself listening, half awake, to the familiar sound of distant cannon. One had come to think of it, almost, as nothing but a sound; and to listen with a detached and not unpleasant interest as a man tucked comfortably in bed follows a roll of thunder to its end or listens to the fall of rain.

It struck me suddenly that there was something new about this sound; I sat up in bed to listen, and at that had struck a house a little way down the street. As I hurried to the window there came another far-off detonation a far-off, sullen "Boom!" was followed by a crash as if lighting tonation, a curious wailing whistle swept across the sky, and over behind the roofs to the left there was another crash.

One after another they came, at intervals of half a minute, or screaming on each other's heels, as if racing to their goal. And then the crash or, if farther away, muffled explosion as another roof toppled in, or cornice dropped off, as a house made of canvas drops to pieces in a play.

The effect of those unearthly wails, suddenly singing in across country in the dead of night from six—eight—ten miles away—heaven knows where—was, as the Germans intended it to be, tremendous. It is not easy to describe nor to be imagined by those who had not lived in that threatened city—the last Belgian stronghold—and felt that vast, unseen power rolling nearer and nearer. And now, all at once, it was here, materialized, demoniacal, a flying death, swooping across the dark into your very room.

It was like one of those dreams in which you cannot stir from your tracks, and meanwhile "Boom! . . . Tzzzz-ee-ee-ee!" — is this one meant for you?

Already there was a patter of feet in the dark, and people with white bundles on their backs went stumbling by toward the river and the bridge. Motors came honking down from the inner streets, and the quay, which had begun to clear by this time, was again jammed. I threw on some clothes, hurried to the street. A rank smell of kerosene hung in the air; presently a petrol shell burst to the southward, lighting up the sky for an instant like the flare from a blast furnace, and a few moments later there showed over the roofs the flames of the first fire.

How the Nurses Behaved Under Fire.

Under conditions like these the nurses kept running up and down that staircase during the endless hour or two in which the wounded were being dressed and carried on stretchers to the street. They stood by the busses making their men comfortable, and when the first busses were filled they sat in the open street on top of them, patiently waiting, as calm and smiling as circus queens on their gilt chariots. The behaviour of the men in the trenches was cool enough, but they at least were fighting men and but taking the chance of war. These were civilian volunteers, they had not even trenches to shelter them, and it took a rather unforeseen and difficult sort of courage to leave that fairly safe masonary building and sit smiling and helpful on the top of a motor bus during a walk of half an hour or so, any second of which might be one's last.

There was an American nurse there, a tall, radiant girl, whom they called, and rightly, "Morning Glory," who had been introduced to me the day before because we both belonged to that curious foreign race of Americans. What her name was I haven't the least idea, and if we were to meet to-morrow, doubtless we should have to be carefully presented over again, but I remember calling out to her: "Good-bye, American girl!" as we passed in the hall during the last minute or two, and she said good-bye, and suddenly reached out and put her hand on my shoulder and added, "Good luck!" or "God bless you!" or something like that. And these seemed at the moment quite the usual things to do and say. The doctor in charge and the general's wife apologised for running away, as they called it, and the last I saw of the latter was as she waved back to me from the top of a bus, with just that look of concern over the desperate ride they were beginning which a slightly preoccupied hostess casts over a dinner table about which are seated a number of oddly assorted guests.

At the Outer Fortifications.

There are, it will be recalled, three lines of forts about Antwerp—the inner one corresponding to the city's wall; a middle one a few miles further out, where the British now where, and the outer line, which the enemy had already passed. Their artillery was hidden far over behind the horizon trees, and the British marines and naval reserve men who manned these trenches could only wait there, rifle in hand, for an enemy that would not come, while a captive balloon a mile or two away to the eastward and an aeroplane hailing far overhead gave the ranges, and they waited for the shrapnel to burst. The trenches were narrow and shoulder deep, very like trenches for gas or water pipes, and reasonably safe except when a shell burst directly overhead. One had struck that morning just on the inner rim of the trench, blown out one of those craterlike holes, and discharged all its shrapnel backward across the trench and into one of the heavy timbers, supporting a bomb-proof roof. A ramcoat hanging to a nail in this timber was literally shot to shreds. "That's where I was standing," said the young lieutenant in command, pointing with a dry smile to a spot not more than a yard away from where the shell had burst.

Half a dozen young fellows, crouched there in the bombproof, looked out at us and grinned. They were brand-new soldiers, some of them, boys from the London streets, who had answered the thrilling posters and signs, "Your King and Country Need You," and been sent on this ill-fated expedition for their first sight of war. The London papers are talking about it as I am writing this—how this handful of nine thousand men, part of them recruits, who scarcely knew one end of a rifle from another, were flung across the Channel on Sunday night and rushed up to the front to be shot at and rushed back again. I did not know this then, but wondered if this was what they had dreamed of—squatting helplessly in a ditch until another order came to retire—when they swung through the London streets singing "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary" two months ago.

Yet not one of the youngest and the greenest showed the least nervousness as they waited there in that melancholy little orchard under the incessant scream of shells. That unshakable British coolness, part sheer pluck, part a sort of lack of imagination, perhaps, or at least of nerves, left them as calm and casual as if they were but drilling on the turf of Hyde Park. And with it persisted that almost equally unshakable sense of class, that touching confidence in one's superiors—the young clerk's or mechanic's inborn conviction that whatever that smart, clean-cut, imperturbable young fellow does and says must inevitably be right—at least if he is cool and serene you must, if the skies fall, be cool and serene too.

We met one young fellow as we walked through an empty lateral leading to a bombproof prepared for the wounded, and the ambulance officer asked him sharply how things had been going that morning.

"Oh, very well, sir," he said with the most respectful good humour, though a shell bursting just then a stone's throw beyond the orchard made both of us duck our heads. "A bit hot, sir, about nine o'clock, but only one man was hurt. They do not seem to know just where we are, sir, but wait until their infantry comes us—we'll clean them out right enough sir."

And if he had been ordered to stay there and hold the trench alone, one could imagine him saying in that same tone of deference and chipper good humour: "Yes, sir; thank you sir," and staying, too, till the cows came home.

Escaping from the Firing Line

As we bowled down the road toward a group of brick houses on the left, a shell passed not more than fifty yards in front of us and through the side of one of these houses as easily as a circus rider pops through a tissue-paper hoop. Almost at the same instance another one exploded—where I haven't the least idea, except that the dust from it hit us in the face. The motor rolled smoothly along and the Belgian soldier driving it stared as imperturbably ahead of him as if he were back in Antwerp on the seat of his taxicab.

You get used to shells in time, it seems, and deciding that you either are or are not going to be hit, dismiss the responsibility and leave it all to fate. I must admit that in my brief experience I was not able to arrive at the restful state. We reached at last the city gate through which we had left Antwerp, and the motor came to a stop just at the inner edge of the passage under the fort, and I said good-bye to the young Englishman ere he started back for the trench again.

"Well," he called after me as I started across the open space between the gate and the houses, a stone's throw away, "you've had an experience anyway."

I was just about to answer that undoubtedly I had when—"Tzzz-ee-ee-ee-r"—a shell just cleared the ramparts over our heads and disappeared in the side of a house directly in front of us with a roar and a geyser of dust. Netiher the motor nor a guest's duty now detained me, and waving him good-bye, I turned at right angles and made with true civilian speed for the shelter of a side street.

The progress of the motor seemed to b slow and disappointing. Not that the spot a quarter of mile off was at all less likely to be hit, yet one felt conscious of a growing desire to be somewhere else. And though I took off my hat to keep it from blowing off, I found that every time a shell went over I promptly put it on again, indicating, one suspected, a decline in what the military experts call morale.

The Moral of It All.

By following the adventures of one individual I have endeavoured to suggest what the bombardment of a modern city was like—what you might expect if an invading army came to-morrow to New York or Chicago or San Francisco. I have only coasted along the edge of Belgium's tragedy, and the rest of the story, of which we were a part for the next two days—the flight of those hundreds of thousands of homeless people—is something that can scarcely be told—you must follow it out in imagination into its countless uprooted, disorganized lives. You must imagine old people struggling along over miles and miles of country roads; young girls, under burdens a man might not care to bear tramping until they had to carry their shoes in their hands and go barefoot to rest their unaccustomed feet. You must imagine the pathetic efforts of hundreds of people to keep clean by washing in wayside streams or ditches; imagine babies going without milk because there was no milk to be had; families shivering in damp hedgerows or against haystacks where darkness overtook them; and you must imagine this, not on one road, but on every road, for mile after mile over a whole countryside. What was to become of these people when their little supply of food was exhausted? Where could they go? Even if back to their homes, it would be but to lift their hats to their conquerors, never knowing but that the next week or month would sweep the tide of war back over them again.

Never in modern times, not in our generation at least, has the world seen anything like that flight—nothing so strange, so overwhelming, so pitiful. And when I say pitiful, you must not think of hysterical women, desperate, trampling men, tears and screams. In all those miles one saw neither complaining nor protestation—as times one might almost have thought it some vast eccentric picnic. No, it was their orderliness, their thrift and kindness, their unmistakable usefulness, which made the waste and irony of it all so colossal and hideous.

CANADIAN OFFICER MARRIED AT PLYMOUTH, ENG.— Lieutenant John L. Williamson, one of the officers of the First Canadian Contingent who married within a few days of his arrival at Plymouth, England, Mademoiselle Charlotte Susanne Jose, a dainty little French woman, at St. Andrew's church in that city. They never saw or heard of each other till they met a few days before the ceremony. The picture shows the bride and groom, liberally besprinkled with confetti, as they left the church in Plymouth.

You have a bad cold!

Then listen! Cold attacks the lungs and the breathing passages. To cure it you need to get at these organs direct. Ordinary cough mixtures and syrups do not touch the lungs, but go direct to your stomach, which is not ailing. Peps, on the contrary, go direct to the very seat of the trouble.

Peps are tablets containing essences and medicinal ingredients so prepared that when placed upon the tongue they immediately turn into vapor, and are breathed down the inflamed air passages to the lungs, direct.

Peps medicine takes the form of healing vapor, and cures colds, coughs, bronchitis and lung troubles, just as living in Pine woods and breathing Pine-laden air prevents consumption and cures chest weakness. Tightness across the chest, pain between the shoulders, hacking cough, sore throat, asthma and bronchitis are the ailments which, in particular, Peps have been designed to cure. Peps will soon end your bad cold.

Testimonials for Peps have been given by members of the Canadian Parliament, doctors, lawyers, eminent Canadian musicians; all going to prove that Peps have been found a cure for throat and chest trouble, often when other remedies had entirely failed.

FREE TRIAL—Cut out this article, and mail it, with 2c stamp (for return postage) to Peps Co., Dupont St., Toronto, and we will send you a free trial package of Peps. All druggists and stores sell Peps, 50c box or 5 for $1.25. See the name Peps (four letters only) before buying

How to Peel Off a Weatherbeaten Face

It's really a simple matter to renovate a face soiled by dirt, wind or cold. Ordinary mercolized wax, used like cold cream, will transform the worst old complexion into one of snowy whiteness and velvety softness. It literally peels off the outer veil of surface skin, but so gently, gradually, there's no discomfort. The worst skin comes off, not in patches, but evenly, in tiny particles, leaving no evidence of the treatment. The younger, healthier under-skin, forming the new complexion is one of captivating loveliness. One ounce of mercolized wax, to be had at any drug store, is enough to remove any coarse, chapped, pimpled, freckled, faded or sallow skin. Apply before retiring, washing it off morning.

Many skins wrinkle easily with every wind that blows. An excellent wrinkle-remover, because it tightens the skin and strengthens relaxed muscles, is a wash lotion made as follows: Powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in witch hazel, one-half pint. This gives immediate results.

MUST STAY NEUTRAL.

South American Republic Receive a Pointed Warning.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13—Ecuador and Colombia have been warned by Great Britain and France in emphatic terms that the allies will not countenance further violations of neutrality by these South American states.

After making strong representations through the British and French Ministers at Quito and Begota, the British and French Governments considered the matter serious enough to communicate to the United States Government in view of possible complications that might arise.

The notes to the American Government cited no specific violations, but expressed the hope that Ecuador and Colombia would be impressed with the value of maintaining strict neutrality, in which the United States had given so signal an example.

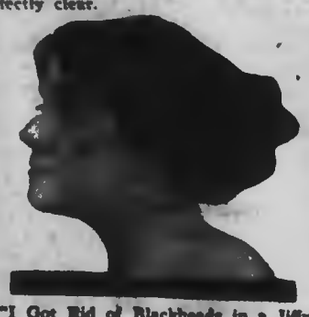
Prisoners In France Fare Well.

PARIS, Nov. 13.—American Ambassador Herrick has returned from visit to southern France, where he visited the concentration camps here German prisoners and the facilities where Austrian and German objects are interned. He found conditions satisfactory and is making a detailed report.

Faces As Fair As A Summer's Day

Are Possible If Stuart's Calcium Wafers Are Used for a Short Time After Each Meal.

Many pople have been heard to say that thy used creams and lotions for years without effect, yet after five or sox days of Stuart's Calcium Wafers their complexions were perfectly clear.



"I Got Rid of Blackheads in a Jiffy by Using Stuart's Calcium Wafers."

It's easy to understand why. Creams and lotions only get at the surface, while Stuart's Calcium Wafers go right into the blood and instead of a sluggish deposit in the skin the impurities that cause skin diseases are destroyed in th perspiration that is exhaled through the pores in the form of invisible vapor. You'll never have a good complexion without pure blood, but you positively will have a fine, beautiful complexion if you use Stuart's Calcium Wafers.

They contain no poisonous drug of any kind, are perfectly harmless and can be taken with absolute freedom, and they work almost like magic. Calcium Sulphide, their principal ingredient, is the greatest blood-cleanser known to science.

No matter how bad your skin may be, Stuart's Calcium Wafers will quickly work wonders with it. It's goodby to blackheads, pimples, acne, boils, rash, eczema and a dirty "filled-up" complexion. You can get a box of Stuart's Calcium Wafers at any drug store at 50 cents a box, and you will be positively delighted with their wonderful effect. A small sample package mailed free by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., 178 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

UNION STOCK YARDS

Toronto's Big Fat Stock Show.

The Toronto Fat Stock Show will be held at the Union Stock Yards, Toronto, on Friday and Saturday, December 11th and 12th. The number of entries are very large and a show of fat stock, the like of which has never been equalled in the Dominion, may be looked for. Many special prizes are offered, several for farmers, such as for ten bacon hogs, ten long-wool lambs, 10 short wool lambs, etc. These prizes are offered to encourage the farmers in feeding and breding.

Stret cars run direct to the show grounds. No effort or expense is being spared to make this Fat Stock Show the largest and finest ever held in Canada.

HIS ONE CONCERN.

A member of the Providence bar one day met an able and conscientious judge on the street and said to him:

"I see, judge, that the Supreme Court has overruled you in the case of A. vs. Z., but you need feel no concern about your reputation."

"No, indeed," answered the judge complacently; "I don't. I'm only concerned about the reputation of the Supreme Court."

WOMEN CAN HELP IN WAR Against Drunkenness

D.D.D. In Hospitals; Standard Skin Cure

How many hospital patients, suffering the frightful itch, the raw scorching pain of skin disease, have been soothed to sleep by a soothing fluid washed in by the nurse's hands?

That fluid is the famous D. D. D. prescription for eczema.

THE SUPERVISING NURSE of one of our prominent Catholic institutions (name of nurse and institute on application), writes regarding a patient. "The disease had eaten her eyebrows away. Her nose and lips had become disfigured. Since the use of D.D.D. her eyebrows are growing, her nose and face have assumed their natural expression."

How many eczema sufferers are paying their doctors for regular treatment and are being treated with this same soothing, healing fluid?

DR. GEO. T. RICHARDSON frankly writes: "D. D. D. is superior to anything I have ever found. Soft and soothing, yet a powerful agent."

To do the work, D.D.D. Prescription must be applied according to directions given in the pamphlet around every bottle. Follow these directions—and see!

And it certainly takes away the itch at once—the moment the liquid is applied. The skin is soothed—calmed—so thoroughly refreshed—delightfully cooled.

All druggists of standing have the famous specific as well as the efficient D. D. D. Skin Soap.

But we are so confident of the merits of this prescription that we will refund the purchase price of the first full size bottle if it fails to reach your case. You alone are to judge.

THE C.G.E. IS READY

Meeting Called for Tuesday Night To Form Their Companies for the Peterboro' Home Guard

MOVEMENT GROWING

The movement of the Peterborough Civilian Rifle Association to form a Home Guard Regiment has been received with popular acclaim. Recruits from all sides are ready to join at the next drill, and everywhere the proposal has met with the heartiest approval. The executive at a meeting last night discussed plans along the lines suggested on Thursday night, and the result of their efforts will be shown next week.

That the Canadian General Electric Company is ready to do its share is evident from the following letter which the general superintendent, Mr. E. G. Patterson, has addressed to all foremen, employees, and ex-employees of the company:

November 14th, 1914.

To All Foremen,

Employees and Ex-Employees:

There will be a meeting held in the Public Library Hall—Tuesday next at eight o'clock p.m., for the purpose of organizing a home guard from and amongst the employees of the Canadian General Electric Company, to be part and parcel of the Peterborough Home Guard that is being organized amongst the citizens.

The City of Peterborough has sent quite a number of representatives to the front to defend the Empire and it surely is our duty to prepare to defend—not only our own homes but the home of those who have gone to fight for us.

I would urgently ask your attendance and co-operation in this movement.

E. G. PATTERSON,
General Superintendent.

Similar enthusiasm is being shown throughout the city, and the attendance next week promises to surpass the most sanguine expectations of the officers.

AFTERNOON TEA ALL NEXT WEEK

Oriental Hotel Tea Room Placed at Disposal of Daughters of the Empire.

The management of the Oriental Hotel has placed their tea-room at the disposal of the Daughters of the Empire, who will serve tea every afternoon next week; also on Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings. Dainty refreshments and an inviting cup of tea should make an attractive appeal to the patriotism of the citizens of Peterborough. The ladies of the local Chapter will be glad to see all who can attend, and as often as they may find it possible to do so. The charges will be moderate.

The Second Instalment City Taxes

The second instalment of city taxes is ripe and there is a great rush to the office, of the collector who does a rushing trade without advertising and lives up to the modern motto, "business as usual." Payments are coming in pretty well, but not so briskly as the first instalment, which fortunately came "due and payable" before the war broke out. Out of our some $325,000 of taxes, some $225,000 was paid the first half of the game, leaving about $100,000 to be turned in in war time, which naturally mingles a little bitter with the sweet of paying taxes, one of the pleasures of which we are never deprived. Whatever else is lacking or goes wrong, the call to pay taxes never misses fire.

SOME CANADIANS ALREADY FIGHTING

Canadian Automobile Machine Gun Battery in Action at Lille—Other Units Including Strathcona Horse, R.C.H.A. and Royal Canadian Dragoons May Be Also at Front.

TORONTO, November 14.—(Special).—Units of the first Canadian contingent are already in action in France. The British system of censorship on the departure of the troops is responsible for the fact that this has not been stated officially. To-day there arrived confirmation from two sources that the Canadian corps are in the thick of it. The United Press, generally a reliable news agency, from Paris says that the reports there declare that Canadian troops are now in France, participating in the fighting to prevent the German drive to the coast. In addition to this comes a letter from a member of the Canadian automobile machine gun battery to his parents here stating without giving details that his battery has been in action in the neighbourhood of Lille, France. Previous letters intimated that his battery expected to cross the Channel immediately, and it would naturally be accompanied by an escort of Canadian cavalry, probably the Strathcona Horse and Royal Canadian Dragoons, which are regulars. It is also likely that the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery, regulars, and possibly the Princess Patricias and other regiments whose training warranted it, have also been sent to France before now.

LONDON, November 14.—The correspondent of the Morning Post says: "Another big battle is developing on the Polish frontier, the Germans having withdrawn their forces from the East Prussian front for these operations." The German object in turning back from its retreat and again advancing on Poland is plainly an attempt to relieve the pressure on East Prussia. The failure of such diversion, however, is a foregone conclusion. The Petrograd correspondent of the Daily News says: "In the last stages of the retreat from Poland, the Germans covered 25 miles daily; their column which fell back on Kalisz lost 80,000 men of whom 20,000 were killed."

NEW YORK, November 14.—Rumours persisted all day to-day that the British super dreadnought "Audacious" had been sunk or run aground in the North Sea, and mail advices from Ireland this afternoon repeat the story, which goes on to say that the entire crew of the "Audacious" were saved and brought ashore by the auxiliary cruiser "Olympic." The British Admiralty claims to have no information on the subject. The story says that the "Audacious' met this disaster about October 22 or 23. It is hardly believable here that the Admiralty would seek to cover up such a disaster so long.

BISHOP OF TORONTO AT GORE'S LANDING

TORONTO, Nov. 14.—The Bishop of Toronto leaves town to-day to spend Sunday in the Mission of Gore's Landing and Perrytown, at which latter place he will open and dedicate a new church on Sunday afternoon. From there the Bishop will go to Port Hope to attend a conference of the Archdeaconry of Peterborough, delivering a missionary address in St. Mark's Church, Tuesday evening, returning to Toronto for convocation at Trinity College on Wdenesday, and confirmation at Port Credit on Wednesday evening.

THE SECOND CONTINGENT

Canada's Next Contribution to the Fighting Forces of the Empire to Consist of Over 15,000

HOW IT IS MADE UP

OTTAWA, Nov. 13.—A complete and authoritative statement as to the arangements for the home defence of Canada and the mobilization of the second overseas contingent was obtained this afternoon. It presents some new features. One is that the seven infantry battalions of the fifteen battalions now being recruited, which will not immediately form part of the second contingent and will not go to England with it, may nevertheless see active service before the eight other battalions which will actually form part of the contingent.

This, it is explained, is because the seven extra battalions will be used as "feeders" for the Canadian force already in England, including the Princess Patricia Regiment. The Princess Patricias, it is learned, will go to the front almost immediately, so that reinforcements will soon be needed for them, and these reinforcements will be drawn from the seven extra battalions mentioned. It is also probable that reinforcements will be needed for the first Canadian contingent—which will probably take the field in a month or two now—before the second Canadian contingent will get into action.

As already announced, a force of 20,000 men is to be kept continuously under arms in Canada, plus the 10,000 now employed in garrison and protective duty. The total strength of the second contingent will be 15,922 officers and men, 4,765 horses, 68 guns and 16 machine guns, and to it will be added the 4th infantry brigade now at Salisbury Plain.

Second Contingent.

The contingent in detail will consist as follows:

Infantry — Two brigades of four battalions each, 8,654 men, 494 horses and 16 machine guns.

Artillery—9 field batteries, and 1 heavy battery, 3,379 men, 3,117 horses and 68 guns.

Engineers — Two field companies, 474 men and 160 horses.

Cyclist Unit, 200 men; signal company, 171 men, and 80 horses.

Divisional train, 4 companies of army service corps, 451 men and 378 horses.

Medical Service, 3 field ambulances, 726 men and 16 horses.

Besides these there will be line of communication units as follows: Divisional ammunition party, 464 men; divisional supply column, 285 men; reserve party, 289 men and 358 horses; field bakery, 93 men; field butchery, 20 men; railway supply detachment, 61 men; depot units supply, 28 men.

Up to the present no attempt has been made to mobilize divisional headquarters, infantry brigade headquarters, divisional artillery headquarters, divisional engineers' headquarters; headquarters field artillery brigades, field artillery brigades, field artillery brigade ammunition columns, divisional ammunition columns, divisional train headquarters, nor any of the line of communication units. On the other hand, in the belief that in the near future they will be useful in western Europe or in some other theatre of operations (in Egypt for example), it has been decided to mobilize four regiments of mounted rifles.

The units or portions of units, now in process of being mobilized are therefore as follows: Mounted rifles, regiments, 4; infantry battalions, 15; field batteries, 9; heavy artillery battery and ammunition column, 1; engineer field companies, 2; cyclist unit, 1; signal company, 1; army service corps, companies, 4; field ambulances, 3.

The field batteries will be four-gun batteries, to be armed with 12-pounders, for training purposes, until 18-pounders are available, while the heavy artillery will be armed with 4.7 inch guns.

ALLIES ADVANCE AT BIXSCHOTTE

Official Communique This Afternoon States That Ground Has Been Gained in the Neighbourhood of Ypres—Everywhere Else The German Attacks Have Been Repulsed.

PARIS, November 14.—The allies have succeeded in advancing their lines about five-eighths of a mile east of Bixschoote, in a continued bitter struggle between Ypres and the coast. The official communique issued by the war office this afternoon states that the French troops in this section pushed their way forwrad a kilometre. The Germans continue their offensive, but their attacks have been repulsed all along the line.

LONDON, November 14.—Although the war office is optimistic as to the situation in Flanders, it is admitted to-day that there is nothing to indicate an early cessation of the German attack upon the line defending the coast, or even the imminence of a decisive stage in the long struggle between Ypres and the coast. On the strength of the unofficial reports from northern France, British officialdom to-day accepts as true that Dixmunde has been retaken by the allies. It is realized, however, that even though officially confirmed it represents only another movement in the long line which has undulated constantly during the past three weeks. Heavy rains accompanied by howling gales are now sweeping the trenches from the coast and on towards the interior. In the Vosges snow is falling. The unfavourable weather—which is rapidly becoming worse—will mean a heavier death list as the care of the wounded will be more difficult and many will die from exposure. The heavy marshy ground in the districts which were flooded by the Belgians, is clogged with the bodies of the dead. Owing to the constant shell fire, which is kept up by both sides, their burial has become a serious problem. The burial parties are in danger themselves of being mowed down by the spraying shrapnel. Huge holes which are torn in the ground by the bursting of the larger shells are being used as the graves of hundreds of the fallen men. The soldiers have found that at least fifteen men or two or three horses can be buried in one of these caverns dug out by the bursting of the big shells.

It is declared that the British have been able to advance north of Ypres and beyond a stretch of wood which was used to great advantage by the Germans. Every step forward, however, is made at a tremendous cost..

ALDERMEN SPOKE AT CONCERT

Successful Entertainment Under Auspices of Protestant Federation

The Protestant Federation held a concert last evening in the Sons of England hall, at which there was a large attendance. Alderman G. W. Greene occupied the chair, and Aldermen Duncan and Johnston, had places on the platform. A splendid programme was given, the various numbers of which were greeted with hearty applause. Alderman Duncan and Alderman Johnston gave brief addresses of a patriotic nature.

The programme was as follows:
Opening Chorus—"O Canada."
Piano Solo—Mr. Barrie.
Recitation—Mr. Rennett.
Vocal Solo—Mr. P. Naish.
Solo—"I've a Cosy Little Village in the Country."
Saxophone Trio—Salvation Army Trio.
Comic Song—Mr. Winston.
Solo—"Annie Laurie," Miss Nicholls.
"God Save the King."

A vote of thanks was moved by Alderman Johnston and seconded by Alderman Duncan to the various artists, and to the J. M. Greene Music Co., for the use of a gramophone, on which some splendid selections were given.

GERMAN PRINCE DEMENTED.

Prince Ernst August Discovered Wandering About.

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 13.— Prince Ernst August, Duke of Cumberland, and father of the Duke of Brunswick, a son-in-law of the Kaiser, who has been reported missing several weeks, has been discovered wandering about in a demented condition. It is reported that the horrors of war have affected the Prince's brain and he is now confined in an asylum.

MORE MEN FOR FRONT

57th Regiment Will Send Eleven to Kingston on Saturday—A Total of Fifteen More Than Was Asked For.

CHANCE FOR MORE SOON

Major Walker, O. C. of the 57th Regiment, received word from headquarters at Kingston, yesterday, to stop recruiting here until further orders, as the 21st Battalion of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces is now at full strength. The eleven additional men recruited here will leave for Kingston on Monday morning on the 8.20 train. They are a fine bunch of well-built young fellows, worthy of the City and of the others who have proceeded them to the front. It is interesting to note that two prominent Boy Scout leaders are among the squad, in the person of Acting District Commissioner and Assistant Scoutmaster Brooks.

The 57th Regiment has enlisted for the two Canadian contingents, 220 men.

The announcement that if the war is still going on a year from now Canada will have 150,000 men in action, will be brought home more forcibly to local people when they realize that this means that Peterborough will likely have to furnish 800 more men. This number is based upon the quotas already sent.

Already about 400 men from Peterborough are in the ranks of the first and second Canadian contingents. That is, this City furnished 400 men of the 80,000 already under arms. If 100,000 more are to be raised and Petesborough is allotted the same proportionate number to enlist, by this time next year 800 more local boys will have been called.

LETTERS FROM LOCAL BOYS

Now in Training at the Kingston Concentration Camp

Letters from Pte Fletcher and Pte. Maconomy, two Peterborough boys, now in training at the Kingston concentration camp, have been received by Lieut. Gordon Hall of this city. Pte. A. E. Fletcher, who was one of six boys that come up from Keene to enlist in "A" Company says that the Peterborough contingent is in good spirits. Pte. Maconomy refers to an accident that occurred at the camp resulting in the death of a Ottawa man. He thinks that the Peterborough quota will be hard to beat in appearance. They are drilling away hard and have received a consignment of new uniforms. The company which is quartered in the old cereal works constitutes the leading company of the left half battalion.

LOCAL OPTION IN LAKEFIELD

Upwards of Sixty Appeals Against the Voter's List

Upwards of sixty appeals against the voters' list have been recorded in Lakefield, where preparations are being made to repeal local option in January next. The list is now in the hands of His Honour Judge Hayoke, and will be disposed of at a date to be later fixed. From all accounts it is evident that the parties concerned in the contest are preparing for an energetic campaign.

THE KAISER DISAPPOINTED.

The latest slander is that the Kaiser has been converted to the faith of Mahomed. This has been told to the Moslems the world over and they don't like it—it is a slur on their religion; for bad as the unspeakable Turk is, he is jealous, of the Kaiser with the ability and will to improve on Turkish atrocity. Germany is trying to incite the Moslems to a Jehad, or holy war. But he fails—he can't take the point of view of the Moslems under British rule. They are treated with justice and fairness, and have the good sense to know which side of their bread is buttered. They know it isn't on the German side. The Kaiser is disappointed from the spike of his helmet to the rowels of his spurs. His lying spies, true to the war gang's characteristics, reported that the British Empire was seething with sedition and that, if Britain went to war, she would have more foes to fight within than without. He found a solid Empire, except a few Boers whose character was corrupted by being decendants of a country lying next to Germany. Every people, every colony, every dominion of the Empire is true as steel. They are all pulling together—sending soldiers and caring for the dependents of the soldiers they send. However, Peterborough is not quite up to the mark in this regard. She has sent more soldiers in proportion to her population than most places; but we haven't done quite so well with the Patriotic Fund. We must do better and get together in a firm resolve to make good the slogan—

$20,000 FOR THE PATRIOTIC FUND.

FEEDING THE FIGHTING LINE.

Asquith calls for two million men under arms next spring. All right, Herbert H., Canada will "be there" with her quota! This is easy to say and easy to do if we do not use too much red-tape entanglement. Canada is expected to send regular consignments of contingents to the number of 150,000. There should be no difficulty, whatever, in getting this number into line. There will be less if our martinet military authorities do not put obstructions in the way. We know fighting is no drawing-room game; and that men who go to fight must be fit; but there should be some sense and sound judgment exercised in medical examinations. Men who are generally sound should not be rejected for trifles. Two of the last lot of soldiers Peterborough sent out—to Kingston—were rejected because of defective teeth, but were told that if they got their teeth "filled" they would be accepted. They hadn't the money; but their comrades clubbed to furnish the funds, the teeth were repaired, the men accepted, and the Empire got two fighting men that she wouldn't have got if red tape had had its way—and just as good men as were accepted without question. A medical examiner should be given some discretionary power—be given credit for having some sense. If he passes or rejects a recruit on his judgment, and not by a hard and fast rule, he will be helping fill the ranks more easily. Men will offer more freely if they know that they are not to be rejected—be officially stamped as weaklings—on account of some trifling physical defect, that does not prevent them doing a strong man's day's work.

And men will offer more readily if they can feel that the sacrifices they make in enlisting do not include sacrifices of comfort and living conditions by those they leave behind. Some of us, it is feared, do not realize the sacrifice, the men who go to fight must and do make. Virtually they stake their life, their limbs, their health; they leave good positions, they leave home comforts, home happiness and decent and regular living. They do all this for the sake of those at home—that those at home, kept in the enjoyment of peace, and prosperity, may enjoy all that the fighting man sacrifices. It is feared that we don't fully realize our duty to stand by the soldiers who go to war; to do so by looking after those left behind by those who go to war to protect us—you and me. If we realized this we should make if we are square and loyal, some little complementary sacrifice. We haven't done so so far. Can we think, that one of us—especially those with large or even moderate means—has made an iota of sacrifice in giving what he or she has given to the Patriotic Fund? Has any of us sacrificed a single luxury; a dainty on our tables; a single cigar or pipe; or any other thing that we consider essential to our comfort? Most of us don't know what sacrifice is in this respect; and most of us without learning it, can, by a little effort of will, contribute to give effect to the slogan—

$20,000 FOR THE PATRIOTIC FUND.

WE HAVE LEARNED SOMETHING.

This war, brutal as it is in most of its aspects; in destruction of human life it has caused and is causing every day, will teach us many lessons, and show us our duty individually and nationally in new aspects. In one respect, it will indicate what is now undecided—a way of deciding upon the proper naval policy for Canada; that is unless the conditions of peace when settlement day comes puts the general question of naval preparation into a subordinate position. The fact of the British Admiralty cabling congratulations to Australia upon the splendid achievement of her navy—the first real considerable exploit of the Imperial naval forces—indicates that, as proven by the invaluable evidence of events—Australia's naval policy—and practice—is the right one for a self-governing dominion and the best in the interests of the Empire.

The Australian "separatist," "tin-pot" navy, has so far, without any humiliating dependence upon the Royal Navy, defended her own shores and been of the most signal service to the Empire. It has contributed to fulfill the most important function of a navy, the protection of sea borne commerce. It has done what the Royal Navy with its six hundred ships of many fleets—from Dreadnought to destroyer—has not done in a like way or with like effectiveness, in nearly four months of war. This is not to disparage the Royal Navy by any means; but, by a happy fortuity the Australian navy was on the spot, keeping watch and ward while the Royal Navy was concentrating its force and vigilance upon the North Sea situation. The Australian navy strengthened the Royal Navy—helped the Empire by leaving free a corresponding number of ships of the Royal Navy for service in home waters; on the same principle that the Royal Canadian regiment on duty in Bermuda, by relieving British regulars, who are gone to the battle front, is doing as much and perhaps better service than if it were personally in the fighting line. The British Empire is such a magnificent jumble of co-related interests and forces that individual action and reaction centre in unity of result.

When Canada comes to consider seriously the question of a naval policy, she will do so under better political conditions and with open eyes. If we can project the present wartime party truce into the future, we shall regard our duty more from the point of patriotism than partisanship. We shall have the benefit of the lesson the war has taught us as to the most effective way. We shall realize that we can by being loyal to ourselves, to our own interests; by having faith in our own resources and capacity for doing things, at once and equally help ourselves and the Empire. Australia has built her own ships, and, with greater resources, Canada can do the same. Australia has manned her own ships, and Canada can do the same, especially when Newfoundland, with its 250,000 of population, shows us how by sending 300 seamen for incorporation in the forces of the Royal Navy.

We are inspired, the whole Empire is inspired, by the work of the Australian navy. We have learned how to do our duty in one line, as we have learned and are doing our duty in another line—in strengthening the land fighting forces of the Empire. We have learned and are learning our duty as citizens in helping uphold the hands of those we have sent to the battle line. We have not quite taken the lesson to heart, as we might have done and may yet do. We must do more to provide for those our boys have left behind them. We should realize our duty a little more intensely and feel more weighty the obligation that rests upon us to respond to the slogan—

$20,000 FOR THE PATRIOTIC FUND.

IF THE GERMANS COULD.

The savagery that led to the destruction of Louvain and the bombardment of Rheims Cathedral would doubtless rejoice at the sight of the British Museum library in flames, and we have no doubt whatever that numerous German professors would be found to defend the destruction. But the library and our art possessions are held by us in trust for civilization, and it is something more than a national duty to render them immune from the attacks of the Apaches of the Air. —London Express.

Australia Amply Justifies The Existence of a "Tin-pot" Navy

One of the most notable achievements of any vessel under the British flag since the war broke out was the sinking of the German commerce-destroyer Emden by the Asutralian cruiser Sydney. The Emden had paralysed trade between Great Britain and Calcutta, and had captured and sunk twenty-two merchant ships and two war vessels—a Russian cruiser and a French destroyer. On the day after the cruiser Sydney ran her down, riddled her, and drove her ashore, Mr. Winston Churchill cabled the Navy Board of the Australian Government in these words:

"Warmest congratulations on the brilliant entry of the Australian navy into the war and the signal service rendered to the allied cause and to peaceful commerce by the destruction of the Emden."

The vessel that performed this "signal service" was exactly of the type that Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his Government proposed to build for the protection of Canada's coasts and commerce, and would have built had not the Nationalist-Conservative alliance during the election of 1911 demanded that the "tin-pot" policy be abandoned and the people given the right to vote on the question of navy or no navy. Had the Laurier Government remained in power the Dominion to-day would have had at least two ships of the Sydney type on the Pacific station and might have shared in the congratulations that have been tendered Australia for her signal service to the allied cause. As to the facts there is no dispute. In pursuance of an agreement with the Imperial Government and the Government of the Commonwealth of Australia, by which the self-governing Dominions were to build up local fleets for their own defence and for the assistance of the mother-land in times of emergency, the Government of Canada in 1911 called for tenders for the construction of four cruisers of an improved Bristol type and six fast destroyers. Tenders were desired for the building of the ships in Canada, as it was hoped thus to develop a ship-building industry. Six of the greatest British firms tendered to build in Canada and all agreed to complete at least one cruiser and two destroyers within three years and a cruiser thereafter each year. A tender was also received for the building of the vessels in Britain, and Admiral Kingsmill advised that one or two of the cruisers and destroyers should be built there, thus insuring delivery of the first vessels in about eighteen months.

The tenders were received on the 1st of May, but as the naval policy of the Government—as well as its fiscal policy—was under fire, and as an election had been determined upon to test the public mind, the Laurier Government did not feel warranted in awarding the contracts. Had the Government emerged victoriously from the contest contracts would undoubtedly have been entered into that would have enabled Canada to take part in the running down of the Emden. The Borden Government, when it came into power returned the tenders and failed to make any proposals for naval defence till December 1912, by which time the Australian programme was well under way, and the sister cruisers, Melbourne and Sydney, had been launched from British shipyards. With amazing shortsightedness Mr. Hazen, the Minister of Marine, defended the abandonment of the proposed construction programme. In a speech delivered in the Commons on March 12th, 1912, he declared that the ships would be obsolete before the last of them could be turned out from a Canadian yard. "Would there be any advantage," he asked, "in spending a large proportion of the money of the ratepayers of this country, $15,000,000, on a programme that would be obsolete and on ships that would be out-of-date before the programme was completed? — ships that would be unable to render any service in case the Empire or Canada were attacked, and could only be used for training ships."

The fatuity of this statemet is illustrated by the despatch of the Admiralty thanking Australia for signal services rendered by a cruiser of exactly the despised "tin-pot" type that Mr. Hazen condemned in his top-ofty fashion. The original Bristol launced in 1910, was a ship of 4,820 tons, with turbine engines of 22,500 horsepower, speed of 25 knots, and armament of two 6 -inch and ten 4-inch guns. The improved Bristols that Australia built and Laurier proposed to build are of 5,600 tons, with turbines of 25,000 horsepower, speed of 25 knots, and armament of nine 6-inch guns.

These were the "tin-pots" jeered at on every Conservative platform three years ago. The Sydney is one of them, and brings honour to Australia. The stone that the Canadian Conservatives, under the influence of Monk, Bourassa, and Blondin rejected, has been made the head of the corner. And Ottawa, with a wry face, has had to refit and send to sea even the despised Niobe and the Rainbow that were the theme of Tory jests from Halifax to Vancouver. —The Globe.

UNTER DEN LINDEN

Under the Linden, fair maids are singing,
Waving adieu to the soldiers in grey,
"Go forth to the slaughter of Belgium's fair daughters,
Go cripple the children that dwell far away,
Murder the helpless one,—slay the denfenceless,
No pitying thought stay your hand in the fray."

Under the Linden, now is no singing,
Pale are the cheeks of the maidens to-day
Whisper "The Russians come—hark to the pipe and drum,
God help us now, as for mercy we pray:
O, save the helpless one—spare the defenceless one;
'Twas Belgium yesterday—Berlin, to-day.

Peterborugh, Nov. 12.

Joffre and French

In La Presse,, Montreal, of Tuesday last, one finds the following:

"As if to cement the alliance which exists between France and Great Britain, ingenious persons put themselves to the task of finding coincidence in the combination of the letters which form the names of the principal persons who figure at the head of the allied armies.

One of our correspondents has discovered a most singular combination in the letters that everybody admires.

The characters which enter into the spelling of their names seem to unite and complement each other, as do their taents upon the field of battle.

Here is the remarkable coincidence that has been brought to our attention:

JOF	FRE
FRE	NCH

It is impossible after this to be surprised at the accord that reigns between the two chiefs of the allied armies."

It is to be noted that in the above diagram the letters read from left to right, spell the names Joffre and French respectively, and that the letters in the first compartment, read in the usual order, spell the name Joffre, and in the second, the name of French.

Cruiser Suffolk Off Colon.

PANAMA, Nov. 14. — A warship, believed to be the British cruiser Suffolk, has been sighted 25 miles off Colon. She was steaming with lights out. Her destination was not ascertained.

Ninety Thousand French Prisoners.

GENEVA, Nov. 14. — The bureau established by the Swiss Government for the interchange of prisoners of war and for the transmitting of letters and money from friends of captured belligerents, has on its records the names of 90,000 French prisoners in Germany but the names of only 25,000 German prisoners in France. From this it is assumed here that the French Government is much slower in transmitting the names of the prisoners in France. This bureau forwards every day an average of 1,000 letters and the money it transmits ranges between $2,000 and $3,000.

MR. F. J. A. MORRIS ADDRESSED INSTITUTE ON "THE USE OF BOOKS"

Paper Given in the Collegiate Institute Yesterday Morning Was a Scholarly One.

Yesterday morning before the Teachers' Institute, Mr. F. J. A. Morris, of the Collegiate Institute staff, gave the following paper on "The Uses of Books." The paper was listened to with rapt attention by all present and is deemed worthy of publication in full.

Below is given the complete paper:

Incidents of the class room often serve more potently than Celtic seer to call spirits from the vasty deep of our own school days. Such ghosts, alas! are very shadowy; but, I believe, if we form the habit of fixing our gaze upon them, that, instead of vanishing like ordinary ghosts, they will grow clearer and more distinct every time we make the effort. There can be no doubt that those happy few of us who retain a vivid memory of their own nonage are far better able than the rest to appreciate some of the difficulties children have in the early days of their schooling.

Science has made good use of the ingenious theory that the individual is an epitome of the race; but most of us, though we often speak of children as young barbarians or little savages, fail to realize fully that the child is not merely father of the man, but also his primitive ancestor. To the child everything in the world is fresh and new; everything inspires enthusiasm and interest; nothing is hackneyed or stale; the glory has not yet passed from the earth, nor has familiarity bred indifference. The objects of sense make a stronger appeal to the child than to the adult, and what is true in the sensible world is no less true in the world of ideas. But the thought processes are simple as those of a savage, and the mental attitude in some respects very sharply contrasted with the adult's point of view.

I. The powers of observation are probably keener than the grown-up's, but the faculty of reflection is proportionately—and for that very reason—weaker. Many things seen and heard by a child remain in the mind for years unexplained and unintelligible. Faithfully recorded at the time, such impressions form the raw material that will eventually be worked up by the reasoning powers at a more mature stage.

II. The memory, again, is more exact and stronger than later, when logical processes interfere; and the reasoning faculty is proportionately and for that reason—weaker; even so simple an argument as that from analogy is difficult to a child, and a piece of pure reasoning (e.g., a proposition of Euclid), before a certain stage, is far beyond the grasp of a child's mind.

III. Until quite a large store of experiences have been laid up in the memory by observation, and until these have been (to some extent, at least) sorted over and re-arranged by acts of reflection and reasoning, three faculties of mind will remain more or less undeveloped, all of them essential to the complete understanding of books—especially books of literature, and, above all, Poetry. The faculties I refer to, are The Association of Ideas, Generalising Power and Imagination.

A child's knowledge is apt to be in watertight compartments, and it is a long time before the material gathered in one subject can be used to illustrate another—geography and history; gramamr, composition and literature; Latin, French and English. And what is true of the various subjects of education is equally true of language. Do we realize how meagre are the contents of a word to a pupil—who has perhaps heard it once before—as compared with all its connotes to an adult? Consider what a many-coloured coat it is to us, the language in which a Milton or a Tennyson clothes his ideas; it fairly dazzles one's vision like a meteor trailing clouds of glory as it does from Homer, Theocritus, Vergil, Horace and a dozen more of the Immortals. Take even the picturesque phrases of George Meredith or Robert Louis Stevenson, with their veiled allusions and half quotations, that may quicken for us a dozen dead masters of the written word in a single page; and how much can these possibly mean to a pupil just beginning the study of Literature? I will conclude this little thesis by a few remarks in detail on 4 or 5 classes of books used by the pupils in their school work.

I. Dictionaries and Books of Reference. Every class room of the Collegiate has on the teacher's desk a copy of a good English Dictionary, and hardly a day (I suppose) passes without a pupil being referred to this volume for the meaning and uses of some word or phrase. In oral composition, moreover, books of reference, such as the Encyclopaedia or a Biogrpahical Dictionary, are had recourse to. I have noticed in regard to the use of the latter, that pupils are often quite at sea, and when making excerpts on some technical subject like paper-making or glass-blowing, memorize the words of the article and show in their oral composition a language as foreign and meaningless to them as Hebrew or Chinese. Here is an instance of the way in which faithful students may be misled by the style of an Encyclopaedia. Some years ago, I gave a class for an essay, the life of Sir Walter Scott; on correcting the pupils' work, I found in two compositions the puzzling assertion that Sir Walter Scott contributed articles to a magazine called the "Signet"; after a long chase I finally ran this "red herring" trail to earth in Chambers' Encyclopaedia, where Scott was described as a Writer to the Signet. But even the use of a dictionary is an art that requires much practice to make perfect. Nearly all good dictionaries are compiled uniformly and consistently on one of two principles, either (a) the Historic, or (b) the Logical. The niceties of either arrangement are entirely lost on the young enquirer, who has neither the knowledge requisite to tracing a word from its derivation to its modern use, nor the reasoning power to analyze it into its logical elements. There is even art in the turning over of the pages, that takes long practice. I remember when I was a boy of sixteen, on the classical side of a large English Public School. It was a rule with the head master that every pupil on his promotion to the Sixth or Highest Form must discard his small Greek Dictionary and furnish himself with a copy of Liddell and Scott's large Grk. Lexicon; this book contained nearly 2,000 pages and cost the sum of $9. To avoid this expense I determined to go on with the smaller dictionary; and for 2 or 3 weeks all went well; no words occurred in my authors that were not contained in the little dictionary of 6 or 7 hundred pages, and I was just beginning to crow over my success, when a sudden vengeance overtook me. Like the rest of the VIth I had, every week, to take to the Head Master's Library a Grk. composition; as the Master was reading over my Prose, he came across a phrase that he suspected of not being good Attic and asked me to look up his Dictionary—the large Liddell & Scott—lying on a table close by. I opened the ponderous tome at haphazard and, finding myself a letter or so too high up in the alphabet, began to turn over a page at a time, for fear of passing the word required. I had turned about 30 pages without apparently getting any nearer my goal when suddenly I was electrified by a sharp challenge from the Master, "Morris, Morris, you haven't bought the large lexicon; I can tell from the way you turn the leaves."

II. Elementary Text-books in foreign languages. It is often noticeable in Latin and French that pupils for some weeks do not discover the general vocabulary at the back of the book; and occasionally a pupil will go blundering on for months, laboriously looking up the words he has forgotten, in the short word-lists printed at the head of each exercise. In Latin, too, as in other subjects, one notices much less rapidity in summing up the sense of a rule or a chapter than comes with maturity. Many pupils learn the words without regard to meaning, and memorise rules without understanding or applying them; often they show reluctance to admit that if a word is of a certain gender and has a certain genitive it must be declined like a certain model. When five declensions or four conjugations have been learned, many pupils do not yet see that these are only 5 declensions or 4 conjugations; a few would even go on learning word after word without ever recalling these at all. This points to a weakness in reasoning power; even argument by analogy is sometimes lacking in entrance pupils; still more the process of making strict deductions, and, most of all, (found very exceptionally only) the process of inference, or induction, and the power of generalisation. This is seen as soon as attempts are made by the pupils to review a large part of their work in a single comprehensive glance. I have sometimes found it a benefit to pupils to tell them that when they want to review, they must insist with themselves on reviewing some one subject and some definite part of that subject. It is a fact that most pupils and a good many teachers are satisfied with discovering the general vocabulary at the end of the Latin or French Text book, and never realise that there is an index of subjects in alphabetical order. If they ever attempt to get at the contents of their text-book systematically, you may see them poring over the table of contents, but not the index. I have occasionally found it useful to refer a student at review time to the index and recommend him, say, to gather up the various uses of oblique cases, or of the subjunctive mood from the index. Such carelessness of observation or lack of curiosity often persists, and only the other day a pupil in the Matriculation Form, who had borrowed a volume on Greek Mythology, brought it back with the assurance that the story of Jason was not in the volume. I turned up the index and found against the name of Jason reference to 3 or 4 pages in the body of the book, where the voyage of the Argonauts and other incidents were treated. The pupil had spent a full hour in going over a 10-page table of contents, (not even in alphabetical order) that did not happen to mention the Hero by name.

III. History Text Books.

Here the same lack of mental equipment and of logical powers makes itself noticeable. In the Junior School I have found a large proportion of pupils unable to understand the actual language of their text books in Canadian and British History; still more pupils without the logical sense required to sum up a chapter or even a paragraph and relate the parts to the whole in proper proportion; and when it comes to the sense of historic perspective, only a very few show at first the necessary mental development. I remember once setting this question to a class, (it was in the middle school): What do you know of the Industrial Revolution? Three of the answers showed that Revolution meant to the pupils only mutiny or rebellion with bloodshed; two pupils replied that the Industrial Revolution referred to a man having had the clothes torn off his back as he walked down the street one day, and seven or eight in a class of 30 had failed to connect with the subject some paragraphs that were separated by 2 or 3 pages from the marginal title of "Industrial Revolution." Here you have several of the typical defects in pupils' book work due to crudeness in the mental processes. You may wonder, as I did, what was the rational explanation of the answers about the man's clothes being torn. It was perfectly simple; they had mistaken a casual illustration used by the author to make his narrative more vivid or his exposition clearer, for the essential part of the paragraph that this was intended to illuminate. The mistake was due to an inability to see the real contents of the writer's language and to connect the parts of the paragraph logically and in due proportion. An examination of history synposes made by pupils makes this defect abundantly clear. And further, the more idiomatic an author's style, the more frequent are the pupils' blunders. I will illustrate this point under the next class of books dealt with.

IV. Piece Paragraphs and Models for Composition.

It is very interesting (because highly instrtucive) to set a paragraph of very idiomatic English before a class and get them to analyse it. The style I would recommend is one often adopted by Macaulay. The sentences are short; each ends with a period, and all conjunctive words are omitted. Require from the class the ordinary analysis of the paragraph into sub-topics, and you may get quite good results, but go a step further and ask them to supply the right conjunctive words, and to indicate where the sentences follow in a sequence of time and where they follow in a logical sequence of cause and effect; and to state where two or more sentences are simultaneous or parallel; in what sentences the writer is merely illustrating, and in what he is actually proving his point or paragraph-topic. The answers you get should give you great insight into the difference between a pupil's mind and the adult's mind.

Imaginative Literature — Picturesque Prose and Poetry.

V.

I have already hinted at the enormous gulf that yawns between the adult and the child in regard to imaginative writings. Literary allusions are obviously lost on a young pupil who has only just begun to travel in the realms of gold. But in the imaginative contents of single words and phrases children are equally to seek, and so long as these words and phrases remain comparatively empty, the delicate play of humor and fancy in writers like Charles Lamb, Stevenson or Barrie will also be lost on a young reader. Barrie says that to Stevenson language was a musical instrument upon which he played, and this likening of the immortal R. L. S. to the Pied Piper of Hamelin is a most happy similitude; but whose are the ears that are ravished by the gipsy's marvelous melodies? Whose are the feet that come tumbling out to follow the piper the wide world over? We who love that wizard of words are all grown up. The children remain as deaf to his music as Carlyle was to a chorus; Carlyle knew only two tunes to recognise them—"God Save the Queen" and the "Old Hundredth," and he never could be quite sure which was which.

Why, do you suppose, words were to Keats as sweet as luscious fruit in the mouth? Surely because of two things: First, their rich associations with Chaucer and Spenser, Shakespeare, Milton and a host of other poets, and secondly, something far subtler, that defies analysis, but can only be the essence of 1,000 fragrant flowers of prose and verse, distilled to honey-dew within the mind, and long since etherialised into an atmosphere of glamour wherein the imagination lives and moves and has its being. Childhood is the season of sowing, and we can only pray for a rich harvest, afterdays, of pictures and imaginings, in a cultured mind, that has good taste, and loves to pass through the magic portal (whose gates are of ivory) into that earthly Paradise of Dainty Devices, Beautiful Fancies and Noble Thoughts that we call—Literature.

PIMPLES SO BAD ASHAMED TO GO OUT

Also Terrible Rash on Arms. Itched and Burned. Could Not Sleep. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Eruption All Disappeared.

Ordney, Ontario.—"For a long time I suffered from pimples and blackheads the worst way and I got a terrible rash on my arms. When I got in bed at night and got warm I would have to scratch my arms till blood came. The pimples all came to matter festers and then they broke leaving lots of little marks on my face. I was ashamed to go out with my friends. They also itched and burned until I could have torn my face and arms. I could not sleep at night and I rubbed my arms till they bled.

"One day when reading the paper I came across the Cuticura advertisement, when I thought I would try the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I washed with the Cuticura Soap and then applied the Cuticura Ointment night and morning. I found great relief and in a short time my pimples and eruption all disappeared. I have no Cuticura Soap and Ointment." (Signed) Ordney W. Kay, Aug. 10, 1914.

IF HEADACHY, DIZZY, BILIOUS, "CASCARETS"

To-night! Clean your Bowels and Stop Headache, Colds, Sour Stomach

Get a 10-cent box now.

You're bilious!! You have a throbbing sensation in your head, a bad taste in your mouth, your eyes burn, your skin is yellow, with dark rings under your eyes; your lips are parched. No wonder you feel ugly, mean and ill-tempered. Your system is full of bile not properly passed off, and what you need is a cleaning up inside. Don't continue being a bilious nuisance to yourself and those who love you, and don't resort to harsh physics that irritate and injure. Remember that most disorders of the stomach, liver, and bowels are cured by morning with gentle, thorough Cascarets—they work while you sleep. A 10-cent box from your druggist will keep your liver and bowels clean; stomach sweet, and your head clear for months. Children love to take Cascarets because they taste good and never gripe or sicken.

THIS SAD EUROPEAN WAR

Six hundred dollars at a jump,
Six hundred dollars for a stump,
Six hundred dollars in one lump.
All gone from Peterborough.

Is Peterborough now content?
No doubt for pleasure some were bent,
Six hundred dollars was the rent,
All gone from Peterborough.

Questions and answers went up high
Such as the Patriotic lie,
The answer fairly made me cry,
In City Peterborough.

Then the Theological lie,
The answer made all good men sigh
Apostles' creed none shall deny,
In City Peterborough.

Churches were crowded to the door,
With high and low, and rich and poor,
It was a grand success, I'm sure,
In City Peterborough.

While I muse in this sort of mood,
Six hundred dollars might be good
To buy our soldier wives some food
In City ePterborough.

German bridges made with the dead,
To cross the river, it is said,
Over human bodies they tread,
This sad European war.

God bless our Empire's noble King,
And send our allies to Berlin.
Give Kaiser a new song to sing,
This sad European war.

"We Must Win" is Slogan in Berlin

German Imperial Capital Shows Few Signs of War's Existence

STILL EATING BREAD

BERLIN, Oct. 26.—They still eat bread in Berlin. Amusements proceed with little sign of abatement. Few posters to call men to arms are in evidence and there are many able-bodied men in the streets in civilian clothes. These conditions, in striking contrast to the situation in neutral Holland, where all people are compelled to eat bread that has a 75 per cent. admixture of rye and where almost all walls are covered with official announcements relating to mobilisation and the regulation of prices, were sources of wonderment to a correspondent of the Associated Press, who has just arrived from constant scenes of war and its aftermath.

That Germany is at war could not be gleaned from street impressions, though a person might speculate on the causes that have led to two conditions. Everywhere one sees large photographs of Emperor William, the Crown Prince, and Generals Von Hindenburg, von Beseler, and other military notables, exhibited, as are campaign lithographs in the United States. There also are photographs of Emperor Francis Joseph and Austrian generals.

The second condition is the quality of the horses which do the hauling in the city. All good horses have been requisitioned for military purposes, with the result that every equine able to keep moving is being utilised.

There are surprisingly few soldiers to be seen in the streets of the German capital. Now and then a column puts in an appearance — cheerful, eager, and usually bedecked with flowers—off for the war. Beside the men march their mothers, wives, sisters, sweethearts, not so cherful. But it seems to be contrary to some unwritten law to show emotion in this business of going to the front, perhaps never to return.

Business in Berlin is normal as far as can be ascertained. Shortly after the mobilization some of the large amusement places closed up. Many of them have ben reopened with the coming of the winter season. The many performers who are out of work represent curtailment of programmes rather than total closures. A similar condition prevails among shop and factory employees, but in their case the percentage of unemployment is lower because of the men taken to the front. Official figures recently issued show that, with the progress of redistributing labour not yet completed, there were in Berlin only from 2 to 6 per cent. more unemployed than normally, while in the case of certain trades which require men of exceptionally good physique, there was actually a shortage of labour.

The bills of fare in the Berlin hotels and restaurants are now "speisekartes," "menu" being taboo. There has been little reduction in the quantity and no deterioration in the quality of the food offered. Nor are the prices materially higher.

"We must win," is the slogan of everybody in Berlin. To make this possible, everybody accepts resignedly whatever sacrifice has to be made. While the army has the hard work in the battle line, the women, including the Empress and the women of her court, knit socks, wristlets, gloves, sweaters, abdominal bands, and even calf "warmers."

Comment heard in the street, public places, and official quarters is not such that one could say that the war is poular in Germany. That term would hardly describe the feeling. A better definition of the sentiment prevailing in all classes of Berlin's population and, it is claimed, the empire, is that the war is a very disagreeable business which must be disposed of thoroughly and with wholeheartedness.

Berlin does not seem to fear an invasion by hostile aircraft. For this reason no limitation has been put on street lighting, and the electric signs which glare and flash everywhere and which would guide an aviator for miles. A plentiful supply of fuel has made economy unnecessary.

Owing to a general commandeering of horses and waggons the streets are not quite as clean as they were forferly. There is so little excitement in the capital that even the war bulletins of the newspapers get but half the attention they do elsewhere.

Is Indian Summer Going to Come?

"Indian Summerr" or—as we should also say since the nomenclature has become international—"St. Martin's Summer", is due, according to what a petticoated weather prophet has communicated to the Examiner. She writes that we have had, or are having our "squaw winter," and that Indian summer will now come. This lady-like forecast of the weather is welcome, and we can only hope that she is a little straighter shot than Hicks or—sometimes—old Probs. A "spell" of Indian summer will be welcome to all of us, but, especially, in the homes where the pay cheque is a thing of the past.

55c. PER DAY

A trifling amount,—what does it mean? Just this; that you, as representing the average Canadian citizen, can square off your account with our army of factory workers, by making sure that at least 55 cents worth of the things you buy, in your ordinary every day shopping, are made right here in Canada—the country that gives you your own living.

That sum, 55 cents a day, equals $200 per year. There are 8,000,000 people in Canada. If for the support of every one of them, there was spent $200 a year on Canadian made goods it would give us a factory output of $1,600,000,000.

Back in 1910-11 Canada was enjoying pretty good times, but the total factory output then was less than $1,200,000,000.

You can easily bury the hard times of to-morrow under the coppers you spend on odds and ends to-day, just by using a little intelligent discrimination, by saying to the shop-keeper.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

Peterboro' Cheese Brought Over $200,000 to Farmers

Successful Year in Spite of Declining Production — Comparison With Previous Season's and a Suggestion to the Patrons of Factories—Board Did Not Represent All Factories in District.

RECORD PRICE RECEIVED

CHEESE SOLD ON PETERBOROUGH BOARD.

1914	18,465
1913	21,191
1912	27,662
1908	41,420

The dairy season terminating this week provides new evidence of the gradually declining production of cheese in this vicinity.

Records kept by The Examiner show that the factories listed on the Peterborough Cheese Board made 18,465 cheese from May 1 to November 1. Allowing 90 lbs. for the average weight of cheese this makes a total of 1,477,200 lbs. A careful examination of the figures for the year gives an approximate total of $201,956.88 or roughly $200,000.00 as the extent of the business transacted by Mr. Switzer's Board. A little long division indicates that the average price was 13.68c a pound. The highest price of the year and a record for the Board was 18½ cents paid on October 7th.

Back in 1908 the price was ranging from 10 to 12 cents, and in recent years 12 to 13 cents was about the average. Hence, from the standpoint of price the market has been steadily, if not extensively, advancing. It is no secret that the bulk of the milk and cream, or a very large quantity of it, produced in Peterborough county is being diverted to the butter churns. No comment is necessary on this point.

Have a Reputation.

But there is a phase of the declining cheese manufacture that seems to deserve the attention of our farmers. Buyers and brokers assert that Peterborough cheese has a high reputation. It is regarded as the cream of the Canadian output, and to achieve that position the advocates of better-dairying facilities laboured for years. They preached cleanliness, cool-curing rooms, close records of milk production, careful selection of herds and many other important ideas which were gradually adopted. In short, it was only after persistent work on the part of Mr. Barr and other inspectors, the incidental encouragement of Mr. Gillespie, the co-operation of patrons and the intelligenec and devotion of the makers that Peterborough cheese won its way to a high position in the world's market.

Should Capitalize It.

It seems a pity, therefore, that the industry is on the decline; that the farmers are not to obtain a full measure of profit from the labour and money they put into the industry. Of course, if there is more profit in butter, mere sentiment will not prompt farmers to continue in the cheese department of dairying. They are not making "golden" butter for its appearance alone. But if financial returns warrant it farmers in this vicinity should remember that they have standardized their cheese, have won a reputation and a market for it and take advantage of these conditions.

What About Milk?

These columns are too limited for a discussion of the dairy industry and its trend, but it might be suggested that our farmers examine the circumstances surrounding it. The warring nations in old Europe when confronted by problems sought not lines of least resistance but solutions of them. If the flow of milk is lighter it is doubtless because the dairy herds are thinner in numbers. If the cost of cattle during winter months is too high there must be methods to circumvent the difficulties. Agriculture, to-day, calls to the young farmers to broaden out, to cut away from old ideas and to seek their own methods of meeting existing conditions.

However, if the farmers cannot see the movement, tardy though it is and if the Government is not sufficiently alive to the future, the decline of the cheese industry will be as certain as it is now slow. Surely Peterborough farmers will not relinquish their hold on the cheese market without an effort to meet the new influences.

Very Successful Sessions of Teachers' Institute Were Concluded

Large Attendance of Teachers From Every School in the City Present at Last Gathering This Year.

One of the most successful annual gatherings since the inception of the Teachers' Institute was concluded yesterday afternoon. The meetings were in progress during the past two days and many splendid papers were given at the various sessions. Yesterday morning Mr. L. J. Petit, President of the Institute, opened the proceedings with an interesting discourse on "Community Civics." The educational world, he said, should be alive to the importance in all things connected with civil life. There is need of linking school and community. The old definition of community, a group bound together by common interest. Aim to make the child conscious of the interdependence of all citizens. Most of us are apathetic in civic matters. Children taught the value of co-operation and the ability to measure up a situation quickly. All matters connected with the civic life such as health, etc., should be learned by the child. Problems of beautifying the city, etc. The school should serve as a common meeting place and clearing house for the activities of the community.

Dr. Pakenham.

Speaking on the teaching of English literature, Dr. Pakenham said that literature may give new interests, a sense of duty to the pupil, and ought to give some control over the mechanics of our life. In this subject each teacher must depend much on himself. Reading was the most important factor in the presentation, and there were three aspects in reading, the mechanical, the appreciation and the expression of the emotions. The speaker placed much stress on the teacher's reading, which was of more importance in literature than the pupils. The teacher's comments should be few and there should be no preaching. "Do not make yourself a screen between the pupil and the author," he said. "Results cannot be measured. The intangible things in literature were the most valuable ,and paraphrasing not advisable.

Afternoon.

"Discipline," said Mr. C. Ward Butcher, "was obtained in four ways: 1, Suggestion; 2, Class spirit; 3, Keeping pupils busy; 4, Punishment." The first method was the best. Often the teacher is to blame for a noisy room. They should be definite and have a confident manner, and if possible should make a few rules. A teacher should not threaten. Do not give wrong suggestions. These lead to misdemeanours. Create the idea that the teacher always believes the pupil. Promote a good class spirit in every way possible, and never tell tales out of school. This was a good rule for both teacher and pupil.

Keep the pupils busy always. This helps discipline. Punishment must be impersonal and in such cases the teacher is merely an instrument of justice. Corporal punishment, said the speaker, was a necessary evil. There are good reasons to keep from scolding. Wasted time was not pleasant, failed to create the idea that the school is for pupils', and gives the idea to the class that the teacher is hardly in control of the situation. Each teacher must act as he would towards ladies and gentlemen and always have self-control.

Teaching of History.

In discussing the "Teaching of History," Dr. Pakenham began by reading some humorous extracts from examination papers which served to show what impression the teacher's efforts had left on the minds of the pupils regarding certain events in history. Continuing he taught what might be termed a model lesson on the reign of Mary I, which embodied a very interesting story o fher reign. He explained where mistakes were apt to be made and where care was necessary in the teaching of history, one of the very important subjects on the curriculum.

Mr. Hone.

Mr. Hone of the P.C.I. staff, spoke on "A Defect in Our Educational System." He said that efficiency should be the chief aim in the schools. The capable man is the best. In his address the definiteness of knowledge and ability to do things was emphasized. Mr. Hone said that our schools do not fit a pupil for everyday life. There was too great a break between the school and after life. We do not get the best results. Our system should be more flexible. We need a large industrial school in this community for electrical and other training. More attention, too, should be paid to the hereditary tendencies of the pupils. The present system of examinations is not conducive to efficiency, but unfortunately there is no good substitute. The teachers should develop efficiency in themselves and then teach others to do so.

Mr. Vosden's paper on "The School and the Community was not given owing to the lateness of the hour.

At the afternoon session there were in attendance the teachers from the Public, Separate and Normal schools and the Collegiate Institute.

ANOTHER TRICK THAT WORKED

PARIS, Nov. 13.—Tales of brilliant fighting are related by officers who have returned here from the front. One of these officers said to-day that a brigade of French bluejackets on the Belgian frontier last night played a trick on the entrenched Germans, who had hung cans and bells on their wire entanglements in order to prevent a night surprise attack.

The sailors, according to this officer, crept out and tied strings to the wires and then returned to their own trenches. They continually pulled these strings, which caused the Germans to keep up for many hours a constant though ineffectual fire. When finally the Germans ceased firing the sailors attacked and took a number of prisoners.

COSSACKS HELPED HURRY GERMANS

PETROGRAD, Nov. 12. — A special correspondent of the Ultro Rosli says that in the opening stages of the German retirement from Warsaw and Ivangorod the enemy fell back very slowly, fighting all the way, and not making more than from three to seven miles a day. When, however, the Russian cavalry worked its way around to their rear the Germans hastened their movements.

"The dashing Russian horsemen," he adds, "with light artillery, were ever on their heels. The army, retreating from Plesk on 31st October and 1st November, accomplished marches of thirty miles a day.

No Time to Rest.

"Utterly exhausted, the troops stopped to rest, but hardly had they kindled their bivouac fires before the rattle of musketry put an end to their hopes. The fires were hastily extinguished with buckets of water, and the weary soldiers turned out to meet the attack of dismounted Cossacks. The retreat was continued so spedily that one of the hospitals fell into the hands of the Russians."

Thousands of German prisoners are now employed in Poland filling the trenches their armies had dug and removing the wire entanglements.

15 CANADIANS ARE DISMISSED

OTTAWA, Nov. 13. — There have been fifteen new "casualities" among the Canadian troops on Salisbury Plain. But the casualities are due to the common enemy of all mankind, and not to the Germans or Austrians.

Too much British hospitality and too much firewater taken by some of the Canadian troops while on leave from camp in London or elsewhere have resulted in fifteen privates being dismissed from the ranks. Word to this effect was received here to-day, and the pay of the men has been stopped by the Militia Department. It is also stated that in a few cases lieutenants have been reduced in rank to sergeants for the same cause.

These sporadic outbreaks of men on leave after the strict discipline of Valcartier and Salisbury have evidently caused General Alderson a little trouble. Hence his public request to the British public to stop treating the Canadian troops, with his added statement that unless more discretion is shown passes will have to be stopped entirely.

BROCKVILLE'S HOME GUARDS

Town Council Has Purchased 200 Rifles

BROCKVILLE, Ont., Nov. 13. — Citizens of Brockville have enthusiastically taken hold of the idea to form a home guard. A public meeting called last night to discuss the proposition brought out an attendance of men which filled to overflowing the largest hall in the town. Announcement was made that the Town Council had purchased 200 Lee-Enfield rifles with ammunition and these were quickly disposed of at a nominal figure to the men who signed the list for service in the home guard. None were accepted for membership under 35 years of age.

The adjutant of the 41st Regiment was present and signed up scores of young men to fill in the ranks depleted by enlistment in the first and second contingent. The home guard, which is expected to reach nearly one thousand, will get down to training at once.

TO PROVIDE BOOKS FOR LAKE SAILORS

After forty years' missionary service amongst sailors, twenty-three of which have been spent on the Great Lakes under the auspices of the Upper Canada Tract Society, Mr. James S. Potter has severed his connection with that society and, aided by other missionaries, has established an institution known as "The International Sailors' Missionary Association," the objects of which will be the carrying out of institutional work among sailors.

The missionaries will spend their entire time among sailors, and keep in touch with light-house crews and life-saving stations. One-tenth of all monies received by the association will be devoted to the purchase of a number of circulating libraries for sailors and the establishment of reading rooms, and every other dollar to the support of missionaries and the purchase of religious literature.

All people having relatives on lake vessels, with whom they would like the society to keep in touch, or those desirous of assisting the Mission, are requested to write to Mr. J. S. Potter, Box 668, Toronto.

CHILDHOOD CONSTIPATION

Baby's Own Tablets are an absolute cure for childhood constipation. They never fail to regulate the bowels and sweeten the stomach, and unlike castor oil, their action is mild and they are pleasant to take. Concerning them Mrs. G. Morgan, Huntsville, Ont., says: "My baby was greatly troubled with constipation and colic till I began giving her Baby's Own Tablets. The Tablets are surely the best remedy I know of for little ones as they quickly banisher all signs of constipation and colic. I would use no other medicine for baby." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

TWO OF ENEMY'S SUBMARINES ARE REPORTED SUNK

LONDON, Saturday, Nov. 14.—"By the novel means of dredging the channel bottom with chains, to which were attached powerful explosives, it is believed that the German submarine which had been attempting daring raids in the vicinity of Dover, has been blown up," says the Dover correspondent of the Daily Telegraph. "A heavy explosion under the water and the appearance of oil on the surface seems to bear this out. Naval men believe that the raider was hoarding her power by remaining on the channel bottom for lengthy periods.

"Another German submarine which has been particularly troublesome to the ships of the flotilla engaged in the bombardment of the Belgian coast also is reported to have been shelled and sunk."

There is no confirmation of the above.

RENT AS SAVINGS

The man who pays $15.00 a month, pays out $180.00 a year, and at the end of that time he has 12 receipts, and nothing more. Offer this same man a chance to live in a house and by a little effort, which is well worth while, pay $2 or $3 a month more, and have the whole thing used as a payment on the purchase of the house, and it puts him in a very different position.

For instance, he gets a house at $2,000, new and clean, and no money asked as a down payment. He pays, say, $18 a month, making $216 a year. That is only $36 a year more than he paid out as rent, and means only 70 cents a week, but here is what it does for him. Deducting the interest at 6 per cent. on $2,000, with rests made at six months' intervals, which would amount to $118.80, from the $216 paid in, it leaves a balance of $97.50 to deduct from the $2,000. This shows that at the end of one year the principal has been reduced to $1,902.50, and the man has actually saved and paid on his house, $97.50, nearly one hundred saved in one year.

Mr. Callander, at The Examiner Office, or by phone 574 at his home evenings, at 566 Weller Street, has two brand new houses, facing south, two lots from car line nice trees, light, water, rough plumbing all in brick kitchen, back balcony, three bedrooms, two closets, etc., that he will let go on the above terms or possibly better, if desired, to two good careful men. Free use of nearby lot for garden, till sold. Save money this way quicker than any other, and own your own home.

GERMANS SMASHED IN AERIAL FIGHT

Four German, Two French and Two British Machines in the Battle

PARIS, Nov. 13. —A thrilling encounter, in which eight aeroplanes, four German, two French and two British, figured, occurred in the vicinity of Ypres. The German machines were destroyed finally by the artillery and the eight officers whom they carried killed.

The Germans were seen approaching to reconnoitre the lines of the allies. The French and British airmen immediately ascended to meet them. For some time the aircraft circled about each other, rising and descending, while machine guns spattered bullets among them. The sky was clear and the gunners on the ground had a good view of the aeroplanes, but failed to cripple any of the German machines.

Then suddenly four of the allied aeroplanes made a swift dash toward their own trenches and were followed by the Germans, who too late discovered the feint and perceived the perils of the situation only when shrapnel burst among them. In a few minutes the four German aeroplanes crashed to earth.

A Hard-won Victory.

The taking of Quesnoy by the French was one of the hardest fought actions south of the line of Lille. A number of prisoners were captured, including the son of Baron Wrangel, the former Ambassador they admitted the Germans had lost heavily and that the action was a murderous one. The French required two days to take the town, and at the end of the second day the German trenches were carried at the point of the bayonet, although well protected with barbed wire.

A Murderous Charge.

Led by their officers, and well seconded by their artillery, the French rushed to the charge and killed the men working the machine guns. Then, without holding back a minute, the French soldiers continued their advance up to the positions of the German artillery, concealed in trees on top of a hill.

The enemy by that time had collected his forces and started a counter-attack. Fierce hand-to-hand struggles ensued, both sides losing heavily, but the French held their grounds and captured two guns, four machine guns and 400 prisoners.

Six Escaped From Tsingtau.

LONDON, Nov. 14—Capt. Zimmerman and five other German officers escaped from Tsingtau before the surrender of that city and have arrived at the German Embassy in Pekin according to The Frankfurter Zeitung.

PRESENTATION TO MR. N. C. CAMERON

Secretary of Retail Association Receives Expressions of Regret at His Departure—Leaves To-Day For the East

Last evening at a special meeting of the Executive committee of the local Retail Merchants' Association, Mr. N. C. Cameron, secretary of the Peterborough branch and also a live wire in connection with the Provincial Association was honoured in a presentation from the Association. Mr. Cameron leaves to-day for St. John, N. B., which in the future will be his headquarters, and the Association was anxious to have him know to what degree they appreciated what he has done for the Retail Merchants of this city. Owing to the short notice they received of the exact date of his departure it was impossible, as the officers would have liked, to call a general meeting of the Association, so the executive made the presentation on behalf of the Association.

Verbal expressions of regret at Mr. Cameron's departure were made last evening by several members of the Executive. They were frank in their praise for the way Mr. Cameron had discharged his duty in regard to the local and provincial organizations. They spoke of the fact that before his connection with the Retail Merchants' Association all sorts of questionable pedlars entered the city, disposed of their goods and cleared out again without paying a cent towards the general funds of the city. It was due to his efforts that conditions had been changed, that transient traders were made to pay their rightful share towards the general expenses of the city, that pedlars had to contribute to the city treasury and that many itinerant salesmen of questionable merchandise and other goods did not visit the city at all. His work in the interests of the merchants and the city at large had been well carried out.

Mr. Cameron was presented with a purse of gold. In a brief speech he acknowledged his pleasure in thus receiving the expression of good feeling to the local merchants.

Mr. Cameron has accepted the position of secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association of the Eastern Provinces where he will have a wider field and greater opportunity to serve the interests of Canadian merchants. His headquarters will be at St. John, N.B., for which city he leaves to-day. He has been an officer of the Peterborough Retail Merchants' Association for some years and for a short time conducted a men's furnishing business on George Street.

DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 14—With the lakes swept by a storm that all but equals in severity the disastrous gale of a year ago, when thirteen big lake steamers were sent to the bottom and 250 sailors drowned, fear was felt today for the safety of a score of vessels known to be fighting against the [illegible]

Eggs Up To Forty Cents

Farmer Drives Eighteen Miles to Sell a Load of Produce on the Peterboro' Market.

TO-DAY'S MARKET

The recent snowstorm and subsequent rain has combined to make the concessions lines rough for travelling. This much was adduced from a number of farmers who were on the market this morning. One farmer drove a distance of eighteen miles, starting at 4 o'clock this morning and arriving in Peterborough shortly after 8 o'clock. He hauled ten bags of potatoes, three bags of apples and some smaller produce. He was of the opinion that he could have disposed of his produce nearer home. The prices would have been slightly lower, but the difference would not have exceeded the expense account. Someone suggested that he go into the poultry business and raise a few eggs once in a while. This morning eggs sold as high as forty cents a dozen, or four and one-third cents each. The nutriment of one egg is said to be equal to one pound of meat, so even at present prices eggs can harrdly be regarded as a luxury. Beef is worth 14 and 15c. a pound, and there are people who would sooner take a chance on obtaining a pound of good beef than they would in securing a fresh egg.

Butter 28c.

Butter was down a couple of cents this morning, due no doubt to the closing of a number of cheese factories throughout the country. Several lots were sold for 28c a pound, while others changed hands at 40c. Turkeys were selling at from seventeen to eighteen cents a pound, which is from two to three cents higher than beef. "Who wouldn't pay the difference," said one enterprising farmer this morning. Chickens were selling at 75c. a brace, and geese at $1.40 cents each. All kinds of fowl were plentiful, with the possible exception of ducks. A few were offered at 50c. each.

Potatoes Lower.

The price of potatoes still continues to sag. They are now down to as low as fifty cents a bag. Athough the majority of farmers were getting fifty-and sixty cents. First-class apples could be had for $2.50 cents a bag, while a few of the lesser known varieties sold lower. Cabbages at 30c. a dozen and cauliflowers at from 5 to 10c each, found willing buyers. A farmer, explaining a business transaction to a policeman, proved of interest to a large gathering of spectators, whose faces denoted that intense look of expectancy whenever an arrest is pending. However, the blue-coated minion of the law had no intention of making an arrest. He listened to the tale of woe and passed on, the crowd doing likewise, and business at that particular end of the market resumed its normal course.

Not a Bad Plan.

"Why does Wombat speak so frequently about his wife? He praises her in the most extravagant terms. She may be a nice woman, but why drag her into the conversation all the time?"

"He's a little leery of his wife since she has a dictograph stuck around."

SUBMARINES ARE LOST

German War Craft Reported Destroyed by the British

SEA BED WAS DRAGGED

LONDON, Nov. 14.—The Standard publishes an interesting report, which the official press bureau permits, that two German submarines have recently been lost. There has been no official announcement of either, but The Standard says there is every reason to believe that two submarines which have been raiding in the English Channel have been satisfactorily accounted for.

According to information from credible naval sources, one of these submarines has been carrying out a series of daring reconnaissances in the vicinity of Dover, and a patrolling cruiser has reported attempts by this German craft to torpedo her. Patrol flotillas from Dover searched for the submarine, which was believed to be lying on the sea bed.

During one of the very calm days for which the end of October was notable, bubbles were seen rising at a certain point. Vessels went out and dredged over this area in a similar manner to mine-sweeping, but using a powerful chain with explosives attached. This was dragged at a depth that would catch the submarine if lying there. After patrolling several times over the area there was a heavy explosion, followed shortly by large quantities of oil rising to the surface. Those who took part in the operation have no doubt that a German submarine was blown up.

The second case concerned a German submarine that had been particularly troublesome to ships of the Dover flotilla that had been engaged in the bombardment of the Belgian coast. Seamen state that she was trapped into believing herself safe in an attack and then was heavily shelled and sunk.

It was also reported yesterday that a French torpedo boat rammed and sank a German submarine off Dunkirk.

TEA ROOM AT THE EMPRESS

A Pleasant Place Where Ladies May Enjoy a Social Half-hour.

The tea room at the Empress Hotel is a charming and pleasant place to rest awhile and enjoy a cup of tea, for ladies when down-town in the afternoon. INSPECTION AT KINGSTON

Peterboro' Boy Describes Major Sam Hughes' Visit to Second Battalion.

From one of the 57th contingent at Kingston the following interesting letter has been received

Just a line to let you know we have had the Hon. Sam Hughes inspecting the 21st Battalion in company with Col. Hemming on the Cricket Grounds, this morning. Snow had fallen during the night, about one inch deep and had a pretty appearance on the Cricket Grounds, with the tall trees around. Reveille sounded at 5.30 and breakfast at 6 a.m. Parade fell in at 7.30. We marched to Wellington street to wait for the right half of the Battalion from Artillery Park Barracks. All the Battalion wore overcoats, which were well needed, as it was rather cold. Then we all marched to the Cricket Grounds and, after getting into position, the order "stand easy" was given. Needless to say snow balls began to fall like German shells. About ten minutes later the Hon. Sam. arrived. The Bugle Band blew the salute. All the officers were called to the front and inspected, and then the orders "Form fours, Companies march." The Major General, standing for the "march past" as we left the Cricket Grounds for our quarters. A little later the honourable gentleman inspected the quarters. We all felt pretty sick yesterday, as we were innoculated on Wednesday, instead of Thursday. Several of the boys fainted and two were taken to the hospital. It does not hurt at the time as it is only like a pin-prick, but later comes the fun. Every man you meet turns sideways or shouts "mind my arm." But am pleased to say we are all feeling well again to-day. We all received our underwear on Wednesday. It is certainly swell and all wool; we all received two suits of underwear, two grey shirts, two towels, one sweatercoat, one pair of boots. The sweaters were Penman Pen Angle, and the underwear, Stanfield's, so you may guess it is good stuff. The O. C. has arranged for the use of the Music Hall in the Town Hall for the use of the boys, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A.. It is a lovely room; you can write or read, with writing paper, etc., free.

We are going to arrange for a concert some evening when the boys are feeling better from their innoculation. We get another dose in ten days' time so we have something to look forward to if it is going to have the same effect. The weather has turned very dull and it has started to rain, but we have had nice weather up to the present.

Following the [illegible] General Hughes called the officers about him and gave them strong, practical advice, the keynote of which was efficiency. He expressed his satisfaction with the condition of the troops and advised the officers that owing to the fierce and brutal nature of the fighting in the present war, it was necessary for the men to be thoroughly trained and to be taught to keep under cover and to be able to crawl from one position to another. He stated that he was working on plans which would render the bayonet more efficient. In closing his address he stated that if things went right he hopes to meet the troops at the front and if not there, then in Berlin.

COUNTY TEACHERS' CONVENTION

Matters Discussed at Annual Meeting of the Association.

The annual convention of the teachers of Peterborough County was held on Thursday and Friday of this week. The opening sessions were held in the Normal School.

After the minutes of the last meeting, the appointment of committees, and routine business, the opening address was ably delivered by the President, Mr. G. E. Broderick, P. S. I., in which he laid particular stress on the necessity of teaching by means of the concrete.

Following this, concise reports of the O. E. A. convention were given by Misses Edgar and Carter.

The following officers were elected for the coming year:

President—Mr. H. Andrews.
Vice-President—Mr. Donoghue.
Secretary—Miss E. Waters.
Executive Committee—Misses Duff, Hamilton and Marsh.
Auditors—Miss MacNaughton and MacLachlan.

During the afternoon the subject of "Agriculture" was discussed.

The report of the Rural Teachers' Conference at Guelph was very admirably given by Misses Donaghue and Pearson.

"School Gardens" were discussed by Misses Throop and Hamilton, who outlined in a very definite and interesting manner their methods of introducing a school-garden; and its relation and benefits to other school-studies. The subject was continued by Mr. F. C. McRae, B.S.A., who told of the great numbers of children who, in the past few years, have taken part in home gardens and school fairs, chiefly owing to the interest taken in them by the teacher.

A helpful paper on "Primary Work" was then given by Miss Murray.

Inspector Lees gave a very pleasing talk, "Bits Picked Up."

In the evening a public meeting was held in the Assembly Hall of the Collegiate Institute, at which a splendid musical programme was rendered by several of the City teachers.

Dr. Pakenham, a former Peterborough boy, was greatly enjoyed by all in his lecture "Some Problems in Ontario Education."

Judge Huycke Has Returned

From Brantford—Is Chairman on Arbitration Board.

His Honour Judge Huycke has returned from Brantford, where he was acting in conjunction with Mr. A. E. Datt, K.C., and Mr. J. Magee, on a Board of Arbitration in the case of the L. E. and N. Railway and the owners of the Brantford Ice Company. Judge Huycke, who is chairman of the Board, will return to Brantford in a few days, for the completion of the case.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

The Court of Revision will meet this afternoon. This is the fourth time the court has convened, and it is altogether likely that another sitting will be necessary before the one hundred and twenty-three cases are disposed of.

Alterations.

The new glass panels have been inserted in the outer doors of the City Clerk's office. They bear the name of the office, also the number of the building. Some new hardware in the form of a lock and handle have been attached to the door. Mr. W. H. Moore of the City Trust Commission, had a look over the work this morning.

Financial Assistance.

Dependents of men who enlisted in the first contingent are beginning to feel the need of financial assistance. A few of them are turning up each day at the office of Relief Officer Miller, who at the present time is in charge of the patriotic fund. Mr. Miller has asked to be relieved of this responsibility, a request that has been acceded to. It is merely a question of securing a man suitable for the work.

Cigarette License $50.

At the Brussels council meeting a by-law was passed placing a license fee of $50 on vendors of cigarettes and a penalty not to exceed $50 or 21 days in jail for infractions. The by-law comes into effect on January 1, 1915.

A similar license in Peterborough would cost $40.

THE PEACE MOVEMENT

Editor, Examiner:

Sir,—No great movement was ever launched without the opposition of politicians and those possessed of a nervous fear. They help towards the object, which is discussion and the moulding of public opinion. The movement towards world-wide disarmament and international police has followed at the Council chamber meeting, is receiving this help.

The need of agitation to prepare the way for so immense an undertaking, was admitted by the three gentlemen who at first spoke against such agitation at the present time, when the resolution which asks, "that public opinion be aroused and educated to demand," etc. (as given in last night's paper) was adopted unanimously.

When engaged in a fight you naturally disarm your opponents before you throw down your own arms, and the speakers urged every able-bodied man to do his share in the fight, if possible, on foreign fields, and if not, then by joining the Home Guard.

It is very interesting to see a man of such wide prominence as Col. Roosevelt advocating a movement along these lines. The fact of his letter appearing in the London Times, shows that great paper far from being afraid of, but rather invites, such discussion.

Yours very truly,
Joseph S. Bell.

Santa Claus Ship Jason Leaves New York To-day.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—On the eve of the sailing of the collier Jason, laden with Christmas gifts for children in the European war zone, a message bidding her Godspeed was received from President Wilson. The message read:

"U. S. Jason: My best wishes for a safe voyage. May your goods carry comfort and relief to the distressed sufferers.—Woodrow Wilson."

The Jason, lying at a Brooklyn dock, had received her entire cargo last night and will sail to-day.

Federal House To Meet Soon.

TORONTO, Nov. 14—A sign pointing to the opening of the Federal House at no distant date appeared with the publication in The Ontario Gazette yesterday of the condensed rules for private bills. It is customary for a warning notice to be given within a month or so of the assembly and attention is called to the fact that all applications for private bills must be advertised in The Canada Gazette and subscribe to other regulations. All notices are to be published for five consecutive weeks.

Premier Hearst stated last evening that the Cabinet had as yet given no consideration to the calling of the Ontario House or to the appointment of a speaker.

740 Lost on the Monmouth.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—It is officially announced that the British cruiser Monmouth, which was destroyed recently in the battle off Chile with German warships, carried 42 officers and 698 men. Captain Frank Brandt was in command of the Monmouth.

British Casualties 87,000.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—In reply to a query made by Edward T. John, M.P. from East Denbighshire, Premier Asquith yesterday announced in the House of Commons that the British casualties up to Oct. 31 approximated 87,000 men.

THE ATTACK IS GROWING WEAKER

Crisis of Germany's Northern Attack Has Passed

PARIS, Nov. 14.—Last night's official bulletin says: "From the sea to the Lys, the German action has not been so strong, and some parts of front we ourselves have taken the offensive.

"We have progressed to the south of Bixschoote.

"At the east of Ypres we have retaken by a counter-attack a village which had been lost.

"At the south of Ypres we have repulsed an offensive movement of the Prussian Guard.

"On the other part of the front only cannonades are mentioned."

The afternoon announcement says: From the sea coast as far as the Lys, the fighting has been of a less violent character than on previous days. Several efforts of the Germans to cross the Yser Canal, at the western outlet from Dixmude and at other points of passage in the Amont district, were checked. Generally speaking, our positions have been maintained without change.

To the north, to the east, and to the south of Ypres, attacks of the enemy were repulsed, at the end of the day at different points of our line and that of the British army.

From the region to the east of Armentieres and as far as the Oise, there have been artillery exchanges and actions of minor importance.

In the course of the last few days of foggy weather our troops have not ceased to make progress little by little. They are to-day established almost everywhere at distances varying from 300 to 500 metres from the network of barbed wire entanglements of the enemy.

To the north of the Aisne we have taken possession of Tracey-le-Val, but with the exception of the cemetery to the northeast of this village. We have made slight progress to the east of Tracy-le-Mont and to the southeast of Nouvron, as well as between Crony and Vregny, and to the northeast of Soissons.

In the vicinity of Vailly, a counter attack by the Germans, delivered against those of our tropos who had re-taken Chavonne and Soupir, was repulsed.

Equal failure attended the German efforts in the environs of Berry-au-Bac.

In the Argonne there has been a violent artillery duel.

There has been minor progress in the vicinity of St. Mihiel and in the region of Pont-a-Mousson.

A surprise attack delivered by our troops against the villages of Val and Chattillon, near Cirey-Sur-Vesouse, made it possible for us to capture a detachment of the enemy.

A German attack directed against the heights of Mount Sainte Marie, resulted in failure.

It is reported that snow is beginning to fall on the heights of the Vosges Mountains.

GERMAN FIRE KILLS 700 OF THEIR OWN MEN

PARIS, Nov. 13.—The bombardment of Ypres served on Tuesday to absolve the allies of the obligation of looking after nearly on thousand German prisoners. The German shells fell on the railway station, where they evidently hoped to blow up one of the armoured trains. At the moment prisoners were waiting the arrival of a special train to convey them to the south of France. They were killed in appalling numbers, only 294 surviving unscathed. One hundred and sixty-one were wounded and conveyed to the British base hospitals. The others are still unburied at the railway station.

HAND MANGLED

Zam-Buk Heals so Quickly, it Saved a Worker Three Weeks' Wages.

Mr. Hebert Hughen, 368 Beverley street, Winnipeg, writes: "While at work my hand was caught between an iron bar and a revolving belt, and three fingers were very badly mangled—indeed, almost torn off. The doctor who dressed the injury advised me to use a certain preparation, and I did so, but the healing was so slow I decided to try Zam-Buk.

"Just one week after I began using Zam-Buk my fingers were so far healed that I was able to go back to work, although the doctor said it would be at least a month before I would be able to do so! Zam-Buk thus not only healed my wound, but did it so quickly that it saved me three weeks' wages. I heartily recommend Zam-Buk for all cuts, wounds, and injuries."

The above is but one of the numerous instances where Zam-Buk has saved money for those who give it a fair trial. Apart from that, look at the hours of suffering it does away with. Accidents will happen; you cannot tell at what moment your turn will come. Be prepared; keep Zam-Buk always handy; it is the best "First Aid." As soon as applied it soothes the pain, kills the germs of blood poison and quickly heals the injury. Just as good for skin diseases.

If you suffer from eczema, cuts, burns, bruises, cold sores, chapped hands, ulcers piles, scalp sores, eruptions or any skin disease, give Zam-Buk a fair trial.

Refuse substitutes. Zam-Buk is entirely different from other ointments, and there is nothing "just as good."

Letters From Irishmen Show They Still Have Old Fighting Spirit

LONDON, Nov. 11.—Nobody criticises Lord Kitchener for deciding that Irish regiments cannot be led in the field of battle by Irish officers, but there are many who, understanding the Irish nature, are simply aghast at the order that they are not to be allowed to carry new colours with them into action. There is no gainsaying that the placing of the Home Rule Act on the Statute Book has been an enormously powerful agent for recruiting Ireland. The Irish leaders have said that they are prouder than ever they were of the British Empire; and one of the amazing things to Englishmen in the present war is the loyalty of their Irish neighbours, and their eagerness to help keep the standard flying.

The effect of the passing of the Home Rule Bill upon the Irish soldiers in France is described in a letter from Corporal J. J. Cunningham, of the First Irish Guards, to a friend at Loughton, Essex, in which, describing the spirited way in which the Irish fight, he says:

"eW are all doing very well, and you will be glad to learn that the 'Micks' are slaughtering the Germans' left, right, and centre.

"We are all doing very well, and thickest of the fray, and the only complaint among the officers here is that it is giving them b—— and the devil to hold those 'mad Irish' back. When they fix bayonets and sing 'God Save Ireland' there is always blood on the skyline.

"You will, I know, be sorry to learn that poor old McEnroy, our champion boxer, is among the wounded. We all had some narrow escapes, but any Germans our fellows met did not get the chance of even a 'narrow escape.'

CHEERS FOR REDMOND.

"The boys are all in great spirits, as they learned on the battlefield that the Home Rule Bill had been placed on the Statute Book. I need not tell that when the news came there was a terrific cheer for 'General' John Redmond.

"We are all very well treated out here and receive plenty of tobacco and rum, but a lot of us hope to return soon and visit the —— House and have another bottle of their famous Double X.

"You may be surprised to hear that the Irish flag I bought from the pedlar before parting with you I still have got. It has been carried through all our engagements, and with God's help I will carry it back to Britain. Clay from the trenches has made the harp on it very dirty, but thank God that is the only disgrace it has suffered. I did not think when we were buying it that it would go through so much.

"I have seen the Irish Guards, Dublin Fusiliers, Connaught Rangers, and Munsters in action, and without exception they have all behaved with the same spirit as that possessed by their forefathers."

And the Irishman is still "old-fashioned" enough to have a reverence for the old flag, not the green tribal flag with the harp alone, but the harp surmounted by the crown. After reading the letter of Corporal Michael O'Mara, of the Irish Guards, who has been at the front since the beginning of the war, written to a friend at Carrick-on-Suir, one may well wonder what will be the effect of the new order regarding the carrying of colours when it gets known among the Irish soldiers in the field of battle. He writes:

"We are British soldiers, and proud of the name and proud to belong to the great British Empire, but in doing our duty for the glory and honour of the Empire we have also always in our minds to add if we can more lustre to the fair name of Erin.

CHERISH "OUR GREEN FLAG."

"Our flag of green with the harp and shamrock and the words 'Erin Go Bragh' is now faded and torn, but still loved and cherished. Talking about that dear old flag, I shall endeavour to describe how at ——, when the fate of the day seemed to waver in the balance, when the ruthless enemy by sheer weight of numbers was pressing onward at every point of vantage, that faded flag turned a threatened defeat into decisive victory.

"On our left were the Munsters and on our right the Leinsters and Connaught Rangers. All were hard pressed and were about to retire when suddenly from the firing line one of our comrades rushed out flourishing the old green flag and shouting 'Erin Go Bragh.'

"With the blood coursing fast through my veins I watched with pride and admiration the marvellous effect produced by these simple words. With a mighty cheer that seemed to rend the heavens and that uprose and swelled even above the din of battle those hard-pressed sons of Erin charged down on the advancing enemy with fixed bayonets.

"The Germans were completely staggered by this unexpected turn of events when victory seemed just within their grasp, but they were given little time for hesitation, for, to slightly alter the words of a well-known Irish ballad:

"'Like lions leaping at a fold when mad with hunger's pang,
Right up against the German lines
those Irish heroes sprang.'

"The Germans turned and fled in all directions, completely routed and wholly disorganised. Such was the effect on the Irish Guards of the sight of their old green flag and the cry of 'Erin Go Bragh.'"

Very probably this was the same little green flag that Corporal Cunningham bought from the pedlar and with which, in lieu of colours, he led the charge of his regiment, but which he modestly refrains from mentioning in his letter to his friend, passing it over by merely saying, "It has been carried through all our engagements" and "I didn't think when we were buying it that it would go through so much."

NEVER TASTED RUM

"Rum King of Jamaica" Had Made $30,000,000 Worth of it.

NEW YORK, Nov. 13. — Boland Frinzi, the "rum king of Jamaica," sailed for Kingston yesterday on the United Fruit steamer Zacapa with Mrs. Frinzi. Asked how he had won his title, Mr. Frinzi replied:

"I have manufactured and sold $30,000,000 worth of rum since I went into the business, and I guess that is why they call me 'king'. I might add that I have never tasted a drop."

"Pat," said Sandy, "Why is a short man trying to kiss a tall woman like an Irishman going up Vesuvius?" "Faith, and isn't it because he is trying to get at the mouth of the crater?" replied Pat.

BATTLE DEVELOPS

East Prussia is Now Centre of Gravity in Operations

GERMANS HOLD DEFILES

LONDON, Nov. 14. — While the battle in West Flanders continues to hold the public attention because of the desperate character of the fighting, the numbers of men engaged and the territory at stake, military men now look upon East Prussia as the centre of gravity of the war.

In this latter field of operations a big battle is developing. The Russians are pushing vigorously a great enveloping movement. They are engaging the Germans along a wide curve of one hundred and fifty miles from Stalluponen, in the northeast, through Goldap and Krugianken, which is well within the tangle of lakes, down to Soldau in the southwest. Military observers say the Germans have apparently checked their retreat in Poland and by counter-attacks are endeavoring to create a diversion. They say, however, that the Russians are not to be turned from their plan, which is believed to be an attack on Dansig. They argue that the Germans will have to either allow East Prussia to be overrun the second time or bring up reinforcements, and that they can hardly weaken their army along the Polish frontier, for that would leave Posen and Silesia open to invasion. The allies naturally are hoping that an effort will be made to relieve East Prussia, and thus lead to the weakening of the German armies in Belgium and France.

In any fighting in their own country the Germans will have the advantage over the Russians, as they have a net work of strategic railways to move their troops quickly, and, besides, they use motors to a larger extent than their opponents. Military men are watching the operations in this region with the deepest interest.

The Petrograd correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Co. sends the following:

"The Germans have concentrated strongly south of the Mazurian Lakes (East Prussia) with heavy guns from Koenigsberg. Along the Soldau-Lyck line they have constructed heavily-timbered, strongly-armed blockhouses with barbed wire defences."

The Petrograd correspondent of the Havas Agency sends the following despatch:

"The conclusion is drawn from the latest news that the German troops, who in their retreat have occupied all the defiles to the east of the Mazurian Lakes (East Prussia), where they have placed heavy artillery, intend to resist the Russians tenaciously in that section. The Germans hope that on these positions, which they consider impregnable, the shock of the Russians will be broken. However, yesterday the Russians were successful in sorties to the east of the lakes.

"Throughout all Prussia railway passenger traffic has been suspended. The lines now are transporting troops only, apparently with a view to a new concentration which is said to have been decided upon by a recent council of the Austro-Germanic General Staffs at Cracow. This council is reported to have decided to change completely the plan of battle."

Rumors continue to circulate in financial circles that Austria-Hungary is anxious for peace and has already made private overtures as to peace terms.

The Army Messenger announced yesterday that the Russian army had won another victory over the Germans near Kalisz, in western Poland. The Germans were forced to retreat, it says, abandoning thousands of dead and wounded on the battlefield, and the Russians captured twelve howitzers.

These guns are believed to be part of the heavy artillery with which the Germans had planned to batter the fortifications of Warsaw and Ivangorod.

HUGE WAR VOTE ASKED

Britain Will Require Another $1,125,000,000 This Session

LONDON, Nov. 14—The announcement of the presentation of Parliament of a measure to vote a credit of $1,125,000,000 was issued officially yesterday afternoon. This money is intended to cover not only the naval and military expenditures, which may be incurred before March 31, but all the expenditures which may be necessary or desirable to meet trade or other abnormal conditions created by the war. This further sum, added to the previous credits voted by Parliament, brings the total of credits to $1,625,000,000.

The credit of $1,125,000,000 will cover the $14,550,000 advanced to Belgium, the $4,000,000 advanced to Servia and sums necessary to facilitate the raising of funds for his Majesty's dominion and protectorate and by the allied powers.

Advances in the way of loans will be made also to the dominions and the allied powers for the purposes of war and to meet difficulties arising out of the war, and to local authorities and other bodies for relief work.

Aisne Valley Under Fire Stirs Gabriel Hanotaux

Distinguished French Academician in Graphic Account in the Paris Figaro Describes Great Battlefield as Spectacle of Military Grandeur.

Gabriel Hanotaux, the distinguished French Academician, has written for the Figaro a description of the Aisne Valley under fire, graphic and realistic in its wording:

"I have seen it," he says, "that valley of the Aisne, which has just added a page which will be one of the most beautiful in the book of history. I was anxious to see how that valley had conducted itself to encompass the heroism of our soldiers. It is magnificent!

"When we entered the mouth of the valley the morning fog still hung low over the river. One could hear the cannon scolding far away, like the grumbling of some huge beast. Suddenly the fog curtain was torn; the sun appeared and illuminated with a cold ray all the countryside. And from the hill on which we stood the valley uncovered itself bit by bit, a spectacle of military grandeur.

"We could see clear across to the other side, where we searched vainly for the familiar rooftops. One might have thought it the wall of a crenelated fortress, and to complete the impression over it rose, from time to time, into the blue sky the white puffs of the far off shells, exploding as regular intervals.

"The valley, denuded and laid out in military lines, had put itself also into war apparel. It has lost its smiling good-fellowship, but how much more splendid it was in its masculine gravity!

Soldiers Calmly Smoke.

"The broken trees, the fields scarred with wheels, not of peaceful farm waggons, but those of guns and caissons, the cavalry horses on the picket lines, made pretty splotches of colour, relieved by the brilliant uniforms of the Chasseurs d'Afrique; the avenues and woods were filled with troops; on the highways patrols, marching detachments, interminable convoys, Kiplingesque, with khaki-clad soldiers smoking their pipes and chaffing each other, and here and there in the fields mounds of earth where unknown heroes are sleeping their last sleep side by side under improvised crosses on which flutter little 'tricolors.' Everywhere a silent and resolute animation.

"From the depth of the valley rose in long spirals the smoke from the pyres where dead horses were burning, and high, high up in the sky, like a hawk lost in the sky, a German aeroplane swooped in great circles, surveying the country.

"After passing the improvised bridge we passed to the heights of the plateau. This, fortunately, our troops had taken at the first attack. It had felt but little the feet of the enemy in flight. But one would say that having lost it so quickly it is trying to avenge the loss, for its cannon speak incessantly, and its shells come ceaselessly to tear its borders where the ruins of the old village rest.

"From far off, ten or twelve kilometres away, a great shell mounts with a shriek, whistles through the air, touches the earth, and tears it with a dull thud; a crash, a great hole appears, then silence. 'Another kettle,' murmur the soldiers, who have hardly turned their heads. They laugh at the cannonading fury. A field of beets has undergone all one afternoon a vain bombardment. Will this sowing expand until we gather against them a harvest of steel?

French Guns of Victory.

"With perfect calmness the French soldiers guard this line which protects France. They take their turns in the trenches; a multitude of unknown acts of heroism develop there. We ignore them, they ignore them themselves. These brave men are so sure of victory that they have nerves of steel. They know that some day the order will come that will hurl them on those cannonading lines, and they await it with tranquility.

"The civilian population lives in a calm, more sorrowful but not less firm. Hiden, as were their ancestors, in caves in the plateau, they come out when night falls and the firing ceases to go for provisions and to dig the remaining potatoes that still are in the fields. Fire is carried from hearth to hearth. The bread, which the baker still brings twice a week in his customary rounds, is divided. This population suffers, but it knows why it suffers, and it, too, full of confidence, waits.

"At night silence reconquers the valley. The fires are extinguished, and the earth gathers about itself once more its mantle of fog. While the cold pinches in the trenches the valley sleeps, dreaming perhaps of other days—those great souvenirs which the present will continue and surpass."

LECTURED ON BELGIUM

Rev. Dean McColl Addressed St. Peter's Ladies' Literary Society.

The first meeting of the Ladies' Literary of the Total Abstinence Society was held in the T. A. S. Hall, last evening, and a very appreciative audience listened to a most interesting and instructive lecture on "Belgium," the hero nation of the present war, by the Rev. Dean McColl.

The reverend lecturer dealt with the geography and early history of the country, going back as far as Julius Caesar, whom, he said, found great difficulty in overcoming the people—the Belgae. He described the situation of the country as being very beautiful, its soil very rich, its lands level, and advantageously situated for commerce. Its lack of mountains and the smallness of its rivers, taken in conjunction with its position iwth regard to other countries, has made it for centuries the battefield of Europe.

At one period, in the early history of the country it belonged to Austria; when Charles V. reigned it was given to Spain and by the Treaty of Utrecht, part of it was given to Austria again. From 1795 to 1815 it belonged to France. At the close of the Napoleonic wars, Holland and Belgium united, but the union was very distasteful to Belgium, and in 1831 she declared her independence. At the close of the Franco-Prussian war the neutrality of Belgium was guaranteed by the five great nations of Europe. Despite this fact Belgium knew that in the event of war breaking out this neutrality would be broken and she accordingly prepared herself for such an event. Liege and Namur are examples of the fortifications which Belgium constructed at that time.

The next part of the lecture dealt with the peoples of Belgium. There are two distinct races in this country and both languages have been preserved perfectly. To the north are the Flemish of Teutonic blood and possessing qualities similar to the Germans and English. They speak a language distinctly their own, and largely follow manufacturing and agriculture. Lace and gloves are two of their main manufactures.

Antwerp, which means, "on the wharf," Ghent, meaning gloves, and Bruges, the City of Bridges, are some of their main cities, and these very names are testimonials of the great industry and activity of this people. To the south or the south are the Walloons, originally from Gaul, and speaking a language closely resembling the French. They are the very antithesis of the Flemish people. They are energetic, active, high strung and brave.

The lecturer dwelt long on the great prosperity of the country, which is almost universally Catholic, having a Catholic king, a Catholic government, and enjoying freedom of religion, freedom of the press, and freedom to express views on any matter. The beauty of the architecture, the superiority of its educational institutions and its immense wealth, all go to show the enlightenment of the people, who were described as valiant, thrifty, brave and God-fearing—in fact an ideal nation.

The following musical programme was presided over by Mrs. L. B. Treacy.

Instrumental Duet—Misses Pierce and Gregory.
Vocal Solo—Mr. Minicola.

MONEY WAS RETURNED

Victim of Short Change Artist Has Added Respect for Administration of Law.

Mr. Fred McEwan of Virgil, Ont., the secretary of the Niagara Township Patriotic League, was one of the victims of Wm. Barr, the short change artist, who was tried here recently. All the money taken by Barr and his companion Rose, was recovered and returned to the losers. Mr. McEwan has written Mr. Jos. Wearing, Acting Crown Attorney, as follows:

Virgil, Ont., Nov. 13, 1914.

Dear Sir,—Received cheque to-day in full payment of money lost by me. Must say that the way this matter has been handled gives me an added respect for the law as administered in Canada. Many thanks.

Fred McEwan.

No Epidemic Among Prisoners.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—In reply to the charge made by the Frankfurter Zeitung that forty-six German prisoners have died in England from pneumonia and typhoid fever, it is officially stated that there have been only five deaths among the prisoners. One death was accidental and the others were due to natural causes, the statement says there has been no typhoid or pneumonia.

Russians Capture Aviators.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 14.—A detachment of Russian cavalry operating in the vicinity of Plock, 58 miles west of Warsaw, captured two days ago two German aviators and repelled the effort of rescue undertaken by two companies of German infantry.

PATRIOTIC FUND.

A contribution to the Patriotic Fund of one hundred dollars has been received from Bishop O'Brien.

UNREST IN LUXEMBURG.

Little Duchy Has Suffered Under Prolonged German Rule.

LUXEMBURG, Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, Nov. 11.—This small country, which has almost been forgotten since the commencement of the war, is beginning to show signs of unrest under the prolonged German rule.

Entirely cut off from the rest of the world and obliged to read newspapers which, under a strict German censorship, are giving exclusively pro-German information, the people show the same tendencies to fly into panics and to believe hysterical news as are so familiar in Brussels, Liege, Namur, and other Belgian cities where the people systematically are kept in the dark. They are now willing to believe even the most incredible nonsense.

The Luxemburgians have suffered greatly since the Germans three weeks ago stopped the iron industry, the main support of the country, by forbidding the use of dynamite. After prolonged negotiations the operation of the mines has again been allowed, but the miners are obliged to use other and less violent explosives.

Continual friction is apparent between Luxemburgians and the Germans on the frontier villages. The people who ordinarily are bi-lingual, under pressure of the uninvited Germans, now are exclusively using French as the only means at their disposal of showing resentment, the natives say, at their country's invasion and continued domination.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

CONN MACK IS NOT PHILLIE IDOL TO-DAY

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 13. — Cornelius McGillicuddy may go his own sweet way and dismember his Athletics. They are his, and we care not what he may do with them. He may even receive the iron cross from the managers of the other seven clubs, if he only breaks his champions up enough to give someone else in the American League a chance for the 1915 pennant. However, from the fans of Philadelphia, Connie is very apt to receive the old-fashioned double cross.

We have been wandering about this town now for several days, talking with fans of every walk of life in the Quaker City, and Connie seems to be about as popular as a loaf from Joe Miller's joke book would be in a Broadway show. Somehow or other, Mr. Mack's constituents do not seem over-enthusiastic about his getting rid of Bender, Coombs, and Plank, and talking veiledly about letting other local favourites go.

The release of Eddie Plank and John Coombs is particularly resented by the fans. Gettysburg Eddie had one of the best years last season, and in years agone has done more than any one man to keep Philadelphia on the baseball map. The men who support the game here, the fans, can't see why Eddie should go.

Coombs's case, of course, is purely sentimental. John has not been able to be of service for some time, yet the Philadelphians feel that he should not be cast aside when just recovering from an illness, without a chance to show whether or not he can attain major league form again.

In Bender's case there seems to be little feeling. People appear to believe that the Chief didn't give his best to Mack or to the city in the closing days and in the world's series. Bender's passing will not cause much of a heart burn.

Mack is said to be making the shifts in his team, partly in reprisal for the poor support handed him last season by the populace. He hopes to reduce expenses by letting go his high-priced men.

To the man on the outside it would seem that the canny Connie is committing baseball suicide. His controversy with a Philadelphia newspaper last season has not been forgotten, nor has it increased his popularity. If he mingled with the people here as we have done, he would understand that last year's reported famine season is apt to appear like a feast season, when the 1915 returns are in, if too many of the Phillie idols are sent elsewhere.

We have talked with every type of fan. The kid in the street, hotel clerks, men in cafes, theatres, hotel lobbies, street cars—all about the town in fact. Not a person that admitted being a follower of baseball was in sympathy in any way with Mr. McGillicuddy.

In one way, you have to admire Connie for his nerve. He is going right ahead, with his plans, without considering sentiment or anything else but what he thinks are the best interests of his ball club. Whether or not one believes as we do that he is committing baseball suicide, one must hand it to him for being one game gentleman.

The breaking up of the Athletic machine may be a mighty good thing for baseball in the other cities of the American league. We really believe that it will be. But in the Quaker village, it will just about make the Phillies the choice of the town, if Pat Moran can make them play any kind of ball at all.

Mack Will Not Retire nor Trade Ed. Collins

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 13. — Tracked to the lair of his White Elephants, Cornelius McGillicuddy, familiarly termed Connie Mack, put a quietus on various and sundry rumours that have been circulated concerning his Athletics. When Connie had concluded his little say, the only story of the mass of weird tales that have been spread broadcast that stood confirmed was that the Philadelphia leader has asked for waivers on Plank, Bender, and Coombs.

"I have not taken the trouble to deny statements concerning the doings of my club heretofore, simply because you baseball writers seemed to be having such an elegant time writing things I never heard of till I saw them in print. Since you want the facts, I'll tell you just how we stand.

"In the first place, there is absolutely no truth in the rumour that Mr. Shibe is to retire from the head of the club, and I am to assume the presidency. Mr. Shibe will continue to direct things as he has for the past 14 years, for 14 more, I hope.

"The story that I am to give up the active management of the team is also pure bunk. I will lead one of the largest squads I ever handled to Jacksonville, Fla., early in March, and expect to continue to lead squads there for the next five years.

"The tale that I am contemplating buying the Yankees is the most ridiculous yarn I ever heard. I have never even had such a purchase suggested to me, nor have I ever contemplated making an offer for the club.

"So far as I am concerned, there is absolutely no foundation for the fable of Collins going to New York to manage the Yankee team. I understand that this rumour has been played up somewhat in New York because of my sending Lute Boone on the barnstorming trip this fall. The truth of the Boone incident is as follows:

"Originally, I intended to have my own infielders make the trip, but for several reasons they did not care to go. I needed a second baseman for the American League team, and tried to get Bush of Detroit, to play the bag. At the last minute Bush turned me down.

"We finished the season against the Yankees here in Philadelphia, and young Boone played a good game against us. I asked him if he wanted to join the tourists, and he accepted my offer. That's all there is to it. Boone's making that trip has absolutely no possible connection with any plans that I may have in regard to contemplated changes in my club. To say that it confirms the rumour of Collins' transfer to New York is a joke.

"I intended to make several changes in the Athletics if possible. It may be that I shall not be able to put through things I have in mind, and perhaps my club will be largely the same next year. However, it is very probable that the changes will take place, but I could not think of even indicating just what they are at this time.

"Everybody keeps guessing something different, and somebody is bound to hit it right, but nobody knows what I have in mind. It is all guesswork.

"I have asked for waivers on Plank, Bender, and Coombs, and it is true that it is because one of them was flirting with the Federals. However, it is not true that I ever said that Plank was the man. I have never told who it was and don't intend to.

"Hughey Jennings has involved me in a little controversy over the question of whether or not the asking of waivers on players should be kept quiet. There is no question but that I am right in the matter. It is a hard and fast rule in our league not to give out facts of this kind. Jennings didn't know this perhaps, because his place is essentially out on the field directing plays, and he probably mixes little in official business. Hughey has apologized, and there is nothing further to it.

"We have done pretty well in a baseball way over here in the past. We may not do as well in the future, but somehow or other I have the feeling that we shall worry along, even with a few changes in our lineup. That's all."

SAYS FEDS WILL STAY IN FIGHT

CHICAGO, Nov. 11.—In an interview here to-day, President James A. Gilmore of the Feadral League expressed the opinion the peace between the outlaw league and organized baseball was near, and that negotiations might be concluded at a conference scheduled for to-morrow, in Chicago between President Garry Herrmann of the National Commission, President Ban Johnson of the American League, and President Charles H. Weeghman of the Chicago Federal League Club.

He declared that if the plan under consideration goes through, control of the Chicago National team will be acquired by Charles H. Weeghman and his business associates, and that the club will play on the Federal League grounds. He also said that the new clubs would be made up of the best players in the present National League team and the Federal League club.

Feds Will be Reasonable.

"The Federal League stands ready to do anything that will promote the interest of baseball in general. They are willing to make a settlement on any honourable basis. If such a settlement is not consummated before the 1915 season, it will not be the fault of the Federal League officials.

"There is a thorough understanding among all officials of the Federal League, and there is no fear that one or more of the others are going to consummate a deal that will protect their own interests irrespective of what happens to the others.

"Cities like Baltimore, Buffalo and Indianapolis are entitled to major league baseball. The utter disregard that the minor league club owners have had for the general public in the three cities mentioned during the last ten or twelve years was the real cause of the almost total lack of patronage at their parks during the last year.

Federals Here to Stay.

"I wish to state at this time in a most emphatic manner that the Federal League was organized on a major league basis, and will continue as such. There will be no deal made with organized baseball which calls for the elimination of the Federal League. Our organization might consent to transferring of one or two franchises, but the Federal League, in name and in standing, must continue."

NO GLORY FOR U.S. ATHLETES TO WIN NOW

Their European Rivals Are Nearly All Shedding Their Blood on Battlefields.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—Despite the fact that Uncle Sam has been in a terrific sporting slump during the past year and has been most gloriously walloped at every start, there is one division in which American supremacy is certain to be continued. That is on the track and field.

The 1916 Olympic games were scheduled to be held in Berlin, but with the hatred that has been stirred up on the other side by the war, it is doubtful if England or France would compete even should peace be restored by that time. That puts one spike in the hope of beating the United States, but the most tragic cause back of the collapse of the European hopes lies in another direction.

The young men who were fast developing into sterling athletes and who might challenge our boys are now being killed off like flies! The pick of the young men of Germany, France and England are on the firing line. Some of Germany's most promising material for the Olympic games for 1916 were army officers or at least subject to the call to the colours. They answered and their finely trained muscles are now carrying them on long forced marches. Feet that once sped over the cinder path are now treading through bloody fields or splashing in the mud and mire of the trenches. And this is true of the young men of England and France as well as of Germany.

If the war continues over an extended period, it may be safe to say that the United States will be supreme in athletics for another generation. The men rising up to challenge us are now offering their lives on the battlefields or undermining their wonderfully developed strength by exposure in rain-soaked trenches. If they escape with their lives they will return to their homes old men so far as athletics are concerned. Such conditions as this strike pretty close to what war really means. There will be little glory for the United States coming out of international contests for the next few years. While we have been enjoying peace and our athletes steadily perfecting themselves, their foreign rivals have been shedding their blood on battlefields.

We all took our hats off to England when their polo four lifted the international cup at Meadowbrook last June, and we might well doff our lids again in view of what these polo players have done since we saw them. They're fighting. Should we challenge England again any time within the next five years we might be able to bring the cup back without a great deal of trouble. But there would be little glory in it. To date two-thirds of the crack polo players of the British army have been killed in the fighting in France and Belgium. This means that a majority of England's best players are gone, as British army officers represent the last word in polo on the "tight little isle."

COURT OF REVISION

A Number of Appeals Were Heard—Two Reductions Were Allowed

The Court of Revision met yesterday afternoon. The Dixon Company appealed against the assessment of the Oriental Hotel. Messrs. Gus. White and Robert Gollop were asked to give an opinion respecting the value of the business with or without a license. The land and buildings are assessed for $40,480. Mr. Gollop, proprietor of the Snowden House, thought that was a fair price for the land. Mr. White said that his experience in the business had been confined to hotels carrying a license, therefore he was not in a position to form an opinion as to the value of the Oriental Hotel, which is conducted without a license. He said that it would have to be very cheap before he would undertake to take it over. Judgment was reserved.

Police Protection.

The Dickson Company also appealed against the assessment of some land in East City, near the Lift Lock. The assessment of this property has risen nearly six thousand dollars during the past year. Asked by Mr. Goodwill if there were any civic conveniences or industries on or near the property to justify the increase, Mr. Henry replied in the negative.

"There is police protection and the prospects of a dry-dock," observed Mr. G. N. Gordon, Solicitor for the City.

Judgment in this and a number of appeals entered by Mr. W. H. Bradburn in connection with the Bradburn estate, was reserved.

The G.T.R. appeal for over-assessment on land, will be heard this afternoon.

Burnham Estate. Laid over.

Wm. English Canoe Co., 182 Charlotte Street. Land, $5,800; buildings, $900. Total $6,100. Judgment reserved.

TEA PRICES SHOULD DROP

Destruction of the Emden Has Had That Effect.

The following comment on the market situation as regards food stuffs will appear in Canadian Grocer this week:

It is an interesting coincidence that the announcement of th capture of the Emden came at the same time that the London tea market reached a high point in thirty years—and it was the German menace in the London Ocean that made it so. Now that shipments can be made freely the situation should ease, but it will be some weeks before supplies can come forward and in the meantime conditions will probably remain firm. Direct importers claim that they can under-buy the London market by a couple of cents. The removal of the Emden should also help the market for other Indian products, such as pepper which has recently advanced 4c. to 5c. a lb.

The sugar market is still a centre of interest and further reductions are being awaited following the drop last week. Whether these reductions will be immediate remains to be seen. It is not known whether the drop took place because high priced raws were exhausted or because of public sentiment; or it may have been that the American price for refined $4.90 had reached a place where it could be brought to Canada even despite the high duty of $1.93 on a lower basis than prevailed in Canada. New York has reacted on French demand and from a low point of 3.64c. the price is now 4.00c. The attitude of Great Britain still attracts a lot of attention and developments are awaited with interest.

The elimination of further supplies of Turkish figs and raisins has toned up the market for dried fruits. Opinions differ as to whether wholesalers will advance prices as stocks go into consumption or whether they will be satisfied to turn their stocks and get their money in. Certainly the dealer who wants to make big purchases of these lines to-day must pay the price. Other fruits have gone up in sympathy and British and German demand in California have stiffened apricots and prunes as well.

Another advance of 10c. the bushel is recorded for beans. Dealers report a good demand and the farmers holding for top prices. The crop is only about three-quarters of that of a year ago.

The close of navigation in the course of ten days may affect the flour market, but brokers point out that deliveries have been so light that there are small stocks of wheat at the head of the lakes and, therefore, there is not likely to be much change when the boats stop running. Business continues very quiet and mills are cutting to short hours while some are closing down altogether. Export business is still further out of line owing to increases in freight rates made during the week. There is some talk of forcing flour sales through the demand for mill feeds. Rolled oats have been advanced 25c. the barrel on increasing oats values.

The action of the American government in placing an embargo against Canadian poultry is likely to have the effect of glutting the market on this side of the line. A break-up of the weather at any time now is likely to result in heavy shipments, as the birds will come in from the fields and feed is very high. There is plenty of stuff in the country, although not much has been coming forward and the result of a rush of sellers in the face of a poor demand would probably be the disorganization of the market.

Eggs continue to advance in price with the export demand stronger than it has been for many years. While the American surplus of over half a million cases should maintain the balance here to a large extent it must also be remembered that the United States last year imported about half this amount, and, further, there is the uncertainty as to what may be the extent of the British demand. Butter and cheese markets are both quiet with little change in prices.

HAD NO NEED OF SUPPORTS

Gen. Botha Defeated Dewet Without Aid of Other Forces

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa, Nov. 14.—The official statement of the defeat of Gen. De Wet, commanding the rebel forces, by Gen. Louis Botha, Premier of South Africa, his companion in arms in the Boer war against Great Britain, is published to-day.

Gen. Botha moved out from Winberg in the Orange Free State after De Wet, who it was reported had 2,000 rebels with him. Co-operating with Gen. Botha were Gen. Lukin, Col. Britz and Col. Brand.

Botha's plan was to surround De Wet's force by a concerted drive against it. But for Gen. Lukin and Col. Britz being prevented from coming up in time the plan would have succeeded.

As it was, Gen. Botha, with whom Col. Brand co-operated actively, inflicted a heavy defeat on De Wet, making 250 prisoners and capturing two laagers, which contained motor cars and 100 carts and wagons.

An incident of the battle was the capture by the rebels of Commandant Fouche and forty men. But Gen. Tobias Smuts effected a brilliant rescue of Fouche and his men. Among the prisoners whom the Government forces released were Senator Stuart and the Magistrate of Winberg, whom De Wet made prisoners when he entered Winberg. De Wet's defeat has made a profound impression in the Orange Free State.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Nov. 13.—Uneasiness about rumors that Austria was suing independently for terms of peace shook the confidence today of holders of wheat. Altho the market at the close was relatively firm, prices were 1c to 1½c under last night. Corn was 3-8c to 5-8c down, oats 1-2c to 1-4c lower and provisions 7½c to 20c lower.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Nov. 13.—Wheat prices on the Winnipeg market opened unchanged to ⅛c lower, oats ⅛c higher, and flax 3c to 3⅛c higher. Heavy selling operations developed later, causing sharp declines. Peace rumors were again prominent, causing the break. Trading was fairly heavy in options. Previous to noon wheat had declined 1⅛c to 1⅜c, and showed weak. Closing figures were ⅝c to 1⅛c lower for wheat, oats ⅛c to ⅜c lower, and flax 2⅛c to 3c higher.

A feature of today's trading was the excellent demand for all grades of cash wheat by millers and exporters, yet prices went lower. Cash oats and barley were in fair request, while cash flax was in keen demand, and a number of sales were put thru at higher prices.

Inspections were 527 cars inspected Thursday as against 1443 last year, and in sight were 425 cars.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Nov. 13.—Business in Manitoba spring wheat over the cable today was very quiet, there being few firm bids in the market, and those that did come forward were 1s 6d to 1s 9d below what exporters offered to sell for last night. The local market for coarse grains was unchanged, with business slow.

Export trade in flour was quiet, but the local demand for small lots was fair at firm prices. The trade in millfeed continues active, and the tone is firm. Butter quiet. Cheese in good demand at firm prices. Eggs active and strong.

MINNEAPOLIS GRAIN MARKET.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 13.—Wheat—No. 1 hard, $1.17; No. 1 northern, $1.14½ to $1.16½; No. 2 do., $1.11 to $1.14½; December, $1.13.

Corn—No. 2 yellow, 59c to 64c.

Oats—No. 3 white, 45½c to 46c.

Flour and bran unchanged.

DULUTH GRAIN MARKET.

DULUTH, Nov. 13.—Wheat—No. 1 hard, $1.17½; No. 1 northern, $1.16½; No. 2 do., $1.13½; December, $1.14½.

OBITUARY

MRS. DAVID GUIRY.

Mrs. David Guiry, of Ennismore, passed away to-day in St. Joseph's Hospital, and in her death that township loses a very highly respected citizen. The late Mrs. Guiry was well known both in Ennismore and the surrounding community, and a very large number will be sorry to learn of her death.

She is survived by her husband, six daughters, Mrs. John Sullivan, London; Mrs. W. Crough, Ennismore; Mrs. Alexander Geary, Ennismore; Mrs. M. Donoughue, of this city; Sister Ildefonsa and Sister Anna Maria, as well as one son, James, at home.

The funeral will be held next Monday morning at ten o'clock.

Church Womens' Association's Annual Meeting

Officers of St. John's Church Organization Elected at Meeting Yesterday Afternoon.

The Church Woman's Association of St. John's church held their annual meeting yesterday afternoon at three o'clock. Mrs. H. W. Morphet, the retiring president, presided, and there was a large attendance and a great deal of interest shown in the work of the Association.

The Rev. Canon Davidson was present and congratulated the Association on what they had accomplished during the past year. Reports were received from the different departments of the Association, showing that much had been done in the interests of the parish by the Association since the last annual meeting.

At yesterday's meeting officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows:

President—Mrs. A. W. Turner.
Vice-Pres.—Mrs. T. W. H. Young.
Secretary—Mrs. Chas. Brewer.
Treasurer—Mrs. Bond.

Mrs. Hayes Passes Away

Wife of Judge Hayes Dies Suddenly at Guelph.

Her many friends in Peterborough will be shocked to learn of the sudden death in Guelph, yesterday, of Margaret Maude MacDonell, daughter of the late Angus MacDonell, and wife of His Honour Judge Hayes of Guelph and, until recently, of Peterborough. The news will cause genuin regret everywhere througout the City. Mrs. Hayes was most popular during her long residence in Peterborough, and had a host of friends here to whim she had endeared herself by reason of her many amiable qualities.

Mrs. Hayes is survived by her husband, Judge Hayes, and five children, of which the eldest son, Stewart, is now at Salisbury Plain, England, with the 57th Company in the first Canadian contingent. Mr. A. Claude MacDonell, M.P., of Toronto, is a brother of Mrs. Hayes, while Mrs. W. M. Germyn of Welland, wife of the Federal member, is a sister.

LOCAL ARTIST'S HEARTY RECEPTION

Mr. Frank Whitehouse Plays at Patriotic Concert at Port Hope.

The Port Hope Guide of Wednesday last contains a glowing reference to Mr. Frank Whitehouse of this city, as a violinist. Mr. Whitehouse played at a concert there on Tuesday evening last.

The Guide's reference is as follows:

"It was our pleasure for the first time to hear Mr. Whitehouse on the violin. We have known Frank for many years, heard of his ability as a violinist, but never had the opportunity of hearing him. If applause counts for anything, and it certainly did in this case, Mr. Whitehouse may feel satisfied that every person was delighted. He is a master of the instrument and we hope he will give Port Hope a similar treat in the near future."

DEATHS.

HAYES.—Suddenly, on 13th inst., at Guelph, Margaret Maude MacDonald, fourth daughter of the late Angus D. MacDonald, and beloved wife of Louis M. Hayes, judge of the County of Wellington.

A REPLY TO "DREADNOUGHT"

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—Let me say in reply to the gentleman who though he dreaded nought fired from behind the safe protection of a pen-name at those in the open who objected to being included in the "City of Peterborough" public meeting to discuss war and peace the other evening. 1. That Mr. Asquith, the foremost Britisher of his time, has repeatedly said that Britain will consider no proposals for peace, arbitration, etc., until Germany is crushed. If then Germany now proposed arbitration and Mr. Asquith refused, as he surely would, the City of Peterborough is on record as opposed to Mr. Asquith's policy, a nice performance for any sensible muncipality during the crisis of the greatest war in history. Then we have Sir Robert Borden and Sir Wilfrid Laurier striving with might and main to support the British premier. They, too, must come under the ban of the City of Peterborough if the meeting had materialized as intended. No people can say, "We are loyal, we are with you; only don't do it again and stop as soon as arbitration is in sight, for that is our fixed principle." No people can advocate arbitration as a substitute for war and go back on it. Hence we would wake up to the fact that all Canada was attacking us for bringing odium on the country, and how Germany and the German-Americans would rejoice. But "compulsory" arbitration was what the meeting was called to endorse. In Heaven's name what sort of a substitute for force is anything that is compulsory. The resolution would be worded in that case "if you don't arbitrate we'll kick holes in you." The fact is good intentions are not always a safe guide in war-time and Peterborough narrowly escaped a catastrophe. In concluding let me say that some knowledge of law does not always qualify a writer for an argument, and with these few remarks, I remain, not a Dreadnought, but—

INQUEST INTO DEATH OF MR. W. F. SUCCEE

Evidence Seems to Indicate That he Was Not Responsible

An inquest into the death of the late Wilbert F. Succee, formerly of this city, and son of Mr. Joseph Succee, East City, was opened in Lindsay Thursday afternoon. The hearing of the remainder of the evidence was adjourned until next Thursday. It will be remembered that deceased was killed Wednesday night in an accident on the G.T.R. near Midland.

It seems that there was no foundation for the report that in the accident Mr. Succee's body was not mutilated or disfigured for the fact is that he was jammed between the two trains and that his body was literally crushed to pieces. This makes the circumstances surrounding his death all the more terrible, and the sorrow of the bereaved ones even deeper.

It is stated that the young man not only had nothing to do with leaving open the switch which caused the accident but it was left open without his knowledge, and owing to the fact that it was dark when the accident occurred it was impossible for him to tell that it was open. Brakeman Morrison when examined at the inquest affirmed that there had been no light on that particular switch for some time, and in spite of severe cross-questioning held to the statement.

It was thought at first that Brakeman Wilbert Morrison was on the train when the accident occurred, but since it has come out that he had remained at the elevator and that Succee alone went to couple the van, Morrison was to couple the train to the locomotives.

Succee was standing on the van when it collided with the other cars. The van was smashed to pieces and Sussee's body was horribly mutilated.

It was shown at the inquest that Succee thought that he was on the main track, but someone had carelessly left a switch open and instead the train was going down a siding on which were some cars. The invariable testimony of the conductors is that he was one of the most reliable and careful men. In five years' railroading he has never been responsible for an accident that resulted in anyone being injured. He has seen service in the mountains of Montana, and four years on the G.T.R. out of Lindsay.

The funeral was held to Lindsay cemetery yesterday afternoon under the auspices of the Trainmen's Brotherhood.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mrs. R. B. Irwin, of Rochester, is visiting her mother, Mrs. J. H. Gray, East City.

Mrs. W. Nielson, Charlotte street, has gone to Port Hope to visit her mother, who is seriously ill.

Miss M. A. McKenzie, soprano soloist, of Toronto, will sing in St. Andrew's Church, at both services to-morrow.

Mrs. H. Kirk and daughter, Grace, of Detroit, Michigan, are visiting Mrs. Kirk's parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. Courtney, Concession street.

Mr. Philip Elmhirst, of Apsley, was the guest this week of his niece, Mrs. R. A. Dobbin, on his return home from Victoria and Vancouver, B.C.

On Monday afternoon, Mrs. E. B. Clegg and Mrs. Eastwood will be in charge of the tea room at the Oriental, when afternoon tea will be served under the auspices of the Daughters of the Empire.

Mr. R. H. Jackson is down from Stoney Lake for the first time this summer. He is going back in a few days to spend the winter. Mr. Jackson states that the deer in his locality are plentiful.

Concert And Social Evening

To Be Held by Foresters for Patriotic Purposes

The semi-monthly meeting of Court Chemong, No. 530, Independent Order of Foresters, was held in the W. O. W. Hall, George Street, on Thursday evening. Bro. David Wallace, P.C.R., presided over the meeting in his usual able manner. The name of Wallace, famous in Scottish history, evidently brought the present warfare before the court.

The veteran financial secretary, Bro. G. W. Powell, could not refrain from mentioning a number of members who had responded to the call of the Empire and gone forward with the Canadian contingents.

The Court considered it their duty to do something for these brethren.

The members are, therefore, asked to rally at the next meeting on Thursday, the 26th, when light refreshments will be served, and the matter of holding a patriotic social and concert will be discussed and decided.

A number of ladies were present and volunteered their services to assist in entertaining the members and public at a patriotic social and concert in the W. O. W. Hall on Thursday evening, Dec. 10th.

BELMONT CLUB.

The Belmont Club held a progressive euchre party last evening. Mr. James Patterson was the prize winner.
